Verſe 16. So the poor hath hope, and iniquity ſtoppeth her mouth.

Here is the concluſion or reſult of all, the Epiphonema or exulting clauſe, in which Eliphaz perfects the ſtory of thoſe admirable acts of judgment and of mercy; So the poor hath hope.

This original word for [poor] varies from the former, though the perſons and their eſtate be the ſame: That word noted them full of deſire, and this (which is the cauſe of it) empty of comforts: Properly it ſignifies one that is exhauſted or drawn dry. Poor perſons are exhauſted perſons; exhauſted of their ſtrength, exhauſted of their eſtates, exhauſted of friends and credit in the world. It is a Metaphor taken from Rivers, Ponds or Pools, that are drawn dry, when we would take the fiſh, or take away the defence which they give to Forts or Cities, Iſa. 19. 6. And they ſhall turn the Rivers far away, and the Brooks of Defence ſhall be emptied and dried up: Which alſo enlightens that Text, Iſa. 33. 21. There the righteous Lord will be unto us a place of broad Rivers. A River which ſhall not be drawn dry or ſluced out (as Euphrates was by Cyrus, when he took Babylon) but ſhall fill its banks and ſhores perpetually; that is, the Lord will be there a perpetual defence; a River that ſhall never be impoveriſhed, but ſhall keep a full ſtock and treaſure of ſtreams and waters.

à radice דלל דל Exhauſtus, de humore propriè, per metaphoram de viribus corporis & opibus, attenuatus, tenuis fortunæ homo.

Delilah had her name from this root, and it carries an elegant alluſion to the qualities of all Delilahs, or inſinuating laſcivious women; they drain the ſtrength, exhauſt the purſes, dry up the credit, waſte the All of the mightieſt Samſons, whoſe hearts are entangled by their flatteries, or enſnared by their beauties.

The poor have hope.] The word hath been opened at the ſixth verſe of this Chapter, to note ſtrong and earneſt expectation: The poor man obſerving the wonders which God doth in the world, cannot be out of hope, though he be out of poſſeſſion; and though his own ſtrength be gone, yet he lives upon the ſtrength of Chriſt; he hopes ſtrongly (that's the force of the word) when he feels no ſtrength. When I am weak (ſaith the Apoſtle Paul, 2 Cor. 12. 10.) then am I ſtrong; that is, I am ſtrongeſt (through hope) in Chriſt, when I am weakeſt, through ſenſe, in my ſelf.

More diſtinctly, this hope may be taken two wayes.

1. For the Object, or thing hoped for.
2. For the Act or Grace of hope.

In the former notion of hope, the ſence runs thus; God having taken the wiſe in their own craftineſs, and diſappointed the devices of the crafty, having delivered the poor from the ſword, from their mouth, and from the hand of the mighty, now the poor hath the thing he looked for, the thing he prayed for, the thing for which he hath been ſeeking and waiting upon God: So the poor hath hope, that is, he hath the mercy he expected, ſalvation from the ſword, &c. he is made partaker of his hope, by thoſe glorious adminiſtrations of the juſtice and mercy of God. Hence obſerve, Firſt, Gods poor hope for good in the worſt times.

When deliverance comes, theſe poor have but that which they looked for; they looked for light when they were in the darkeſt condition. When they were exhauſted, they knew God was not exhauſted; and when they were drawn dry, they knew the Lord was not; though their treaſure was ſpent, yet they were aſſured the treaſury of Heaven was full: When ſtrength is gone, and Money is gone, and Friends are gone, yet God is not gone; and therefore they know the good may come which they hope for. Turn ye to the ſtrong holds, ye priſoners of hope, ſaith the Prophet, Zech. 9. 12. The people of God (though priſoners) are yet priſoners of hope, that is, they have hope of deliverance and enlargement, in their greateſt ſtreights: The power of God is never impriſoned, and while his people can make this out, their ſpirits are not.

Secondly obſerve, It is no vain thing to hope in God.

The poor hath his hope. The Prophet brings in the Jews thus triumphing in God (Iſa. 25.9.) And it ſhall be ſaid in that day: What day was that? The former verſe points it out, A day wherein death ſhall be ſwallowed up in victory, wherein tears ſhall be wiped away from off all faces, &c. And in that day, the people of God ſhall thus boaſt of God, and (as it were ſhewing him to the World) ſhall ſay, Lo, this is our God, we have waited for him, and he will ſave us: This is the Lord, we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoyce in his ſalvation; vain hopes fill our faces with ſhame; but hopes fulfilled, fill our hearts with rejoycing. The poor hath his hope; he can ſhew his hope, 'tis viſible: As Hannah, when ſhe came to preſent her ſon unto Eli, For this child I prayed, as if ſhe ſhould ſay, Sir, here is my prayer; you could not hear my prayer, when I was in the Temple, you thought I was drunken; but now you may ſee my prayer, here it is, for this child I prayed, and the Lord hath given me my petition which I asked of him, 1 Sam. 1.27. So the ſoul ſaith, In ſuch a time of trouble, Perſonal or National, I was praying and ſeeking God, I was believing and hoping; men knew not, underſtood not the workings of my ſoul toward Chriſt, yet now they may ſee them; here is the thing I prayed for, here is that I hoped for; So (firſt) the poor hath hope.

Secondly, The poor hath hope, that is, the grace of hope or the gracious actings of hope; and taking it ſo, the ſence riſes thus: So (that is) God having done ſuch great things, in diſappointing the devices of the crafty, and in ſaving his poor, by this means, the poor come to have hope; the grace of hope ſtrengthned and confirmed in them.

> Hence Obſerve, That, the experience we have of Gods power and mercy, in ſaving us out of former troubles, breeds and nouriſhes hope, againſt future times of trouble.

So the poor hath hope. Though the poor man was in a hopeleſs condition before; yet now ſeeing the works of God, he hath hope laid up for ever, Pſalm 64.9,10. All men ſhall fear and declare the Works of God, for they ſhall wiſely conſider of this thing: And what follows? The righteous ſhall be glad in the Lord, and truſt in him; that is, if they have fail'd in their truſt heretofore, and not given God honour by confiding in him; yet theſe wonderful works of God(of which he ſpeaks in that Pſalm)work this hope; Rom. 5.4. Tribulation worketh patience, and patience experience, and experience hope. Graces have a generation one from another, though all have but one Generation from Chriſt at once. We have here the genealogy of hope in three deſcents. Experience is the next, or immediate parent of hope. So the poor hath hope. Thus it is begotten, 2 Cor. 1.10. God who hath delivered us from ſo great a death, and doth deliver; in him we truſt, that he will yet deliver us. An Armed daring Goliah, ſhould be looked upon, as vanquiſht already, when we can but remember a vanquiſht Lion and a Bear.

Again, The poor hath hope: He doth not ſay, God having thus deſtroyed the ungodly, and ſaved his own people from the ſword, &c. Now they have liberty, now they have peace, now they have abundance of riches and proſperity; but he makes this the iſſue, now they have hope.

> Whence Note, That, hope is a greater and better poſſeſſion unto the people of God here, then all the great and good things which they poſſeſs.

Put as much into their hands as you can, there is more then that put in their hearts by hope. The poor hath hope: he looks over all his poſſeſſions, and pitcheth upon expectation as his Portion. The eſtate which a believer hath in the promiſes, is more then the eſtate he hath in poſſeſſion: Riches in the promiſe, is better then riches in the cheſt. And ſo the deliverances and protections which are laid up for the Saints in promiſes, are more then all the deliverances and protections received and enjoyed: There is no enjoyment but that in Heaven (where we ſhall enjoy all that ever was promiſed) ſo good as hope, for what is promiſed. Alexander an Heathen, had ſuch a notion about an earthly hope, which had no ground neither, but the great things his own ambition promiſed him: for when one ſeeing him give away all his preſent inheritances, ſaid, What Sir, will you make your ſelf a beggar? No (ſaith he) I will reſerve hope for my ſelf,

And iniquity ſtoppeth her mouth.

Here is the oppoſite effect, iniquity; the abſtract is put for the concrete, iniquity, for men of iniquity; wicked men, theſe ſtop their mouthes. And it is obſervable, that as before God made them active in their own deſtruction, ſo here he makes them active in their own ſilence; he ſaith not, God ſtoppeth their mouthes, but they ſtop their own mouths; that is, the wicked ſeeing thoſe wonderful works of God, have not a word to ſay, nor a counſel to give more againſt the godly; they are as mute as fiſhes, as dumb as dogs, they know not how to ſlander, or of whom to complain, and therefore they ſuſpend, and enjoyn ſilence upon themſelves. As that word of Chriſt, Friend how cameſt thou in hither, not having on a wedding garment (Matth. 22.12.) ſo theſe works of Chriſt ſhall make his enemies ſpeechleſs. Iniquity ſtoppeth her mouth.

Perſpectâ hac Dei providentiâ erga pauperes & humiles, maligni & nocendi ſtudioſi retrahent ſeſe, neq; inter ſe ãplius ineant prava & iniqua adverſus pios conſilia. Aquin.

This ſtopping their mouths, is cauſed two wayes; Firſt, from ſhame; A man is ſometime ſilent, becauſe he is aſhamed to ſpeak; diſappointments (eſpecially ſuch as theirs before noted) produce ſhame naturally, and ſhame makes ſilent. A man that bluſhes much, ſpeaks little; and he that dares not lift up his head, will not be forward to lift up his voice, Mich. 7.16. I will ſhew marvellous things (ſaith the Lord, and what then?) The Nations ſhall ſee and be confounded; they ſhall lay their hand upon their mouth, their ears ſhall be deaf: They ſhall ſee it, and be confounded, that is, they ſhall be greatly aſhamed; confuſion of face is but ſhame heightned, and the Holy Ghoſt puts ſhame and confuſion of face together in divers places. Now this great ſhame layes their hands upon their mouths, and puts their fingers in their ears; they are reſolvedly both dumb and deaf, at the ſight of thoſe marvellous things.

Secondly, Admiration and amaizment ſilence them: The works of God being marvellous, they ſhall ſtand admiring and wondring at them, till they cannot ſpeak. Read the like, Iſa. 52.15. & Pſal. 107.42. where, when the Prophet had reckoned up many wonderful works of God, he concludes as in the Text, verſ. 42. He ſetteth the poor on high, &c. the righteous ſhall ſee it and rejoyce, and all iniquity ſhall ſtop her mouth; while the Lord ſeems to do nothing, or to do but little, iniquity will do nothing, but talk, or it talks very much, it is very talkative; but if once God begin working, iniquity has done ſpeaking, you ſhall hear no more of them, till the next ſucceſs on their ſide.

> Then Obſerve, Firſt, Wicked men will never ceaſe ſlandering and cenſuring, bragging and boaſting, till ſome eminent judgment ſtops their mouths.

So iniquity ſtoppeth her mouth, they will never ſtop their mouths before: Iſa. 26.11. Lord, when thy hand is lifted up, they will not ſee; but they ſhall ſee and be aſhamed for their envy at thy people: I will make the judgment bigger and and greater; write my wrath in fairer, or rather bloodier Characters, that they may ſee them: As ſmall judgments will not open the eyes of wicked men, ſo ſmall judgments will not ſtop their mouthes; but when God begins to work wonders, they are dumb, they have done.

> Secondly Obſerve, That, God will do ſuch things for his people, as ſhall put the crafty to ſilence.

The Saints ought to live ſo holily, That by well doing they may put to ſilence the ignorance of fooliſh men, 1 Pet. 2.15. The Lord will do ſo juſtly and gloriouſly, as ſhall put to ſilence the malice of the wiſeſt men: Theſe two, the holineſs of the Saints, and the Juſtice of God, are ſtopples in the mouths, or the ſtop-mouths of ungodly men. As they by unrighteous acts have ſtopped other mens mouths, and ſilenced them, ſo God by terrible things in righteouſneſs, will ſtop their mouths, and ſilence them for ever: They ſhall have nothing to ſay at laſt, either againſt the juſtice of God, or againſt the innocency of his People; againſt both theſe their mouths chiefly open. They impute and faſten unrighteouſneſs on God: you talk of God, and boaſt of his promiſes; where is he? where are they? The Prophet brings them in, belching out ſuch blaſphemies (Iſa. 5.19.) They ſay, let him make ſpeed and haſten his work, that we may ſee it; and let the counſel of the holy One of Iſrael, draw nigh and come that we may know it. Words filled with as high a ſence of ſpiritual wickedneſs, as wit and malice can infuſe. They jeer the patience of God as ſlackneſs, and as if Juſtice it ſelf were tired, or too ſlow-pac'd, they ſpur it on, to ruine themſelves. You have often told us of the Holy One of Iſrael, and what he would do, but threatned men live long we ſee. You are nimbler of your tongues, then your Holy One of Iſrael is of his hands. Therefore let him make ſpeed (if he can) and haſten his work, that we may ſee it.

Will not the jealouſie of the Lord awake, at the noiſe of this helliſh blaſphemy? will he not ſtop the mouth of this iniquity? ſurely he will: And the Prophet aſſures us he will at *verſ.*24. Therefore as the fire devoureth the ſtubble, and as the flame conſumeth the chaff; ſo their Root ſhall be rottenneſs, and their bloſſoms ſhall go up as duſt. But how doth the fire devour the ſtubble? how doth the flame conſume the chaff? even in a moment; fire needs no blowing, to make it take hold of dry ſtubble: Stubble is at once flame and aſhes. So ſpeedy ſhall the conſumption of theſe men be, who called the Lord to make ſpeed; then (I believe(they'l no more bid him make haſte. The mouth of this iniquity will be ſtopt for ever. Our God ſhall come, and ſhall not keep ſilence. A fire ſhall devour before him, Pſalm 50. 3. And then the wicked ſhall be ſilent in darkneſs, 1 Sam. 2. 9. The fire of wrath is all heat, no light.

Laſtly, All the ſlanders againſt the innocency of the Saints ſhall be ſo confuted, that the adverſary ſhall have nothing to ſay againſt them. Their innocency ſhall be made as clear as the light, and their juſtice as the noon-day: Yea God will ſo order it, that theſe crafty oppreſſors ſhall carry a juſtification of God, and of his people in their own hearts. Their conviction ſhall be ſo ſtrong, and their light ſo clear, that iniquity it ſelf ſhall not be able to gain-ſay, but muſt ſtop it's mouth for ever.

VERS. 17, 18.

Behold happy is the man, whom God correcteth; therefore deſpiſe not thou the chaſtening of the Almighty.

For he maketh ſore, and bindeth up: he woundeth, and his hands make whole.

WE have finiſhed the firſt branch of Exhortation, begun verſ. 8. wherein Eliphaz moves Job, to ſeek to God, and unto God to commit his cauſe; with the ſeveral arguments and reaſons, ſtrengthning that Exhortation. At this verſ. 17. Eliphaz begins a ſecond branch of Exhortation, and it is continued to the end of the Chapter. We have the Exhortation (or Dehortation rather, for it is expreſt in the negative) in the latter clauſe of verſ. 17. Deſpiſe not thou the chaſtening of the Almighty.

The firſt Argument by which he quickens Job to receive this counſel, lies in the former part of the ſame verſe; Behold happy is the man, whom God correcteth: The Argument may be framed thus, That condition is not to be deſpiſed, wherein a man is truly happy; But under the correcting hand of God a man is truly happy: Therefore that condition is not to be deſpiſed. Behold (ſaith he) happy is the man, whom God correcteth; therefore deſpiſe not thou the chaſtning of the Almighty.

Behold, happy is the man.

To behold, calls here both for attention and admiration: For here is a ſtrange ſight, An afflicted man, a bleſſed man. Natural ſence and reaſon cannot agree about this conjunction. They know not how happineſs and correction ſhould meet, and kiſs the ſame perſon: Therefore raiſe up thy attention (ſaith Eliphaz) to conſider this wonder. When the Angel of the Lord appeared unto Moſes in a flame of fire out of the midſt of a buſh; he looked and behold the buſh burned with fire, and the buſh was not conſumed. And Moſes ſaid, I will now turn aſide, and ſee this great ſight, why the buſh is not burnt, Exod. 3. 2, 3. Such a great ſight, this Text ſhews us: A buſh burning, and not conſuming; yea a buſh burning, and yet flouriſhing; a buſh on fire, and yet a fruit-bearing buſh; a buſh blooming and bloſſoming with the pleaſanteſt and ſweeteſt fruit on Earth, or rather with the fruit of Heaven; fruit upon which we ſhall feed for ever in Heaven; fruit, the taſte of which, makes a Heaven here on Earth, Happineſs. Well then, is this ſtrange ſight preſented to us, with A Behold.

Happy is the man whom God correcteth.

Happineſs is the enjoyment of good commenſurate to all our deſires. That's perfect happineſs. Happineſs is the ſum of all our deſires, and the aim of all our endeavours: and when we have attained perfect happineſs, we ſhall be at a full point, both of our deſire and endeavours.

But though all men have happineſs in their Eye (to be happy is their end, and this happineſs is but one) Yet the wayes, which men have chalked out, as leading to happineſs, have been, not only various, but almoſt infinite. Some of the learned have reckoned up two or three Centuries, or hundreds of opinions, concerning this one point. And it is well obſerved, that men varied thus in opinion about happineſs, becauſe they thought the enjoyment of that, wherein any of them was defective, would make them happy. He that was poor, ſaid, I ſhould be happy, if I had riches, and thence grew his opinion, that happineſs conſiſted in riches: The ſick man ſaid, I ſhould be happy, if I had my health, and thence grew his opinion, that happineſs conſiſted in health: Another was obſcure, mean and low, O (ſaid he) how happy were I, if I were honourable; and thence grew a third opinion, that happineſs conſiſted in honour: Thus they varied according to their particular neceſſities and intereſts. But amongſt all thoſe Opinioniſts, we meet not with any one, who pitcht upon this in the Text. This is a Paradox to them all; a natural man cannot place happineſs in correction: No Philoſopher or pure Moraliſt ever ſaid, Happy is the man, that is ſore; happy is the man, that is ſick; happy is the man, that is diſgraced; or happy is the man, that is in priſon: Theſe are riddles, ſuch as nature is not able to expound or make out; the Philoſopher would as ſoon place light in darkneſs, the Sun in a cloud, heat in coldneſs, the Element of fire in the water, as bleſſedneſs in ſufferings. Therefore no marvel if Eliphaz uſher it in, with a Behold; Behold happy is the man, whom God correcteth.

The word, Happy, is of the Plural number, or rather of the Dual in the Hebrew. Some tranſlate it in the Abſtract, Behold the bleſſedneſs of that man, whom God corrects: But it is fully rendred by the Adjective, as we; Behold happy is the man, &c.

There is much contention amongſt the Grammarians about the word, whether it be abſtract or concrete; a Noun, or an Adverb: But I will not ſtay on thoſe, only conſider a little what accounts is given, why the word is uſed plurally or dually.

Firſt, It is to increaſe the ſignification, and heighten the ſence; as noting the confluence of many good things in happineſs. Happineſs is not a ſingle good; happineſs conſiſts in the concurrence or meeting together of many good things: God, who is infinitely happy, infinitely bleſſed in himſelf, and an infinite bleſſing, all bleſſing to his people, is not a ſingle good, or a particular good, but he is all good, both to himſelf, and to his people. A godly man is happy in the largeſt ſence, in all ſences; becauſe his, is not this or that particular good, but all good. And he is not happy only at this or that particular time, but at all times. He is as happy, when he is ſuffering under the hand of God, as when he is ſerving God; as happy in his paſſive, as in his active obedience. And therefore the ſame word expreſſes his condition, both in the one, aud in the other.

Beati beatitudo in multis bonitatibus conſiſtit. Rab. D.

Secondly, Becauſe there is a two-fold happineſs: Firſt, the happineſs of this life: And ſecondly, the happineſs of the next; Temporal happineſs, and Eternal happineſs; Corporal hpapineſs, and Spiritual happineſs, To note a complication of all theſe, the word may be given in the Dual or Plural number; he that is thus corrected, loſes not temporal happineſs, but he gains in ſpiritual, and toward eternal happineſs. The preſent and future happineſs of the Saints, the happineſs of grace and of glory, differ but in degrees: It is the ſame ſtate in a higher ſtature: The ſame book in a more correct edition and fairer letter. Theſe differ as a child from a man, or as the morning light from the light at high-noon; ſo then, this word includes all kinds and degrees of happineſs: yet, here it is properly to be underſtood of the happineſs of this life, which only is conſiſtent with correction: There are no rods in Heaven, aud we ſhall be paſt children, before we come thither.

Simplex & genuina reſponſio eſt, quod nomen ipſum quo Hebræi beatitudinem notant, eſt plurale tantũ, ut Latinis opes, Divitiæ. Ames in Pſal. 1.

Thirdly, We may anſwer plainly, that the word in the Hebrew is only Plural or Dual, being never read in the ſingular number: As in the Latine we have many the like words.

It is further obſervable concerning this word, that it is alwayes applied unto man, whereas the word (Barac) bleſſed, is applied both to God and man. This happineſs is a ſpecial and peculiar happineſs of man: The Lord being infinitely above, both obeying and ſuffering.

Happy is the Man.] Enoſh, the Hebrew word for Man (of whom happineſs under correction is predicated) is very ſutable to this buſineſs of correction. Enoch ſignifies a ſickly, weak, miſerable man: We might render the full ſence of the word thus, Happy is that miſerable man, whom God corrects. That is, look upon a man according to the ordinary account of the World, and calculation of reaſon, he is a miſerable man, a weak, ſickly man; yet happy is this weak, ſickly, miſerable man in the account of God, and by the calculation of faith. Grace makes that good ſence, which is a contradiction, both in nature and in reaſon: A miſerable man, and a happy man, one and the ſame.

In Pſalm 1. the word Iſh is uſed, Bleſſed is the man, that is, Bleſſed is that excellent man, that holy man, that ſtrong man, walking and delighting in the law of the Lord. Yea bleſſed with the ſame bleſſedneſs is that miſerable man (ſmarting under the rod of the Lord) whom God correcteth.

And yet Bleſſedneſs is joyned with all the words, by which man is expreſſed. It is joyned with Adam, Pſalm 32. 1. Bleſſed is the man whoſe iniquity is forgiven. Adam is the general word for Man, and is therefore moſt fitly joyned with Bleſſedneſs in pardon of ſin, becauſe all men are ſinners, and no man can be bleſſed, except he be pardoned. Bleſſedneſs is joyned alſo with Geber, a ſtrong, powerful and mighty man, *Pſal.*94.12. Bleſſed is the man whom thou chaſteneſt, O Lord, and teacheſt him out of thy Law; Bleſſed is (Geber) the great man, the honourable man, the higheſt by birth or place, whom thou chaſteneſt.

Beatus Abrahã vir pius quem corripuit Deus. Chal. Parap.

The Chaldee Paraphraſe reſtrains the word [Man] to an individual, to Abraham, as if Eliphaz had put the inſtance in Abraham, and ſaid, Behold, happy was that holy man Abraham whom God corrected; therefore diſpiſe not thou the chaſtning of the Almighty: I can give thee a famous example of a godly man corrected; Abraham (thy Anceſtor) met with afflictions, as well as thou, and yet he was a moſt happy man: therefore deſpiſe not thou the chaſtning of the Lord. But the word is general, and ſo we are to underſtand it; though this be a truth, in any or every inſtance among the ſervants of God.

I muſt yet put in a caution for the right underſtanding of this propoſition, Bleſſed is the man, whom God corrects. The meaning is not, as if happineſs were the portion of every miſerable man, or of every man that is afflicted; do not think ſo; many are at once, corrected and curſed, troubled and miſerable in trouble. To many, their preſent ſorrows, are but the fore-taſts of eternal ſorrows. As Chriſt ſpake in a common caſe, Theſe things are but the beginning of ſorrows: So we may ſay to the particular caſes of many groaning under ſickneſs, poverty, diſgrace, &c. Alas, poor ſouls, ye are ſo far from being happy in theſe, that theſe are but the beginnings of your unhappineſs; God doth but begin to call for ſome arrears, due to his juſtice, which ye muſt be a paying and ſatiſfying to all eternity.

There is no happineſs in affliction naturally conſidered; it is accidental to afflictions, that happineſs is aſſociated with them. Affliction in it ſelf is grievous, and it would be only ſo to us, did not the over-ruling, admirable diſpenſations of God, temper, order, diſpoſe, and work it to an end above its own nature; it is the art and wiſdom of the Phyſitian, which corrects poyſonous ſimples and ingredients, ſo, as to make them medicinable. And did not the wiſdom and goodneſs of God, correct our corrections, they would not be medicine to us, but poyſon; it is not correction, but the hand of God with it, and in it, which makes us happy.

Happy is the man, whom God correcteth.

The word, which we tranſlate correct, ſignifies to reprove or to convince, by arguments or diſpute; to argue a man down from his error, by the ſtrength and clearneſs of reaſon or divine authority. So Levit. 19. 19. Thou ſhalt not ſuffer ſin upon thy brother, thou ſhalt ſurely rebuke him. Thou ſhalt rebuke him, it is the word here uſed, that is, thou ſhalt bring ſuch arguments, as may convince him of his ſin, and lay his wickedneſs open before him. This word is applied to corrections and afflictions in Scripture, becauſe with convictions, we feel corrections frequently joyned; the Lord argues the matter, and (as it were) diſputes with ſome very long, who yet will not let in divine truth, nor be perſwaded, though they are perſwaded; What doth he then? Then he ſends correction with his redargution, he cloaths his words with blows, diſputes with a rod in his hand, and brings an argument from feeling, when reaſoning prevails not. In this book of Job, Elihu ſhews it, Chap. 33. 16, 19. Then he openeth the ears of men, and ſealeth their inſtruction: he is chaſtened alſo with pain upon his bed.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, That, afflictions to the children of God at ſoreſt, are but corrections.

Bleſſed (or happy) is the man whom God corrects. You will ſay, but what is a correction? And how (in a ſtrict ſence) differenced from judgments and puniſhments, and wherein do they agree?

They agree, firſt, in the efficient cauſe. God layes his hand on man in both.

Secondly, They agree in the matter; the ſame evil, the ſame trouble to one man is a correction, to another a judgment.

Thirdly, They may agree alſo in the degree; a trouble or an affliction may fall and lie as heavy, and be as painful to ſenſe upon a child of God, as upon the vileſt wretch in the world; he may be as poor, as friendleſs, as ſick, as ſorrowful in his outward man, as any wicked man; he may lie in the ſame dungeon, and be bound with the ſame chain, he may be ſlain with the ſame ſword, burnt at the ſame ſtake, eaten up with the ſame famine. So that both in the materiality, and likewiſe in the graduality of it, it may be the ſame on both, yet, upon one it is a correction, upon the other a judgment.

What then is this correction? And where will the correction and the judgment part?

I conceive, that the infirmities of the Saints, and the ſins of the wicked differ, as judgments and corrections differ. Now look upon thoſe ſins, which we call the infirmities of the Saints; they may be the ſame in the matter, the ſame in kind, yea (poſſibly) the ſame in the degree (I mean reſpecting the outward rule given by God, and the outward act committed by man) with the ſins of thoſe who know not God, or who, in ſinning, go againſt their knowledge.

Then, where do they part?

Surely, where corrections and judgments part: And where is that? Eſpecially in two things.

1. In the manner how; 2. In the end why, they are inflicted.

Firſt, The Lord never corrects his children with ſuch a heart, as he carries in laying trouble upon the loyns of wicked men. The heart of God is turned toward his children, when he corrects them; but his heart is turned from a wicked man, when he puniſhes him. The Lord is even pained (that I may ſpeak as the Scripture often doth in this point, after the manner of men) I ſay the Lord expreſſes himſelf as pained, as grieved, as if every ſtroak went to his own heart, when he ſtrikes his children. When he is about to ſtrike, he is (as it were) unreſolved whether he ſhall ſtrike or no; and as ſoon as he hath ſtricken, he (as it were) repents that he did ſtrike them. All which motions of his heart the Lord ſhews us in the higheſt ſtrains of paſſionate Rhetorick, Hoſ. 11. 8, 9. But when he takes the wicked in hand to puniſh them, we read of no paſſion aſcribed to him, but theſe, delight or joy, and the effect of them, laughter: hatred or indignation, and the effect of theſe, mocking at them, *Prov.*1.26. I will laugh at your calamity, and mock when your fear cometh. And when he reſolves upon the deſtruction of his enemies, he ſpeaks, as if then he had unburden'd himſelf, and his heart were lighter then before, Iſa. 1. 24. Ah I will eaſe me of my adverſaries, and avenge me of my enemies.

Secondly, The difference is as broad about the end. When God layes the rod of correction upon his child, he aimes at the purging out of his ſin, at the preventing of his ſin, at the revealing of a fatherly diſpleaſure againſt him for his ſin: The Lord would only have him take notice, that he doth not approve of him in ſuch courſes. When theſe ends are propoſed, every affliction is a correction. But the afflictions of the ungodly are ſent for other ends. Firſt, To take vengeance on them. Secondly, to ſatisfie offended juſtice; juſtice cries aloud againſt them, and they have nothing to interpoſe, but their bare backs or naked ſouls. The Lord comes as a ſevere Creditor, and bids them pay that which they owe, or ſuffer, and to priſon, becauſe they cannot pay.

Secondly obſerve, A Child of God is in a happy condition under all corrections.

As man (in a natural or civil capacity) at his beſt eſtate, is altogether vanity, Pſal. 39. 5. So, in a ſpiritual capacity, he is altogether happineſs, in his worſt outward eſtate: Happy is the man whom God corrects; he is a gainer by correction: If he loſeth any thing, it is but the droſs of his corruptions; By this therefore ſhall the iniquity of Jacob be purged, and this is all the fruit, to take away his ſin. Corrections are not ſent to take away his comforts, but to take away his corruptions. That fire which God kindles upon his children, ſhall burn only (as it did the material bonds of the three Children in Daniel) the ſpiritual bonds of their iniquity that they may be more free to righteouſneſs. Again, Corrections are not manifeſtations of wrath, but an evidence of his love, and of their Son-ſhip. Whom I love, I chaſtize, Rev. 3. 21. And if ye endure chaſtening, God dealeth with you as with ſons, Heb. 12. 7. The love of God is better then life; and to be a ſon of God, is the higheſt priviledge of his love. Where ſhall we be happy, if not in that which aſſures us of ſuch love, and of love in ſuch a relation? Hence the Apoſtle concludes (2 Cor. 4. 12.) So then, death worketh in us; death, that is, our daily ſufferings and endurings. He ſpeaks (indeed) eſpecially of ſufferings for the truth, from the cruel hand of man; but it is true likewiſe of all ſufferings under the correcting hand of God: Thoſe ſtroaks which are deadly to our bodies, may yet work for us. And what work they? The ſeventeenth verſe anſwers the queſtion; Our light afflictions which are but for a moment, work for us a far more exceeding & eternal weight of glory. The ſufferings of the Saints are active, and their paſſions operative; But how do they work? Not by way of merit or earning (Our blood cannot oblige God) but by way of preparation. The Lord ſends afflictions, to faſhion and cleanſe our hearts, as fit veſſels to hold an exceeding weight of glory: our bearing the heavieſt afflictions, doth not weigh ſo much as the leaſt grain of glory, yet they fit our hearts for an exceedingly excellent weight of glory. We cannot ſay properly, that they work any glory; but by an Hyperbole in ſpeech, we ſay, they work towards an Hyperbole in glory.

Iſa. 27. 9.

And if any doubt, can a man be happy when his outward comfort is gone? Doubtleſs he may: For a man is never unhappy, but when he hath loſt that wherein happineſs doth conſiſt. The happineſs of a godly man doth not conſiſt in his outward comforts, in riches, in health, in honour, in civil liberty, or humane relations; therefore in the loſs of theſe he cannot be unhappy. His happineſs conſiſts in his relation to, and acceptance with God, in his title to, and union with Jeſus Chriſt. While he keeps theſe priviledges (and theſe he ſhall keep for ever) what hath he loſt, if he loſe all beſides theſe? He hath not loſt any thing diſcernable, out of his eſtate. Suppoſe a man were worth a million of money, and he ſhould loſe a penny, would you think this man an undone man? No: his eſtate feels not this loſs, and therefore he hath not loſt his eſtate. If a man ſhould buy a thouſand meaſures of Corn or Cloth, and ſhould loſe the given handfuls of the one, or inches of the other, would ye ſay, that this man hath loſt either his corn or his cloth? All the things of the world (and they only are looſable) which a godly man hath, are not ſo much to his eſtate as a penny to a million; they are indeed no proper part of his eſtate, they are but an additional overplus to his eſtate; as the handful of grain, or inch of cloth, are no part of the meaſure agreed or bargained for; only ſo much that ſpeech of Chriſt imports, Mat. 6. 33. Seek firſt the Kingdom of God, and the righteouſneſs thereof, and all other things ſhall be added or miniſtred to you; your kingdom is whole and ſafe to you, though you have not theſe: Theſe things are extrinſecal and foreign to all that, which I reckon upon as your eſtate; God having given us Chriſt, caſts us in the creatures, as not coming upon any account in that vaſt act of his free love and bounty: And ſhall we account him unhappy, who hath loſt theſe things, which were never brought to account as any part of his happineſs? Then happy ſtill, though corrected. And which is yet more, correction takes nothing from the ſtock, but it addeth ſomewhat; correction brings in a revenue of profit with it. They (ſaith the Apoſtle, meaning our earth-parents) chaſtened us after their own pleaſure, but he for our profit. What profit? Do Houſes and Land, Gold and Silver, bloſſom from the correcting rod? Surely they may: But he means better profit then theſe, and a far more noble merchandize: Gold and Silver are poor and baſe, to the profit which comes in by chaſtenings; Grace and holineſs come in this way: He for our profit, that we may be partakers of his holineſs, Heb. 12. 10. We want nothing of the happineſs in heaven, but ſo much holineſs as we ſhall have in heaven. Surely then whatſoever affliction takes away, it cannot take away our happineſs, foraſmuch as it makes us greater ſharers in, and partakers of holineſs.

And the corrected children of God are unhappy only in the opinion of other men, not in their own: When did you ever hear any of them ſay, they were unhappy, becauſe they were corrected? I do not remember, that I ever read or heard any of them ſay, O unhappy we, who are thus afflicted! Salvian anſwered this Objection well, when he ſaw many ſcandalized at the afflictions of the godly, thinking theirs a very ſad and pitiful condition: Do you hear them complaining (ſaith he) or did they ever complain to you? No man is to be accounted miſerable in another mans ſenſe, but in his own. You make the complaint, not they. The truth is, a holy heart can bear trouble with more eaſe, then a carnal heart can ſee it. Paul (whoſe whole life, after converſion, was but one continued affliction) was ſo far from complaining and ſaying, O unhappy man that I am! that he rejoyced in tribulation, and was but as ſorrowing, yet alwayes rejoycing. I confeſs, it becomes us to be more ſenſible of corrections, then of perſecutions; the former being uſually, ſufferings upon our defects in Grace, and the latter upon our higheſt actions and puttings forth of Grace. It becomes the Saints to be humbled under corrections; but who hath heard them (when they were themſelves) complaining of corrections? I have often heard them bleſſing God for corrections; I have often heard them ſay, it was, and it is good for us, that we have been corrected; And while the Saints write their afflictions upon the Inventory of their goods, we have no reaſon to put them to account, or caſt them up among their evils.

Quamvis ſancti videantur ignorantibus eſſe miſeri, non poſſunt tamẽ eſſe aliud quam beati. Nemo aliorum ſenſu miſer eſt, ſed ſuo. Nulli enim beatiores ſunt quã qui ex ſententia ſua & voto agunt. Humiles ſunt religioſi, hoc volunt: Pauperes ſunt, paupertie delectãtur. Lugent, lugere geſtiunt, &c. Salv. De gub. Dei l. 1.

Laſtly, A godly man cannot be unhappy while he enjoyes God: And he uſually enjoyes God moſt, when he is moſt afflicted. A wicked man is never unhappy in his own thoughts, till he hath loſt his god, ſuch a one as he is, his riches, his pleaſure, his credit; theſe he makes his god, inſtead of a better; indeed, inſtead of him who is beſt of all: Theſe are loſeable gods, and ſo his happineſs may ſoon be loſt; but he that once enjoyes the true God, can never loſe him, and therefore can never loſe his happineſs.

That of Saul, is one of the ſaddeſt ſpeeches in all the Book of God, 1 Sam. 28. 15. I am ſore diſtreſſed, for the Philiſtines make war againſt me, and God is departed from me. When trouble comes, and God departs, when ſickneſs and poverty make war upon a man, and God be departed from a man, O how unhappy! What words can expreſs the unhappineſs of ſuch a man? But they who can take liberty, and eſtate, and life from us, cannot take God from us; and if God ſhould take all theſe from us, he will not, he cannot (becauſe he hath promiſed he will not) take himſelf from us: I (ſaith the Lord) will never leave thee nor forſake thee, Heb. 13. 5. And if God forſake us not, happineſs cannot; for he is our happineſs.

A Heathen could ſay, it was unbecoming a Roman ſpirit, to cry out (in his loſſes) I am undone, while Cæſar was ſafe. It is infinitely below a Chriſtian ſpirit to ſay, I am undone, while Chriſt is ſafe: ſuch language is groſſeſt Barbariſm in all the Churches. They who cannot loſe either their ſouls or their Saviour in the worſt condition, cannot be unhappy in any condition, much leſs then under the fatherly correcting hand of God.

Behold, happy is the man whom God corrects, is a truth which no ſtorms of trouble ſhall ever ſhake or weaken.

Therefore deſpiſe not thou the chaſtening of the Almighty. That's the inference.

The word which we tranſlate [deſpiſe] hath various ſignifications, and they will all be profitable for the clearing of this point; therefore I ſhall open them diſtinctly: and give ſome brief Notes upon every one in order.

Firſt, It ſignifies to reject a thing, or caſt it off with loathing; when a mans ſtomack turns againſt ſome meats, or they go againſt his ſtomach, loathing ariſes from it. So the word is uſed, Numb. 11. 20. When the people murmured becauſe they wanted fleſh, God threatneth them with ſatisfying their deſires: Fleſh would you have? You ſhall have fleſh: It is a threat; But how ſhall they have it? *You ſhall not have it one day, nor two dayes, nor five dayes, neither ten dayes, nor twenty dayes; but you ſhall have fleſh even a whole moneth, until it come out of your noſtrils, and it be * loathſom unto you, or till you your ſelves deſpiſe it. It is moſt juſt with God, that they who loath his will, ſhould at laſt loath their own deſires*; and that the creatures ſhould not long pleaſe them, who take no heed to pleaſe the Creator. The leaſt mixture of Gods diſpleaſure ſowres our ſweeteſt contents, and makes our very pleaſures loathſom.

Where alſo (by the way) we may obſerve the great difference between earthly and ſpiritual things: The beſt of earthly things, uſed too much or too often, grow loathſom. Angels food (Manna or Quails) will not go down long with us. But Chriſt, the ſpiritual Manna, and all heavenly things, the more we have of them, and the longer we are dieted with them, the more we ſhall delight in them: Theſe will not loath us, after two, or five, or ten, or twenty dayes, or after a whole moneths feeding on them: No, we ſhall feed on them dayes without number, or the whole day of eternity, without any loathings; uſe and delight ſhall never ceaſe or abate; appetite ſhall renew every moment, though our enjoyment be but one and the ſame. Yea, the Saints ſhall be ſo far from loathing the pleaſant cup of glory, that they ought not to loath, and (Chriſt ſtrengthning them) they ſhall not loath the bitter cup of ſorrow: their ſtomachs ſhall not turn, though dieted more then two, or five, or ten, or twenty dayes with the bread of adverſity, and the water of affliction. That is the firſt ſence of the word, in alluſion to nauſeating at the ſight or long uſe of meat: Loath not the chaſtening of the Lord.

Or the word may ſeem to carry a reference to phyſick or medicines, as well as meat, which you know is many times given in a bitter pill, or in a diſtaſtful potion: the ſick man is apt to loath the potion brought him, and turn his head away from it; what, he take it, no not he. He had rather die, then drink ſuch a draught; he is ready to throw it againſt the wall, and ſpill it on the ground rather then drink it: But then his Friends or the Phyſitian perſwades with him; be not angry, though it be loathſom to your ſtomach, yet it is wholeſom for your body: it is an enemy only to your diſeaſe, therefore loath it not. So here Eliphaz (as it were) brings in God ſtanding like a Phyſitian or a Father, or a tender Mother at the beds ſide, where a ſick Child or a friend lies, uſing many intreaties or perſwaſive reaſons to take a bitter potion; my child, or my friend, do not loath, do not deſpiſe, no nor diſtaſte this medicine, do not caſt it away; though it be bitter in your mouth, yet take it down, and the effects of it will be ſweet to your whole body. We find in Scripture, afflictions compared to a cup: Our Lord Jeſus calls all his ſufferings for our ſalvation, a Cup, and it was a cup tempered with the venom and poiſon, with the gall and wormwood of all our ſins; it was a loathſom potion indeed, and ſuch as would have turned the ſtomachs of all Men and Angels to have drunk it. So much of the firſt ſence of the word, as it ſignifies loathing, whether in reſpect of meats or medicines.

Now foraſmuch as here is a charge given under this notion, not to loath chaſtenings; We may obſerve,

There is, or poſſibly may be an averſneſs in the beſt of Gods children for a time, from the due entertainment of chaſtenings.

He ſpeaks as if moſt were loth to take them down, and therefore he exhorts, not to loath them: Even the Lord Jeſus Chriſt (ſo far as he was partaker of our nature) ſeemed to loath the bitter cup of ſufferings. Hence he prayed hard, once, and again, yea a third time, Father, if it be poſſible, let this Cup paſs from me, (Matth. 26. 39.) Yet at another time, he ſpeaks as if he had been athirſt for that Cup, and angry with Peter who would have hindred his draught, The Cup which my Father giveth me, ſhall I not drink it? Joh. 18. 11. and ſhortly after, he indeed drank it up to the bottom. Affliction is alſo a bitter Cup to the Saints, and they (as Chriſt) pray again and again, yea thrice againſt it; becauſe to ſenſe, no chaſtening ſeemeth joyous but grievous, Heb. 12. 11. though grace perſwades them to drink it, and faith gives them a taſte of much ſweetneſs, when they have drank it: As a ſick man is backward to take a diſtaſtful medicine, till his reaſon hath overcome his ſenſe; ſo a godly man is unwilling to bear afflictions, till his faith hath overcome his reaſon: nor can he quietly endure the troubleſom ſmart of the rod, till he is aſſured of the peaceable fruits of righteouſneſs, which grow from it, to thoſe who are exerciſed by it. When the Apoſtle is carried upon thoſe Eagles wings of aſſurance, to ſee a houſe not made with hands eternal in the Heavens, then he groans earneſtly under the burden of his earthly tabernacle, and deſires to die; yet looking upon death, he ſaw no form or comelineſs in that, why he ſhould deſire it; and therefore he ſeems to correct himſelf, at leaſt to draw his mind plainer with the next drop of his pen; Not for that we would be uncloathed, but cloathed upon, that mortality may be ſwallowed up of life. He ſpeaks ſomewhat like a man, who in a time of heat, haſtily ſtrips himſelf to go into the water, but putting a foot in, and finding it cold, calls for his cloaths again. The Apoſtle in a true holy heat of ſpirit had in his deſires almoſt ſtript himſelf of his body, but putting a foot into the grave, he found that ſo cold, that he had no great mind to it, and therefore had rather keep on the cloathing of his body, and have a ſuite of glory over it, then lay it down. The Saints deſire to live with Chriſt; but in it ſelf, they deſire not to die: They had rather their mortality ſhould be ſwallowed up of eternal life, then their temporal life ſhould be ſwallowed up of mortality. They that have grace, like not the diſ-unions of nature. Now as it is in the caſe of death (which is to the Saints the laſt and greateſt affliction) ſo likewiſe in the caſe of all afflictions, which are as renewed and leſſer deaths: Though they embrace and kiſs them (both in a holy ſubmiſſion to the will of God, and in an aſſured expectation of their own good) yet they have nothing pleaſing in them; much, which creates ſo much loathing, that the beſt do but need counſel and encouragement to take and digeſt them.

And then if there be ſome averſneſs even in the beſt from theſe potions of affliction, tempered with the mercy and goodneſs of God; no wonder if there be an abhorrence in wicked men, from thoſe deadly potions, mixt only with his wrath and juſtice. The Pſalmiſt preſents the Lord to us, with a cup in his hand (Pſal. 75. 8.) In the hand of the Lord there is a cup, the wine thereof is red (which notes fierce wrath) and it is full of mixture: (This mixture, is of judgments, plagues, and puniſhments, this is the portion of their cup, Pſal. 11. ult.) But what will the Lord do with this mixed cup? who ſhall ſip at the top of the cup, he tells us not; but he is expreſs, whoſe the bottom is, He poureth out the ſame (ſome drops are ſpilt here and there) but the dregs thereof, all the ungodly of the Earth ſhall wring them out and drink them. Alas they loath it, their ſtomachs turn at it: They have not been brought up to drink dregs, they have had their wine well refined, and ſparkling with ſpirits in chriſtal glaſſes; and how can they get this down? They who have drunk ſo willingly and freely of the cup of ſin, ſhall be forced whether they will or no to drink the cup of judgment. And it is not a ſip or two ſhall ſerve their turns, they muſt drink all, dregs and all; they ſhall drink it to the bottom, and yet they ſhall never come to the bottom; they have loved long draughts, and now they ſhall have one long enough, there is eternity to the bottom: If a cup of affliction, which (in the effect) is a cup of ſalvation, be ſometime or for a time, nauſeous to the godly, how deadly ſick will the ungodly be, who muſt for ever drink a cup of wrath and death?

Secondly, The word which we tranſlate deſpiſe, notes the rejecting of a thing as unprofitable or unuſeful: That which a man deſpiſeth, he thinks he ſhall have no good by it: Things which are unprofitable are deſpioable: So the word is uſed (Pſal. 118.22.) The ſtone which the builders refuſed or deſpiſed, is become the head ſtone of the corner. There were maſter builders in the Church, who (when they ſurveyed all ſorts of materials or ſtones for their fabrick of faith) looking upon the perſon of Chriſt, thought him fit only to caſt out among the rubbiſh, as altogether unuſeful; they layed him by, as a refuſe-ſtone, who is the head corner ſtone, both the ſtrength and beauty of the whole building. Thus the word is very appliable to the preſent Text: refuſe not corrections, as unprofitable and uſeleſs: Say not (as the Jews of Chriſt, Can any good come out of Nazareth? ſo) can any good come out of chaſtenings? Deſpiſe not the chaſtening of the Almighty.

And from this notion of the word, we may obſerve a ſecond prejudice againſt the rod: Even the Saints are ready to conceive afflictions to be unuſeful, and that they could well enough ſpare, and be without their troubles. A natural eye never ſees nor finds any thing but dammage by affliction; and a ſpiritual Eye doth not alwayes ſee the advantage that comes by them. Yea, he may ſometime ſay of an affliction, it will be my undoing, and the ruine of my houſe, and yet afterwards find it as a corner ſtone, the choiceſt outward means, which (through the bleſſing of God) hath united the walls both of his ſpiritual and civil building, the frame both of grace within, and comforts without. The Apoſtle Peter, hath a ſtrange Parentheſis (1 Pet. 1.6.) For having told them of their rejoycing in the ſafety of their ſpiritual eſtate, being kept (or ſecured as with a Garriſon from Heaven) by the power of God, through faith unto ſalvation. Though now for a ſeaſon (if need be) ye are in heavineſs through manifold Temptations, or afflictions. Obſerve how he puts an If need be, or a ſuppoſition of neceſſity upon the afflictions of believers. As if he had ſaid, ye who are the Candidates of eternity, and heirs of ſalvation, may judge your ſelves paſt the rod or the ferula, and think, now ye have need of nothing but comfort or rejoycing in the hope of that ſalvation, ready to be revealed; but I tell you, you may have need of heavineſs yet, before you come to Heaven: and of manifold temptations, for the removing or ſubduing the corruptions of your hearts, before you enter upon your incorruptible inheritance. We are apt to conceive chaſtnings to be of no uſe, when they are as neceſſary as our daily bread; therefore deſpiſe not chaſtnings, as uſeleſs or unprofitable.

Thirdly, The word is applied often to the rejecting of a thing or perſon, as low, diſhonourable and diſgraceful: In this ſence alſo it is appliable here. Deſpiſe not chaſtning: That is, do not think thy ſelf diſgrac'd when thou art chaſtiſed: The heart of man is naturally full of pride, Man is a proud piece of fleſh. Nor doth he reſent any thing more, then his diſhonour; many can bear the pain of the croſs, better then the ſhame of the croſs. It is very obſervable to this purpoſe, how the Apoſtle deſcribes the Lord Chriſt in his ſufferings, Heb. 12.2. He endured the croſs, deſpiſing the ſhame: as noting, that his being above the ſhame of the croſs, bore up his ſpirit under the croſs. To deſpiſe ſhame, is to look upon that, which the world accounts ſhameful, not only as deſpicable in it ſelf, but as not hurtful to us: When a man deſpiſes an enemy, as Goliah diſdained David (1 Sam. 17.42.) he preſumes himſelf above his enemies power to hurt him: So to deſpiſe ſhame is to make nothing of it, or to think our ſelves no whit the worſe for it; yea rather to think our ſelves honoured by it. And until in this ſence we can deſpiſe ſhame, we ſhall deſpiſe correction and the croſs. Who is it almoſt, that finds not this the hardeſt Text in all the Chapter of afflictions? Zedekiah was more afraid to be mocked by the fugitive Jews, then to be a priſoner to the King of Babylon, Jer. 38.19. If a man be poor, preſently he thinks he is diſgraced: if he be weak, he doubts he ſhall be contemned: if he looſe his eſtate, he fears he ſhall looſe his credit in the world: he was a man of place, ſome-body among his neighbours, but now he ſhall be ſlighted. Suffering for well doing, is our crown; ſuffering for evil doing, is our ſhame; but it is no ſhame to ſuffer.

Fourthly, To deſpiſe a thing, notes the ſlighting of it, as if we did not think it worth while, to take any notice of it; and ſo this will be the ſence, Deſpiſe not thou the chaſtnings of the Lord; that is, do not ſlight the chaſtnings, do not lightly paſs them by, do not look upon them as inconſiderable, as not caring what God doth with thee or thine. When God layes his hand upon us, he would have us lay it to our hearts. As it is our duty to be affected with mercies, ſo likewiſe with chaſtnings. If a malefactor ſhould ſay to the Judge, do what you will with me, I care not; or a child to the Parent, correct me as long as you will, I care not; how unnatural were this? This is properly to deſpiſe afflictions. Some are like Leviathan in this ſence (Job 41.27.) They eſteem Iron as Straw, and Braſs as rotten Wood: They make nothing of the acts or inſtruments of Gods diſpleaſure. This is groſs deſpiſing. But beſides every undervaluing, or inadvertency of the correcting hand of God, hath a degree of this deſpiſing it. That exhortation ought never to be forgotten, which ſpeaketh to us, as unto children, Heb. 12.5. My ſon, deſpiſe not thou the chaſtening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of him. The Greek word imports, the Littling, or thinking of them little. Do not think the chaſtnings of God little, do not little, or ſlight them in thy thoughts. Neither faint when thou art rebuked, that is, do not think thy afflictions ſo great, that thou muſt needs ſink and faint under them. Theſe are the two extreams, into which our hearts uſually run when chaſtnings are upon us. Some err by neglecting the hand of God, as light; and others by fainting under it, as too heavy. As a good heart takes notice of, or will not deſpiſe a little, the leaſt comfort; ſo it will take notice of, and not deſpiſe a little, the leaſt croſs. When a man hath a ſmall loſs in his eſtate, if he ſay, this will not undo me, I can bear this, I will fare as well, and go as fine as ever for all this, ſuch ſpeeches or thoughts are a deſpiſing of the chaſtening of the Lord. We are to obſerve the hand of God taking away, as well as giving a penny. So when a man hath a little fit of ſickneſs, if he ſay, I ſhall rub out this well enough, this is to deſpiſe the chaſtning of the Lord: We are to bleſs God for every hours health, and to be ſenſible of his hand in every hours ſickneſs, or aking joynt.

Every affliction is a meſſenger from God, it hath ſomewhat to ſay to us from Heaven; and God will not bear it, if his meſſengers be deſpiſed, how mean ſoever: If you ſend a child with a meſſage to a friend, and he ſlight and deſpiſe him, you will take it ill. I remember what the ſtory relates of Galienus the Emperor, who, when the report came to him, that Egypt was loſt, what then (ſaid he) cannot I live without the flax of Egypt? And when the report was brought that a great part of his Dominion in Aſia was waſted: Cannot I live (ſaid he) without the delicacies of Aſia? To ſpeak thus from a principle of mortification toward the creature, is the character of an excellent ſpirit; but to ſpeak thus from a contempt of the providence of God, is the character of a proud, or of a ſtupid ſpirit. When we hear of the loſs of a child, of a friend, or of a loſs in our eſtate; to ſay, what then? I can bear that well enough, I have more children, other friends, eſtate enough beſides that, this (I ſay) is a high deſpiſing of affliction.

There is one thing further, in the fifth place, obſervable in this word, Deſpiſe not thou the chaſtnings of the Lord. The word is an extenuation or a leſſening of the ſence. The Holy Ghoſt intends more then is expreſſed; for the truth is, when he ſaith, Deſpiſe not, &c. His meaning is this, ſhew reverence, highly prize and eſteem the chaſtning of the Lord. As (for inſtance) when the Apoſtle ſaith, in 1 Theſ. 5.20. Diſpiſe not prophecying. Do you think this is all that is due unto an Ordinance of God, that a man ſhould not deſpiſe it? Surely no, he means then, prize prophecying highly, have it in great eſteem: So in 1 Tim. 4.12. and Tit. 2.15. when he ſaith, Let no man deſpiſe thy youth, is that all the Holy Ghoſt means? That Timothy a godly Paſtour ſhould only not be deſpiſed by his people? No, his meaning is, that they ſhould honour, reſpect and reverence him, as one that watched over them in in the Lord. I might give you divers other Scriptures, where, when the Holy Ghoſt only forbiddeth the ſin, he intendeth the duty or grace in ſtricteſt oppoſition to that ſin. So here, Deſpiſe not thou the chaſtening of the Almighty, layes this charge and duty upon us, highly to eſteem the chaſtening of the Lord; we muſt put afflictions amongſt our comforts, and rank them with our bleſſings. Not to deſpiſe, is but the firſt ſtep beyond ſin, but that includes the laſt and furtheſt ſtep of duty, which becomes us under chaſtenings.

So much of the act forbidden, deſpiſing. Now, for the object, chaſtening. The original verb ſignifies to inſtruct, or to teach; ſo it is tranſlated, Chap. 4. verſ. 3. Thou haſt inſtructed many. Inſtruction is both by words and blows. The wiſdom of God mixes a rod with his word, and chaſtening with teaching: Therefore it is promiſcuouſly uſed in Scripture, ſometime for teaching, and ſometime for chaſtening. Chaſtening belongs properly to children, who are wanton and ungovern'd, who have a bundle of folly in their hearts, which the rod of correction driveth out. To be chaſtened, hath a double aſpect upon us; Firſt, upon our priviledge: Secondly, upon our weakneſs. To be chaſtened, notes our priviledge and relation, as children, unto God our Father. He hath revenges for his enemies, but chaſtenings are a part of his childrens portion; yet in that we are chaſtened, it taxes us of weakneſs; we are but children, fooliſh, unruly, wanton, and therefore we go almoſt all our dayes, with a rod at our backs. Though the Saints on Earth, compared among themſelves, are ſome children, and others men; yet all the Saints on Earth, compared with thoſe in Heaven, or with what themſelves ſhall be in Heaven, are children, and therefore they have what fits their ſtate, chaſtening and correction. This chaſtening is ſometime put for revenge, or the exacteſt and ſevereſt retribution of juſtice; thus it is ſaid, Prov. 7.22. That the fooliſh young man caught by the ſubtil harlot, went after her as a fool to the correction of the ſtocks; that is, as a wicked man goes to puniſhment. And when the Prophet deſcribes the ſufferings of Chriſt, which were vindictive in the higheſt degree; he expreſſes it in this word, The chaſtiſement of our peace was upon him (Iſa. 53. 5.) Though Chriſt were the infinitely and moſt entirely beloved Son of his Father, yet he did not chaſtiſe him as a ſon, but as an enemy or malefactor; for he chaſtened him in our ſtead, and under the ſame notion, that we muſt have been chaſtened, who were enemies and malefactors. So then, the word ſignifies ſometimes judiciary chaſtening, but here fatherly chaſtening; which will yet appear more clearly, in opening the laſt term of this verſe, which ſhews us the efficient cauſe of this chaſtening. The Almighty.

Deſpiſe not the chaſtening of the Almighty.] The chaſtening rod is in the hand of Shaddai, the Almighty. This is one of the glorious names of God.

And he is ſo called, Firſt, from his power, to go thorough with what he takes in hand: His work never ſticks in the mid-way for want of ſtrength to bring it to the end. Deſpiſe not the correction of an Almighty hand. Further, the word notes not only power enough to correct, but power to deſtroy, ſpoil and lay all waſte before him. God hath gained this Title or Attribute, from deſtroying or waſting his enemies. Some of the Rabbins deſign the Original of it, to that ſpecial act of his deſtroying power, The drowning of the old world; he ſhews his Almighty power in deſtroying and pulling down, as well as in making or ſetting up this goodly frame. To this the holy Prophets are well conceived to allude, when they ſay that, Shod, ſcil. Deſtruction, commeth from Shaddai, The Almighty. We have it in two expreſs Texts, Iſa. 13. 6. Howle ye, for the day of the Lord is at hand, it ſhall come as a Deſtruction from the Almighty; it ſhall come as Shod from Shaddai. So (Joel 1. 15.) Alas for the day of the Lord is at hand, and as a deſtruction from the Almighty ſhall it come. It will be profitable for us to conſider, under what name God is expreſſed, when he is chaſtening his own children.

Secondly, Others derive this name from the conjunction of two Hebrew words, whereof the one (Dai) ſignifies, it Sufficeth, or is ſufficient: and the other, though it be but a letter (Shin) yet it ſupplieth the part or place of the Relative (Aſcher) which, and ſo the word put together ſounds thus much, Who is ſufficient, or who is all-ſufficient; Deſpiſe not the chaſtening of him that is all-ſufficient. Thou art under his correction, who doth not take from thee, becauſe he wants himſelf; who doth not let thee want, becauſe his own ſtore is ſpent, out of which he uſed to ſupply thee. He alone hath ſufficiency in himſelf, and he is at all times all-ſufficient for all others, and gives ſufficiency to as many, as he pleaſeth. That of the Apoſtle fills this ſignification of the word, Act. 17. 25. Neither is he worſhipped with mens hands, as if he needed any thing; for he giveth to all, life and breath, and all things.

Nonnulli putant שדי eſſe ex verbo די ſufficit, & litera ש, quæ ſupplet locum & ſenſum relativi Aſcher, & ita denotat Deum ſibi ſufficientem, & qui omnibus largitur ſufficientiam, reſpondens Græco αὐτάρκης Druſ.

Thirdly, The word is conceived to come from Shad, which in the Hebrew ſignifies a breaſt, the mothers breaſt or pap, by which ſhe ſuckles her child. And anſwerable to this notion, in moſt of thoſe places, wherein God is expreſſed in that act of his providence, making fruitful, and giving increaſe, he hath this name, Shaddai: as noting, that he hath the Great Milky Breaſt, which nouriſhes and ſuckles, which feeds and ſtrengthens all creatures: that is, the word, his bleſſing, not only makes fruitful and multiplies, but preſerves and keeps alive. Thus, Gen. 49. 25. the Patriarch, old dying Jacob, bleſſes his ſon Joſeph in this form, And by the Almighty (Shaddai) who ſhall bleſs thee with bleſſings of Heaven above, bleſſings of the deep that lies under, bleſſings of the breaſts, and of the womb. His Father Iſaac had ſent him to Padan-Aram under the influences of the ſame bleſſing, almoſt in the ſame words, (Gen. 28 3.) God all-mighty bleſs thee, and make thee fruitful, and multiply thee. And the Lord himſelf ſpeaks thus to Jacob, when he appeared the ſecond time to him, after his coming from Padan-Aram. I am (El-Shaddai) God Almighty, be thou fruitful and multiply, Gen. 35. 11. that is, I can make thee fruitful, and multiply thy poſterity, and I can feed them, as faſt as they multiply, and give thee fruit for thy family, as well as make thy family fruitful. Thou ſhalt not over-charge me with the greatneſs or numerouſneſs of thy houſe. Trouble not thy ſelf, let thy children be my care, at my finding, how many ſoever they are, let my purſe pay for all: I am El-Shaddai, God Almighty. So then, as the juſtice and exact wiſdom of God are ſet forth in the former branch under the title Elohim, Happy is the man whom God, (Elohim) corrects; ſo (leaſt we ſhould think of God under that notion only) his power and all-ſufficiency, his goodneſs and tenderneſs are ſet forth in the next branch, Deſpiſe not the chaſtening of the Almighty. You are under the rod of Shaddai, an All-powerful, an All-ſufficient, an All-nouriſhing God. The verſe following ſeems to joynt in with, and ſuit this fully, He makes ſore, and he bindeth up; he woundeth and he healeth; one part ſhewing us God, as a Judge, wounding and making ſore; the other, as an all-ſufficient Friend, and Father or Phyſitian, healing and binding up. Take two or three Notes, from the conſideration of the name, under which God is here expreſſed.

Alii deducunt שד à שדי Quod Mammam ſignificat, quaſi mãmoſũ dicas, quod omnia alat. Druſ.

Firſt, The lighteſt chaſtenings come from a hand that is able to deſtroy.

When the ſtroak is little, yet a great God ſtrikes. Although God give thee but a touch, a ſtripe which ſcarce razes the ſkin: yet he is able to wound thee to the heart. Know, it is not becauſe he wants power to ſtrike harder, but becauſe he will not, becauſe he is pleaſed to moderate his power; thou haſt but ſuch a chaſtening, as a child of a year old may well bear; but at that time, know, thou art chaſtened with a hand able to pull down the whole world; the hand of Shaddai, The Almighty gives that little blow. Men ſeldom ſtrike their brethren, leſs then their power; they would often ſtrike them more, their will is ſtronger then their Arm. But the Lords arm is ſtronger (in this ſence) then his will. He doth but chaſten, who could deſtroy. And this carries a mighty perſwaſion with it, not to deſpiſe the chaſtening of the Lord, how little ſoever; for he can ſtrike harder, if thou ſlighteſt this. He can break thy bones, who hath not yet broken thy fleſh. Fear him (as our Lord Chriſt argues, who, though at the preſent he hath made thy head only to ake a little, yet) can kill thy body, and after he hath killed, hath power to caſt into Hell.

Pondus eſt in voce שדי noli ſpernere clementiam ejus in quo vivis, qui te uno momẽto poteſt comminuere. Cocc.

Secondly, In that afflictions, come from Shaddai, a God all-ſufficient, God would have us conceive in all our troubles;

> That, when he takes away any or all created comforts from us, yet he is himſelf all-ſufficient for us.

When we are chaſtened by the loſs of any good things, Shaddai doth it, who hath the power of all good things in his hand. When he takes away riches, or health, or relations, if he doth not take away himſelf from us, we cannot be comfortleſs, for all-ſufficiency ſtands by us.

Laſtly, He dealeth with us, but as a tender nurſe, or mother in all his chaſtenings. The mother ſtrikes the child a little blow with one hand, and gives it the breaſt with the other; ſhe gives it a little tap with one hand, and a ſpoon with the other. Conſider your chaſtenings, they are the chaſtenings of Shaddai, who, as a tender mother, hath a breaſt ready to nouriſh, and a ſpoon to feed, while he chides or chaſtens. And if by greater afflictions, he wounds or makes you very ſore, you ſhall not want careful dreſſing and aſſured healing.

Verſ. 18. For he maketh ſore, and he bindeth up; he woundeth, and his hands make whole.

This verſe contains an exemplification of the former ground, why we ſhould not deſpiſe the chaſtening of the Almighty: For if it ſhould be objected againſt the former aſſertion (Happy is the man whom God correcteth.) Where is this happineſs? Is there happineſs in ſores and wounds, in ſickneſs and weakneſs, in poverty and in wants? Who cannot eaſily want this happineſs, and not complain? Eliphaz ſeems to anſwer for God in this Text. If your faith cannot come up to believe this, ſtay but a while, and your ſenſe ſhall teach it you. Who would not be glad of a wound when he knows he ſhall have Shaddai for his Chirurgion. If you will not allow a man is happy, when he is ſore; will you not allow him happy, when his ſore is bound up by ſuch a hand? If you will not grant a man is happy, when wounded; you cannot deny him happy, when he is thus healed. The Almighty will not leave them in their ſores, in their wounds: As he hath a rod, ſo he hath a ſwath; as he hath a ſword, ſo a ſalve. His plaiſter is ready for your wound, and his medicines for your diſeaſes. It is true of God above all others, One and the ſame hand ſmites and cures. Thus of the general meaning and connexion of this verſe.

Unde eadēque manus vulnus opēque tulit.

He maketh ſore.] The word is uſed in the ſecond Chapter of this book, verſ. 13. of Job's friends, that they ſtood ſilent, for they ſaw his grief was great, or his ſoreneſs was very great. It notes the grief and ſoreneſs, either of mind or body; ſome tranſlate, He woundeth: But the next clauſe bears that diſtinctly, or we may joyn both, the one, as the cauſe, the other, as the effect, He maketh ſore by wounding.

And bindeth up.] The word is appliable to any kind of binding. First, To the binding of captives in priſon with chains. Secondly, To the binding of ornaments upon the head, Ezek. 29. 9. Thirdly, It is uſed metaphorically for binding to obedience or puniſhemt, Job 34. 17. Shall even he that hateth right govern? The Hebrew is, ſhall he bind; becauſe Governors bind their ſubjects or ſervants, either to do what they command, or to ſuffer what they inflict. Fourthly, It is alſo applied by a metaphor to the binding up of thoſe civil breaches or ruines, which are upon a people, Iſa. 3. 6, 7. A man ſhall take hold of his brother, &c. ſaying, be thou a ruler, and let this ruine be under thy hand. In that day ſhall he ſwear, ſaying, I will not be a Healer, or a Binder up. Fifthly, It is uſed for the applying of ligatures, with which the medicine or plaiſter is bound upon the wound or ſore; and this word doth therefore alſo ſignifie the healing of a wound, becauſe the due binding of the wound is one half of the patients cure, and a very great part of a Chirurgions skill, as the learned Phyſitians obſerve in their Diſcourſes about wounds and Chirurgery; Ligature contributes ſo much to healing, that the ſame word ſerves for both, or either. Now (Shaddai) the Almighty is admirable at this, when he hath made a ſore, he can make an exact Ligature. We often find theſe two together, Pſal. 147. 3. He healeth the broken in heart, and bindeth up their wounds. The Prophet Ezekiel (Chap. 34. 4.) complains of the falſe Prophets, Becauſe they did not heal, that which was ſick, and bound not up, that which was broken. They had neither skill nor conſcience, either ſpiritually to break hearts, or when they found them broken to bind them up. They knew not how to faſten Goſpel promiſes and holy counſels upon the heart, that the wounds of it might be cloſed, and were therefore Phyſitians of no value.

There are two interpretations given of theſe words, He maketh ſore, and he bindeth up.

Firſt, Some expound them by an Enallage of the Participle for the Verb, thus, He maketh ſore, and he bindeth up; that is, He making ſore, bindeth up; as if the very act, by which God ſmites, had an influence upon the healing and a tendency to the reſtoring of his afflicted ones, He making ſore, bindeth up. We find ſuch conſtructions frequent in Scripture, Iſa. 65. 22. They ſhall not build, and another inhabit; they ſhall not plant, and another eat: That is, They building, another ſhall not inhabit, and they planting, another ſhall not eat. The negative is not fixed upon their building, &c. but upon other inhabiting. And ſo, Deut. 22. 4. Thou ſhalt not ſee thy brothers Aſs, or his Ox fall down by the way, and hide thy ſelf from them: That is, Thou ſeeing thy brothers Aſs or Ox fall down, ſhalt not hide thy ſelf from them: A man ſometimes could not but ſee his brothers Aſs or Ox fall down: but he ſeeing, muſt not at any time, hide himſelf from them, that is, not ſuccour them; ſo (by the way) that phraſe of hiding may be interpreted, by that of the Prophet (Iſa. 58. 7.) Thou ſhalt not hide thy ſelf from thy own fleſh. But to the point, here we ſee, He maketh ſore, and bindeth up; may congruouſly to other Scripture ſpeakings, be rendred, He making ſore, doth bind up; as if the wound were a part of the cure, and the ſore a plaiſter. We know that a wound in nature is ſometime a part of the cure: it is a common and a neceſſary practiſe in Chirurgery (and to that the Holy Ghoſt may allude in this place) when they perceive a wound or a ſore, to which medicines cannot well be applied (and ſo unfit for healing) either to make a new wound in the whole fleſh, or to make the firſt bigger. The murderer wounds to kill, and the Phyſitian wounds to cure. He comes, as it were, arm'd with inſtruments of cruelty. The patient whoſe fleſh is to be launced cries out, but yet he launces him. The patient whoſe fleſh is to be ſeared, cryes out, but yet he ſears him. He is cruel to the wound, while he is moſt kind to the wounded.

An ignorant man would wonder to ſee a Chirurgion, when he comes for healing, make the wound wider, yet ſo he muſt do, and he doth it upon urgent reaſons. As when the orifice is not wide enough to let in the medicine, or to let out the corruption, or cannot admit his ſearching inſtruments to the bottom; in ſuch caſes, he ſaith, Unleſs I increaſe your wound, I cannot cure it. Thus often times the Lord is compelled to wound, that he may heal; or fit our wounds for healing. Our wound is not wide enough, to let out the ſinful corruption of our hearts, to let in the ſearching inſtruments and corraſives of the Law, or the balm and comfortable applications of the Goſpel.

Illa eſt vox Domini, percutiam & ego ſanabo; hoc faciunt medici. Ferrum geſtant & curare veniūt. Clamat ſecandus & ſecatur; ſævitur in vulnus ut homo ſanetur. Aug. in Pſa. 50. Chirurgus ſæpe vulnus infligit, & ferro ſibi ſpacium ad commodam curationem aperit.

We may Obſerve from this ſence of the words,

> That, The woundings and ſmitings of God, are preparatories for our cure and healing.

It is ſaid (Iſa. 53. 5.) of Chriſt, that with his ſtripes we are healed: and it is in this ſence a truth, that we are healed with our own ſtripes: We are healed with the ſtripes of Chriſt meritoriouſly, and we are healed by our own ſtripes preparatorily; the ſtripes of Chriſt heal us naturally, our own ſtripes heal us occaſionally: or his in the act, ours in the event. (Prov. 27. 6.) Faithful are the wounds of a friend, his wounds are faithful, becauſe he wounds in faithfulneſs: The healings of many are unfaithful. They heal the hurt of the daughter of my people deceitfully, is the Lords complaint by the Prophet, they skin over the wound, but they do not cure it. Let the righteous ſmite me, it ſhall be a kindneſs; and let him reprove me, it ſhall be an excellent oyl which ſhall not break my head, Pſalm 141. 5. Much more may we ſay, Let the righteous Lord ſmite me, and it ſhall be a kindneſs to me; let the righteous Lord reprove and correct me, it ſhall be as an excellent oyl, which ſhall not break mine head; it ſhall heal my heart: How healing then are his ſalves, whoſe very ſores are a ſalve?

Secondly, Take the words in the plain rendring of them, noting only thus much, that God makes ſore, and bindeth up; ſo we have two diſtinct acts, often aſcribed to God in a figure, to ſet forth judgment and mercy, the afflictions and deliverance of his people (Hoſ. 6.2.) Let us return unto the Lord, for he hath torn, and he will heal us; he hath ſmitten, and he will bind us up. (1 Sam. 2.6.) The Lord killeth, and maketh alive. (Deut. 32.39.) See now, that I, even I am he, and there is no God with me; I kill, and I make alive, I wound, and I heal. Hence obſerve,

It is the property of God to take care of all the ſickneſſes, ſores or evils of his people.

As God is the great corrector and inſtructer of his people, ſo he is the great Phyſitian of his people: If he make a wound, he will take care for the healing of it; he doth not make ſores, and leave others to bind up. Mighty men wound, but they take no care for healing; they can impoveriſh and ſpoil, but they care not to repair; they can pull down and root up, let who ſo will build and plant. Shaddai, the Almighty God doth both; if he break thy head, come to him, humble thy ſelf before him, and he will ſurely give thee a plaiſter, which will coſt thee nothing but the asking. And whereas he doth not willingly afflict or grieve, he doth moſt willingly comfort and heal the children of men, Lam. 33.3. He ſpeaks of it as a pain to himſelf to make us ſore; but to make us ſound, is his delight and pleaſure. Satan is the Abaddon, the deſtroyer, and he only deſtroyes; he makes wounds, but he heals none; he kills, but he makes none alive.

The ſecond Branch of the Verſe [He woundeth, and his hands make whole] is but a repetition of the ſame thing, yet with ſome addition, or heightning of the ſence. To make ſore, and bind up, are not ſo deep either in judgment or in mercy, as to wound and make whole.

The word uſed for wounding, imports a dangerous and deadly wound, or to make a man all gore blood. It ſignifies to ſtrike quite through; and it is divers times applied, to note that ſtroak which God gives his worſt enemies, Pſal. 68.21. But God ſhall wound the head of his enemies, or, he ſhall ſtrike them quite through the head. ver. 23. He ſhall dip his foot, or make it red in the blood of the ungodly. And, Pſal. 110.5. The Lord ſhall ſtrike through Kings in the day of his wrath. Hence obſerve,

That, God ſometimes makes very deep and great wounds in his own ſervants.

Such wounds, as by the ſight of the eye, you cannot diſtinguiſh them from the wounds of his mortal enemies. He ſtrikes through both heads and hearts of his own people: Or as Simeon ſaid to the bleſſed Virgin Mary, Luke 2.35. A ſword pierceth through their ſoul alſo. But then laſtly note,

God never makes a wound too great for his own cure.

The power of God to ſave, is as great as his power to deſtroy; his healing power and his wounding power, are of the ſame extent; his juſtice cannot out-act his mercy; both are infinite.

And not only doth he heal the wounds which himſelf makes, but he can heal the wounds which men make; even all the wounds which the utmoſt power and malice of man can make. He is able to do more good, to ſhew more mercy, then all creatures are able to do hurt or miſchief. We find the ſtate and condition of a people ſometimes ſo wounded and ſick, that men have deſpaired of recovery; being conſulted, they may anſwer, your ſore cannot be bound up, and your wound cannot be healed, your eſtate is gangreen'd and paſt cure: Lo, he ſaid, as was toucht before, (Iſa. 3.8.) In that day ſhall a man ſwear, ſaying, I will not be an healer, for in my houſe is neither bread nor cloathing. Alas, I heal you! I cannot heal you; your troubles are paſt my ſkill to remedy or redreſs. Thus man is ſometimes at a ſtand, he cannot heal what men have wounded; but God is never at a ſtand; your old feſtered ſores, and rankled wounds which have taken wind, diſcourage not his Chyrurgery. When a people are in ſuch a pickle or pitiful plight, as the Prophet Iſaiah deſcribes the Kingdom of Judah, in chap. 1.56. The whole head is ſick, and the whole heart is faint: from the ſole of the foot, unto the head, there is no ſoundneſs in it, but wounds, and bruiſes, and putrifying ſores; they have not been cloſed, neither bound up, neither mollified with oyntment. When (I ſay) the caſe of a people is thus, and they can get no healer: yea, though a people (like the woman, Mark 5.25.) have had an iſſue of blood (in bloody battels, which is now almoſt Englands caſe) many years, and have ſuffered many things of many Phyſitians, and have ſpent all that they have, and are nothing bettered, but rather grow worſe; yet if Chriſt do but touch ſuch a ſick, diſeaſed, bleeding people in mercy, and they touch him in faith, they ſhall be healed, and their fountain of blood will immediately dry up. Or if their condition requires ſome longer operation, he can effectually take ſuch a courſe for their cure; he is abundantly furniſhed with all inſtruments and abilities for the making of a perfect cure.

It is well obſerved, that three things are neceſſary for a Chyrurgion.

Firſt, He muſt have an Eagles eye; one that is good at healing, had need be good at ſeeing.

Secondly, He muſt have a Ladies hand, ſoft and tender, to handle the ſore gently.

Thirdly, A Lions heart, a ſtout ſtrong heart; for if he faint, how ſhall his Patient keep up his courage?

Theſe three are exceeding neceſſary in Chyrurgery about natural bodies; but much more in Chyrurgery about Civil and Eccleſiaſtical bodies, the healing of Churches and Kingdoms. And where ſhall we find, whither ſhall we ſend for Phyſitians, qualified with this Eagles eye, to look into all our ſores and ſickneſſes? with this Ladies hand, to deal gently and tenderly with our wounds? with this Lions heart, ſtoutly and couragiouſly, without fears and faintings, to go through with the work? Well, if men ſhould not be found thus furniſhed, the Lord is: He hath an Eagles eye, an all-ſeeing eye, ſeven eyes of providence and wiſdom, to look through our ſores, and into all our diſtempers: He hath (as in alluſion we may ſpeak) a Ladies hand, ſoft and tender, to deal gently and graciouſly with a people; he can dreſs our wounds, and pain us little, ſcarce be felt while he doth it. And he hath the Lions heart, infinite courage and ſtrength of ſpirit, to undertake the moſt gaſtly wounds, or ſwoln putrified ſores. Let us therefore reſt our ſelves aſſured, that whatſoever our perſonal or our National ſores, our perſonal or our National wounds be, be they what they will, or what we can call them, deſperate, incurable, ſuch as have diſcouraged many from medling with their cure, or ſham'd thoſe that have; yet our Shaddai, the almighty God, can bind them up and heal them, fetch the core from the bottom, and cloſe the skin upon the top, ſo tenderly dreſs, and ſo perfectly cure them, that a ſcar ſhall not remain, unleſs it be to mind us of his infinite skill and goodneſs, or of our own duty and thankfulneſs.

VERS. 19, 20, 21.

He ſhall deliver thée in ſix troubles, yea, in ſeven there ſhall no evil touch thée.

In famine he ſhall redéem thée from death, and in war from the power of the ſword.

Thou ſhalt be hid from the ſcourge of the tongue; neither ſhalt thou be afraid of deſtruction when it cometh.

E*Liphaz* ſtill proſecuteth his former Argument, to take Job off from deſpiſing the chaſtenings of the Almighty ſpoken of at the ſeventeenth verſe. And having ſhewed, firſt in general, that they are happy whom the Lord corrects: And ſecondly, That the Lord heels as well as wounds, is as ready to bind up, as to make the ſore; he illuſtrates this by giving,

1. In the general, at the nineteenth verſe.
2. By an enumeration of particular caſes of greateſt dangers and outward evils.

And ſecondly, To ſhew the happineſs of thoſe whom God corrects, he gives an aſſurance of poſitive bleſſings, which ſhall in due time be heaped upon their heads, whom God had before wounded with ſorrows, and loaded with afflictions.

The nineteenth verſe is a promiſe of deliverance from evil.

evil. He ſhall deliver thee from ſix troubles; yea, in ſeven there ſhall no evil touch thee.

To deliver, notes here, the ſnatching or pulling of a man out of the hand of an enemy, out of the mouth of danger.

The Hebrew word for [Trouble] comes from a Root, which ſignifies to ſtraighten or to narrow a thing up in a little compaſs; and ſo by a Metaphor, to vex and trouble; becauſe they who are ſtraightned in any kind, are pained and troubled. And when we hear of any trouble, we uſually ſay, ſuch are in ſtraights. And this word is often tranſlated a ſtraight (2 Sam. 24. 14.) I am in a great ſtraight, ſaith David, when he was put upon that hard election, between Sword, Peſtilence and Famine. So, Judg. 11. 7. & 1 Sam. 13. 6.

The holy Language expreſſes an Enemy or Adverſary by this word, becauſe an Enemy puts upon ſtraights, and ſo, to much trouble.

And to raiſe the force of this word to the higheſt, it is uſed to ſignifie the pangs and throws of women in childbearing, in which the mother labours in grievous ſtraights, while the infant labours for enlargement. Troubles ever meet us in, or bring us into ſtraights; they may well change names, which are ſo near in nature; I find the word ſo tranſlated here, in ſome Books, He ſhall deliver thee in ſix ſtraights, and in ſeven; when thou art ſo encompaſt about, ſhut in and encircled by evils on every ſide, that thou knoweſt not which way to move or turn, much leſs to go out; then the Lord will give enlargement, and either find a way out for thee, or make one, as he did for Iſrael at the red Sea, through thoſe mighty waters.

In ſix, yea, in ſeven.] This phraſe of ſpeech is very conſiderable: Some numbers in Scripture, have a kind of eminency or excellency in them: I intend not any large diſcourſe about numbers; only in brief. Thoſe three numbers, Three, Six and Seven, are applied to a ſpecial ſignification by the Holy Ghoſt. A great number, a perfect number is expreſſed by any one of theſe three numbers; A threefold cord (that is, a cord of many or ſufficient folds) is not eaſily broken, Eccleſ. 4. 12. Three times thou ſhalt keep a feaſt to me in the year, Exod. 23. 14. Three times in the year all thy males ſhall appear before the Lord, ver. 17. The Candleſtick had three Branches, Exod. 25. 32. And three cubits was the height of the Altar, Exod. 27. 1. Three Cities of refuge were appointed for the man-ſlayer, Deut. 19. 7. And the addition made is of another three, v. 9. Three witneſſes gave the compleateſt evidence requirable; as Two, the leaſt admittable in the Law, Deut. 17. 6. That (beſides a rule) there was a myſtery in moſt of theſe, I think no man doubts; though what the myſtery was, may be preſumption in any man to determine. Of this we are ſure, that the higheſt myſtery and perfection of all numbers and things, is found in One Three, That Three in One, The ſacred Trinity: And in the common ſpeech of moſt, if not of all Languages, Thrice happy, Thrice great, Thrice honourable, note a man advanced to the very pinacle of Happineſs, Greatneſs and Honour. The Number Three, or the Numeral Thrice, imply a compleatneſs in all Numbers.

That the number ſix notes perfection, may be ſeen in the work of Creation: The Lord could as eaſily have made the world in ſix, or in one moment, as in ſix dayes; but the Lord ſaw it good, to take a compleat number of dayes, for ſo compleat a work. God threatens Gog, his perfect and compleat enemy, with a compleat puniſhment, or with judgment in perfection, (The Juſtice of God can be as compleat in puniſhing, as the malice of man can be in ſinning) Ezek. 39. 2. I am againſt thee, O Gog, the chief Prince of Meſhech and Tubal, I will turn thee back, and leave but the ſixth part of thee; ſo we tranſlate: yet in the Margin of our Books, we find the Hebrew thus, I will ſtrike thee with ſix plagues, or, I will draw thee back with a hook of ſix teeth.

Seven is a famous number, implying, Firſt, Multitude. Secondly, Perfection: The barren hath born ſeven (ſaith Hannah in her Song, 1 Sam. 2. 5.) that is, many, ſhe is a compleat mother, ſhe hath a flouriſhing family, many children. And in oppoſition to this (Jer. 15. 9.) She that hath born ſeven, languiſheth, that is, ſhe that hath had many children, now hath none. Seven Devils were caſt out of the woman (Luke 8. 2.) that is, a multitude of Devils: So the ſeven Spirits, the ſeven Churches, the ſeven Trumpets, the ſeven Seals, the ſeven Vials, &c. in the Revelation, ſpeak the compleatneſs and perfection of each in their kind, whether good or evil: And that is appliable to the particular ſence of the Text (Prov 24. 16.) The juſt falleth ſeven times a day; that is, he falleth often, almoſt continually into trouble, and yet he riſes again, God delivers him. The Hebrew word Shebange, is near in ſound to our Engliſh ſeven; and to note that ſeven is a compleat full number, the ſame Hebrew word ſignifies ſeven and full, ſeven and ſatisfied or compleat. And the word to ſwear, is of the ſame extraction in that Language, with the word ſeven; the reaſon is added, becauſe in or about an Oath, many and important cauſes and grounds are required.

Juravit, inde juramentum, à Septenario numero, ut quidam putant, quod juramenta fieri debeant multis adhibitis & idoneis multumque confirmatis teſtibus & cauſis.

But to paſs from ſingle numbers, I ſhall conſider them in conſtruction or conjunction, as here ſix and ſeven. He ſhall deliver thee in ſix troubles, yea, in ſeven there ſhall no evil touch thee. Some underſtand this ſtrictly and preciſely of thoſe two numbers ſix and ſeven; and expound the Text by the enumeration of thoſe ſix or ſeven particular evils made by Eliphaz in the following verſes: For having ſaid in general, that God will deliver his in ſix troubles and in ſeven, he reckoneth up ſeveral troubles, and gives us (as it were) a Catalogue, or a particular of thoſe evils by name, amounting to ſix or ſeven; as, 1. Famine. 2. War. 3. Scourge of the Tongue. 4. Deſtruction. 5. Evil Beaſts. 6. Hurtful Stones. Here are ſix; and if a ſeventh evil come upon thee, in ſeven no evil ſhall touch thee.

But I rather take this expreſſion, ſix, yea ſeven, to be a fixed number put for an unfixed, a certain number for an uncertain; and that uncertain number to be a great number, the greateſt number, any number imaginable. We find this kind of ſpeaking frequently in Scripture: In the thirty third of this Book of Job, v. 29. Lo theſe things God works twice and thrice; which we tranſlate, theſe things God works oftentimes. When numbers are doubled with an encreaſe in the latter, it notes a mighty growth of the whole number. Twice and twice (we know) is but four times; but twice and thrice, may be more then five times; twice and thrice is oftentimes, no man knows how often.

We find the number next above this in the ſame ſignification; three and four, are put for many, very many (Amos 1. 3.) For three tranſgreſſions of Damaſcus, and for four: Some underſtand it of three or four ſpecial ſins, of which Damaſcus was chiefly guilty; namely, 1. Idolatry. 2. Inceſt. 3. Luxury. 4. Oppreſſion. Or, Three may be taken for a Cardinal number, and Four for an Ordinal, for the Fourth, as if ſome fourth ſin were ſo ſinful, and had ſuch a malignity in it as the Lord would not pardon. Thus Four is put for the fourth, Prov. 30. 15, 18, 21, 29. Three things are never ſatiſfied, yea, four things ſay not it is enough. That is, a fourth thing (ſc. fire being the moſt unſatiable of all the reſt) ſaith not it is enough. The copulative particle (and) is often in Scripture taken comparatively, for much more, Pſal. 125. The Mountains are round about Jeruſalem, and the Lord is about his people; ſo the Hebrew: we tranſlate by a comparative of ſimilitude; As, So: but more emphatically to the ſcope of the place, by a comparative of exceſs. Thus, as the Mountains are about Jeruſalem, ſc. to fortifie and defend it; ſo much more is the Lord about his people to fortifie and defend them. In this ſence we may take the copulative And, in Amos. For three tranſgreſſions, the Lord would not turn, &c. but much more for a fourth, would he not turn away the puniſhment thereof. The former three, were enough to provoke the Lord to deſtroy you; but for this fourth, he is reſolved to be irreconcileable, and will deſtroy you. Others add Three to Four, which make ſeven, as if the Holy Ghoſt had ſaid, for ſeven (that is, manifold) tranſgreſſions of Damaſcus, I will not turn away, &c. But rather take the numbers diſtinct for Three and Four, that is, for the many, for the multitude of tranſgreſſions committed in Damaſcus, I will not turn away the puniſhment thereof. Not that the mercies of God are exceeded by any number; or that, becauſe they had gone on to ſin three and four times, that is, very often times; therefore the mercy of God was at a ſtand, and could go on no further; but theſe numbers three and four, note the boundleſs impenitency of thoſe Syrians, or their malicious perſecutions of the people of God, dayes and times without number. They turn not from their tranſgreſſions, theirs are three and four, they will never have done; therefore I will begin to puniſh, or I will never have done puniſhing; I will not turn away the puniſhment thereof. Such forms of ſpeech are frequent in heathen Authors, when they would enlarge or multiply the ſence.

O terq; quaterq; beati. Virg. lib. 1. Æn. Terq; quaterq; manu pectus percuſſa Deorum. Id. l. 4. Ubi ſeptenario numero octenarius additur, ingentem exprimit & prope infinitam multitudinem.

Again, The Numbers Seven and Eight, have a greater Emphaſis in Scripture (Eccleſ. 11. 8.) Give a portion to ſeven and alſo unto eight. That is, Give much, and give to many; give (yet diſcreetly) to all comers: We muſt not ſtint nor bound our charity; Give a portion to ſeven, give to many; and if there come more, give to more, give alſo unto eight. Charity prefers ſome, but ſhe refuſes none, who are meet objects of charity, And when the Lord would ſhew what choice and ſtore of able men, both for counſel and action, his people ſhould have in times of dangers and invaſions, he propheſies by Micah, that the people ſhall ſpeak thus (Chap. 5. 5.) When he (ſc. the Aſſyrian) ſhall tread in our palaces, then ſhall we raiſe againſt him ſeven ſhepherds, and eight principal men, that is, we ſhall muſter multitudes of wiſe, valiant, faithful men, every one of which may be fit to command or direct in chief; Seven ſhepherds, and eight principal men.

So then, He ſhall deliver thee in ſix troubles, yea, in ſeven, &c. is as if the Holy Ghoſt had ſaid by Eliphaz, O Job, The Almighty Shaddai, of whom I have ſpoken to thee, is of ſuch power, and hath ſuch an unwearied arm, that he is able to deliver thee, not only in one, or two, or three, or many troubles, but he can deliver thee in ſix, yea in ſeven, in all thy troubles; let the number of thy afflictions be as great as thou canſt imagine. The power and malice of men cannot multiply thy troubles faſter, then the power and goodneſs of God can multiply thy deliverances; yea, if he pleaſes, he could perfect ſeven deliverances for thee, before they can lay the plot of one trouble againſt thee. Obſerve hence in brief,

First, Deliverance it is of the Lord.

He ſhall deliver thee.] Whatſoever the inſtruments are, by which deliverance is brought to you, or in whoſe hand ſoever deliverance is put; know, that the work and procurement of it, is from above. It is the priviledge of God, and of God alone to be a Deliverer; and he hath deliverance at his command, Pſal. 44. 4. Command deliverance for Jacob. Man muſt humbly petition for, and beg deliverance: But God ſtands not intreating the creature, or debating the matter with Kings and Princes, with the ſtrongeſt and moſt hard-hearted Pharaohs, to deliver his people; but he ſends forth a Writ of Deliverance, and authoritatively commands deliverance, when it is his pleaſure a perſon or a people ſhall be delivered.

Secondly obſerve, The Lord can deliver as often as we need deliverance: In ſix troubles, yea, in ſeven.

This ſhould bear up our hearts in the returns, the multiplied returns of trouble. Though (as rheumatick old age is deſcribed, Eccleſ. 12. 2.) The clouds return after rain. That is, though one evil follows upon, or treads on the heels of another, though as ſoon as one black cloud is diſſolved, and we begin to ſay (as in nature) this was a rainy day, but ſure the next will be fair, yet the next proves more overcaſt and lowring then that; even in ſuch a caſe, know, God hath a wind in his fiſt, which he can let out to ſcatter thoſe clouds, before they diſſolve; or if they diſſolve, he hath a Sun at command, to dry up the fallen rain. The Lord hath a ſucceſſion of mercies for our ſucceſſion of ſorrows. Say not then, we have got off this trouble, but what if another come? If another come, you have the ſame God, and he can give you another deliverance. Have we not been delivered in ſix troubles, yea in ſeven? Our ſtraights have not been ſingle; we may ſay (as ſhe in Geneſis, at the birth of her ſon) Behold a Troop. Not once only, but many a time, may our Iſrael now ſay, If it had not been the Lord, who was on our ſide, when men roſe up againſt us, they had ſwallowed us up quick, when their wrath was kindled againſt us.

The Lord ſpake once to his people, as if he were weary of delivering, or would not deliver (Judges 10. 10.) There we read the people of Iſrael in a great ſtraight, crying to the Lord for deliverance, but he anſwers, ver. 11. Did not I deliver you from the Egyptians, and from the Amorites, and from the children of Ammon, and from the Philiſtines? The Zidonians alſo, and the Amalekites, and the Moabites did oppreſs you, and ye cried unto me, and I delivered you out of their hand. Here are ſeven troubles in which they found deliverance. But, as if ſix or ſeven deliverances (which we have expounded for boundleſs deliverances) were now the utmoſt bound of deliverance, he reſolves, ver. 13. I will deliver you no more. And at v. 14. he turns them off to their Idols for help: Go (ſaith he) and cry unto the gods, which you have choſen, and let them deliver you in the time of your tribulation: But what was the reaſon of this refuſal? The reaſon was this, not becauſe God was weary of delivering that people, but becauſe that people were weary of their God. Ye have forſaken me, and choſen other gods, ver. 13. If we chuſe our ſelves another god, then we chuſe our ſelves another deliverer; ſo long as we look upon God, as our God, ſo long we may look upon God as our deliverer. God would never have turned them off for deliverance to any thing below (what was in their conceit) a God.

How ſad will it be, now that we are in great troubles, and crying daily, Lord deliver us out of theſe ſtraights, for thou art he, whoſe name is, The Deliverer in ſix troubles, yea in ſeven. How ſad (I ſay) will it be, if we have put God to read the Chronicle, and repeat the Hiſtory of his deliverances given us, as he did to Iſrael, and ſay, I delivered you in 88. from the Spaniard; I delivered you in 1605. from the Gunpowder-Treaſon, &c. I will deliver you no more. Will not ſuch ſpeakings from Providence, be a plain conviction, that we have forſaken the Lord, and choſen other Gods? God hath ſometime (what a miracle of mercy!) choſen thoſe who forſook him, but he never (ſo ſtedfaſt is he in faithfulneſs) forſook any, who choſe him to be their God. If he keep not ſuch, from, yet he will certainly preſerve all in ſuch trouble, as it follows.

Yea, in ſeven there ſhall no evil touch thee.

He ſaith not, He ſhall deliver thee from ſix troubles, and from ſeven; as if troubles ſhould only threaten, but never come upon us; or as if all our deliverances ſhould be preventions; but, he ſhall deliver thee in ſix troubles, yea, in ſeven, there ſhall no evil touch thee.

Non dicit à ſex, ſed in ſex; non quod ab illis nō poſſit, ſed quod cū acciderint, ab illis liberet, ut in illis non ſuccumbat.

[Evil] ſignifies ſometimes the evil of ſin, and ſometimes the evil of puniſhment. We may here take it either way. The Lord will ſo keep up thy ſpirit, and direct thy way in trouble, that thou ſhalt not defile thy ſelf with the evil of ſin; thy troubles ſhall purge, not pollute thee. And he will ſo keep thee, that thou ſhalt not be annoyed by any evil of puniſhment. If fatherly diſpleaſure ſhould appear againſt thee, wrath ſhall not. Love ſhall be mixed with thy correction; with thy wormwood and gall (as the Church ſpeaks in the Lamentations) thou ſhalt have a temperament of honey and of ſweetneſs; though troubles preſs thee, yet evil ſhall not touch thee.

Not touch thee.] This notes exact deliverance; we think our ſelves well many times, if we can come off from dangers with a ſcratcht face, with a wound, or with the loſs of a limb; but to come off without the loſs of a hair, or which is leſs, without a touch, ſpeaks a compleat deliverance. It aſtoniſht Nebuchadnezzar, Dan. 3. 27. to ſee the three Children come out of the fiery furnace, without a hair of their heads ſinged, without any change of their coats, or the ſmell of the fire. So much this imports, thou ſhalt paſs the pikes, through ſix, yea ſeven, a whole army of troubles, and no evil ſhall touch thee. When the woman told the tempting Serpent, God hath ſaid, ye ſhall not eat of the fruit of the Tree in the midſt of the Garden, nor touch it, Gen. 3. 3. She implied a charge of total abſtinence. And when the Lord ſaith, No evil ſhall touch thee, it implies a promiſe of total deliverance. In the firſt and ſecond Chapters of his Book (and it is the ſame Original word) Satan begs leave of God, that he might touch Job, and touch all that he had. Now here Eliphaz ſeems to touch that ſtring, No evil ſhall touch thee; as if he had ſaid, God will not let his ſervants be overwhelmed (as thou art) with evils; no evil ſhall ſo much as touch them. And the truth is, though Satan obtain leave of God, to afflict the body of Job with pains, and he made it all over as one wound, yet no evil touched him, in the ſence here intended: Though Job was all over evil ſores, yet there was not ſo much as the leaſt ſcar of an evil upon him: Troubles toucht him, but evils did not. And troubles may touch the ſervants of God, but evil ſhall not.

Ita eripit, ut nullum malum attingat, etiā ſi tentari & conflictari ſinat ad tēpus, nocumētum tamen non capiet. Coc. in loc

Hence obſerve, God ſaves and delivers his people from all evil, even while they are in the midſt of trouble.

He delivers as well in trouble, as from trouble; while trouble is continued, good may be enjoyed. While his are in the water, and in the fire, God is with them, and his preſence is more then deliverance (Iſa. 43. 2.) If God be with us, though all evils are upon us, yet no evil touches us. The preſence of the chief good, is baniſhment to every evil. As a wicked man may be loaded with good things, and yet none of them touch him; that is, do him any good: So a godly man may be loaded with evils, and yet none of them touch him, that is, do him any hurt. And thus we may underſtand that of the Apoſtle (1 Cor. 10. 14.) God is faithful, who will not ſuffer you to be tempted above that you are able, but will with the temptation alſo, make a way to eſcape, that ye may be able to bear it. Temptation you ſhall have; but with the temptation, even while the temptation is upon you, or while you are in the temptation, the Lord will make a way for you to eſcape the evil of that temptation. Thus with or in trouble, we have deliverance. To be kept from the evil of trouble, is a deliverance from trouble, while we are in trouble.

Thus far of the general Promiſe.

Doloſus verſatur in univerſalibus.

Now Eliphaz goes on to particulars, in ver. 20, &c. As if he had ſaid, leſt thou ſhouldſt think, I deal only in general Notions, that I may more eaſily elude and deceive thee; therefore I will now give inſtance in the point, and name what troubles I mean: I will deſcend with thee to particulars, and reckon up the greateſt outward evils, the moſt pinching ſtraights that befal the ſons of men, or the children of God; and out of all theſe, I affirm the Lord will deliver thee.

Verſe 20. In famine he ſhall redeem thee from death, and in war from the power of the ſword.

Thou ſhalt be hid from the ſcourge of the Tongue, &c. Famine leads the Van of this great Army of evils here muſtered up.

Redimere eſt lucrari ex alterius poteſtate interpoſito pretio vel potentia, contra vim detinentiũ, ad faciendũ liberum aut ſuum.

פדה liberavit ex anguſtia, ſervitute, &c.

He ſhall redeem.] But what is it to redeem from Famine? To redeem, properly is, to take a man out of the power of another, by price, or by greater power. Redemption is an act of ſpecial favour, and it notes a ſpecial diſtinction by favour. When God threatned Pharaoh and his people with ſwarms of Flies, and promiſed, that his own people ſhould be free; I will ſever in that day the Land of Goſhen, in which my people dwell, that no ſwarms of flies ſhall be there, ver. 22. This act of divine diſcrimination is called redemption, in the next verſe. And I will put a diviſion (Heb. a redemption) between my people and thy people; that is, thoſe Armies of Flies, which invade thy people, ſhall not meddle with my people. To ſee one periſh with, and our ſelves ſaved from the ſword, is redemption in war. To ſee others hunger-ſtarved, and our ſelves ſtill fed, is redemption from famine, though our ſelves were never in the hands, or between the teeth of famine. A people divided from the troubles of others, are redeemed from thoſe troubles. Such a redemption our Saviour ſpeaks of, Mat. 24. 40, 41. Two ſhall be in the field, the one ſhall be taken, and the other left; two women ſhall be grinding in the Mill, the one taken, the other left.

In Famine.] Famine is the want of Bread, and Bread is the ſtay and ſtaffe of life (Lev. 26. 26. Iſa. 3. 1. Pſalm 105. 16.) when this ſtay is gone, our lives fall quickly, or ſlip away. When this ſtaff is broken, the thred of life breaks too. Man goes by the Bread in his belly, more then by the ſtaff in his hand; except Bread hold us by the arm, and ſtay us up, down we fall. Famine is ſo like, or ſo near, or ſo certain a harbinger of death, that the Text puts them together. In Famine he ſhall redeem thee from death. Famine is numbred among the ſore judgments of God, if it be not the ſoreſt judgment, Ezek, 6. 11. Jer. 24. 10. And therefore redemption from it, is one of his choiceſt outward mercies. We may collect how ſore a judgment Famine is, by the effects of it.

Firſt, It cauſeth faintneſs and madneſs, Gen. 47. 13.

Secondly, Hunger burneth, Deut. 32. 24. That word is not uſed in the Hebrew except here. Famine kindles a fire in the bowels: When the natural heat hath no fewel put to it, to feed upon, it feeds upon Nature. Suitable to this, is the deſcription of lamenting Jeremy in the famine of Jeruſalem, Their faces are blacker then a coal, Lam. 4. 8. & chap. 5. 10. Our skin was black like an Oven, becauſe of the terrible famine. Both the Coal and the Oven contract their blackneſs from burning heat.

Thirdly, It cauſeth pining and languiſhment, Lam. 4. 9.

Fourthly, Shame and howling, Joel 1. 11.

Fifthly. Rage and curſing, Iſa. 8. 21.

Laſtly, It breaks all the bonds of Nature, and eats up all Relations: Read that dreadful threatning, Deut. 28. 53, 54. and that dreadful example, Lam. 4. 10. Tender Mothers eating their Children. Famine eats up our bowels of compaſſion, and then it eats our bowels by relation: And, which comes yet nearer, Famine is ſuch a devourer, that it cauſeth man to devour himſelf. The Prophet deſcribes man in a fit of Famine, ſnatching on the right hand, and yet hungry; eating on the left, and yet unſatisfied; when he cannot fill his belly abroad, he comes home to himſelf, and makes bold with his own fleſh for food; Every man eating the fleſh of his own arm, Iſa. 9. 20.

We read of many great Famines in Scripture, and withall of Gods care to redeem his people from them. Abraham, Gen. 12. who (at the call of God) denied himſelf, and came out of his own, into a ſtrange Land, was preſently entertained with Famine. One would have thought, God ſhould have made him good cheer, and have ſpred a plentifal Table for him, cauſing his cup to overflow, while he was in a ſtrange Land, and a meer ſtranger there; yet he met with a Famine, but the Lord redeemed him from that Famine, by directing him into Egypt, that famous ſtorehouſe for his people. Jacob and his Sons were redeemed from Famine in the ſame Egypt, afterward their houſe of bondage.

It is a precious comfort to have bread in ſuch a promiſe as this, when there is none upon the Board. God takes care for the bodies of his people, as well as for their ſouls; he is the Father of both, and the provider for both. And while we remember what ſore afflictions have been upon many Nations and People by Famine; while we remember Samaria's Famine, 2 Kings 6. Jeruſalem's Famine, Lam. 4. And that ſtoried by Joſephus, in the Roman ſiege of that City; while we remember the late Famines in Germany, and the preſent one in many parts of Ireland; while we conſider that the Sword threatens this Nation with Famine; ſurely we ſhould labour to get under ſuch a promiſe as this is, that we may plead with God in the midſt of all ſcarcity and wants; Lord, thou haſt promiſed to redeem Thine in Famine from death: There is no dearth in Heaven: And whatſoever dearth is on Earth, the plenty that is in Heaven, can ſupply it. How ſad would it be, if your poor children ſhould come about you, crying for Bread, and you have none to give them? How much ſadder would it be, if your poor children ſhould be made your bread, and ground to pieces between your teeth, as in the Famine of Jeruſalem? In ſuch a time, to look up to God in the ſtrength of this promiſe, will be a feaſt to us, though we ſhould periſh in the Famine.

But how doth God redeem from famine?

Firſt, The Lord can make the barrel of meal, and the oyl that is in the cruze, though but little, yet to hold out and laſt, while the time of famine laſts; ſuch a miracle redeemed the poor widow from death, in that great famine, 1 King. 17.

Secondly, He can redeem by lengthning one meal, to many dayes. Elijah went forty dayes in the ſtrength of one dinner. Man liveth not by Bread without God, but man may live by God without Bread.

Thirdly, Not only are the ſtores of the creatures his, and the fruitfulneſs of the Earth at his command, but if he pleaſe he can open the windows of Heaven; he can bring Bread out of the clouds; he can make the winds his Caterers to bring in Quails and abundance of proviſion for his people. Thus alſo he can redeem his from death, in the time of famine.

Or fourthly, He can do it in a way of ordinary providence, by making the Land yield it's natural increaſe, and by giving ſtrength to the Earth, to bring forth plentifully, for the uſe of man.

Fifthly, While the common judgement laſts, he can make ſome ſpecial proviſion for his, and make a redemption of diviſion, as he did in another caſe for his people, Exod. 8. 22.

And laſtly, We may improve this promiſe, not only for redemption from death in famine, but for plenty of conſolation, though we ſhould die in famine. When the bread is quite taken away from your Table, your hearts may feed upon ſuch a word as this, as upon marrow and fatneſs. Chriſt can feaſt your ſouls, when your bodies are ready to ſtarve, he can fill your ſpirits with joy and ſweetneſs, when there is nothing but leanneſs in your cheeks: Thus the Prophet Habakkuk triumphs in God (Habak. 3. 17.) Though the Fig-tree ſhall not bloſſom, neither ſhall fruit be in the Vines, the labour of the Olive ſhall fail, and the fields ſhall yield no meat; the flock ſhall be cut off from the fold, and there ſhall be no herd in the ſtalls: Yet I will rejoyce in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my ſalvation. He was feaſting upon God, while he imagines the World ſtarving; he ſees all things in God, though the World ſhould afford him nothing. That ſoul is well fed and taught, which can be rejoycing, while it's own body is ſtarving.

And in war from the power of the ſword.

War is the ſecond evil. Famine and war go often together, yea they two ſeldom go without a third; the Peſtilence, 2 Sam. 24. Jer. 18. 22. And though in the order of the words, famine be ſet before war, yet uſually war is the fore-runner of famine. The ſword cuts off proviſion, and when it ſelf hath devoured much fleſh, it leaves no bread for thoſe who ſurvive. It is obſervable, that the original word for war here uſed, comes from a root ſignifying to eat or to devour, and ſo by a Metaphor it ſignifies to fight, or to ſtrike with the ſword. And the reaſon, why the ſame word, which ſignifies war, ſignifies to eat, is, becauſe the Sword is ſuch an Eater or rather a Devourer, and it eats two wayes.

Firſt, The ſword eats up the bodies of men, drinks up their blood, diſpeoples a Land. And then,

Secondly, It eats up and conſumes the fruits of the Earth; and hence War is the mother of Famine. Therefore we find, that when the great peace, and ſo the plenty of the Church of Chriſt is propheſied of, and deſcribed, Iſa. 2. 4. and in Micah, it is thus expreſſed, They ſhall beat their ſwords into plow-ſhares, and their ſpears into pruning-hooks. As if he ſhould ſay, while the ſword is abroad in the field, the plow-ſhares will do little there; for the moſt part Juſtice is ſilent in the time of War (the ſound of the trumpet and drum, is too lowd for the Law) and when the Law ſtands ſtill, the plough ſtands ſtill; therefore when the ſword is in motion, both are at a ſtand. Hence the promiſe, that ſwords ſhall be beaten into plow-ſhares, and ſpears into pruning-hooks; that is, with peace, you ſhall have Bread and Wine, which note the abundance of all other things. The ancients emblem'd peace by Ears of Corn, and Concord by (a Cornu-copia) a horn of plenty; riches are the fruit of peace: And ſafety is the priviledge of the Saints in times of War; In War they ſhall be delivered from the power of the Sword.

Inter arma ſilent leges.

The Hebrew is, They ſhall be delivered from, or out of the hand of the Sword: Sometimes in Scripture we read of the face of the Sword, which notes the Sword coming and approaching to a people: And ſometimes we read of the mouth of the Sword, which notes the Sword come, devouring and eating up a people: And here we have the hand of the Sword; they ſhall be delivered out of the hand of the Sword; which notes (as we tranſlate) the power of the Sword: Or, that form of ſpeaking may be underſtood by an Hypallage, From the hand of the Sword, that is, from the Sword in the hand, which phraſe imports preſent danger; when the Sword is unſheathed and drawn out, when it is in the hand ready to ſtrike, then the enemy is ready to charge, and then the Lord delivers: He ſhall deliver from the Sword in the hand, or out of the hand of the Sword. So Pſalm 127. 4. Children of the youth, are as Arrows in the hand of the mighty, that is, as Arrows ready to be ſhot. And Pſal. 149. 6. Let the high praiſes of God be in their mouths, and a two-edged Sword in their hands; noting actual revenges taken on the enemies of God, and actual praiſes given to the name of God, at the ſame time.

Gladius manu apprehenſus & elevatus, ſymbolum eſt extremi diſcriminis & præſentis hoſtis: Quaſi diceret etiā in ipſa pugna vel inter tot manus gladios agitantes & contra te vibrantes ſalvaberis.

So then, the meaning of theſe words, He ſhall deliver thee from the power of the Sword, or out of the hand of the Sword, is this; ſuppoſe thou art in ſuch a condition that the Swords are drawn about thy ears, and thou art in the midſt of a thouſand deaths and dangers, in the very heat of a battel, yet, then the Lord God can and will deliver thee.

And this likewiſe is a comfortable promiſe, for us to lay hold on, in theſe times. It is a time of War to us all, and there are many of our friends and brethren (as it were) in the very hand of the ſword: Deſires are often ſent to the Congregation, by one for a husband, by another for a brother, by a third for a ſervant, by many for their friends, gone forth to meet the power of the Sword. Here is a promiſe, to comfort and to ſupport ſuch; the Lord in time of War, can deliver out of the very hand of the Sword, or, when Swords are in hand; when thouſands of Swords are drawn together, preparing for, or ſmiting in the day of battel, know, then God is a deliverer. In the moſt preſent dangers, God ſhews the moſt preſent help. (Pſal. 23. 5.) Thou ſhalt ſpread my Table, and cauſe my cup to overflow, before the face of my enemy; even then when my enemy is neareſt and looketh on. As when the Sword is in the hand of the Angel, ſo when it is in the hand of man; A thouſand ſhall fall at thy ſide, and ten thouſand at thy right hand, but it ſhall not come nigh thee (Pſalm 91. 7.) Not nigh thee? what? when they die on this ſide and on that ſide, on every hand of a man, doth it not come nigh him? Yes, nigh him, but not ſo nigh, as to hurt him: The power of God can bring us near to danger, and yet keep us far from harm: As good may be locally near us, and yet virtually far from us, ſo may evil; the multitude throng'd Chriſt in the Goſpel, and yet but one toucht him, ſo, as to receive good; ſo Chriſt can keep us in a throng of dangers, that, not one ſhall touch us, to our hurt.

Yet, we are not to take this or the like holy writs of protection, as if God would deliver all his people, from famine and from the Sword; we know many precious ſervants of his have fallen by theſe common calamities; the Lord knows how to diſtinguiſh his, when Sword and famine do not. Neither doth this word fall, though they do: If the ſervants of Chriſt are not delivered from theſe troubles, they are delivered by them; and while they are overcome by one trouble, they conquer all.

Verſ. 21. Thou ſhalt be hid from the ſcourge of the tongue, neither ſhalt thou be afraid of deſtruction when it cometh.

This verſe contains a ſecond pair of evils: Firſt, The ſcourge of the tongue. Secondly, Deſtruction.

Two things are here to be enquired into, about the former.

Firſt, What is meant by the ſcourge of the Tongue?

Secondly, What it is to be hid from it?

The ſcourge of the Tongue.] Mr. Broughton reads it thus, Thou ſhalt be delivered (or thou ſhalt be hid) when the Tongue whippeth. And another to the ſame ſence, At what time the Tongue ſhall be ſcourging of men, thou ſhalt be ſecured from it. And that word (Leſhon) the Tongue, in Piel, ſignifies to detract, to traduce or ſlander; the ſame word is uſed both for the inſtrument, the Tongue, and one of the worſt acts of the Tongue, calumniation; or we may render it according to the exact letter of the Hebrew elegancy, to Betongue a Man: We uſe ſuch a kind of ſpeaking in our Language, as, to ſtrike a man with a cudgel or a Cane-ſtaff, is to cudgel or cane a man; and if a man be ſhot with a Piſtol, we ſay he was Piſtol'd; ſo a man ſmitten with anothers Tongue, is ſaid in the Hebrew, to be Betongu'd, or ſuch an one hath betongu'd him.

ἐξ ὅλης καρδίας.

We leave the Verb, and tranſlate by the Noun; From the ſcourge of the Tongue. In conſtruction (Beth) In, is often rendred by (Min) From, as Grammarians know. Thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God in all thy heart, or from thy whole heart, or from the heart-root: So here, Thou ſhalt be hid in the ſcourge; that is, Thou ſhalt be hid from the ſcourge; when the Tongue is laſhing and whipping, thou ſhalt be hid from the laſh and ſcourge of Tongues.

But what may we underſtand by this ſcourge of the Tongue?

Firſt, Some take it for publick accuſations before a Judge or Magiſtrate. Many ſcourge their brethren at the Tribunal of Princes, Revel. 12. That accuſer of the brethren, that traducer, the Devil, is conceived to make thoſe accuſations by his agents, in thoſe times, before the Heathen Emperors, againſt the Chriſtians; the Chriſtians in that age, were extreamly ſcourged by malignant and malevolent Tongues, Tongues ſet on fire of Hell, as the Apoſtle James ſpeaks, Chap. 3. 6. And ſo the ſcourge of the Tongue may be that puniſhment, which they by falſe accuſations obtained againſt the innocent; their Tongues got judgment againſt them ſometimes to be ſcourged or whipt; therefore alſo, that very work of the Tongue, is well called ſcourging. Our Lord Jeſus was crucified upon the Tongues of the Jews, before he was crucified upon the croſs by the Romans. The Jews cried out firſt, crucifie him, crucifie him, here was the croſs of the Tongue. The conſpirators againſt Jeremiah, adviſe thus (Chap. 18. 18.) Let us ſmite him with the Tongue; that is, let us accuſe him to the King, that he may be ſmitten by a publick ſentence. In this ſence a man is impriſoned by the Tongue, baniſhed by the Tongue, hang'd and burn'd by the Tongue, that is, the Tongue doth all theſe vertually (or vitiouſly rather) by falſe accuſations, cauſing theſe things to be done actually and formally.

Accuſemus eum apud regem & omni induſtria & ratione efficiamus, ut publica ſententia vapulet. Flagellum linguæ eſt pœna in judicio conſtituta, & poſtulata fieri à calumniatoribus.

Secondly, Others interpret the ſcourge of the Tongue, to be thoſe terrible and dreadful reports which amaze, laſh and afflict the ſpirit about the approach of dangers. As, when a report is rung in the ear, that an invading enemy, ſpoilers and plunderers, arm'd with power and malice, are at hand to take away Eſtates, Liberties and Lives: How many have been beaten about the Ears, and ſcourg'd with ſuch Alarums? (Jer. 50. 43.) it is ſaid, The King of Babylon hath heard the report of them: what report was it? and of whom? A ſpy rides in, and kills the King with his Tongue, ſtrikes him through with his Tongue, before he was toucht with the ſword of the Medes and Perſians: How? He brought him a ſad report, that the Enemy was upon his march, then it follows, The King of Babylon hath heard the report of them, and his hands waxed feeble, anguiſh took hold of him, and pangs as of a Woman in travel. We find the like expreſſion, Iſa. 28. 18, 19. They who had ſlighted the judgments of God, and ſaid, when the overflowing ſcourge ſhall paſs through, it ſhould not come near them; even theſe (ſaith God) ſhall be vext, when they do but hear of a ſcourge coming near: I will ſend a report, and it ſhall paſs over morning by morning, aud it ſhall travel by day and by night; and what ſhall be the effect of it? It ſhall be a vexation (ſaith the Lord) only to underſtand the report. You ſhall not only be vexed when the enemy is come, and thruſts a ſword into your bowels, and fire into your houſes, but you ſhall be vext at the noiſe of his coming; it ſhall be a vexation to you, to hear the report. It is a a great mercy to be delivered and hid from this ſcourge of the Tongue, and this is promiſed him who fears God, (Pſal. 112. 7.) No evil tydings ſhall make him afraid. A heart which hath trembled at the voice of God inſtructing him, ſhall not tremble at the voice of men reporting evil to him. Many a man is more afraid then hurt, and more perplexed with the hearing of evil tydings, then others are with ſeeing or feeling the evil. The Lord threatens Ely, to do ſuch a thing in Iſrael, and againſt his houſe, that, both the ears of him that hears ſhall tingle, 1 Sam. 3. 11. But,

Thirdly, Some tranſlate thus, He ſhall be hid when the Tongue wandreth or walketh about; for the ſame word which ſignifies a ſcourge, by the alteration of a point in the Hebrew, ſignifies to run to and fro. It is the word uſed in the firſt Chapter, where Satan reports himſelf, A goer to and fro about the Earth. There is an expreſſion (Pſalm 73. 9.) ſutable to this ſence, though the Original word be not the ſame; They ſet their mouth againſt the Heavens, and their tongue walketh thorow the Earth. The tongues of many take long journies, while themſelves ſit ſtill: Kings are ſaid to have long hands, but many of their ſubjects have long tongues, and ſtrike their brethren with them many hundreds of miles off; the tongue travels from Town to Town, from City to City, and ſcourgeth one here, and there another. And, while theſe men ſend their tongues about a wandring, to wound here and there, this and that mans credit, He is a happy man that can be hid from them.

Quidam, cũ vagabitur lingua, ut ſit שוט pro שוט Druſ. Merc.

Fourthly, Some of the Hebrew Doctors, retaining the fore-going ſence of the Verb, ſay, that by tongue, is meant Nations and people: When the tongue, that is when a Nation ſhall go about, or march from place to place to deſtroy and over-run a Land; then, at ſuch a time, thou ſhalt be hid: It is frequent in Scripture to put tongues for Nations, or Tongues and Nations for the ſame, Rev. 7. 9. Chap. 17. 15. And there is a comfortable truth in the matter of this interpretation; that when all Tongues or Nations ſhall be gathered to deſtroy us, yet we ſhall be hid: As if it ſhould be ſaid (like that, Pſal. 83. 6.) Though the Tabernacles of Edom and the Iſhmaelites, Moab and the Hagarens, Gebal, and Ammon, and Amalek, the Philiſtines, with the inhabitants of Tyre, be confederate againſt thee: or, to take modern names and Nations, though Iriſh and Spaniſh, French and Danes, &c. ſhould at any time, wander from their own Lands to invade thee; yet thou ſhalt be hid when theſe tongues rove and wander ſpoil and pillage. The matter, I ſay, of this interpretation is a truth, and a very comfortable one, but I would not charge it upon this Text.

Sunt qui per linguam hic intelligunt nationes q. d. quũ graſſabuntur longè latèq; gentes & populi omniſque depopulabuntur, &c. Druſ.

Fifthly, And moſt generally, and I conceive moſt truly, by the ſcourge of the tongue, is meant all, and all manner of calumnies and ſlanders, curſings or evil ſpeakings, falſe witneſſes and accuſations; and from theſe (the promiſe is) thou ſhalt be hid. It is ſaid, Prov. 14. 3. That, In the mouth of the fooliſh is the rod of pride; not, that a fooliſh man will ſcourge pride, he loves it too well; but, becauſe the pride of a fool ſets his tongue a ſcourging the wiſeſt and the beſt: (a) Evil words are the ſame to the credit of a man, that a ſcourge is to his back. When ſlanderers ſpeak openly, then their tongue is compared to a ſword, or an arrow by day; when ſecretly, then to a trap, or an arrow by night, to a Serpent which comes behind, Gen. 49. and as here, to (b) a ſcourge which is prepared for the back, and is called in our Language back-biting, or we may call it back-beating. The ſcourge of the tongue, is all that ill which the tongue can ſpeak: And the (c) Latin word for a word, agrees well to this ſence; being derived (as Criticks obſerve) from a word which ſignifies a ſtripe; or the word which ſignifies a ſtripe from that which ſignifies a word: And we find, that they who defame or over-ſeverely reprove others, are called (barely) (d) ſtrikers. And this (as ſome of the Ancients note) according to Scripture Language, in thoſe two Apoſtolical directions (1 Tim. 3. 3. and Tit. 1. 7.) where the Apoſtle gives the rule concerning a Biſhop, that he muſt be no ſtriker; this may be underſtood of ſtriking, not with the hand (the Apoſtle could hardly think that quarrelſom ſpirits and ſons of violence ſhould be ſo much as admitted to a probation about that office) but ſtriking with the tongue, by an undue, an over-haſty, or an angry reproof and cenſure. The great inſtrument of a Biſhop or a Miniſter, is his tongue: but he muſt uſe his tongue, rather to heal then to wound; or if at any time, he uſeth it to wound, it ſhould be in tendency unto, or in a preparation for healing: Therefore, Let not a Biſhop be a ſtriker, a ſtriker with his tongue in paſſion, much leſs in ſpleen or for ſelf-ends.

(a) Maledicentia eſt famæ hominis, quod flagellũ corpori; nam lædit eã & interdũ occidit, hinc Græcè μαϛιξ. Druſ.

(b) Flagellum dicitur quod in ſcapulas impingitur, & à tergo lædit, ut non videas — Metuentes patruæ verbera linguæ, Hor. 3. Car. Od. 11. Nam patrui multo quam patres incorruptiores eſſe ſolẽt in judicandis & objurgandis fratris filiorũ peccatis.

Thus we ſee what we are to underſtand by the ſtroke or ſcourge of the tongue. But what is it to be hid from that ſcourge? A word of that, Thou ſhalt be hid.

Not as (a) One, Thy actions ſhall be hid, which might be as matter for ſlander to work upon; nor as (b) Another, though ſuch actions appear, yet ſlanderers ſhall want proof, or ſufficient witneſs ſhall not appear againſt thee. But,

First, We may take it thus; Thou ſhalt be hid from the ſcourge of the tongue, that is, the tenor of thy actions ſhall be ſo fair, and thy life ſo blameleſs, that malice it ſelf ſhall not find, where to faſten an accuſation.

Or ſecondly, When other men are ſlandered and reproached, thou ſhalt be free.

Or thirdly, Thou ſhalt be hid, that is, though occaſion ſhould be given to malice (and that our nobleſt andholieſt actions uſe moſt to give) yet malicious men ſhall not be able to come at thee, thy perſon ſhall be ſecured in a chamber of ſecrecy, and covered with a mantle of providential darkneſs, while the light of thy good works dazles and troubles the eye of the World.

(a) Latebũt detractorem tua facta, de quibus poſſit detrahendi materiam ſumere. Aquin.

(b) Deficient detractorẽ firma probationes & ſufficientia indicia. Cajet.

But rather fourthly, Thou ſhalt be hid, that is, Thou ſhalt be patroniz'd and defended, thou ſhalt be ſet right, and vindicated from all calumnies and falſe aſperſions. The Lord will ſo take care of thy credit and reputation, that though many go about to blemiſh it with lies and ſlanders, yet thy honour ſhall be ſaved, or the wounds of it healed; by cauſing thy righteouſneſs to break forth as the light, and thy juſt dealing as the noon day. Some charitable medicinable tongue ſhall lick thee whole, after all the ſtripes of thoſe ſcourges or envenom'd ſcorpion-tongues: Thus, thou ſhalt be healed if ſmitten, or elſe thou ſhalt not be ſmitten, (Pſal. 31. 20.) Thou ſhalt keep them ſecretly in thy pavilion, from the ſtrife of tongues. The words of the Pſalmiſt are an alluſion to Kings, who being reſolved to protect their Favourites, againſt all the clamours and accuſations of men, take them, as it were, into their own Pavillion, into their Bed-chamber and boſom, where none may touch them. God alſo hath a pavillion, a ſecret hiding place for his Favourites, where he preſerves their credit and reputation untoucht, againſt all the blots and cauſeleſs blemiſhes of malignant ſpirits. Thus they are hid from the ſtrife of tongues. Hence his Saints and people are called, His ſtored, or his hidden ones, Pſal. 83. 3.

Obſerve, Firſt, The Tongue is a ſcourge.

The Tongue is a terrible Engine: The Scripture gives us variety of compariſons to ſet forth the evil of an ill tongue. It is here called a ſcourge of many laſhes or knotted cords, or rather ſtinging Scorpions; ſcoffing is one, ſlander a ſecond, falſe accuſations a third. The former ſtrictly taken, is a lie told any neighbour, and the latter is a lie told the Magiſtrate. The tongue (Pſal. 52. 2.) is called a ſharp raſor. Pſal. 57. 4. it is compared to Spears, and Arrows, and a ſharp Sword; and if at any time with much uſing, this ſword be blunted in the edge or point, the Scripture ſpeaks of whetting the tongue, Pſal. 64. 3. It is as the ſharp Arrows of the mighty man, and coals of Juniper, Pſal. 120. 4. They bend their tongues like a bow, Jer. 9. 3. Their tongue is as an Arrow ſhot out, verſ. 8. In a word, It is a fire and a world of miſchief, James 3. 6. (Jer. 18. 18.) we read of ſmiting with the tongue, and of devouring words, Pſalm 52. 4. As there are devouring opinions, opinions which not only hurt the judgments of men, but devour their conſciences, and eat up truth (as it were) at a bit; ſo there are devouring words, words that eat up a mans reputation, and devour his good name as Bread. Slanderous monthes love the whiteſt Bread, the fineſt of the Wheat; a mans credit which hath not a bran in it, how ſweet a morſel is it to ſuch mouthes? Though, the truth is, every name, by how much more pure and ſpotleſs it is, by ſo much more deadly will it be in the ſtomacks of theſe devourers. A good name ſwallowed by an ill man, will (as Jonas did the Whale) make him (one time or other) ſtomach-ſick, if not conſcience-ſick, and he ſhall be forced to vomit it out ſafe again.

It is a ſad thing when (thus) the people of God are wounded and ſcourged by the tongues of wicked men; but I will tell you of a ſadder ſcourging, that is, when the people and ſervants of God ſcourge one another with their tongues: I beſeech you leave this work to wicked men, take not the ſcourge of the tongue out of their hands; let us, not only not ſlander, but, not ſpeak hardly one of another. The ancient Chriſtians in the Primitive times, were deeply wounded by the ſcourge of the tongue, what ſtrange things did ungodly men feign and then faſten on them? They reported them as black as Hell, as if their holy meetings were not to worſhip God, but to defile themſelves with inceſt and uncleanneſs; but among Chriſtians themſelves, we read not of this ſcourge, at that time. No, Chriſtians loved one another to the amazement of Heathens: They were ſo far from this ſcourging or wounding of one another, that they were ready to be ſcourged, to be wounded, to be burned, to die one for another. This cauſed their Pagan perſecutors to cry out, Behold how the Chriſtians love one another! We are ſcourged by wicked ones, as They, O that we could love one another as They. Sons of Belial have revived the ancient reproaches and accuſations againſt the brethren; O, that we could revive the ancient imbraces and moſt endeared affections of the brethren.

Obſerve, Secondly, It is a great mercy to be delivered from the Scourge of the Tongue.

The Apoſtle ſpeaks of it, as a wonderful mercy, that he was delivered out of the Mouth of the Lyon (2 Tim. 4. 17.) Surely it is no ordinary mercy (though lying be very ordinary) to be delivered out of the Mouth of a Lyar. This is joyned in one promiſe, with deliverance from the moſt deadly inſtruments of War, Iſa. 54. 17. No weapon formed againſt thee ſhall proſper, that is, no weapon of War, neither Sword nor Spear ſhall hurt thee. Then follows, And every tongue that ſhall riſe up againſt thee in judgment, thou ſhalt condemn. This is the heritage of the ſervants of the Lord. The tongue of a Ziba or of a Tertullus will devour and deſtroy, as bad as the Sword of a Cæſar or a Pompey. The holy ſtory tells us, what woful work the tongue had made upon Joſeph and Mephiboſheth, if the good providence of God had not ſpoken a good word for them.

Laſtly, Let me add one ſeaſonable word of admonition, to theſe tongue ſcourgers; as the word is, They that ſmite with the ſword, ſhall periſh with the ſword; ſo, they that ſmite with the tongue, ſhall periſh with the tongue. The tongues of the Saints are in ſome ſence, ſharper and ſorer ſcourges, then the tongues of wicked men. The word of God in their mouths, is a Two-edged Sword, yea ſharper then any Two-edged Sword. A Prophet or a Miniſter of Chriſt, can ſtrike as hard with his tongue, as (and infinitely harder, then) any prophane wretch, or railing Rabſhakeh in the World. Truth will ſet home, will wound deeper, then ſlander can. I (ſaith the Lord, Hoſ. 6. 5.) have hewed them by my Prophets, and ſlain them by the words of my mouth. In Revel. 11. it is propheſied, That fire ſhall go out of the mouthes of the two Witneſſes, and devour their enemies, v. 5. That is, the word of their mouths, ſhall be as a fire to ſcorch and conſume the gain-ſaying World; and with this inſtrument their tongue (for that only is ſutable for the work of Witneſſes) they are ſaid to have tormented thoſe that dwell upon the Earth, verſ. 10. Some indeed are Sermon-proof and Word-proof; they at preſent do even laugh at all our ſpiritual Artillery; let whole volleyes of threats be diſcharg'd upon them, let them be hackt and hewed all day long with the Sword of the Word, they feel it not, it may be they jeer at it, at leaſt they regard it not. As they, Jerem. 18. 18. conſpiring againſt the Prophet, Come let us deviſe devices, &c. let us ſmite him with the Tongue. And leaſt any ſhould ſay, if we ſmite him with the Tongue, he will ſmite us again, For theſe Prophets are notable at their weapons; to ſecure themſelves they reſolve thus, Let us not give heed to any of his words. As if they had ſaid, we know he will ſpeak big words, and threaten us terribly, with Sword, and Peſtilence, and Famine, and Hell, &c. But let's arm our ſelves againſt him, and make no more of all, then of a Squib or a pot-Gun, then of a ſtab with a wooden Dagger, or a charge with a Bull-ruſh; Let us not give heed to any of his words. But let theſe know, though now they are hardned againſt the ſpiritual ſcourge and ſword, in the mouth of Chriſts Miniſters; yet at the laſt, Chriſt himſelf will ſmite them with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips ſhall he ſlay the wicked, Iſa. 11. 4. He once made a ſcourge of cords, and whipt the buyers and ſellers out of the Temple; he will at laſt make a Scourge of words, which ſhall whip all impenitents and unbelievers out of his preſence into Hell, where they ſhall gnaſh their teeth, and gnaw Thoſe tongues, which have ſcourg'd his faithful ſervants with many ſtripes, only for doing or ſpeaking his, their Maſters will.

Neither ſhalt thou be afraid of deſtruction, when it cometh.

The word Deſtruction ſignifies a confluence or meeting together of all kinds of evil; when evils break in together, as thieves and robbers into a houſe to ſpoil and take away all, Iſa. 60. 18. Jer. 48. 3.

When ſuch deſtruction comes, thou ſhalt have this priviledge, Not to be afraid of it. Not afraid, the word ſignifies any kind of fear, holy fearing as well as natural; here it is uſed for exceſſive diſtracting fear: It is not meant, that a man ſhall be ſecure or ſenſleſs, when deſtruction cometh, So to be fearleſs, is worſe then to be reaſonleſs. But this is the meaning, Thou ſhalt not be afraid; that is, thou ſhalt not be diſmayed with fear, thou ſhalt not be amazed or aſtoniſhed with fear, thou ſhalt not be at thy wits end, much leſs at thy Faiths end, when deſtruction cometh. Fear is good in its kind, yea it is an excellent grace; ſome fear in time of deſtruction is the daughter of faith, (Heb. 11.7.) By Faith, Noah being warned of God, of things not ſeen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an Ark to the ſaving of his houſe; He fears deſtruction ſavingly, whoſe fear moves him to prepare due means of ſafety. Such preparatory fears are holy fears, and well become the Saints, when deſtruction cometh. (Exod. 9.20.) He that heard of the deſtruction coming, and feared the Word of the Lord, made his Servants and Cattle flee into the houſes. God would not have his people, when they hear deſtruction is coming, ſtand at the door in a daring manner to meet it, and lay themſelves open to it; no, he would have them flee into the houſe, and enter into the Chamber, and ſhut the door about them, hiding themſelves, as it were for a little moment, until the indignation be over-paſt, Iſa. 26. 20.

The fear which God promiſeth his people protection from, is unbelieving fear, or fear which is the daughter of deſpair: Such as that, Iſa. 7. 2. where, when a report came of deſtruction coming, it is ſaid, That the heart of the King, and the heart of his people, was moved as the Trees of the Wood are moved with the wind. They were ſo afraid, ſo unſetled and diſorder'd within, that they knew not how to ſettle and order their affairs without. Such a fear the Prophet Jeremy threatens upon Paſhur, Jerem, 20. 3. The Lord hath not called thy name Paſhur, but Magor-miſſabib; for thus ſaith the Lord, Behold I will make thee a terror to thy ſelf, and to all thy friends: Fear round about, and fear within; this fear God promiſeth to deliver his people from, in times of danger.

> Obſerve hence, The power and preſence of God is able to uphold his people in the face of dangers, and in the preſence of deſtruction.

They ſhall not be afraid of deſtruction, when it cometh: Suppoſe God doth not keep the deſtruction off from them, yet he will keep ſinking fears off from them. How terribly ſoever men look upon them, they ſhall not be a terror to themſelves, neither will God be a terror to them. Many a Man is his own Bug-bear. And there is nothing can be ſo terrible to us, (except an angry God) as we may be to our ſelves. But he, to whom God is not a terror, and to whom himſelf is not a terror, will not be afraid of the King of terrors. So long as we are at peace with God and our ſelves, deſtruction cannot come ſo faſt, as conſolation will. And deſtruction cannot carry that away, wherein conſolation lies. The beſt part of the Saints eſtate, is out of the reach of deſtroyers. They can deſtroy houſes and goods, they can carry away gold and ſilver, but they cannot deſtroy faith and hope, they cannot carry away grace or holineſs; they may burn your writings, and the evidences of your Lands and Tenements, but they cannot burn your evidences for Heaven, or weaken your tenure and intereſts in Jeſus Chriſt. Upon the wings of this aſſurance the Saints are carried beyond the borders of fear when deſtruction comes into their borders, or death is breaking open their doors, and climbing up unto their windows. Yea this aſſurance, (which carries them beyond the confines of fear) ſets them down in a very comfortable place, in the Land of joy, or upon the mountains of light. It is too little to ſay, They ſhall not be afraid, when deſtruction comes, for at deſtruction they ſhall laugh: as Eliphaz undertakes with his next breath.

VERS. 22, 23.

At deſtruction and famine, thou ſhalt laugh; neither ſhalt thou be afraid of the beaſts of the earth.

For thou ſhalt be in league with the ſtones of the field; and the beaſts of the field ſhall be at peace with thee.

IN the former words, we had a promiſe of redemption from famine, and from fear at the coming of deſtruction. Here both the mercy and the promiſe are heightned, or the promiſe is made yet more merciful; At deſtruction and famine thou ſhalt laugh. It is a high priviledge to be redeem'd from famine, and not to be afraid of deſtruction, but to laugh at theſe is the higheſt priviledge. But is it not a ſin to laugh at theſe? And if ſo, how will it be any priviledge at all? I (ſaith the wiſe man, Eccleſ. 2. 2.) ſaid of laughter, it is mad; and of mirth, what doth it? And is not this mad laughter, to laugh at deſtruction, and to be merry in famine. The Prophet vehemently reproves joy in ſad times, (Iſa. 22. 12, 13.) and brands it for an iniquity, that ſhall not be purged from them, till they die. And can it then be commendable to rejoyce in famine, &c. Is it comely for man to be merry, when God is angry? And to be rejoycing, when the Lord is deſtroying? To clear this I ſhall open the ſence of the Text, and ſhew, that this Laughter is neither ſin nor madneſs, but the holineſs and ſobriety of the Saints.

At deſtruction and famine thou ſhalt laugh.] The word is ordinarily uſed for laughing; whence Iſaac hath his name. The ſon of the promiſe was called Iſaac, becauſe Abraham laughed, or becauſe he rejoyced at the promiſe or birth of his ſon; eſpecially at the promiſe of His birth, who was to be the joy and deſire of Nations, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; who, referring to this act of Abraham, tells the Jews, John 8. 56. Your Father Abraham rejoyced to ſee my day, he ſaw it and was glad. To laugh in Scripture is taken two wayes.

Sometimes in a good ſence; and Sometimes in an ill ſence.

In a good ſence, and ſo, To laugh is an outward expreſſion of ſound inward joy and true comfort; To laugh is an act proper to man. There cannot be true and ſollid joy (and ſo, not this effect of it, laughing) where there is not true ſollid reaſon. Even paſſion (ſtrictly taken) is founded in reaſon. In Chap. 29. v. 24. Job deſcribing the great proſperity of his former dayes, ſaith, If I laughed at them, they believed it not. Job was a man of that eſteem and veneration, that though he expreſſed in his geſture or countenance, a kind of familiarity, and how well he was pleaſed; yet the people did ſo much reverence him, and his piety and unſpotted juſtice did ſo over-awe them, that they ſuſpected ſtill he might obſerve ſomewhat amiſs in them.

Secondly, To laugh, is uſed for ſcorning and deriding. In Job 39. v. 7. Laughter is aſcribed unto the wild Aſs, improperly; He (ſc. the wild Aſs) ſcorns (or laughs at) the multitude of the City. And (Pſal. 2. 4.) when the Princes and the people gather themſelves together, to take counſel againſt the Lord and againſt his Chriſt; He that ſitteth in Heaven ſhall laugh, and the Lord ſhall have them in deriſion. That is, the Lord (in a moſt holy manner) ſcorns or derides the counſels and practiſes of wicked men. Man is never in ſo ſad a condition as when God laughs at him.

Again, Laughter proper to man, is either ſinful and reproveable, or holy and commendable. Sinful laughter is that which ariſes, Firſt, From unbelief or weakneſs of faith: Such was the laughter of Sarah (Gen. 18.12.) when the Angel brought his meſſage that Sarah ſhould have a ſon, Sarah heard it, as ſhe was in the Tent-dore, and the Text ſaith Sarah laughed: The ground of her laughter was unbelief, ſhe thought it an impoſſible thing, for her to have a ſon (as a man will laugh at a thing you tell him, when he thinks it impoſſible to be done.) That her laughter was from unbelief, is plain, from the Angels reproving queſtion in the next words; Wherefore did Sarah laugh, ſaying, ſhall I of a ſurety bear a child, which am old? Is any thing too hard for the Lord? As if he had ſaid, ſurely Sarah thinks the Lord hath out-promis'd his own power to perform.

Secondly, Sinful laughter ariſeth from contempt, or ſlighting of counſel, and carnal ſecurity in times of danger, (2 Chron. 30. 10.) when Hezekiah ſent meſſengers to Ephraim and Manaſſeh to warn them to come up to the houſe of the Lord to keep the Paſſover, it is ſaid, That they laughed the meſſengers to ſcorn, and mocked them; they laughed, ſlighting and contemning this admonition, thinking themſelves ſafe and well enough, though they came not up to that ſolemn Paſſover.

Thirdly, Sinful laughter ariſes from pride and ſelf-confidence (Hab. 1. 10.) The Prophet deſcribes the proud Chaldeans, invading Judah, thus, They ſhall ſcoff at the Kings, and Princes ſhall be a ſcorn unto them, and they ſhall deride every ſtrong-hold. They ſhall come up with ſuch an Army, with ſuch an arm of fleſh, as all fleſh muſt fall down and yield unto.

Laſtly, There is a ſinful laughter, ſpringing from ſenſuality, and exceſs of creature contentments. Such laughter Chriſt threatens, Luke 6. 25. Wo to you that are full, wo to you that laugh now : That is, wo to you that laugh, becauſe of your creature fulneſs.

Laughter, which is good and commendable, hath ſuch roots, as theſe.

Firſt, It ſprings up from faith, ſuch was the laughter of Abraham (Gen. 17. 17.) When he heard the promiſe, that he ſhould have a ſon, the Text ſaith, Abraham fell upon his face and laughed: That the laughter of Abraham was from faith, is clear from the Apoſtle, Rom. 4. 19. affirming, that, He not being weak in faith, conſidered not his own body now dead, when he was about an hundred years old, neither yet the deadneſs of Sarahs womb; he ſtaggered not at the promiſe of God, through unbelief, &c. Abraham laughed out his faith, not (as Sarah) his unbelief. Therefore alſo Chriſt ſaith (as was toucht before) Abraham rejoyced to ſee my day, he ſaw it and was glad: In the promiſe of his ſon, he ſaw the Promiſed ſeed, in whom all the Nations of the earth ſhould be bleſſed. This ſight of the day of Chriſt, in that proſpective of the promiſe, drew it in near to the old-mans heart (though it were far off) and made him glad.

Secondly, Commendable laughter comes from holy courage, and well grounded confidence; well temper'd magnanimity and Chriſtian heroicalneſs of ſpirit, lifts us ſo far above dangers and fears, that we laugh at them.

And then, there is a laughter in dangers grounded upon aſſurance of deliverance from, or ſupport in dangers. A man that ſees a great ſtorm coming, laughs at it, knowing where to go to ſhelter preſently, where to get a warm houſe over his head. The Pilot knowing he hath a ſtrong Ship, and good tackling, laughs at the winds. In that ſence [not to fear] is uſed (Prov. 31. 21.) where it is ſaid of the wiſe woman, She is not afraid of the ſnow for her houſhold; If the ſnow and cold weather come, ſhe doth not fear it, ſhe can laugh at the ſnow; Why? For all her houſhold are cloathed with ſcarlet, or double cloth; ſhe hath made ſuch proviſion againſt cold weather, that ſhe fears neither froſt nor ſnow.

Ridebis vẽtos hoc munere tectus & imbres. Mart.

Now, the Text (when it is ſaid, At famine thou ſhalt laugh) is not meant of laughter, ſpringing either from unbelief, or pride, or ſelf-confidence, or ſenſuality, or ſenſleſneſs; as if he ſhould not care what God did in the world, let God do what he would, he would laugh. As that proud Emperor ſaid (not only as one before him, when I am dead, but) while I live, let Heaven and Earth be mingled together, I care not; ſcorning and contemning what could come. But this laughter comes from ſtrength of faith, from holy courage, and well-grounded confidence; from an aſſurance of ſhelter, ſafeguard and protection from, or ſupport in the greateſt dangers, even in famine and deſtruction: He fixes on ſuch a promiſe as this, Pſal. 37. 19. They ſhall not be aſhamed in the evil time, and in the dayes of famine, they ſhall be ſatisfied. The ſoul of a believer ſees ſalvation in deſtruction, food in famine; he hath wine well refined to drink, marrow and fatneſs to feed upon, when the world knows not how to give him (or will not give him) a dry cruſt, or a cup of cold water. He ſees a hiding place, when all others lie open to the danger; he ſees a place of refuge, a covert from the rain and from the ſtorm, when others ſtand naked under them. The ſum of all is, A godly man ſees himſelf ſo protected in dangers, ſo provided for againſt all wants; he ſees in the promiſes ſuch a Magazin of arms, ſuch ſtore of bread, that he fears no weapon form'd againſt him, and feeds, when no Table is ſpred for him; Danger ſecures, deſtruction ſaves, and famine fattens him, that is, in danger, deſtruction and famine, he knows whither to go for food, ſavation and ſafety; even unto God, who is all this to him, and will be more, if he need it. Upon theſe grounds it is, that the Text ſaith, At Famine and deſtruction he ſhall laugh. Hence obſerve, ἐμοῦ ζῶντος γαῖα μιχθήτω πυρί.

In vaſtitate ita eris munitus, ac de tua ſalute ſecurus, ut ridere poſſis, etiãſi fameſcas, nõ te enecabit fames, verũ Deus ſuo te conſolationis papulo ita reficiet, ut ridere poſſis. Ipſa te fames reddet ſaturum; & contabis, nõ ſecus ac ſi tibi plenus eſſet venter. Pined.

A godly man, a true Believer, is not only not afraid of outward evils, when they come, but through Faith, he is above, and triumphs over them.

Not to be afraid of famine and deſtruction when they come, is too low for his ſpirit, He ſhall laugh when they come. Hence the Apoſtles exulting language, We glory in tribulation, we are exceeding joyous in all our tribulations. And to this ſence we may interpret that of Peter, ſpeaking of the ſufferings of the Saints, 1 Pet. 4. 14. The Spirit of glory reſteth upon them; that is, a ſpirit of glorying and holy rejoycing, whereby the ſoul is carried up (as it were) upon Eagle-wings, above and beyond reproaches. All evils lie below a Believer, when he is lifted up with this Spirit of glory. Tis ſpirit of glory reſting upon us through him that loved us, makes us more then Conquerors over tribulation, diſtreſs, perſecution, famine, nakedneſs, peril or ſword, Rom. 8. 35, 36. More then Conquerors! Who can expreſs how much that is? No tongue can tell what it is to be more then a conqueror. When Chriſt would advance the exceeding greatneſs of that reward which Givers ſhall receive, Luke 6. 38. He ſaith not barely, Give, and it ſhall be given you in good meaſure; but you ſhall have it preſſed down; and yet more, ſhaken together: that is not all neither; but you ſhall have it running over. Now a meaſure will run over, as long as you will pour; there is no ſtint, no bounds to that gift, which ſhall be given running over: A Veſſel will run over continually, pour as long as you will: So here, you ſhall not only have a conqueſt, but more then a conqueſt; and what that is, is as much and more, then all our thoughts are able to comprehend. Hence alſo the Apoſtle ſpeaking of that great enemy, the laſt enemy, Death (1 Cor. 15. 55.) brings in the believing ſoul in a kind of holy triumph, laughing at, and even jeering Death, in the ſence of the Text, O Death, where is thy ſting? As if a man having diſarmed his enemy, ſhould ſay, now Sir, where's your ſword? where's your piſtol? Chriſt hath diſarmed Death, taken away its ſting; now the Believer may laugh in the face of Death, O Death, thou thoughteſt to make us all ſmart, where is thy ſting? thou thoughteſt thy ſelf a conquerour, able to devour and ſubdue us all, but where is thy victory? Such is the Laughter here meant. And in the ſame ſence, Leviathan the mightieſt of living creatures, that Sea-monſter (to whom upon the Earth there is not the like, he is made without fear, Chap. 41. 33.) is ſaid to laugh at the ſhaking of the ſpear (Job 41. 29.) He is ſo armed with impenitrable ſcales, that, ſhake a ſpear at him, he laughs at you; it is an alluſion to thoſe, that are armed with proof, they fear neither ſword nor ſhot: The truth is, a believer is ſhot-free, ſhake the ſpear at him, ſhake famine, ſhake deſtruction at him, threaten him with this or with that, he laughs at all, becauſe he hath armor of proof, wherein he may ſafely truſt; he hath a ſhield, a ſhield of faith, which will quench even the fiery darts of Satan, much more then the fiery dangers of the world.

The Hiſtories of the Primitive Church, are full of this holy laughter, and heroical magnanimity of the Saints, grapling with the greateſt evils. How did thoſe renowned Martyrs, even baffle death, and deride their torments (from this principle of faith in Chriſt) conquering them, not ſlighting them (from a principle of ſelf-neglect.) When Polycarpe was threatned to be torn in pieces with the teeth of wild beaſts, Let them come, ſaith he, and grind me, I ſhall make very good bread; ſo that the very tormentors were more tormented with the holy ſcorn and laughter of ſuffering Chriſtians, then the Chriſtians were with the torments which they ſuffered. In 2 Sam. 2. 14. When Abner and Joab the two great Generals met, Abner ſaith unto Joab, Let the young men ariſe and play before us; the ſport was to fight, and fighting unto death, and yet theſe ſtout Souldiers being above fear, call it playing one with another: It is the word here in the Text (let them come and laugh together before us) As if theſe young men were of ſuch courage, that they could laugh at death, and go to killing one another, as if they were to go to play with one another. Surely there is little reaſon for ſuch courage; killing of men is no laughing matter, no matter of ſport; for as Abner ſaid unto Joab, not long after (verſ. 26.) ſhall the ſword devour for ever, knoweſt thou not, that it will be bitterneſs in the end? There is little cauſe to account the beginning of that a ſport, which will be bitterneſs in the end: But when the Saints are to joyn in the deadlieſt battel, or to meet with the deadlieſt death for Chriſt, or from the chaſtening hand of Chriſt, they have reaſon enough to account it a ſport, and to laugh at deſtruction (in this ſence cleared) becauſe they know it will be ſweetneſs and comfort in the end: Valour ſometimes laughs at danger, much more may faith. (Pſalm 68. 12, 13.) Though we have lyen among the pots, yet ſhall we be as the wings of a Dove covered with ſilver, and her feathers with yellow gold: This is the confidence of the Saints, when they lie among the pots, or among the pot-ranges (as ſome interpret it) where the ſcullions lie, and are beſooted and black'd over, at the fire of afflictions, till they look like very ſcullions, that yet they ſhall be gilded over ſoon after. Or it may be underſtood of the bounds and limits of the enemies Country: and ſo it is a deſcription of great danger; for they who lie upon the borders of an enemies Country, are in a continual fear of an aſſault; this the Greeks ſeems to favour, rendring it thus; Though we have lain between the inheritances, or the lots, ſc. our own and the enemies; either way the ſence reaches this point fully; though believers lie among the pots, or neareſt dangers, yet they are aſſured that they ſhall have wings, as the wings of a Dove, which are covered with ſilver, and her feathers with yellow gold. There is gold and ſilver in the eye of faith, while there is nothing but blackneſs and death in the eye of ſenſe; yea, faith aſſures them, that they ſhall be white as ſnow in Salmon (as it follows in that Pſalm) that is, they ſhall have whiteneſs after blackneſs, or light in the midſt of darkneſs. Salmon ſignifies dark, duskiſh or obſcure; for, it was a hill full of pits, holes and gins, very dark and dangerous for paſſengers; but when the ſnow was upon it, it was white and gliſtering; now ſaith he, they ſhall be like Salmon in the ſnow, though black in themſelves, yet white, lightſom and glorious, either through pardon of ſin, or victory over their enemies, to both which, whiteneſs hath reference in Scripture.

ἀνὰ μέσον τῶν κλήρων Sept. Ainſworth.

Again, In that it is ſaid, At deſtruction and famine thou ſhalt laugh; as from that word, laughing, we ſee what ſpirits the Saints have in troubleſom times; ſo, in-as-much as he gathers together and rally's all the ſcattered troops of afflictions, to charge at once upon a believer; and yet concludes, At deſtruction and famine thou ſhalt laugh,

Non ſolū ſingulas ærumnas ſuperabit, ſed omniū illorum in unū coeuntiū agmen. Integrum ex omnibus exercitū fugabit

> Obſerve, That, A godly man laughs at, or is above all evils, though brought againſt him at once.

It hath been ſaid, That Hercules could not match two: here are two, Deſtruction and Famine, overmatcht by one; bring whole legions and armies of troubles to encounter a Saint, he overcomes them all: He famiſhes famine, and deſtroyes deſtruction it ſelf. The Apoſtle, Rom. 8.35. muſters up (as it were) all evils together into a body, and dares any or all to battel, with a believer; Who ſhall ſeperate us from the love of God? ſhall tribulation, or diſtreſs, or perſecution, or famine, or nakedneſs, or peril, or ſword? which of theſe ſhall undertake the challenge, or will you bring any more? then, come life, or death, Angels, or principalities, or powers, things preſent, or things to come, height or depth, or any other creature: none of theſe ſingle, nor all of theſe joyned, ſhall be able to ſeparate us from the love of God, which is in Chriſt Jeſus our Lord. Every heightned Saint is a ſpiritual Goliah, who in the name of the living God, bids defiance to this huge hoſt, and they all run and tremble before him. Rejoyce (ſaith the Apoſtle, Jam. 1. 2.) when you fall into divers temptations: A believer hath joy, not only when he grapleth with a ſingle temptation; but let there come many, divers temptations, variety of temptations, variety for kind, and multitude for number, yet he rejoyceth in the midſt of all.

Neither ſhalt thou be afraid of the beaſts of the earth.

Having thus lifted a godly man above the afflicting reach of thoſe two great evils, famine and deſtruction, want of good things, and ſpoiling of his goods; he proceeds to inſtance another great evil, wherein a godly man is exempt from, and ſet above fear; Neither ſhalt thou be afraid of the beaſts of the Earth.

Beaſts of the Earth.] The root of that word ſignifies life, and ſo any living creature, eſpecially a wild beaſt; becauſe they are ſo active and full of life, therefore they are named from life.

חית à radice חיה vita, vivēs, beſtia fera.

And theſe are called, The beaſts of the Earth;

Firſt, Becauſe beaſts are produced from the earth, and the earth received a charge to produce them, Gen. 1. 24, 25. And God ſaid, let the earth bring forth the living creature, after his kind, and God made the beaſt of the earth after his kind.

Or ſecondly, Becauſe beaſts have nothing but earth to live upon; as men whoſe portion is only in creatures, are called men of the world, or men of the earth.

The word for (earth) ſignifies the whole earth, habitable or inhabitable: And though the earth ſtand ſtill, yet this word is derived (ſay ſome) from running, either becauſe the Heavens run round about the earth, with a continual rotation or motion; or becauſe all creatures, men and beaſts, move or run upon the face of the earth. Though others deduce it from a word which ſignifies to* deſire, wiſh, or will a thing; becauſe the earth is perpetually deſirous of bringing forth fruit, for the uſe and help of man. But it is not agreed on what we are to underſtand, by the beaſts of the Earth.

Firſt, Some take the words improperly, and ſo the beaſts of the earth, are interpreted men; a company or ſociety of men, and theſe in a double ſence. For the word notes ſometimes a company of men in a good ſence, and ſometimes a company of men in an ill ſence. I ſhall give you an inſtance of both, for the clearing of this Text.

It ſignifies men, or a company of men in a good ſence, Pſal. 68. 10. where ſpeaking of that rain of liberalities, (that is, bleſſings of all ſorts) which God ſent upon his inheritance, to confirm and refreſh it, he ſaith, Thy Congregation hath dwelt therein. Thy Camp or League, thy Hoſt or Troop dwelt there; (ſo 2 Sam. 23. 13.) which the vulgar tranſlates, Thy beaſts; and the Greek, Thy living creatures dwelt therein: The ſame word is uſed (and ſome apprehend in alluſion to this Pſalm) Rev. 4. 6. Chap. 5. 8, 9. in thoſe myſtical deſcriptions of Chriſt and his Church: in this ſence it ſuits not at all with the promiſe of the Text. Theſe beaſts are not to be feared, but honoured and loved; mans greateſt ſpiritual comforts on earth, are found in the ſociety of theſe beaſts.

But commonly this word, referred unto men, ſignifies an aſſociation of wicked men; men of the earth, worſe (many of them) then the beaſts of the earth: Theſe are ſpoken of in the ſame Pſalm ver. 30. Rebuke the company of ſpear men, (or Archers) The rout or crue of the Cane, that is, men that bear reeds, or canes, whereof ſpears and arrows were wont to be made; therefore the company of Spear-men or Archers, are called a company with reeds: the word by us rendred company, is, the beaſts of the reeds; thoſe men that are like beaſts, ſavage, cruel and bloody, theſe are as bruits and beaſts of the earth; ſo they are decipher'd in the next verſe, The multitude of the bulls, with the calves of the people. And we find the word ſignifying, a company of wicked ones, and a company of Saints in the ſame verſe, Pſal. 74. 19. O deliver not the ſoul of thy turtle Dove unto the multitude of the wicked; the Hebrew is, unto the company of the beaſts; Forget not the Congregation (or the beaſts ) of thy poor for ever; there the ſame word is taken (as in Pſal. 68. 10.) for a company of Saints, or the poor people of God. In the Scripture of the New Teſtament, it is frequent to ſhadow wicked men under the names of beaſts, beaſts of the earth: ſo that of Paul hath been taken (1 Cor. 15. 32.) If I have fought with beaſts at Epheſus after the manner of men, with beaſtly men, cruel men, men like unto beaſts in their qualities and diſpoſitions: though others underſtand it of his being caſt unto the beaſts, to fight with them, which was a cruelty thoſe perſecuting times exerciſed againſt the Chriſtians. So (1 Tim. 4. 16.) Paul ſaith, he was delivered out of the mouth of the Lion: Nero that cruel Tyrant, is ſuppoſed to be the Lion, the beaſt of the earth he aimeth at. And the Apoſtle, Titus 1. 1. gives this this character of the Cretians, they are evil beaſts. If we take it here in this ſence, it is a truth, and a very comfortable truth, that godly men ſhall be delivered from the fear of beaſtly and cruel men, or as the Apoſtle calls them, unreaſonable or abſurd men, who have not faith.

But rather underſtand here beaſts of the earth properly, for thoſe fierce and cruel creatures hurtful to man. Once, man had power and dominion over all the creatures; the wildeſt beaſts were tame to him in his ſtate of innocency; till he roſe up and rebelled againſt God, the creatures were ſubject unto him; but man rebelling againſt God, the creatures rebelled againſt man: hence it is, that man naturally is ſurpriſed with fear, at the approach and ſight of ſtrong and cruel beaſts, and therefore it is here ſpoken as a ſpecial mercy and priviledge of the godly, that they ſhall not be afraid of the beaſts of the earth.

The beaſts of the earth are hurtful to us three wayes.

Firſt, Naturally, many beaſts by nature are very dreadful to man, as the Lion, the Bear, the Wolf, and ſuch other fierce, ſtrong and bloody beaſts.

Secondly, Tame beaſts, ſuch as we daily uſe and ſubdue to our ſervice, are often by accident hurtful to us; the Horſe and the Ox, have many times been deſtructive to their owners.

Thirdly, (Which I conceive is the thing chiefly aimed at here) beaſts hurt judicially, in a way of wrath from God: There are divers places in the Book of God, wherein God threatens to arm creatures, againſt thoſe, who ſin againſt him, and that when people ſhould forget their duties, the beaſts ſhould forget their ſubjection. *Deut.*32.24. I will ſend the teeth of beaſts upon them. And Jer. 15. 3. I will appoint over them four kinds, ſaith the Lord, the Sword to ſlay, and the Dogs to tear, and the Fowls of the Heaven, and the beaſts of the Earth, to devour and deſtroy. You ſee God can have an army any where if he pleaſeth, an army of Dogs to deſtroy, an army of Fowls of the Air, an army of the beaſts of the Earth, to ſubdue a rebellious people. And Ezek. 14. 21. This is one of the four ſore judgments that God denounceth againſt Jeruſalem, The Sword, and the Famine, and the noyſom Beaſts, and the Peſtilence. Thus in a judicial manner they were very terrible and dreadful, and ſo were numbered among the ſoreſt evils or judgments which God ſent upon a Nation for their wickedneſs. To all or any of theſe wayes, this promiſe may be enlarged. Thou ſhalt not be afraid of the natural cruelty, the caſual hurtfulneſs, or the judiciary rage of beaſts, when ſent by God with commiſſion to puniſh the beaſtlineſs of men.

How this cometh to paſs, that beaſts of the Earth hurt not godly men, is laid down in the next verſe, which I ſhall a while open, and then give you ſome notes and obſervations from both together.

Verſ. 23. For thou ſhalt be in league with the ſtones of the field, and the beaſts of the field ſhall be at peace with thee.

This verſe contains the reaſon, why he ſhould not be afraid of the beaſts of the field; and here is ſomewhat more got into the reaſon, then was before in the promiſe; the ground of the promiſe is higher, and carried farther then the promiſe it ſelf. The promiſe was, to be delivered from the fear of beaſts; and that thou mayeſt be certain of it, know God will not ſuffer ſo much as a ſtone to do thee hurt: Thou ſhalt be at league not only with the beaſts of the Earth, but with the ſtones of the field.

Thou ſhalt be in league.] The word is frequently uſed in the Old Teſtament, to ſignifie that ſolemn gracious covenant of reconciliation between God and man, eſtabliſhed in the blood of Chriſt.

A league or covenant is a very ſolemn act, an act of reaſon, and of the higheſt reaſon, an act of judgment and deepeſt deliberation: therefore it may be doubted how a league can be entred with ſtones, which have no life, or with beaſts which have no reaſon. We read (Gen. 39. 49.) of a league or covenant made at or upon an heap of ſtones, between Jacob and Laban; but this is very ſtrange and unheard of, to make a league with a heap of ſtones.

For the clearing of this, we muſt enquire into two things;

Firſt, What theſe ſtones are.

Secondly, What this league doth import.

Firſt, For the ſtones: There are divers opinions about them, and many interpreters have exceedingly ſtumbled at theſe ſtones: Some change theſe ſtones into men, ſtrong men, or the ſtrongeſt of men. That of Job in the next Chapter, hath ſome alluſion to it, verſ. 12. Is my ſtrength the ſtrength of ſtones? A ſtrong man is ſtrong, as a ſtone.

The Chaldee Paraphraſt underſtands by ſtones, the Law, which was written in ſtones. Thou ſhalt be in league with the ſtones, that is, the Law written in tables of ſtone ſhall never hurt thee. But that (as to the Text) is a meer conceit, though (in it ſelf) a great truth, and our greateſt comfort, that believers are at league with thoſe Law ſtones, which left in power and hoſtility, would have broken all man-kind to pieces, and ground them to powder. Chriſt hath made peace for us with the Law; the Law had a quarrel at us, and the Law would have been upon us with an everlaſting war, if Chriſt had not ſetled our peace by ſatisfying the Law; Stoning to death, had been the death of us all, if Chriſt had not made a league for us with theſe ſtones.

Thirdly, Others interpret theſe ſtones by a Metonymy of the thing contained, Thou ſhalt be at league with the ſtones of the field, with the rocks or rocky places, that is, thou ſhalt be at league with thoſe creatures, or with thoſe beaſts, which lie among the ſtones, and have their dens about hollow rocks: and ſo they make the latter branch [and the beaſts of the field ſhall be at peace with thee] to be exegetical, giving us the expoſition of the former, or ſhewing, what is meant by being at league with the ſtones of the field; Thou ſhalt be at league with the ſtones of the field, that is, with the beaſts who make their dens, and their holes, and their hiding places, among the ſtones of the field. This is a good ſence of the words.

But leaving the former, with ſome other apprehenſions about theſe ſtones, I ſhall take theſe ſtones properly, and ſo they will fall under four conſiderations, all which give light to the clearing of this Text, and the manner of our league with ſtones.

Firſt, As naturally ſcattered upon the face of the earth, ſo hindring Travellers, or endangering a man in haſte upon his way. One part of Arabia, was called Arabia Petræa, or the ſtony, becauſe it was full of ſtones, and ſo uneaſie, either for tillage or travel.

Stones are ſo dangerous to the foot, that the Latine word is derived from hurting the foot; hence thoſe Scripture expreſſions. A ſtumbling ſtone and a rock of offence, becauſe men are ſo apt to ſtumble at ſtones. And both theſe are applied to Chriſt in a figure, he is called a ſtumbling ſtone, and a rock of offence. Chriſt in himſelf is the moſt precious and elect foundation-ſtone to build on, but he is the moſt ſore and dangerous ſtone to ſtumble on: To be in league and covenant with that living ſtone, is the higheſt mercy.

Lapis à lædendo pede nomẽ habet.

Secondly, Theſe ſtones as they lie naturally hidden in the bowels of the earth, or under the earth, are a trouble to the Husband-man in tilling the ground, in plowing and ſowing, and they often endanger the breaking of his plough, and hinder the rooting and growth of the ſeed ſown.

Thirdly, Conſider theſe ſtones as artificially laid together for the making of a wall or mownd to fence and part field from field, or both from the common fields and highwayes.

Fourthly, Conſider theſe ſtones as artificially and induſtriouſly placed for marks and boundaries, to diſtinguiſh private mens lands, or the precincts of ſuch and ſuch Countries, which are commonly called (a) Mark-ſtones, or boundary-ſtones; as alſo ſtones ſet in the roads or high-wayes, for the direction of Travellers pointing which way to go, to eminent Towns or Cities. Of ſuch a ſtone we read (1 Sam. 20. 19.) when Jonathan bad David ſtay at the ſtone Ezel, that is, as we put in the Margin of our Bibles, the ſtone that ſheweth the way, or the (b) way ſtone. Theſe boundary ſtones, or way-ſtones to direct Travellers, were famous in Antiquity: inſomuch that among the (c) Heathen, They were worſhipped as a god, or Numen, as divers of the Chriſtian Fathers have obſerved in their learned reports of Heatheniſh idolatry. Which alſo their own (d) Poets have elegantly deſcribed, both in their conſtitutions and uſes; giving thoſe ſtones a charge faithfully to teſtifie, (e) This is your land, and this is yours. And they break out into the commendation of the integrity of theſe witneſſes, whom no threats could terrifie, or bribes corrupt to ſpeak a lie, or conceal the truth.

Now conſider the other term, what it is to be in league with ſtones, in any of, or in all theſe acceptations.

In general we know, that, to be league with ſtones, is an improper or alluſive ſpeech: Stones are not capable of the formalities of a league; when we are in league or covenant with God or man, ſo with ſtones; theſe two things are made out to us.

Firſt, That God or man will do us no hurt; a covenant or league takes off the actings of hoſtility. Whatſoever a man is in covenant with, he fears no dammage from. Preſumptuous ſinners having made a covenant with Hell, and an agreement with death, build their confidence of indemnity upon the ſtrength of it. When the over-flowing ſcourge ſhall paß through, it ſhall not come near us, Iſa. 28. 15. A man that is in league with the Devil, believes the Devil will do him no wrong.

Secondly, A League imports, that we may expect to receive good, protection, benefits and bleſſings either from God or man, according to the Articles of covenant agreed to, and ſealed reſpectively. Theſe two aſſurances we have by a league. And when it is ſaid here, that a godly man is in league with the ſtones of the field, both theſe are to be underſtood; It is as much, as to ſay, The ſtones of the field ſhall not annoy him; yea, the ſtones of the field ſhall be a benefit or a friend to him. Man is ſaid to be in league with ſtones, when he receives the effect of a league from ſtones. Taking it in this general ſence, we may apply it unto thoſe four particular ſences of ſenſeleſs ſtones before mentioned.

Firſt, As ſtones are naturally ſcattered upon the face of the earth, the promiſe imports thus much: that, ſuch ſtones ſhall not hurt or annoy him in his walks or travels. This promiſe we have expreſly (Pſal. 91. 11.) He ſhall give his Angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy wayes; they ſhall bear thee up in their hands, leſt thou daſh thy foot againſt a ſtone. This is the league with ſtones. Stones ſhall not annoy thee in thy way, thou ſhalt not ſtumble or fall to break thy bones, or bruiſe thy body upon theſe ſtones. The Devil in his combate with Chriſt, miſapplieth this promiſe of a league with the ſtones (Matth. 4. 6.) Tempting him to caſt himſelf down from a pinacle of the Temple; for it is written, He ſhall give his Angels charge concerning thee, and in their hands they ſhall bear thee up, leſt at any time thou daſh thy foot againſt a ſtone: As if he had ſaid, a godly man hath this aſſurance from his league with the ſtones, that he ſhall receive no harm from them; therefore truſt God, and in confidence of this promiſe, Caſt thy ſelf down. So, here is the firſt ſence, Thou ſhalt be at league with the ſtones of the field: that is, thou ſhalt not be hurt by thoſe ſtones, as thou travelleſt or walkeſt.

Secondly, Take the ſtones as they lie hidden in the Earth, then to be at league with them, hath this ſence; Firſt, That in tilling the Earth, ſtones ſhould not trouble or hinder that work. God ſhall ſo order it, that, though thou ploweſt among ſtones, yet thou ſhalt till thy ground ſucceſsfully. The ſtony ground ſhall be fruitful ground. In that parable of a Vineyard (Iſa. 5. 1.) God is pleaſed to manifeſt his care of making it fruitful, by this act among others, I gathered out the ſtones thereof, verſ. 2. noting that ſtones are naturally great impediments to fruitfulneſs. We read (Matth. 13. 5.) how the ſeed, which fell upon the ſtony-ground, ſprung up quickly and withered as quickly; ſtony ground naturally cannot feed or bring forth fruit to maturity. It is then a great priviledge, thus to be in league with the ſtones of the field; that, though we ſow among ſtones, yet we ſhall have a plentiful Harveſt. When Job deſcribed the dayes of his proſperity (Chap. 29. 6.) he ſaith, The Rock poured him out Rivers of Oyl: To have Oyl out of Rocks, is like having Corn out of the Stones; both noting things ſucceeding beyond their natural principles, and our common expectation. When the Baptiſt would ſhew how God can work beyond all the poſſibilities of nature or reaſon, he ſaith to the Jews, Even of theſe ſtones God can raiſe up children unto Abraham (Matth. 3.) There is ſomewhat of a miracle in it, to raiſe up bread to a man out of ſtones: that is, to make a rocky Land a fertil ſoil. God threatned his people, that he would make the earth to be iron under them; that is, the earth which was ordinarily fruitful, ſhall yield you no more fruit, then iron. And on the other ſide he promiſes, That they ſhall ſuck Honey out of the Rock, and Oyl out of the flinty Rock, Deut. 32. 13. Honey out of the Rock; that is, Honey of Bees, hiving themſelves in Rocks; or (as others) Honey-fruits, as Dates, &c. which grow on Palm-trees (as Oyl on Olive-trees) in rocky places. Hereby the Lord aſſured his people of abundant plenty; for whereas Rocks and Stones are uſually barren, he would make thoſe places fruitful to Iſrael. They ſhould have Oyl out of the Rock in Canaan, as well as water out of the Rock in the wilderneſs. We are ſurely in league with thoſe Rocks and Stones of the fields, which ſend us ſuch Preſents as theſe, Bread and Water, Honey and Oyl.

Juſto molleſcunt ſaxa, impiis verò terræ pulvis molliſſimus lapideſcet.

Thirdly, Take theſe Stones as artificially laid together, and ſo, Thou ſhalt be in league with them, is thus to be underſtood; thoſe walls and mounds of ſtone, ſhall be as the keepers and watch-men of thy field, they ſhall preſerve thy corn and thy cattel from annoyance. To this ſence ſome joyn the former words with theſe, Thou ſhalt not be afraid of the beaſts of the Earth, for the ſtones of the field, which lie in the walls and fences, ſhall be-friend thee, and keep them out. When God would ſhew his intendments to deſtroy and lay waſte his vineyard, he expreſſes it by pulling down the wall, as before he had expreſs'd his care to protect it, by building of a wall, Iſa. 5. 2. I fenced it, and gathered out the ſtones thereof; which we may underſtand thus, I gathered out the ſtones (and as it is uſual) made a fence of them; and had the Vineyard brought forth fruit, it had alſo been in league with theſe ſtones, that is, the ſtones of the wall had kept out the wild beaſts, or any annoyance from them; but being fruitleſs, the league with ſtones was broken: I (ſaith the Lord, verſ. 5.) will break down the wall thereof, and it ſhall be troden down. So that, in this ſence, to be at league with the ſtones of the field, is, as much as to ſay, that ſtone-wall, or the ſtone-fence which is made about thy field, ſhall ſtand to protect and maintain thy Land, thy fruits and cattel, ſtand the incurſions of wild beaſts from ſpoyling and treading down by any.

Nunquam diſſolvetur materia, nō diſſiliet lapis ex ſepe, nemo furabitur, nemo inſiliet in agros tuos.

Fourthly, Take theſe Stones for Land-marks or for Way-marks, for boundary-ſtones, or for directory-ſtones; and the ſence may be thus conceived, Thou ſhalt be at league with the ſtones of the field, that is, no man ſhall come within thy bounds, none ſhall remove thy Land-marks, or invade thy Eſtate; thoſe Stones ſhall firmly diſtinguiſh thine inheritance: thou ſhalt have no controverſie ariſing, which is thine, or what is thy poſſeſſion. As if an argument had formally been made with theſe ſtones, to keep off all intruders upon their Maſters inheritance, and accordingly the ſtones in purſuance of that agreement (like ſo many hired ſervants) ſhould faithfully witneſs for their Maſter, and chide away all who would do him wrong (1 Sam. 7. 12.) Samuel ſet up a ſtone as a boundary of the conqueſt and victories which the Lord had given the children of Iſrael againſt the Philiſtims, He ſet up a ſtone, and called it Eben-Ezer, or ſtone of help. Adding the reaſon, Hitherto hath the Lord helped us; As if he had ſaid, here is a Stone of remembrance, how God hath helped us; and that Stone ſeemed to ſpeak thus much to Iſrael, Keep and hold what ye have gotten, let not the Philiſtims ſet a foot (unrevenged) over or beyond this ſtone. So then, in this ſence, to be in league with the ſtones of the field, is a promiſe of keeping our inheritances free from invaſion and confuſion, that we ſhall know what is ours, and that no enemy ſhall take it from us.

Facere pactum cum lapidibus agri, eſt pacificè vivere cum proximo, item ſecurus eſſe, quod nullus terminos agri ſui tranſiliturus ſit, acſi cum lapidibus terminalibus pepigiſſet: ipſique lapides pactum initum ſervarent, nec aliter acſi ratione valentes incurſores, aut tranſgreſſores etiam verbo fugarent. Pined. Termini agrorum tuorum à nemine violentur; nemo tranſgreditur.

It was a great ſin to remove the Land-marks and Boundaries, and a great puniſhment was threatned againſt any, who ſhould alter or remove them, Prov. 23. 11. Deut. 19. 14. Deut. 27. 17. And when the Prophet Hoſea would ſhew, how extreamly wicked the Princes of Judah were, he ſaith (chap. 5. 10.) The Princes of Judah were like them that remove the bounds; as if he had ſaid, we account thoſe the worſt of men, who remove Land-marks; how vile then are theſe Princes, who are as bad as they? Juſt as the wickedneſs of the people is aggravated, chap. 4. 4. This people are as they that ſtrive with the Prieſt, To ſtrive with the Prieſt, is to ſtrive with God; that's a ſad ſtrife. Strivers with the Prieſt, are the worſt of people; how vile then are this people, who are as bad as they? But to the preſent point, if it be ſo great a ſin to remove the Land-ſtones, it muſt needs be a great mercy to have thoſe ſtones preſerved. So then, to be in league with the ſtones of the field, may have this good ſence alſo; the boundary-ſtones ſhall be preſerved, none ſhall remove them, and they ſhall preſerve thy eſtate, that none ſhall invade or waſte it. Hence obſerve, > God can do us good by any thing, if he pleaſeth; and nothing can do us good without God.

Though we have carefully ſet up bounds, though we have made ſtrong fences, yet theſe will not keep out evil or annoyance, unleſs there be a league, a league of Gods making for us; and God can produce our comforts out of improbables, yea, impoſſibles to Nature: He can fetch us bread and a bleſſing from ſtones, It was a temptation upon Chriſt when he was hungry, to make bread of ſtones. If thou be the Son of God, command that theſe ſtones be made bread, Mat. 4. 2. But it is our comfort, that God can turn ſtones into bread, that he can make thoſe things which are moſt improbable to do us good, very good unto us. It is a ſin for us to turn ſtones into bread, or to expect ſtones to be turned into bread, that is, to put God upon miracles for us, when means or endeavors may help us; but God out of the ſuperabundance of his power and goodneſs, alwayes can, and ſometimes will work miracles: turning ſtones into bread for us. Then we turn ſtones into bread, when we live upon ſin; whoſoever eateth a bit of bread out of the hand of ſin, turneth ſtones into bread. Then God turneth ſtones into bread for us, when out of his infinite power and goodneſs, he gives us ſupplies by unuſual means, and comforts us by that, from which we can expect no more comfort, then we do bread and water out of ſtones.

Further, When ſtones ſeem to be moſt angry with a godly man, then he is in league with them. Stones (in a proper ſence) flew about the ears of Steven, and killed him; yet Steven was in league with the ſtones, even while they took away his life: God turned theſe ſtones into bread for him, and every ſtone was as a glorious Diamond in his Crown of Martyrdom.

There are two Interpretations of this league with ſtones, (which ſome make great ſtore and treaſure of) different from all theſe; the former is grounded upon a cuſtom in Arabia, where, or near which it is ſuppoſed Job s friends dwelt. It was (ſaith the learned Author) a very capital offence in that Countrey, if any man did caſt or carry heaps of ſtones into his neighbours ground; for that action had this ſignification or meaning in it, the man, who afterwards ventured to plow or till that ground, ſhould ſurely dy by the hands of thoſe who caſt in thoſe Stones. So that, the ſight of ſuch ſtones was terrible and ominous to the owner of the Land, as ſpeaking death and ruine to him, if he medled with it. Hence 'twas often left unus'd and untill'd. Againſt this barbarous cuſtom (it being an occaſion of murders and bloodſhed) a very ſevere Law was made; That whoſoever ſhould be diſcovered to have caſt ſuch ſtones into his neighbours ground, ſhould have judgment of death by the Magiſtrate. In alluſion to this Law or cuſtom, the interpretation of this promiſe (Thou ſhalt be in league with the ſtones of the field) is made out thus. The ordinary ſtones of the field ſhall be ſo far from hurting, that, even thoſe ſtones, which ſpeak anger and malice ſhall not hurt thee. God will reconcile or ſubdue the rage of thine enemies, and though they have caſt theſe ſtones of defiance into thy Land, yet they ſhall deſire a league of peace with thee, or fall before thee.

Pined. Crimen hoc appellabant σκοπελισμὸν, cujus rei admiſſum, tale eſt; pleriq; inimicorum ſolent prædiū inimici σκοπελίζειν, id eſt, lapides ponere indicio futuros, quod ſi quis eum agrum coluiſſet, malo letho periturus eſſet inſidiis eorum qui ſcopulos poſuiſſent. Quæ res tā tum timorē habet, ut nemo agrum accedere audeat; crudelitatem timent eorū qui ſcopeliſmon fecerūt. Id. ex Ulpiano.

The ſecond is grounded upon a cuſtom in war, of which we read (2 Kings 3. 25,) that when the Moabites fled before Iſrael, the purſuing Iſraelites beat down their Cities, and on every good piece of Land, caſt every man his ſtone, and filled it, &c. Eliphaz might have an eye to this; as if he had ſaid, thy Land ſhall not be buried under the heaps of ſtones, thrown there by a conquering hand; that is, thou ſhalt have a league of amity with, or victory over all that are round about thee.

That is, they ſhall (through the power of God) be made peaceable to thee. To be at peace with the beaſts, is the ſame in proportion, with being in league with ſtones. It was mans priviledge by creation, to have power over the beaſts of the field, and it is the priviledge of redemption, to be at peace with them. This is the ordinary priviledge of every Believer: But there is a more tranſcendent priviledge of the Church, in the moſt flouriſhing eſtate of it here on earth, repreſented under this notion, Iſa. 11. 6, 7, 8, 9. The Wolf ſhall dwell with the Lamb, and the Leopard ſhall lie down with the Kid, and the Calf, and the young Lion, and the fatling together, and a little child ſhall lead them, &c. And the ſucking child ſhall play on the hole of the Aſp, and the weaned child ſhall put his hand on the Cockatrice den; they ſhall not hurt nor deſtroy in all my holy mountain. This peace with beaſts, is within a degree of glory with God, whether we underſtand it in the letter, of beaſts in kind, or in the Allegory, of men ſymbolizing in rage and fierceneſs, in power and poyſons, in ſtings and teeth, with beaſts and ſerpents.

The Text before us, goes lower then this promiſe; And to be at peace with the beaſts of the field, is only a gracious aſſurance that they ſhall not hurt us, or that they ſhall be uſeful to us. In the firmnſs of this promiſe of peace with the beaſts, the fearleſneſs of a godly man is founded; He ſhall not be afraid of the beaſts of the earth, for the beaſts of the earth ſhall be at peace with him. Hence obſerve,

> The courage and fearleſneſs of a godly man is grounded on divine reaſon, not on humane preſumption.

When we ſee a man ſtout in the midſt of danger, fearleſs amongſt wild beaſts, we may wonder where the ſpring of his courage lies: This promiſe ſheweth you the ſpring-head, He is at peace with them. It is not conceit and fancy, or deſperateneſs of ſpirit, that cauſed him to deride and ſlight danger; but he hath a ſolid ground; there is a peace and a league ratified in heaven, for him; even with the Stones and Beaſts of the earth. As a godly man can give a reaſon of the hope that is in him, ſo he can give a reaſon of the courage that is in him; he knows why he is ſo ſtout and venturous.

Secondly, Obſerve from both, in that man is here ſaid to be in league with the ſtones, and at peace with the beaſts;

> That, Every creature, by ſin, is made dangerous and hurtful unto man.

For, in that there is a league and peace made with theſe, it notes, they were in a ſtate of hoſtility, ready to riſe up againſt us, and annoy us. As the creature, by reaſon of mans ſin is ſubject unto vanity, ſo man is ſubject unto fear, by reaſon of the creature. Sin hath made the creature vanity in it ſelf, and ſin hath made the creature vexation unto us. When the beaſts rebel againſt us, we ſhould remember how we have rebelled againſt God; and, that until God renews a league, and makes peace for us, with the creatures, there is not a creature upon the earth, but may quickly be deſtructive to us, If God ſpeaks the word, and gives a call or a commiſſion to a Flie, againſt the ſtrongeſt, the ſwifteſt man; flight ſhall periſh from the ſwift, and power from the ſtrong, neither of them ſhall eſcape.

Thirdly, Thou ſhalt be in league with the ſtones, and with the beaſts; he reckons up all thoſe wayes by which evils may come in upon us; and aſſures a man, to whom God is reconciled; that theſe evils ſhall not come. Hence obſerve,

> That, When God is once a friend to us, he can quickly make all other things friendly to us alſo.

Every godly man (of ſuch Eliphaz here ſpeaks) is at peace and league with God, therefore God makes all creatures at peace and league with him. Though uſually, they who are in neareſt league and covenant with God, are moſt warred with, and oppoſed by the world; yet this ſtands ſure, that when God is our friend, he can make our enemies our friends, or their enmity ſhall befriend us; Stones and ſavage Beaſts ſhall be helpful to us. When God is at peace with us, he makes all things at peace with us. Daniel was at peace with God, and he was at peace among the Lions. The Apoſtle (*Rom.*8.) gives it in general, If God be with us, who can be againſt us? No creature hath power in it ſelf to maintain war and enmity againſt thoſe, on whoſe ſide God appears.

Qui dominū habent adjutorem, habebit & omnes creaturas adjutrices; ille ſi favet, favent omnes, ait, aiunt; negat, negāt, Qui Dominum habet, cuſtodem habebit, & lapides cāpi cuſtodes. Brent in loc.

appears. If God love us, All things work together for good to us. He that hath help from God, ſhall not want help from any creature; for all creatures are at the call and command of God; if he ſaith, go, they muſt go; if he ſaith, come, they muſt come; if he ſaith to a Stone, do ſuch a man good, the Stone muſt do it; if he ſaith to a Raven, go carry Elijah his dinner, the Raven will haſten; if he ſaith to a wild beaſt, ſave ſuch a man, deliver ſuch a mnn, ſpare ſuch a man, he muſt go of Gods errand. In our friendſhip and league with God, we have a virtual league of friendſhip with the moſt unfriendly creatures.

And if God pleaſe, he can make men, who have as little ſence as Stones, and leſs reaſon then Beaſts, to be helpful and uſeful, and peaceable to his people. There is a generation amongſt us, a ſtony generation, a hard-hearted generation of men, you may as well move a Stone, as move them with what you ſay; a beaſtly generation of men, when you deal with them, you deal with beaſts; yet the great God (if he pleaſe) can make a league for us with theſe Stones, he can make theſe beaſts of the earth, brutiſh and unreaſonable men, to be at peace with us. Further obſerve,

> It is from ſpecial providence, that the Stones, and the Beaſts of the earth do not hurt or deſtroy us, but ſpecially that they help and do us good.

There is providence towards all, but a ſpecial providence to the people of God, that the creatures hurt them not. If God did not bridle the rage and reſtrain the power of Beaſts, man could not comfortably ſubſiſt with them. The reaſon is given (Deut. 7. 22.) why God deſtroyed the Canaanites by little and little, before his people; namely, Leſt the beaſts of the earth ſhould encreaſe upon them. Here was a ſpecial providence, as all leagues and peace-makings are, all the leagues and peace which believers have, are branches of that great League, of that grand Covenant, which God hath made with Chriſt on our behalf. And therefore (Hoſ. 2. 18.) his promiſe is made in ſpecial to the Church. And in that day I will make a Covenant for them, with the beaſts of the field.

Fifthly note, A godly man enjoyes common comforts for ſpecial favour.

Wicked men are ſeldom hurt by the beaſts of the field, but they are never at peace with them.

Laſtly obſerve, Peace is a great mercy.

By how much God makes more peace upon earth, by ſo much, man hath more of heaven upon earth. Man ſhould deſire peace with beaſts, much more with men, moſt of all with God.

VERS. 24, 25, 26, 27.

And thou ſhalt know that thy Tabernacle ſhall be in peace, and thou ſhalt viſit thy habitation, and ſhalt not ſin.
Thou ſhalt know alſo that thy ſeed ſhall be great, and thine off-ſpring as the graſs of the earth.
Thou ſhalt come to thy grave in a full age, like as a ſhock of corn cometh in, in his ſeaſon.
Lo this, we have ſearched it, ſo it is, hear it, and know thou it for thy good.

AT the Nineteenth verſe of this Chapter, we had a promiſe of deliverance from evil, in ſix troubles, and in ſeven, In the Verſes following, we had a ſpecification of ſix or ſeven troubles, from which deliverance is promiſed. In theſe words, we have the reſult of all, a well-grounded ſecurity, in aſſurance of a fourfold bleſſing. Firſt, Of a quiet and happy life. Secondly, Of many proſperous children, v. 25. Thirdly, Of a long life. Fourthly, Of a ſweet and comfortable death, v. 26. Every one confirmed and ratified as a truth in it ſelf; and by way of application brought home to Job in v. 27. or the laſt verſe of the Chapter.

Verſe 24. And thou ſhalt know that thy Tabernacle ſhall be in peace.

Thou ſhalt know it.] Knowledge is ſometime put for preſent ſence; He that keeps the Commandments, ſhall feel (Heb. ſhall know) no evil: and ſo Job is promiſed to know, his Tabernacle ſhall be in peace, that is, he ſhall ſee and feel it to be in peace. And,

Non ego vanus augur, experieris & cognoſces reipſa. Coc.

Secondly, Knowledge is put for experience; as we ſay of a rich man, he never knew poverty: And in that ſence, Chriſt is ſaid not to have known ſin, 2 Cor. 5. 21. Thus, alſo, the godly man knows his Tabernacle ſhall have peace, even by the peace which he hath had: From the former dealings of God, he gathers concluſions what God will do with him for the time to come; Thou ſhalt not find me a falſe Prophet, or that I have fed thee with wind: Thou ſhalt know from experience, that thy Tabernacle ſhall be in peace.

And there is a third way by which this might be known, ſc. by debate and reaſoning; Thou ſhalt know it: if thou doſt but conſider, what the eſtate of a godly man is, and what God hath ſpoken about that eſtate, thou maiſt make out ſuch a concluſion, that certainly thy Tabernacle ſhall be in peace.

There is a fourth way of knowing, and that is, upon the teſtimony or word of another; this is properly called Faith; Thou ſhalt know it, that is, by looking into the word of God, or conſidering the promiſes made to godly men, thou ſhalt aſſent to and believe this thing, that thy Tabernacle ſhall be in peace.

Fifthly, To know, is as much as to be aſſured or certain of a thing; and to know ſo, is oppoſed not only to ignorance and opinion, but it is oppoſed to the lower degrees of Faith: I know that my Redeemer lives, &c. (ſaith Job, chap. 19. 25.) that is, I am ſure he lives. And the Apoſtle, 2 Cor. 4. 14. Knowing that he which raiſed up the Lord Jeſus, ſhall raiſe us up alſo by Jeſus. Knowledge is often put for aſſurance, and it may riſe to that pitch here; Thou ſhalt be aſſured that thy Tabernacle ſhall be in peace.

Thy Tabernacle.] Tabernacles were of two ſorts. There were Tabernacles for civil uſes, and the Tabernacle for Church-uſes; they dwelt in Tabernacles, and God was worſhipped in a Tabernacle; and therefore (Ezek. 23. 4.) Iſrael and Judah are called Aholah and Aholibah. Iſrael, the ten Tribes, is called Aholah, that is, a Tent, or or a Tabernacle; noting, that they had been the Tent and the Tabernacle of God, wherein he was worſhipped; but Judah is called Aholibah, that is, My Tent is in the midſt of her; becauſe God at that time continued the outward Ordinances of his worſhip to Judah, though the ten Tribes had been long in captivity. That only by the way: Here by Tabernacles, we are to underſtand civil Tabernacles; for in thoſe Eaſtern Countries, their ordinary habitations and dwellings were in moveable Tents or Tabernacles, becauſe of their frequent removes. And hence afterward amongſt the Latines, the word for a Tent or Tabernacle, ſignified a houſe, or any place wherein men dwell and frequent. Further, By a Trope, a Tabernacle ſignifies all a mans eſtate, or all his goods; ſo that, when it is ſaid, Thy Tabernacle ſhall be in peace, the meaning is, thy whole eſtate and family, whatever thou haſt, ſhall be in peace.

Shall be in peace.] That is, it ſhall be peaceable or in ſafety: Peace may be conſidered two wayes, either ſtrictly or largely; ſtrictly, and ſo peace is oppoſed to war; either firſt, Foreign; or ſecondly, Civil; or thirdly, Domeſtical war (as we may call it) namely, ſtrife and contention in Families. Thus, Thy Tabernacle ſhall be in peace, may take in all theſe; thou ſhalt neither be invaded by Foreigners, neither ſhalt thou have any inſurrection and ſedition in thy own borders; neither ſhalt thou have unkind contentions in thy particular family, or within thy private walls.

Secondly, Take the word more largely (as it is very frequently in Scripture) and then peace ſignifies all manner of bleſſings and good things, the confluence and gathering together as it were of all comforts; and peace in this large ſence, is oppoſed to any kind of trouble or adverſity; and to ſay ſuch an one hath peace, is as much as to ſay, he proſpers. Peace and proſperity are terms of the ſame ſignification. And then the meaning is this, Thou ſhalt know that thy Tabernacle ſhall be in peace, that is, that thy whole eſtate ſhall proſper, and that thou ſhalt have good ſucceſs. Note hence, Firſt, Peace is a choice and a ſpecial bleſſing.

Outward peace is the choiceſt of outward bleſſings, and inward peace is the choiceſt of ſpiritual bleſſings. Peace gives ſweetneſs and beauty to all our bleſſings; without peace, riches are but guilded thorns; honour is but higher miſery, health but ſtronger affliction.

So, without inward peace, Grace gives no preſent comfort; and therefore in the wiſhes of perfect ſpiritual mercy to the Saints, we find theſe two in conjunction, Grace and Peace. The higheſt promiſes made to the Church, are promiſes of ſetled peace in the Church, Iſa. 32. 18. My people ſhall dwell in a peaceable habitation, and in ſure dwellings, and in quiet reſting-places; There's the top of their outward felicity: Again, in Iſa. 33. 20. Look upon Zion the City of our ſolemnities (that is, where the worſhip of God was ſolemniz'd) thine eyes ſhall ſee Jeruſalem a quiet habitation, a Tabernacle that ſhall not be taken down, not one of the ſtakes thereof ſhall ever be removed, neither ſhall any of the cords thereof be broken: Pure Ordinances, and a peaceable Habitation, are Jeruſalems perfection on earth; yea, ſome look upon it as a perfection too perfect for earth, and therefore interpret the Propheſie of the heavenly Jeruſalem.

Secondly, He ſaith not only, thou ſhalt have peace in thy Tabernacle; but thou ſhalt know it. Hence obſerve,

To be aſſured of a mercy, is better then the enjoyment of a mercy.

Doubts of loſing a mercy, eat out the heart of a mercy; and a man in that caſe, is as much troubled with the fear of wanting, as he can be comforted with the ſenſe of enjoying.

There are three ſteps of bleſſedneſs. To be delivered from evil, is but a part of bleſſedneſs, negative bleſſedneſs: to receive good, is the better part of bleſſedneſs, poſitive bleſſedneſs: But to be aſſured that we ſhall hold and retain all this, is the perfection of bleſſedneſs. The firſt part of that great bleſſing we receive by Chriſt, conſiſts in our deliverance from evil; or in a freedom from periſhing. The ſecond conſiſts in the conveyance of good to us, as pardon of ſin, grace and glory. But the third (which is the height of all) conſiſts in our everlaſting aſſurance to enjoy all this. Adam had a good eſtate, but he was not aſſured of it: The bleſſings we have by Chriſt, are built upon a foundation, which can never be ſhaken. In this method, temporal mercies are promiſed in this Scripture: Firſt, Deliverance from Sword and Famine. Secondly, Peace with the Creatures. Thirdly, An aſſurance that this peace ſhall be continued.

Laſtly obſerve, All outward bleſſings are in themſelves fading and periſhing.

Though a man be aſſured that he ſhall enjoy outward bleſſings, yet he can enjoy them but in the nature and condition of outward bleſſings. Though he be ſure to uſe and enjoy them, yet he looks upon them as periſhing in the uſing. All outward things are here (as frequently in other Scriptures) implied under the notion of a Tabernacle; a Tabernacle is a moveable habitation. It is a piece of a miracle if a Tabernacle ſtand long: that promiſe (Iſa. 33. 20.) imports ſomewhat extraordinary: A Tabernacle that ſhould not be taken down, not one of the ſtakes thereof removed, nor any of the cords thereof be broken: It is as if the Holy Ghoſt ſhould ſay, Thou ſhalt be a Tabernacle, priviledg'd above all Tabernacles; they are moveable, unfixed, eaſie to be taken down; but it ſhall not be ſo with thee. The Apoſtles concluſion takes in all creature-comforts; The faſhion of this world paſſeth away, 1 Cor. 7. 31. The Scheme, the beauty of the beſt earthly things paſs, while we enjoy them, and moulder away between our hands, while we are uſing them.

This clauſe of the Verſe compleats mercy yet higher: It is better not to ſin in our habitation, then to be aſſured of a habitation. To have quietneſs in our habitation, is very good; but to have holineſs in it, is beſt of all. Thou ſhalt viſit thy habitation, and ſhalt not ſin.

The word which we tranſlate habitation, ſignifies not only a houſe, but a wife, or a houſewife: Hence ſome render, Thou ſhalt viſit thy beauty, or thy fair and beautiful wife, and ſhalt not ſin: The reaſon is, either, becauſe a good wife is the beauty and ornament of the houſe; or becauſe the knowledge, wiſdom and diligence of the wife is a means to furniſh and adorn the houſe; or laſtly, the buſineſs of a wife is ſo much in the houſe, that ſhe ſhares names with the houſe; ſhe is, or ought to be like a Snail, living with her houſe upon her back. The Apoſtles rule alſo being, I will that the younger women marry, bear children, guide the houſe. 1 Tim. 5. 14. And exhort them to be diſcreet, chaſte, keepers at home, Tit. 2. 5. Hence alſo probably, the ſame word in the Hebrew, ſignifies a beautiful wife, and a beautiful houſe. We read it in that ſence (Pſal. 68. 12.) Kings of Armies did fly apace, and ſhe that tarried at home, divided the ſpoyl. She that tarried at home, or the beauty of the houſe (ſc. the wife) divided the ſpoil. The meaning is, ſuch victory ſhall be obtained over the enemies of the Church, that the wives and weak women ſhall be filled with thoſe ſpoils, which their triumphant husbands ſhall bring home to them.

But here we may rather take the word in the ordinary ſence, only with this emphaſis, ſignifying (not bare walls, or a numerous Family) but a beautiful, a well furniſhed, a well ordered houſe. And ſo we have the word at the third verſe of this Chapter, where Eliphaz ſaith, I ſaw the wicked taking root, and preſently I curſed his habitation, or, his goodly, beautiful, flouriſhing houſe: So here, Thou ſhalt viſit thy habitation, that is, thy houſe in all the beauty, order, riches and furniture of it.

Thou ſhalt viſit.] The word ſignifies more then to ſee and look upon the buildings and furniture: To viſit, notes in Scripture theſe three or four things.

Viſitavit.

Firſt, To overlook or take care of the houſe; to viſit the houſe, is to provide for the houſe, Pſal. 8. 4. Lord, what is man that thou viſiteſt him! that is, that thou takeſt ſo much care of him, and haſt ſuch waking thoughts about him.

Secondly, To viſit the houſe, notes an enquiry of what is done in the houſe, how things go in the family.

Thirdly, It imports a calling of all to an account and reckoning, about what is done in their diſcharge of family-duties.

Fourthly, To viſit, is to order and direct, to command and give precepts for what ſhall be done. Hence frequently in the Old Teſtament, the Commandments of God are expreſſed by this word, his Precepts. So then, Thou ſhalt viſit thy houſe, or, thy habitation, may take in all theſe; thou ſhalt, as a Maſter, view, and overſee, direct and call to account thy houſe and family. In this ſence, the word is commonly uſed amongſt us: That act of the Biſhops calling their Dioceſſes to an account, and over-looking them, was called their Viſitation. And over Colledges, Hoſpitals, and ſuch publick Foundations, Viſitors are appointed, to ſee and take an account, how the Rules and Statutes of thoſe places are obſerved. Thou ſhalt viſit thy habitation, and ſhalt not ſin.

But how is it ſaid, he ſhall do this, and not ſin? Doth not ſin mingle with all we do?

The word here uſed, ſignifies, 1. Tropically, to err, fail or miſcarry in the general. 2. Properly, to miſs a ſpecial mark or way, to ſhoot awry, or wander in ſtead of walking; as (Judg. 20. 16.) it is ſaid of thoſe ſeven thouſand Benjamites, that they could ſhoot at an hairs breadth, and not ſin; ſo the word is, or not miſcarry, not miſs the mark. And becauſe every tranſgreſſion is a wandering out of the way of Gods Commandments, or a ſhooting beſide the mark of his word, therefore that word in Scripture, is commonly uſed for ſinning.

Erravit via vel ſcopo.

Here the word admits a twofold interpretation.

Firſt, For the fruit or effect of ſin; thus, thou ſhalt order and overlook thy family, with ſuch wiſdom and diſcretion, that thou ſhalt not err, or do things beſide the rule of prudence, and ſo bring miſcarriage and troubles upon thy affairs by ſin. Mr. Broughton tranſlates to this ſence, Thou ſhalt viſit thy habitation, and ſhalt not miſproſper. And ſo Eliphaz may hint at Job's former loſſes, at the overthrow of his Eſtate and Family; as if he had ſaid, heretofore thou didſt viſit thy habitation, and didſt not proſper; but if thou ſhalt now humble thy ſelf, thou ſhalt viſit thy habitation, at eas procurans non fruſtraberis ſpe tua, cedentibus tibi rebus omnibus pro voto, & ex animi ſententia. Mer. Non aberrabis, ſc. à ſcopo & fine deſiderii tui. Coc.

Non afficieris pœna pro peccato. Targ. Non læderis, non accipies damnum aut detrimentum, Targ. Curabit res tuas, & domum tuam, tion, and all ſhall proſper; things ſhall go well with thee, thou ſhalt not labour in vain, or loſe thy end in the care thou takeſt about thy family.

Secondly, The ſence may be this, thou ſhalt order and viſit thy family with ſo much juſtice, equity and holineſs, that thou ſhalt not ſin. Not that Eliphaz undertakes his abſolute freedom from ſin, but he ſhould not ſin as (he ſuppoſed he had) before, thou ſhalt not run into ſuch errors, or ſplit thy ſelf upon ſuch rocks as have wrack'd thy former greatneſs. And thus he ſecretly reproves Job's former carriage in his family, as irregular and ſinful.

There is a further expoſition, joyning both theſe together; Thou ſhalt viſit thy houſe, and ſhalt not ſin; namely, by conniving or winking at the ſins and diſorders of thy family, and yet thou ſhalt have peace; thy ſtrict and faithful carriage in overſeeing thy family, ſhall not provoke either ſervants or children to contention and complainings, to anger and paſſion; thy holy ſeverity ſhall not fill thy houſe with quarrels and troubles; but God ſhall ſo over-aw the ſpirits of thoſe under thee, that they ſhall willingly and chearfully ſubmit to thy purer diſcipline. Hence obſerve, Domeſtici correpti non ſuccenſebũt. Vatabl.

Firſt, It is a great and a ſpecial point of godly wiſdom, well to order and viſit a Family.

Families are the principles or ſeeds of a Commonwealth. As every man is a little world, ſo every houſe is a Kingdom. A Family is a Commonwealth in a little Volume. And the Rules of it are an Epitome of all Laws, by which whole Nations are governed. The Apoſtle makes it a ſpecial Character of his Biſhop, That he muſt be one who rules his own houſe well; and ſubjoynes the reaſon, for if a man know not how to rule his own houſe, how ſhall he take care of the Church of God? 1 Tim. 3. 4, 5. And therein wraps up this truth, that he who knows how to rule his own houſe well, is in a good poſture of ſpirit for publick rule. The ſame wiſdom, and juſtice, and holineſs for kind, only more enlarged and extenſive, acts in either ſphear, and will regularly move both.

Sin ſpoiles the comforts, and cankers the bleſſings of a Family.

Sin brought into a houſe, rots the timber, aud pulls down the houſe; or it undermines the foundation, and blows up the houſe. The ſin of Families, is the ruine and conſumption of Families. Hence obſerve,

Thirdly, To be kept from ſin, is a better and a greater bleſſing, then all outward bleſſings.

When Eliphaz had reckoned up all the comforts which repenting Job is promiſed; Thou ſhalt be delivered in ſix troubles and in ſeven; Sword and Famine ſhall not hurt thee, peace and plenty ſhall dwell within thy walls, and lodge in every chamber: Yet (ſaith he) I will tell thee of a bleſſing beyond all theſe, thou ſhalt not ſin: It is more mercy to be delivered from one ſin, then from ſword and famine; grace is better then peace, and holineſs then abundance; riches, and honour, and health, are all obſcured in this one bleſſing, a holy, a gracious, an humble heart.

There is more evil in one ſin, then in any or all troubles; therefore there muſt needs be a greater bleſſing in being kept from ſin, than in protection from any or all troubles. Sin is the greateſt evil; therefore to be kept from ſin, is one of the greateſt goods. Chriſt took upon him all ſorts of outward evils, he became poor for our ſakes; he had not ſo much as an houſe to lie in; he came in the form of a ſervant for our ſakes, and he was a man of ſorrows; he was acquainted with grief all his life, at laſt, with death and a grave: yet, he would not admit of the leaſt ſin: he was content to bear all our ſins, but he abhorred the thought of acting one. Not to ſin, is the next priviledge to God, and the utmoſt priviledge of man. When, in a full ſence, man ſhall not ſin, man will be arrived at fulneſs of joy; and as we daily empty of ſin, ſo we proportionably, fill with joy.

Verſe 25. Thou ſhalt know alſo that thy ſeed ſhall be great, and thy off-ſpring as the graſs of the earth.

From preſent bleſſings upon the family, he deſcends to thoſe which concern poſterity; as if he had ſaid, thy comforts ſhall not be confined to thy ſelf, neither ſhall they be ſhut up within the limits of one generation: Mercies ſhall be tranſmitted to thy children, thy heirs ſhall inherit bleſſings.

Thy ſeed ſhall be great.] The word Great, ſignifies both multitude and magnitude: Thou ſhalt have a great ſeed, that is, a numerous ſeed, a multitude of children: and thou ſhalt have a great ſeed, that is, honourable and wealthy children; Job himſelf was called, chap. 1. 3. (though by another word, yet in the ſame ſence) the greateſt man in the Eaſt: This greatneſs is promiſed his children, and they ſhall receive additional further bleſſings: For the word [Rab] ſignifies greatneſs, in a continual motion to more eminent greatneſs; and therefore it is ſometime tranſlated by encreaſing; So (Iſa. 9. 6.) Where the Prophet ſets out the flouriſhing greatneſs of the Kingdom of Chriſt: Of the encreaſe of his Kingdom and Peace, there ſhall be no end; or, Of the greatneſs and greatning of his Kingdom, there ſhal be no end. So that, to ſay, thy ſeed ſhall be great, notes, not only ſome ſtanding greatneſs, but growing greatneſs: they ſhall ever be upon an encreaſe, till they come to their full in glory.

And thy off-ſpring as the graſs of the earth.

Both clauſes of the Verſe mean the ſame thing. The word which we tranſlate [off-ſpring,] ſignifies properly that which goeth forth or iſſues, becauſe children ſpring or go forth from their parents, and are therefore called their iſſue. And the word is uſed for the bud of the Olive or of the Vine; hence the Pſalmiſt puts them both into a ſimilitude. Thy children ſhall be like Olive-plants round about thy Table. They are as the Olive-bud in their birth, and as the Olive-branch in their growth.

Thy off-ſpring ſhall be [as the graſs of the earth.] To be as the graſs of the earth, is a proverbial ſpeech; and it ariſes to the ſence of thoſe proverbials ſpoken to Abraham concerning his ſeed; Thy ſeed ſhall be as the ſtars of heaven: And, thy ſeed ſhall be as the ſand upon the Sea-ſhore. The graſs of the field is as innumerable as the ſtars, or the ſands. Thy off-ſpring ſhall be as the graſs of the field. Thou ſhalt not only have a numerous, but thou ſhalt have (as it were) an innumerable off-ſpring.

Proverbiale multitudinis, talia ſunt ſicut arena maris, ut ſtella cœli. Druſ.

Mankind in general, is compared unto graſs, Iſa. 40. 6. All fleſh is graſs. Graſs, in regard of its ſudden withering, he is ſuddenly cut down; the goodlineſs of man is as the flower of the field. Wicked men are compared to Graſs, not only becauſe they wither, but becauſe they wither ſuddenly, or are cut off by ſome hand of Juſtice. The off-ſpring of a godly man are compared to Graſs, but in another reference. To Graſs, firſt, becauſe of their mutitude; and ſecondly, becauſe of their beauty; they ſhall flouriſh and be green as the graſs, which is very pleaſant to the beholders eye.

And in this alſo Eliphaz aimes at the death of Job's Children; Thou haſt loſt thy children, they periſhed miſerably; but if thou return, that bleſſing ſhall return, Thy ſeed ſhall be great, and thy off-ſpring ſhall be as the graſs of the earth.

Hoc dicit quia Job filios amiſerat. Merc.

The bleſſing of Children hath been ſhewed in the firſt Chapter; therefore I ſhall but name a Point or two now.

Firſt, That, The poſterity of godly parents ſtand nearer then others, under the influence of heavenly bleſſings.

As Grace doth not run in a blood, ſo neither do bleſſings infallibly run in a blood; yet the children of thoſe who are bleſſed, are neareſt a bleſſing, and their poſſibilities for mercy, are faireſt. Many promiſes are made to them, they are heirs apparent of the Promiſes in their parents right; others to appearance, are ſtrangers to the promiſes; though we know free Grace chuſeth often out of the natural line: The mercies of God are his own, and it is his prerogative, to have mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will, he hardneth.

Secondly, When he ſums up the bleſſings of a godly man, the bleſſings of his Children are caſt into the account. Hence note,

That, The bleſſings of the Children are the bleſſings of the Parents.

As the Parent is afflicted in the afflictions of his Children, ſo he is bleſſed in their bleſſings. Relations ſhare mutually both in Comforts and Croſſes. Children are their Parents multiplied; and every good of the Child is an addition to the Parents good. A flouriſhing, and a numerous Poſterity is a great outward bleſſing. Some have the choiceſt of ſpiritual bleſſings, who want this (Iſa. 56. 3.) God comforts thoſe that have no Children. Do not ſay that thou art made a dry Tree; for I will give thee in mine houſe, a place and a name better then of Sons and Daughters: As if he had ſaid, the name of Sons and Daughters, is a very great Comfort, but it is not the greateſt Comfort, the beſt bleſſing: thou ſhalt have a name and a place, better then of Sons and Daughters.

Verſ. 26. Thou ſhalt come to thy grave in a full age, like as a ſhock of corn cometh in, in his ſeaſon.

From perſonal preſent bleſſings of this life, and the bleſſings of poſterity, Eliphaz deſcends to ſhew the bleſſing of a godly man in death: A happy death is the cloſe of temporal happineſs, and the beginning of eternal. A happy death ſtands between grace and glory, like the Baptiſt between the Law and the Goſpel, and is the connexion or knitting of both: And as it was ſaid of John, That among them who are born of women, there aroſe not a greater then he; nevertheleſs, he that is leaſt in the Kingdom of Heaven, is greater then John: So we may ſay, that among all the bleſſings of this life, there is none greater then a bleſſed death; nevertheleſs that which is leaſt in eternal life, is a greater bleſſing, then a bleſſed death. It was an obſervation among the Heathen, That no man is to be accounted bleſſed, until he die. But when life is ſhut up with a bleſſing, then man is fully bleſſed; as in reaſoning, ſo in living, the concluſion lies in the premiſes. A happy death is the reſult of a holy life.

Thou ſhalt come to thy grave.] That phraſe notes two things.

Firſt, A willingneſs and a chearfulneſs to die. Thou ſhalt come, thou ſhalt not be dragged or hurried to thy grave, as it is ſaid of the fooliſh rich man, Luke 12. This night ſhall thy ſoul be taken from thee. But thou ſhalt come to thy grave, thou ſhalt die quietly and ſmilingly, as it were; thou ſhalt go to thy grave, as it were upon thine own feet, and rather walk, then be carried to thy Sepulcher.

Secondly, It notes the honour and ſolemnity of burying. Thou ſhalt come to thy grave with honour, as it is ſaid of Abijah the ſon of Jeroboam, 1 King. 14. 12, 13. When Meſſengers were ſent to the Prophet to inquire whether he ſhould recover, the Prophet tells them, The child ſhall die, and all Iſrael ſhall mourn for him, and bury him: For, he only of Jeroboam ſhall come to the grave, becauſe in him there is found ſome good thing toward the Lord God of Iſrael, in the houſe of Jeroboam. He onely ſhall come to the grave, the reſt ſhall be thruſt into the grave, or lie unburied; but he ſhall come, that is, he ſhall be buried with honour; others ſhall have reproach caſt upon them, when the earth is caſt upon them. Thou ſhalt come to thy grave

In a full age.] So we tranſlate. The word is expounded two wayes.

In a full age, that is, in an age, when thou ſhalt be full: full of eſtate, full of wealth and honour, thou ſhalt have abundance when thou dieſt. And ſo it points at Job's preſent poverty; though thou haſt nothing now, ſcarce a rag to thy back, or a ſheet to wind thee in, if thou ſhouldſt die, yet ſeek unto God, and thou ſhalt die in a full age, in a golden Age, thy wants ſhall be ſupplied, and thy loſſes repaired to the full.

But rather a full age, notes here a fulneſs of dayes, though the other (fulneſs of eſtate) be not excluded. The Prophet puts the ſame difference, between aged men, and men full of dayes, as is between children, and young men (Jer. 6. 11.) I am full of the fury of the Lord, I will pour it out upon the children abroad, and upon the aſſembly of young men together: The aged, with him that is full of days. That is, all ages ſhall feel the fury of the Lord. A full age, is an age full of dayes or compleat to the utmoſt time of life. Some of the Jewiſh Writers obſerve, that the numeral letters of this word (Chelad) make up threeſcore, which they conceive is the age here meant; but threeſcore is not a full old-age, it is rather the beginning of old-age. Therefore fulneſs of age, is by others interpreted, to be ſtrength of age; thou ſhalt die in an old-age, yet thou ſhalt have ſtrength and comfort in thy old-age; thine old-age ſhall not be a troubleſom age, thou ſhalt not be weak and crazy, diſtempered and ſick, a burden to thy ſelf or friends; thou ſhalt dye (as ſome tranſlate) in a good old-age; or as Mr. Broughton, thou ſhalt die in luſty old-age; time ſhall not wither thee, nor drink up thy blood and ſpirits, Thou ſhalt have a ſpring in thy Autumn, and a Summer in the winter of thy life. As it was with Moſes, Deut. 34. 7. who dyed when he was an hundred and twenty years old, yet ſaith the Text, His eye was not dim, nor his natural force abated: This is to die in a full old-age, full of dayes, yet full of ſtrength and health. It is a great bleſſing, when a man is (in this ſence) youthful in old-age: when others ſee with four eyes, and go with three legs, he uſes neither ſtaff nor ſpectacles, but renews his ſtrength like the Eagle.

Or we may take the ſence more generally; for any one that liveth long, and liveth comfortably; as it was ſaid of Abraham, Gen. 25. 8. That he dyed in a good old-age, an old man, and full of years. He dyed in a good old-age; the young-man is councel'd, To remember his Creator in the dayes of his youth; before the evil dayes come, Eccleſ. 12. 1. What are thoſe? Thoſe evil dayes are the dayes of old-age: The words following being an Allegorical, elegant deſcription of old-age: Old-age in it ſelf is the evil day: The lives of many old-men are a continual death. They live as it were upon the rack of extream pains or ſtrong infirmities; therefore it is a ſpecial bleſſing for a man to be old, and yet to have a good old-age, that is, a florid comfortable old-age; To have many years and few infirmities is a rare thing. In ſome old-age flouriſhes, and in others old-age periſhes. Job gives us this difference in the uſe of this word, Chap. 30. 2. Yea whereto might the ſtrength of their hands profit me, in whom (Chelad) old-age was periſhed. As if he had ſaid, ſome old-men are active and ſtrong; but theſe, who were faded and flatted in all their abilities, in what ſtead could they ſtand me? They were a trouble to themſelves, and therefore could be no comfort unto others.

This full old-age is explained further, by way of ſimilitude, He ſhall die in a full age, like as a ſhock of corn cometh in, in his ſeaſon. When a young man dies, he is as green corn. The Pſalmiſt imprecates that ſome might be like the graſs or corn on the houſe top, that withereth before it is cut down; whereof the Mower filleth not his hand, nor he that bindeth up the ſheaves, his boſom. The life of a man ſometimes is like corn growing upon the houſe-top, that withereth: Or (as it is in the Parable of the ſower, Matth. 13.) like the corn that fell on the high-way ſide, or among ſtones and thorns, which came not in, in its ſeaſon; it never ſtaid the ripening or reaping, but was eaten up, or dryed, or choaked before the harveſt. Now here, man is compared unto corn ſowed in good ground, well rooted and continuing out its ſeaſon, and is brought in ripe at harveſt. Old-age is the harveſt of nature. Some divide mans life into ſeven parts, comparing it to the ſeven Planets: Some into five, comparing it to the five acts of an interlude; but commonly the life of man is divided into four parts, and ſo it is compared to the four ſeaſons of the year. And in that diviſion old-age is the winter quarter, cold and cloudy, full of Rheums and Catarrhs of diſeaſes and diſtillations. But here, old-age is the harveſt; though thou art a very old-man, thou ſhalt not die as in winter, but thou ſhalt die, as it were in harveſt, when thou art full ripe and ready, as a ſhock of corn that is laid up in the barn: The general judgment of the world is compared to a harveſt, and death (which is a particular day of judgment) is a harveſt too.

Pſal. 129. 6, 7.

Thoſe words, He ſhall come to his grave as a ſhock of corn, are further conſiderable; the Hebrew is, He ſhall aſcend at a ſhock of corn; and that, referring to death, is ſometimes tranſlated by cutting off, or taking away, Pſal. 102. 25. Cut me not off in the midſt of my days: The letter is, Let me not aſcend in the midſt of my dayes: Whether it have any alluſion to that hope or faith of the Saints in their death, that, they do but aſcend, when they die, or to their diſ-appearing to the eye of ſenſe, when they die; becauſe things which aſcend, vaniſh out of ſight, and are not ſeen: In either ſence, when the Saints are cut down by death, they aſcend. And they are elegantly ſaid, To aſcend as a ſhock of corn; becauſe that is taken from the earth, and reared or ſtack't up; and ſo by a Metaphor it ſignifies a Tomb or a Monument erected or high-built over a dead Corps, much after the manner of a ſhock of corn: So the word is uſed, He ſhall remain in the Tomb or Heap, Job 22. 32.

So then, the ſum of this verſe, is a promiſe of comfort and honour in death: He ſhall die in a full age, when he is ready and ripe for death. Yet this is not to be taken ſtrictly, that, every godly man dies in ſuch a full old-age; in an age full of dayes, or full of comforts. Many of Gods beſt ſervants have had evil dayes in their old-age; their old-age hath had many dayes of trouble and ſickneſs, of pain and perplexity. But thus it is with many in old-age, this is ſpecially to be look'd upon as an Old-Teſtament promiſe, when the Lord dealt more with his people, in viſible external mercies. Yet in one ſence it is an univerſal truth, and ever fulfilled to his people; for whenſoever they die, they die in a good age; yea though they die in the ſpring and flower of youth, they die in a good old-age; that is, they are ripe for death, when ever they die; when ever a godly man dies, it is harveſt time with him: though in a natural capacity he be cut down, while he is green, and cropt in the bud or bloſſom; yet in his ſpiritual capacity, he never dies before he is ripe. God ripens his ſpeedily, when he intends to take them out of the world ſpeedily. He can let out ſuch warm rayes and beams of his Spirit upon them, as ſhall ſoon maturate the ſeeds of grace, into a preparedneſs for glory: whereas a wicked man living an hundred years, hath no full old-age, much leſs a good old-age; he is ripe indeed for deſtruction, but he is never ripe for death; he is as unready and unripe for death, when he is an hundred years old, as when he was but a day old. He hath not begun to live, when he dies; or he is at the end of his natural race, before he hath ſet one ſtep in his ſpiritual. Gray hairs are the ſhame, and ſhould be the ſorrow of old-age, when they are not found in the way of righteouſneſs. From the former branch of this Verſe, Obſerve, Firſt, To have a comely burial, to come to the grave with honour, is a great bleſſing.

It was threatned upon Jehoiakim, the ſon of Joſiah, as a curſe, That he ſhould have the burial of an Aſs, and be drag'd and caſt out, beyond the gates of the City, Jer. 22. 19. That man ſurely had lived like a beaſt, whom God threatned by name, that when he died, he ſhould be uſed as a beaſt. Though we know the bodies of many of the ſervants of God, have been ſcattered and may be ſcattered, upon the face of the earth, like dung; The dead bodies (as the complaint is, Pſal. 79. 2.) of thy ſervants have they given to be meat to the fowls of the heaven, the fleſh of thy Saints to the beaſts of the earth: Yet to them (even then) there is this bleſſing reſerved, beyond the bleſſing of a burial, they are ever laid up in the heart of God, he takes care of them, he imbalms them for immortality, when the remains of their mortality, are trodden under foot, or rot upon a dunghill.

Secondly, Obſerve, A godly man is a volunteer in his death; he cometh to the grave.

A wicked man never dies willingly; Though he ſometime die by his own hand, yet he never dies with his own will. Miſerable man is ſometimes ſo over-preſt with terrors, and horrors of conſcience; ſo worn out with the trouble of living, that he haſtens his own death. Yet he Comes not to his grave willingly, but is drag'd by neceſſity. He thruſts his life out of doors with a violent hand, but it never goes out with a cheerful mind. He is often unwilling to live, but he is never willing to die. Death is welcome to him, becauſe life is a burden to him. Only they come to the grave, who by faith have ſeen Chriſt lying in the grave, and perfuming that houſe of corruption, with his own moſt precious body, which ſaw no corruption.

Thirdly, Obſerve, To live long, aud to die in a full age, is a great bleſſing.

Old Eli had this curſe pronounced upon his family, 1 Sam. 2. 31. There ſhall not be an old man in thy houſe.

Gray hairs are a crown of honour, when they are found in the way of righteouſneſs. It is indeed infinitely better to be full of grace, then to be full of dayes; but to be full of dayes and full of grace too, what a venerable ſpectacle is that? To be full of years, and full of faith, full of good works, full of the fruits of righteouſneſs, which are by Chriſt; how comely and beautiful, beyond all the beauty and comlineſs of youth, is that? Such are truly ſaid to have filled their dayes. Thoſe dayes are filled indeed, which are full of goodneſs. When a wicked man dies, he ever dies empty and hungry; he dies empty of goodneſs, and he dies hungry after dayes. That place before mentioned of Abraham (Gen. 25. 8.) is moſt worthy our ſecond thoughts, He died in a good old-age, an old man, and full, ſo the Hebrew, we read, full of years. As a man, that hath eaten and drunk plentifully, is full, and deſires no more: So, he died an old man, and full, that is, he had lived as much as he deſired to live, He had his fill of living, when he died. And therefore alſo, it may be called a full age, becauſe a godly man hath his fill of living; but a wicked man (let him live never ſo long) is never full of dayes, never full of living; he is as hungry and as thirſty (as a man may ſpeak) after more time and dayes, when he is old, as he was when he was a child, fain he would live ſtill; He muſt needs think it is good being here, who knows of no better being, or hath no hopes of a better. It is a certain truth, He that hath not a taſte of eternity, can never be ſatisfied with time. He that hath not ſome hold of everlaſting life, is never pleaſed to let go this life; therefore he is never full of this life. It is a moſt ſad thing, to ſee an old man, who hath no ſtrength of body to live. yet have a ſtrong mind to live. Abraham was old and full, he deſired not a day or an hour longer. His ſoul had never an empty corner for time, when he dyed. He had enough, of all, but (of which he could never have enough, and yet had enough, and all, as ſoon as he had any of it) eternity. In that great reſtitution promiſed, Iſa. 65. 20. this is one priviledge, There ſhall be no more there an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not fill'd his dayes. There is much controverſie about the meaning of theſe words; the digreſſion would be too long to inſiſt upon them. Only to the preſent point thus much, that there is ſuch a thing, as an Infant of dayes, and an old man that hath not fill'd his dayes.

Impii quãvis diu vivant, tamen non impleat dies ſuos, quia ſpem in rebus temporariis collocantes perpetua vita in hoc mundo perfrui vellent.

An infant of dayes, may be taken for an old child, that is, an old man childiſh, or a man of many years, but few abilities: A man whoſe hoary head and wrinkled face ſpeak fourſcore, yet his fooliſh actions and ſimple carriage ſpeak under fourteen. An old man that hath not fill'd his dayes, is conceived to be the ſame man, in a different character. An old man fills not his dayes, Firſt, When he fulfils not the duty, nor reaches the end for which he lived to old-age. That man who hath lived long, and done little, hath left empty dayes upon the record of his life; and when you have writ down the dayes, the months, and years of his life, his ſtory's done, the reſt of the book is but a continued blank, nothing to be remembred that he hath done, or nothing worth the remembrance.

Now as an old man fills not his dayes, when he ſatisfies not the expectation of others: ſo in the ſecond place, his dayes are not fill'd, when his own expectations are not ſatisfied; that is, when he having lived to be old, hath yet young freſh deſires to live; when he finds his mind empty, though his body be ſo full of dayes, that it can hold no longer, nor no more. He that is in this ſence, an infant of dayes, and an old man not having fill'd his dayes, though he be an hundred years old, when he dies, yet he dies (as the Prophet concludes in that place) accurſed; he comes not to his grave under the bleſſing of this promiſe in the Text, in a full age.

He ſhall come to his grave like a ſhock of corn that is brought in, in his ſeaſon. Even pale death hath beauty in it, when it comes in ſeaſon. Eccleſ. 7. 17. Be not wicked over much, why ſhould'ſt thou die before thy time? No man can die before Gods time, but a man may die before his time; that is, before he is prepared by grace, and before he is ripened in the courſe of nature. Theſe two wayes a man dies before his time: Firſt, When he dies without any ſtrength of grace: Secondly, When he dies in the ſtrength of nature. In this ſence the Prophet deſcribes the hand of God upon him, Pſal. 102. 23. He weakened my ſtrength in the way; he ſhortned my dayes: and therefore prayes in verſ. 24. I ſaid, O my God, take me not away in the midſt of my dayes: That is, in the ſtrength or beſt of my time, according to the line and meaſure of nature. A godly man prayes that he may not die out of ſeaſon; but a wicked man never dies in ſeaſon: That threatning is ever fulfilled upon him, in one ſence, if not in both (Pſal. 55. 23.) The blood-thirſty and deceitful man ſhall not live out half his dayes. A wicked man never lives out half his dayes, for, either he is cut off before he hath lived half the courſe of nature, or he is cut off before he hath lived a quarter of the courſe of his deſires; either he lives not half ſo long as he might, or not a tenth, not a hundreth part ſo long as he would; and therefore let him die when he will, his death is full of terror, trouble and confuſion, becauſe he dies out of ſeaſon. He never kept time or ſeaſon with God, and ſurely God will not keep or regard his time or ſeaſon.

Verſ. 27. Lo this, we have ſearched it, ſo it is; hear it, and know thou it for thy good.

As Eliphaz began his diſpute with an elegant preface, ſo he ends it with a Rhetorical concluſion; as if he had ſaid, Job I have ſpoken many things unto thee, hear now the ſum and upſhot of all, Lo this, we have ſearched it, ſo it is; hear it, and know it for thy good.

Two things he concludes with; Firſt, With an aſſertion of the truth of what he had ſpoken, So it is. Secondly, With a motion for his aſſent to what was ſpoken, Hear it.

Or the words may fall under a three-fold conſideration.

As the { 1. Concluſion
2. Confirmation
3. Application } of his ſpeech.

And this application is ſtrengthened by a three-fold Motive.

By a Motive, firſt, from experience, Lo this, we have ſearched it, we have found the thing to be true.

Secondly, By a Motive from the truth of the thing in it ſelf, ſo it is: we have ſearched it, we have experience of it, ſo it is, the thing is certain. And then,

Thirdly, From the fruit and benefit of it, if he ſubmit unto and obey the truth delivered, know it for thy good, thou ſhalt reap the profit of it. Theſe are three Motives, by which he ſtrengthens his exhortation, in applying the truth he had beaten out, in his former diſcourſe.

We have ſearched it.] As if Eliphaz had ſaid, we have not taken theſe things upon truſt, or by an implicite faith; we have not received them by tradition from our Fathers, but we have ſearched, and tryed, and found out, that thus the matter ſtands in Gods diſpenſations, both to a wicked man, and to a godly man, in all the particulars run thorough in this Chapter. Or we have ſearched, that is, we have learned theſe truths by experience; that, God puniſheth not the innocent; that, man cannot compare in juſtice with God; that, hypocrites ſhall not proſper long; and that, mans afflictions are the fruit of his tranſgreſſions. The word ſignifies a very diligent and exact ſcrutiny (Deut. 13. 14.) Thou ſhalt enquire, and make ſearch, and ask diligently. It is to ſearch as Judges ſearch and enquire about any crime, or queſtion in Law determinable by their ſentence; and as we ſearch to find the meaning of a riddle. (Judg. 14. 14.) The word is alſo applied to the ſearchings and enquiries of a Spie (Judg. 18. 2.) ſent to bring intelligence; a Spie is an exact inquiſitor, into all affairs, given him in charge for diſcovery. So here, we have ſearched out, we have ſpied out and tryed this thing to the utmoſt, we have as it were, read over all the records of divine Truths, we have examined all experiences and examples, and this is the reſult, the ſum of all, Lo thus it is.

Diligenti inquiſitione & veritatis ſcrutatione nec non reconditorum divinæ providentiæ judiciorum conſideratione rem ita ſe habere comperimus.

A queſtion ariſes here, how Eliphaz can ſay, we have ſearched it, when as Chap. 4. he ſaith, A thing was ſecretly brought to me? It ſeems theſe were matters attained and beaten out by ſtudy, not ſent in by divine revelation; and ſo are rather the opinions of men, then the oracles of God. Men inſpired by the Holy Ghoſt, ſpeak another language; as, Thus ſaith the Lord, or this we have received, not this we have ſearched. Scripture is given by inſpiration from God, not by the diſquiſitions of men.

Some have hence concluded this ſpeech of Eliphaz Apocryphal, as being rather matter of humane invention, then divine inſpiration: Or the work of mans wit, rather then of Gods Spirit.

Ex quo intelligimus hanc Eliphæ diſſertionem non oraculi fuiſſe, ſed ſtudii, nec ad Dei revelantis reſponſa, ſed ad humani ingenii inventa pertinere. Janſon in loc.

But I anſwer, Firſt, The Apoſtle Paul hath ſufficiently atteſted the Divine Authority of this Diſcourſe, by alledging a proof out of it, 1 Cor. 3. 19.

Secondly, That which was ſecretly brought to Eliphaz, was that one ſpecial Oracle, Chap. 4. 17. Shall mortal man be more juſt then God? ſhall a man be more pure then his Maker? The other part of his diſcourſe, to which theſe words (Lo this we have ſearched) refer, were grounded upon the experiences which himſelf and his friends had obſerved in, and about the providence of God, in all his dealings both with the godly and the wicked, all agreeable, to that grand principle received by immediate revelation. And therefore as he told Job before, that the general poſition was brought him in a viſion; ſo all ages, and the records kept of them (in all which he had made a diligent enquiry) came up fully to the proof of it; as if he had ſaid, The Lord told me ſo, and all he hath done in the World proclaims that it is ſo. His Word is enough to aſſert his own juſtice, but his Works witneſs with it, Lo, This we have ſearched, ſo it is.

We have ſearched. He ſpeaks in the plural number; he begun his ſpeech in Chap. 4. and he concludes it here in the plural number. Yet, we are not to think, that this was a diſcourſe pen'd by them all together, or debated firſt in private conference, and agreed on, that thus Eliphaz ſhould ſpeak, becauſe he ſaith, we have ſearched it. But the meaning is only this, I ſuppoſe I have ſpoken the ſence of my two friends, who ſtand by, and I believe they are ready to ſubſcribe to, or vote every word I have uttered, therefore behold we have ſearched, and thus it is.

Hear thou it.] To adviſe thee, was our part; to hear and hearken is thy part; therefore hear it.

But had he not heard them all this while? why doth Eliphaz now bid him hear it?

It is true, he had heard; but, there is more required then the hearing of the ear, when ſuch a Sermon as this is preached; To hear, is more then the work of the ear. It is,

Firſt, To believe and give credit to what is heard. (Joh. 9. 27.) I told you before, and you would not hear (ſaith the blind man) wherefore would you hear it again? That is, I have told you already, but you would not believe, nor give credit to what I ſpake.

Secondly, To hear, is to hearken, that is, to yield and conſent to what is ſpoken. (Gen. 3. 17.) Foraſmuch, as thou haſt hearkned to the counſel of thy wife: Barely to hear a temptation to ſin, is no act of ſin; as barely to hear an exhortation to good, is no act of grace. Therefore becauſe thou haſt hearkned, is, becauſe thou haſt yielded and conſented to that which ſhe hath ſpoken.

Thirdly, To hear, is to obey. Iſa. 55. 3. Hear and you ſoul ſhall live. It is not every hearing of the ear, that bringeth life to the ſoul; obedient hearing is enlivening hearing.

So here, we have ſearched it, ſo it is, hear it, that is, believe what we have ſpoken, ſubmit unto, and conſent to what we have ſpoken, obey and practiſe what we have ſpoken.

To hear, is both an act of ſenſe, and an act of reaſon; an act of nature, and an act of grace. To hear one requeſting and praying is to grant: and to hear one counſelling and commanding, is to obey. When God hears man, he grants; and when man hears God, or hears men ſpeaking in the name of God, he yields and obeyes.

It follows, And know thou it for thy good. The Hebrew is, know it for thy ſelf. Now, becauſe that which a man knows for himſelf, is for his profit; therefore we tranſlate know it for thy good; that is, know it as that, whereby thy ſelf mayſt receive good. The meaning of, know it for thy ſelf; is not this, know and keep it to thy ſelf, let none partake with thee of it; it is againſt the uſe of knowledge, that a man ſhould ſo know for himſelf, though a mans ſelf hath or may have good by all he knows. So, we muſt underſtand that of Solomon, Prov. 9. 12. If thou be wiſe, thou ſhalt be wiſe for thy ſelf; that is, thou ſhalt be advantag'd by thy wiſdom: Wiſdom brings in a fair revenew: though many know much and ſeem very wiſe, who know nothing for themſelves, and are not wiſe at all for their own good.

There are three ſorts of knowing men.

Firſt, Some know only to know. They know, but they propoſe no end to themſelves, beyond knowledge: They know not for the good of others, no nor for their own good. As it is with riches and honour, ſo with knowledge: covetous men gather riches that they may be rich, they propoſe not any other end of having riches, but only to be rich. An ambitious man, deſires honour that he may be honourable; he propoſeth to himſelf no other end of his deſiring honour, but to be honourable, So, many are covetous and ambitious of knowledge; they read from Book to Book, and from Point to Point, from Science to Science, and what do they with all this knowledge? onely this, that they may know; to know thus, is not to know for good; To know, only to know, is no better then not to know.

Secondly, Others know, that they may be known to know: this is their end, that other men may know that they are knowing men, that they are great Schollars, great read-men, men of great abilities and boundleſs ſtudies. Even as ſome deſire riches, that they may be accounted rich; and honour, that they may be fam'd for honourable. To know only that we may be known, is worſe then not to know.

But thirdly, That which is the right way of knowing, is to know that others may know; or, to know that our ſelves may practiſe. Theſe are the true ends of knowing, to communicate knowledge, and to obey knowledge. The great end of knowing, ſhould be our own profiting in holineſs and obedience. And ſo here, Know it for thy good, is, know it ſo, as to make an advantage of thy knowledge. To know for our good, is the only good knowledge.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, Truth deſerves our moſt diligent ſearch.

We have ſearched it (ſaith Eliphaz) The promiſe of finding truth, is only to ſuch as ſearch for truth (Prov. 2. 4.) Thou ſhalt find wiſdom, &c. If thou ſeekeſt her as ſilver, and ſearcheſt for her as for hid treaſures. There are two places, two veins eſpecially, where truth is to be found; There is the book of Gods word, and the book of Gods works; the book of Scripture, and the book of Providence: In theſe two books, we are to ſearch, in them, to ſtudy out truth, for our own practice, and for advice to others.

Obſerve Secondly, That which we offer to others for truth, we ought diligently to make tryal of our ſelves; or, we ſhould make truth our own, before we diſtribute it to others.

We have ſearched the thing out (ſaith Eliphaz) we know the truth to be thus, we are maſters of what we teach. They who hear aright, ſearch (as the Bereans) thoſe things which are taught them; and they who inſtruct aright, ought to ſearch the things which they teach: If there muſt be after-ſearchings of thoſe things we hear, certainly there muſt be fore-ſearchings of the things we teach. Truth (ordinarily) is not worth the having, unleſs it be come in by our own ſearching. They who receive that for truth which they never ſearcht, will not hold any truth when themſelves are ſearcht. Truths meerly borrowed and taken upon truſt, are no ſtock, no abiding treaſure of knowledge; and yet moſt can only ſay of all the truth they have, as he of his ax-head, (2 King. 6. 5.) Alas maſter, for it was borrowed; they ſnatch up one truth from this hand, and another from that; they take it upon the credit of this, and that learned man; very few are able to ſay (as Eliphaz here) Lo this, we have ſearched it: The more pains we take to find truth, the more pleaſure we take in it: That is ſweeteſt to us, which we ſweat moſt for, in Praying and Studying: Morſels of Truth dipt in that ſawce, fatten and ſtrengthen the ſoul moſt.

Obſerve Thirdly, What a man knoweth by ſearch and diſquiſition, he is confident of.

We have ſearched it; and what follows? ſo it is; he ſpeaks with authority, not timerouſly, as if he doubted, whether it were ſo or no; but ſo it is, we will bide by it, we have it upon enquiry and diligent ſearch.

Obſerve Fourthly, The truths we know our ſelves, we ſhould communicate unto others.

Here it is, we have ſearched it, but we will not put the light we have found, under a buſhel; we ſhall not hide the talent we have, in a napkin: Here it is, make what uſe of it thou canſt, know it for thy good.

Obſerve Fifthly, Truth may challenge credit, and command the ear.

Hear thou it.] Truth needs not ſtand begging audience, or creep upon the ground with flattering inſinuations, or humble ſubmiſſions to gain acceptance. Truth is a great Prince, and may ſpeak in the language of Princes; We will, We require: It commands rather then entreats, or all its entreaties command, every word a law or a charge; Hear thou it.

Obſerve Sixthly, That, it is needful to make ſpecial application of general doctrinal truths.

Eliphaz had delivered a doctrinal truth, and here he makes application; and though he failed much, in the application of it to Job, yet, there were general truths very appliable, in the things he delivered. Therefore he ſtayes not in generals, nor leaves his doctrine hovering in the Air, but brings it home to the heart, and layes it cloſe to the conſcience; hear it, and know it thou for thy good. And not only are National and ſpeculative truths to be brought home and applied, but even common experimental truths; ſuch were theſe diſcuſſed, and handled by Eliphaz.

Obſerve Seventhly, A man may know much, and yet get no good by it.

Know this for thy good.] The Devil is a great Schollar, he knows much, but he knows nothing for his benefit, but all for his hurt. Many a man knows almoſt all that is knowable; but he knows nothing which is (to him) profitable: Nothing gains by his knowledge but only his pride; he is puffed up with Knowledge, not built up; and that knowledge which puffs up, will at laſt puff down, or caſt us down.

Obſerve Eighthly, A godly man may make a profitable uſe of any truth.

You ſee what truths Eliphaz ſpake; many of them were ordinary common Doctrines, and many of them ſore threatnings and judgments upon wicked men; yet know thou this for thy good. There is no vein of Doctrine in the book of God, but a man may make uſe, yea treaſure of it. All truth is ſo ſymbolical to the regenerate part, that it cannot but more ſublimate and ſpiritualize a ſpiritual heart, though it ſelf be a truth about things earthly and temporal.

Obſerve Laſtly, All truths, eſpecially truths contained in the promiſes, are the portion of a godly man.

Know thou it for thy good, ſaith he; as if he ſhould ſay, If thou art a godly man, then all the good things I have here ſpoken of, belonging to godly men, belong to thee, they are thy portion alſo. While a believer reads the book of God, he ſees great riches, many precious things in the promiſes; and whatſoever good he finds there, there is nothing of it too good for him; he may know it all for his own good; thoſe ſweet delicious promiſes of the pardon of ſin, of the love of God, of the freeneſs of grace, of the glory to come, the promiſes of Chriſt, and of all that is Chriſts, all theſe things are his; when he reads them, he may ſet his mark upon them, and know them for his good, know them as his own proper goods. Unbelievers are ſtrangers to the promiſes, and the promiſes are as ſtrange to them; they know not the promiſes, and the promiſes will not know them; they know not a letter of Scripture for their good. The very promiſes are threatnings to them, and the very bleſſings of the book of God, are their curſe. As the clouds paſs over this and that piece of ground, and then diſſolve upon a third, by the directing and all-diſpoſing providence of God: So the promiſes (which are full of bleſſings, full of comforts, as the clouds are of ſhowers) paſs over a wicked mans head, and let not down one drop of mercy or comfort upon him, but leave him like the dry hearth, or barren wilderneſs, which ſeeth not when good cometh, Jerem. 17.6. But then the cloud moves a little farther, and meets with the family or perſon of a godly man, there it diſſolves and poureth out a plentiful rain (both of temporal and ſpiritual bleſſings) to refreſh and confirm that inheritance of the Lord, Pſalm 68. 9.

And ſo much for this fifth Chapter, wherein, with the fourth, we have handled the firſt part of the diſpute, undertaken againſt Job, by Eliphaz, the firſt of his three friends; the whole diſcourſe conſiſting of divers Arguments, to convince and humble him under the hand of God: of divers counſels and motives to perſwade and direct him to ſeek unto God, and ſubmit to his correcting hand: All he was to ſpeak, being let in, by a loving Preface; and all he ſpake, being ratified, with an aſſuring concluſion, that, all he had ſpoken was for his good, if he would hear, believe and obey. In the next Chapters, we ſhall hear Job making his defence, ſcattering the charge thus brought againſt him, ſtiffly maintaining, and importunately renewing his firſt complaint.

CHAP. VI. Verſ. 1, 2, 3.

But Job anſwered, and ſaid,

O that my grief were throughly weighed, and my calamity laid in the ballances together!

For now it would be heavier then the ſand of the Sea: therefore my words are ſwallowed up.

This ſixth Chapter begins Job's replication, which is continued to the end of the ſeventh. He replies exactly to the ſeveral parts of the charge, given by Eliphaz; who, in the two fore-going Chapters, undertook both to reprove the impatience of Job, and to adviſe him a more holy and better temper'd carriage, towards God, under his afflictions. In this reply, Job ſhapes and forms up anſwers unto both. I ſhall endeavour to give you a brief of the whole, and then to particulars.

Firſt, Job enters with a refutation of thoſe reproofs of impatience, which Eliphaz had heap't upon him; and with that ſubjoyns a refuſal of the counſels (in his ſence) which he had given him. In this work, ſeven verſes of the Chapter are ſpent.

Secondly, We have a renovation or a re-inforcement of his grief and deſire to die, from the eighth, to the end of the thirteenth verſe, O that I might have my requeſt, that God would cut me off, &c. As if he had ſaid, I am ſo far, from being ſatisfied, with what thou haſt ſpoken againſt me, or from recanting and recalling, what I have ſpoken, in thoſe my breathings after death, that I will be bold to make the ſame ſuit to God again; O that I might have my requeſt, and that God would cut me off, &c.

Thirdly, He proceeds to a charge of raſh cenſure, of uncharitable, yea of deceitful dealing upon his friends, from the thirteenth, unto the twenty fourth verſe. To him that is afflicted (ſaith he) pity ſhould be ſhewed from his friend; my brethren have dealt deceitfully, as a brook, &c.

Fourthly, He yet ſubmits himſelf to their judgment and direction, if they would ſpeak reaſon to him at laſt, and come home to his caſe indeed: or, if they could fully and candidly diſcover to him any error, he was willing to be rectified; this he profeſſes (and it is a moſt ingenuous profeſſion) in verſ. 24, & 25. Teach me (ſaith he) and I will hold my tongue, and cauſe me to underſtand wherein I have erred, &c. As if he had ſaid, all that you have ſpoken hitherto, doth not reach my condition, ye have quite miſtook my caſe; yet, you ſhall ſee, I do not ſtand out againſt you, becauſe I will ſtand out; it is not my will that oppoſes what you have ſpoken, but my underſtanding; therefore, if you can ſhew me better reaſon, I lay down the bucklers, and yield my ſelf a Priſoner to your ſelves, and unto truth. I delight not to lengthen out contentions, nor am I reſolved to have the laſt word, Teach me, and I will hold my tongue.

Fifthly, He adds an expoſtulation, mixed with an aggravation. An expoſtulation about, and an aggravation of their high jealouſie, and low opinion of him, in verſ. 26, 27. Do ye imagine to reprove words, and the ſpeeches of one that is deſperate, which are as wind? As if he had ſaid, Do you think, that you have had to deal with a man, that only makes a noiſe, or ſpeaks a great many words, which have more ſound then ſence? Do ye think I am out of my wits, and in ſtead of arguing with you, do only rave like a mad man at you? Ye have had not vain, windy words from me, but words full of weight and matter, words of truth and ſoberneſs, wherefore then do you ſpeak thus? Do ye imagine to reprove words, and the ſpeeches of one that is deſperate? Do ye think I ſpeak like one, who knows not what he ſpeaks? Or that, I have at once loſt my hope, and my underſtanding.

Sixthly, He gives them advice and admonition to take better heed to what they ſhould after ſay, if they intended to ſay any more, or to continue their counſel and diſcourſe with him; in the three laſt verſes of this ſixth Chapter. Now therefore be content, look upon me, for it is evident to you, if I lie: return I pray you, &c.

In the ſeventh (which concludes his ſpeech) he offers three things, eſpecially to be obſerved.

Firſt, A renewing of many Arguments and conſiderations, by which he confirms the equity of his requeſt, to have his life cut off; upon which ſad ſubject he inſiſts, from the beginning of the Chapter, to the end of verſe 17. Is there not an appointed time to man upon the earth? Are not his dayes, like the dayes of an Hireling? &c.

Secondly, After all his high ſtrains of conteſt with man, we have an abaſement of himſelf, as unworthy, that God ſhould take notice of him, either by mercies or judgments, in verſ. 18, 19. What is man that thou ſhouldſt magnifie him, and that thou ſhouldſt viſit him every morning? &c. A godly man will ſtand (when he ſees cauſe) upon his terms with men, but he ever falls low before, and hath not a word to reply againſt God. He is ſometime angry, when men villifie him; but he ever admires, why God ſhould magnifie him. What is man? &c.

Thirdly, He concludes his ſpeech with an humble acknowledgment of his own ſinfulneſs, and with an earneſt requeſt for the pardon of his ſin. Lord (ſaith he) I have ſinned, what ſhall I do unto thee, O thou preſerver of men? verſ. 20, &c. After all this heat and paſſion, after all theſe complainings, Job's heart lay level before the Lord; yea he abaſes himſelf to exalt and give glory to God, with humble confeſſion, and an earneſt ſupplication for the pardon of his ſin. Thus we have the general parts and ſubſtance of his anſwer to that charge of Eliphaz, in the two former Chapters.

But Job anſwered, and ſaid.

In theſe words, and the three following verſes, Job gives us the refutation or rejection of that reproof, given him by Eliphaz; and he refutes it by ſhewing the reaſon why Eliphaz (as he ſuppoſed) was ſo ſharp and bitter in reprooving him: And further, he ſhews cauſe why he rejects his Councel or Conſolation. The reaſon upon which he puts off thoſe reproofs, is this, becauſe Eliphaz had not duly conſidered his ſorrows, or was not ſo ſenſible of them, as a man ſhould be, that undertakes a friend in his condition. The ſum of this Argument, againſt what Eliphaz had ſpoken, may be thus formed.

Amicos taxat, quod antequã ipſũ reprehenderent, non expendiſſent ſuã miſeriã. Cocc.

He cannot duly reprove or convince another of impatience in complaining, who hath not fully weighed thoſe calamities, which are the cauſe and ground of thoſe complaints.

But Eliphaz, thou haſt not fully weighed and conſidered my caſe and condition, my troubles and calamities, which are the ground and cauſe of my complaints.

Therefore thou canſt not duly reprove or convince me of impatience.

The Aſſumption or ſecond Propoſition of this Argument is couched in verſ. 2. O that my grief were thoroughly weighed, and that my calamity were laid in the ballances together! As if he had ſaid, I had never received ſuch harſh cenſures, ſuch a judgment or reproof, if thou hadſt duly weighed my ſorrows: if thou hadſt faithfully ſtudied my caſe, thou thou hadſt never rebuked me thus.

The weight of his calamity, himſelf expreſſeth two wayes.

Firſt, Comparatively, at verſ. 3. by putting it into the ballance with the ſand of the Sea; For now (ſaith he) it would be heavier then the ſand of the Sea.

Secondly, He ſets forth the greatneſs of his calamity, Demonſtratively, by declaring in what manner he had been afflicted: My affliction is not an ordinary affliction, I am wounded with the arrows of the Almighty, and thoſe poyſoned arrows, and thoſe arrows drinking up my ſpirits. I have not only ſome ſingle great affliction, or many ſmall ones upon me; but, I have terror, and terrors; yea, I have an army of terrors, yea an army of terrors alwayes incamping about me, and charging me continually: why Eliphaz, thou didſt never clearly conſider theſe things; much leſs haſt thou had a ſympathy or fellow-feeling of them. Thou haſt not been afflicted in my afflictions: Thou haſt not ſorrowed my ſorrows, nor wept my tears; Therefore it is that thou haſt ſo ſharply reproved me, and put ſo much gall and worm-wood into thy diſcourſe.

So then, the ſum of this firſt part may be thus given, taking it out of thoſe high and hyperbolical ſtrains, in which his paſſion was carried; as if Job had thus anſwered Eliphaz, It is an eaſie matter to ſlight that which a man doth not know, and to think others complain too much, when we our ſelves feel nothing; but is it any wonder to hear a man groan, that hath a burden upon his back, as heavy as the ſand of the Sea? Is it any wonder to hear a man cry out, whoſe fleſh is filled with poyſoned arrows, ſhot from a bow, bent and drawn by the arm of omnipotency? Is it any wonder, if that man fear, who is incompaſt about with terrors? Is it any wonder, if that man be troubled, who hath the terrors of the Almighty incamping about him? Why Eliphaz, thou wouldſt not think, that an Ox or an Aſs were reprovable, if the one ſhould low, when he hath no graſs, and the other bray when he hath no fodder; if it be ſo, that the very irrational creatures do according to reaſon, when they complain upon their wants, doeſt thou think me deſperate or irrational in complaining of mine? Alas all my fodder and my graſs, all my comforts and refreſhings are taken from me. Doeſt thou not ſee, how upon a due conſideration of my eſtate, all thy reproofs may be wiped off from me, or retorted upon thy ſelf? what great matter is it, if thou doſt not complain, who ſitteſt at eaſe, and knoweſt no ſorrow? Thou art in green paſtures or full barns, thou haſt graſs and fodder in abundance, and therefore haſt no cauſe of complaint. Thus in the general.

But Job anſwered, and ſaid.] To anſwer, is here taken properly; he anſwers to a charge, reproof, or argument. At Chap. 3. verſ. 1. when Job began to ſpeak, it is ſaid, Job anſwered, and ſaid. In Scripture language anſwering is often put for ſpeaking, though none have ſpoken a word or made any propoſal before. But here anſwering is taken in a ſtrict ſence, as it notes a reply to ſomewhat before ſpoken; Job anſwered, and ſaid.

Note this from it, It is the duty of a man to anſwer when he is queſtioned or charged.

It is the Apoſtles rule (1 Pet. 3. 15.) Be ready alwayes to give an anſwer to every man, that asketh you a reaſon of the hope that is in you. As a man in duty ought to give a reaſon of the hope that is in him; ſo in duty he ought to give a reaſon of the ſorrows, that are in him, and of the complaints that proceed from him: We muſt anſwer for our paſſions, as well as for our ſpeeches; we muſt anſwer for our ſorrows, and for our joyes, and for our fears, as well as for our hope, or for our faith. Theſe muſt all be anſwered for; and when any ſhall charge us about any of theſe, we muſt be ready to give a reaſon of them (as the Apoſtle adviſes there, in the caſe of our hope) with meekneſs and fear.

It is our duty to anſwer thus, both in reference to our ſelves and others.

Firſt, It is our duty in reference to our ſelves, that we may vindicate that which ſhould be more precious to us then the Gold of Ophir, our own credit or ſincerity; No man ought to deſpiſe his own integrity or reputation, ſo, as not to ſtand up for it. Therefore Job grows reſolute in that point, profeſſing that he would hold his integrity, till he died; he would never let that go, but anſwer ſtiffly for it: It is juſtice to diſ-asperſe our ſelves, and give witneſs to our own wronged innocency. A man is more bound in duty to ſtand up for himſelf, then for any other, by how much he is nearer to himſelf, then to others.

Secondly, It is our duty to anſwer in reſpect of others; (and that Job might have an eye unto) namely to ſatisfie thoſe, who are ſcandalized, by what we have either done or ſpoken: Suppoſe it be not a ſcandal given, ſuppoſe it be only a ſcandal taken, as this of Job was: Job did nothing purpoſely to ſcandalize them, nor any thing, which upon a due conſideration, was a ſcandal; but his friends had taken ſcandal at what he ſpake, his impatient complainings: therefore he was bound in duty to ſatisfie them, and to ſhew further grounds wherefore he ſo complained. Silence when we are charged, either makes a full conviction, or ſtrengthens ſuſpition: And in this caſe, if Job had held his peace, he had either yielded the cauſe, and confeſſed himſelf guilty, or at leaſt his friends ſhould have had cauſe to grow higher in their jealouſies of his ſincerity. To right our ſelves is not a point of indifferency, but of duty. Self-love is the rule of our love to others. He who neglects his own wronged honour, will not be very careful (which yet he ought) of his neighbours.

Si accuſatus non reſpondeat, aut criminis convictus aut certè ſuſpectas videatur. Pined.

O that my grief were throughly weighed.

Grief may be conſidered two wayes, either Paſſively or Actively. Grief taken Paſſively is the thing which we ſuffer, or which is grievous to us; affliction it ſelf is called Grief. Take Grief Actively, and then it is the ſorrow we expreſs, under the preſſures of grievous afflictions. The word in the Hebrew is tranſlated ſometimes anger, ſometimes indignation, ſometimes wrath. It is the ſame which Eliphaz uſeth, Chap. 5. v. 5. where he ſaith, Wrath killeth the fooliſh man. Eliphaz began his ſpeech with that word, hinting at Job, as if his wrath and impatience towards God had diſcovered him for a fool, or a wicked one: Now Job returning anſwer, begins with the firſt word of Eliphaz his ſpeech; as if he had ſaid, You told me that wrath kills the fooliſh man; but O that my anger, or the wrath which you conceive to be in me, that grief which I have expreſſed, were fully weighed, you would quickly ſee, that it is not the anger or wrath of a fool, you would find reaſon for my paſſion; and that, not the want of wiſdom, but the plenty or weight of my grief hath wrought out theſe complaints. Therefore my deſire is, O that my Grief, O that my ſorrows poured forth in my former lamentation were throughly weighed; you have but gueſſed at them yet, you have not weighed them (which you ought) as you would weigh gold to a grain, or to the turning of a ſcale; or if ſo, your beam is not a true one, nor your ballance the ballance of the Sanctuary; you have weighed me, but by a common beam, or (I fear) by falſe ballances, and a bag of deceitful weights.

כעש. Ira, indignatio, hoc loco, ira eſt querimonia valdè iracunda vel moleſtia, quam ex morbi & ulceris gravitate concipiebat. Merc. Notat dolorem quem quis capit, ex re adverſa & diſplicenti. Cocc.

O that my Grief.] The Vulgar Latin tranſlates, O that my ſins, namely for which I am thus afflicted, were throughly weighed; as if the meaning of Job were to lighten his ſin, and to aggravate his ſufferings: But doubtleſs, that was none of Job's mind or meaning; neither will the original nal bear ſuch a tranſlation. When our ſins are put into the ballance with our ſufferings, all our ſufferings, the heavieſt we can feel or go under in this life, are but as a feather to a talent of lead. As all the afflictions of this life are light, in compariſon of that exceeding weight of glory, prepared for us in the next life: So all the ſufferings of this life are light, in compariſon of the exceeding weight of one ſin committed by us. Therefore Job makes ſuch compariſon here, as if he had been afflicted more then he deſerved. That of Ezra concerning the Church of the Jews, (Chap. 9. 13.) Thou our God haſt puniſhed us leſs then our iniquities deſerve, is true of every puniſhment; put any puniſhment of this world, Spiritual or Temporal, in one ſcale, and the leaſt ſin, in another, that lighteſt ſin outweighs our heavieſt puniſhments. Only in Hell ſins and ſufferings ſhall be of equal poyſe. God will then pour and meaſure our puniſhments, which ſhall come up to the proportion and dimenſion of our ſins; and what the creature cannot bear at once in weight, ſhall be weighed to him in eternity. But to paſs that rendring, as unſafe.

שקל Libravit, ponderavit, olim moneta libravatur et expondere habebatur ſumma pecunia, ut mini ex numero nummorum. Ulpian.

O that my grief [were throughly Weighed.] Our Engliſh word, Scale, which is the inſtrument, by which we Weigh, is well conceived to come from the Hebrew word here uſed (Shakal) ſignifying to Weigh any thing; but eſpecially to Weigh Coyn or Money, to Weigh Gold and Silver; as Gen. 23. 16. Abraham upon the purchaſe of that field, which he bought of the Children of Heth, for a burying place, Weighed to Ephron the Silver which he had named. It was the cuſtom of thoſe times, in ſtead of telling, to Weigh their Money, and that was the moſt exact and ready way of payment: And from that word (Shakal) ſignifying to Weigh Money, comes the Hebrew word for one ſpecial ſort of Money, the Shekel; becauſe they Weighed by the ſhekel, that being as their Standard or a ſpecial Coyn, of ſuch a known Weight and value, that all other Coyn was Weighed and valued by it. So in the Latine, and likewiſe in our Engliſh, we call one ſpecial ſum of Money A pound, which is a Weight, and by which Money is commonly accounted and paid. And hence by a Metaphor, this word ſignifies to judge or to conſider of a thing exactly and fully; becauſe of all matters that men Weigh, they will Weigh Gold and Silver moſt exactly; if a man Weigh Gold, he Weigheth it to a grain; if Gold want but the turning of the ſcale more then due Weight or allowance, it will not paſs, Iſa. 33. 18. Where is the Scribe, where is the Receiver; the Hebrew is, Where is the Weigher; that is, either the Spiritual Weigher, he that uſes to be exact in Weighing every tittle of the Law: Or, the Civil Weigher, becauſe they uſed to Weigh all the Money they received. So then, O that my grief were throughly Weighed; is as if he had ſaid, O that my grief were Weighed, as Gold and Silver is Weighed, Weighed exactly, to the leaſt, to the utmoſt, that you might fully know what it is.

Siclus moneta certi ponderis & omnium ponderū regula.

Ubi legū verba ponderans. Sanc. Queſtor præfectus ærario militari. Jun.

The word ſingle by it ſelf, notes an exact examination by Weighing; but when (as here) the word is doubled, or (by an Hebraiſm) repeated, O that my grief in weighing were Weighed, it heightens and increaſes the ſence exceedingly: Hence we tranſlate, O that my grief were throughly Weighed; Weighed ſo as that there might be a clear diſcovery, how much my ſorrows Weigh. The doubling of a word, to this ſence, is very frequent in Scripture, I ſhall not need to inſtance: Take only that (Gen. 2. 17.) Of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou ſhalt not eat of it; for in the day that thou eateſt thereof, in dying thou ſhalt die, (that is) thou ſhalt ſurely die; So here, O that in weighing it were Weighed, that is, O that it were throughly and exactly Weighed.

Lay all together and it imports thus much; as if Job had ſaid, I would not have my ſorrows Weighed at a vulgar beam, or in ordinary ballances, I would not have the ſound or letter only of what I have ſpoken conſidered; but I deſire that you would take my complaints together, the words and the matter, and that you would Weigh all impartially, that you may come to a full underſtanding, what my condition is; and then ſurely you would give up a better judgement, and make a fairer interpretation of my words, then as yet you have put forth: Thus he ſpeaks alſo Chap. 31. 6. Let me be Weighed in an even ballance, that God may know my integrity. Uneven ballances will not make a perfect diſcovery: That which is falſe, cannot give a true report: Things and perſons act as they are; therefore Job deſireth to be Weighed in an even ballance, ſuch a beam will ſpeak the truth of my eſtate, both to God and man: God needs no means to make him know, he knows all immediately, and he Weighs by his eye, not one thing by another, but all things in themſelves: Job ſpeaks of God after the manner of men.

And my Calamity laid in the Ballances together.

הוה à radice הוה fuit eventus malus, in fortunium מאזנים Trutina, ſtateræ quod duas ſc. habeat lances, velut aures. Pagn

My grief and my Calamity. Grief cauſed by my Calamity, and Calamity the cauſe of that grief.

My Calamity.] The word ſignifies any troubleſom evil, ſad event or accident, vulgarly called a miſ-fortune; O that this ſad eſtate and condition wherein I am, were put into the Ballance.

The original for Ballances, is very obſervable: As there is much elegancy in the word by which the action, ſo, in this, by which the inſtrument of Weighing is expreſſed. It is found only in the Plural or Dual number, as many of that nature are: The ſame word in Hebrew, ſignifies alſo the Ears, which are the organ of hearing: and the reaſon of it is thus given, becauſe as the Tongue of the Ballance ſtands like a judge between the two ſcales, inclining to neither, till the weight be laid in: ſo ſhall the Ear of a Judge by Office, or of any man by Deputation, called to hear and determine of things in difference, ſtand indifferent to both parties, till he hear the matter debated, and the reaſons brought forth on either ſide. The Moraliſts embleme this, by the place of that Sign in the Zodiack, which they call the Virgin, ſtanding (according to the doctrine of Aſtronomers) between the Lion and the Ballances: The Lion bids Virgin Juſtice, be ſtout and fearleſs; the Ballances adviſe her to weigh the matter on both ſides, with moderation, and be cautious, neither inclining one way nor other, but as the merit of the cauſe, fully heard, ſhall ſway her judgment.

ישאו à radice נשא Levavit, ſuſtulit, nā qui appendit aliquid tollit lances in altum. Druſ.

Job deſires, that his Calamity might be laid thus in the Ballances before his ſentence: Laid, the word is, O that my Calamity might aſcend in the Ballances; and that manner of ſpeaking is uſed, either becauſe in weighing, the lighter ſcale of the Ballances doth aſcend, or becauſe when things are weighed, the Ballances aſcend or are lifted up. A man takes up the Ballances in his hand to weigh; ſo it is, as if he had ſaid, O that theſe, might be poiſed together and lifted up, to ſee which way the Scales will turn.

Together.] There is ſome difference in opinion about the word Together, whether he meaneth thus; O that my grief and Calamity were Weighed; you conſider things to halves, and leave out thoſe points which are moſt weighty and material; you ſhould take in all together: Or whether his deſire be, that his grief and Calamity, both together, might be put into one Ballance, and the Sand of the Sea into another; and ſo an experiment be made, whether his grief and Calamity, or the Sand of the Sea were heavier. Or thirdly, Whether thus, that his grief ſhould be put into one Ballance, and his Calamity into another, and then trial be made which of theſe two were heavier, his grief and ſorrow, or his calamity and trouble. A learned Interpreter conceives, that Job wiſhes his Grief and Calamity might both together be put into one Ballance, and all the Sand of the Sea (if it were poſſible) in the other, ſuppoſing that his Grief and Calamity would out-weigh that vaſte ponderous aggrevated body. His opinion is chiefly ſtrengthned by ſome difficulties in the Grammatical conſtruction, unleſs this be admitted; and yet if it be, a greater difficulty is ſhewed by a ſecond, and therefore I rather take it thus; O that my Grief and Calamity were laid in the Ballances together; that is, O that my Grief were put, one into one Ballance, and my Calamity into another; or, O that my Grief might be weighed with my Calamity, and it would appear (notwithſtanding your judgment of me) that yet, there is nothing ſo much weight in my Grief, as there is in my Calamity; that is, I have not yet grieved or complained up to the height or weight of thoſe Calamities which are upon me: ſo that if my ſorrow were laid in one Ballance, and my affliction in another, my affliction would out-weigh my ſorrow, and it would appear, that I have complained, not only, not without a cauſe, but not ſo much as I had cauſe.

Mercerus.

Bolduc.

And to prove that his calamity was heavier then his grief, he adds in the next words; It (namely his calamity thus weighed) would be heavier then the ſand of the ſea: as if he had ſaid, it is poſſible that in trying all heavy things, ſomewhat might be found heavier then my grief or my complaint hath been; but I am ſure nothing can be found of equal weight with my calamity; for my calamity (which is the immediate antecedent) would be heavier then the ſand of the Sea, then which nothing can be found more heavy.

That of David, Pſal. 62. 9. is parallel to this expreſſion in Job; Surely men of low degree are vanity, and men of high degree are a lie; to be laid in the balances, they are altogether lighter then vanity. The meaning is, that if men of all degrees, high and low, were put in one Scale, and vanity in another, vanity it ſelf would be weightier then the graveſt and moſt weighty men. Hence ſome read, They together are lighter then vanity. Others to this ſence, men and vanity being weighed together, vanity will not be ſo light, as vain men. As David, to ſhew mans lightneſs, makes him lighter then the lighteſt thing, vanity. So Job, to ſhew the heavineſs of his calamity, makes it heavier then the heavieſt thing. Hence obſerve, Firſt, That, It is a duty to weigh the ſaddeſt eſtate, and afflicted condition of our Brethren thoroughly.

But (you will ſay) what is it to weigh them throughly?

I anſwer, It is not only to weigh the matter of an affliction, to ſee what it is which a man ſuffers; but to weigh an affliction in every circumſtance and aggravation of it; The circumſtance of an affliction is often more conſiderable then the matter of the affliction. If a man would confeſs his ſins, and confeſs them throughly, he is to confeſs, not only the matter of them; as ſins are the tranſgreſſions of the Law, and and errors againſt the Rule; but he muſt eye the manner, in which ſin hath been committed, the circumſtances with which it is cloathed, theſe render his ſin out of meaſure, and out of weight ſinful. Likewiſe, would a man conſider the mercies and favours received from God, would he know them throughly, and ſee how much they weigh; let him look, not only what, but how, and when, and where, and by whom he hath received them. There may be (and often is) a great wickedneſs in a little evil committed, and a great mercy in a little good received. As relations, ſo circumſtances have the leaſt entity, but they have the greateſt efficacy. Now, as there is often more in the circumſtances, then in the matter of a ſin, or of a mercy; ſo, there is often more in the circumſtance, then there is in the matter of an affliction; therefore he that would throughly weigh the afflictions of another, muſt conſider all thoſe accidents, as well as the ſubſtance of it: As namely, the time when ſent, the time how long endured, whether a ſingle affliction, or in conjuncture with other afflictions, the ſtrength of the Patient, and the dependencies that are upon him.

Secondly, He that would weigh an affliction throughly, muſt put himſelf in the caſe of the afflicted, and (as it were) make anothers grief his own: He muſt act the paſſions of his brother, and a while perſonate the poor, the ſick, the afflicted man: He muſt get a taſte of the wormwood and of the gall upon which his Brother feedeth: In a word, he muſt lay ſuch a condition to heart. The Prophet Malachy threatens a curſe upon thoſe, who laid not the word and works of God to heart (chap. 2. 2.) I will curſe your bleſſings (ſaith the Lord) becauſe you do not lay it to heart; that is, ye do not conſider, what I ſay or do, throughly: God curſed them throughly, becauſe they would not throughly conſider his Laws and Judgments: So then, to weigh the affliction of another throughly, is to put our ſouls, as it were, in their ſouls ſtead. Hence, that we may be aſſured, Chriſt hath throughly weighed all our afflictions, he is ſaid to be afflicted in all our afflictions. He doth not only intuitively conſider or contemplate them, but he is (though above enduring) as actually enduring them, He is afflicted in all our afflictions, that is, he conſiders our afflictions as his own, and is affected with them, as if himſelf were pained with all our pains; and therefore it is ſaid, that himſelf took our infirmities, and bear our ſickneſſes, Mat. 8. 17. The meaning, is, he weighed the grief of his people fully. In theſe two points, this holy art of weighing grief, conſiſts; conſideration of circumſtances, and ſympathy of the ſmart. Meer ſpeculation moves little. We have no feeling of anothers ſuffering, till we have a fellow-feeling. The bare Theory of affliction affects no more, then the bare Theory of fire heats.

Secondly, When Job ſaith, O that my grief were throughly weighed; we may obſerve,

That, It is an addition to a mans affliction, when others are not ſenſible of his affliction.

For it is, as if Job had ſaid, This makes me cry out ſo much of the weight of my ſorrows, becauſe my friends weigh them ſo little. The Church (Lam. 1. 12.) complains thus, Is it nothing to you all ye that paſs by? behold and ſee if there be any ſorrow like unto my ſorrow. Is it nothing to you? as if the Church had ſaid, My affliction is ſomething to me, and this afflicts me above all my affliction, that paſſengers and beholders ſlight my calamities, and think my affliction no affliction, that is, not ſo great, as indeed it is: Or, it is nothing to them (they are not toucht with it) how great ſoever they ſee it is to me: That which wounds and breaks my heart, doth not prick their little fingers. And becauſe man is ſo ready to afflict his brother with this negative affliction, a not being ſenſible of his afflictions, therefore the Apoſtle aſſures us (Heb. 4. 15.) That we have not an High Prieſt that cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, but was in all points tempted like as we are. This is ſpoken to comfort the Saints in their extreameſt ſufferings: What though men will not take notice and be ſenſible of your condition? what though men will not weigh your grief? Yet Chriſt will: Our high Prieſt is none of your ſenſleſs Prieſts, who care not what weather the people endure, ſo they be warm and at eaſe.

Thirdly obſerve, We can never rightly judge, till we throughly weigh the condition of an afflicted brother.

For Job conceived that Eliphaz proceeded to judgment, before he had been in conſideration. This is the reaſon why thou haſt judged me uncharitably, becauſe thou haſt not weighed me ſeriouſly. To ſhew, that conſideration muſt go before judgment, God himſelf is expreſt to us in Scripture, conſidering the ſtate of things, before himſelf judges. So, Gen. 11. in the caſe of the builders of Babel, and Gen. 18. in the caſe of the men of Sodom, it is ſaid, that the Lord came down to ſee whether they had done altogether according to that cry which was come up unto him; Not, as if the Lord moves from one place to another, from heaven to earth; for he filleth all places: not that the Lord needs come down to receive information, or to examine his own intelligences, to ſee whether things are, as they are reported; but it is only an alluſion to the manner of men; or to ſhew, that he doth not cenſure or judge any man, or men, or Nations, till he hath taken a full cognizance of their condition. Now, if God who is infinite in knowledge and wiſdom, repreſents himſelf coming down, and by degrees deliberating about, and weighing the eſtates of men, before he cenſures them; what need then have blindfold men, ignoant men, men, who at beſt, have much darkneſs mixed with their light; what need (I ſay) have they to examine, weigh and try every mans eſtate, before they ſentence or determine it?

Fourthly obſerve, A man, who hath not been, or is not afflicted himſelf, can hardly apprehend what another endures, who is under affliction.

As there are comforts, eſpecially ſpiritual comforts, which no man knows or can know, but by the enjoying of them: The white ſtone (promiſed Rev. 2. 17.) hath a new name written in it, which no man knows, ſaving he that receiveth it. A man that is a ſtranger to Chriſt and his wayes, is not able to make any judgment what the comforts and refreſhings of a Chriſtian are. He admires to hear men ſpeak of ſpiritual comforts and conſolations, he knows not the meaning of thoſe things. The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, becauſe they are ſpiritually diſcerned, 1 Cor. 2. 14. It is ſo (proportionably) in all ſorrows and afflictions, eſpecially in ſpiritual ſorrows and afflictions, which lie off from ſenſe; yea, which lie quite beyond the reach and borders of reaſon: ſpiritual ſorrows, the hidings of Gods face, the withdrawing of aſſiſtance, few pity in others, becauſe few have had experience of theſe things, in themſelves. They think men are mad, when they complain of ſuch afflictions; when they cry out of their ſins, of the want of the favour of God, and the ſhining of his love, of deadneſs and coldneſs in duty, of unbelief and hardneſs of heart, &c. And therefore our Lord Jeſus, to aſſure our hearts, that he hath a full ſenſe of all our ſorrows, taſted himſelf of our ſorrows. There is not any ſorrow that can be upon any ſoul, or any affliction that can be upon the body, but our Lord Jeſus hath had (ſome way or other) an experience of it: This makes him (to our apprehenſions) moſt fit to judge and compaſſionate the diſtreſſes of his people. As all the ſins of his people were laid upon him, ſo all their ſorrows were laid upon him too; therefore the Prophet Iſaiah deſcribeth him thus, Chap. 53. 3. A man of ſorrows, and acquainted with grief; grief and he were no ſtrangers; while he was here upon the earth, grief was his Acquaintance and Familiar (as it were) that went up and down with him, all the while he travelled here below. Therefore ſeeing it is ſo, the whole Church and every particular Believer, have ſtrong conſolation in their ſorrows, that the Lord Jeſus Chriſt doth throughly weigh their condition, and knoweth fully what it is; We have not (as was toucht before) an High Prieſt which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; Why, what aſſurance have we of this? It follows, He was tempted in all things like unto us, yet without ſin, Chriſt had temptations unto ſin, yet without ſin; therefore he knows how to ſuccour us, when we are tempted unto ſin: Chriſt was tempted by manifold ſorrows, therefore he knows how to ſuccour us, when we are under manifold temptations: If we had a Mediator in Heaven that had not been tempted on earth, we might doubt whether he would be toucht with the feeling of our infirmities. whether ſinning infirmities, or ſorrowing infirmities. And were it not, that ſome of the Saints have been tempted and tried, they, who are under trials and temptations, would find none on earth to ſuccour them. As God doth comfort ſome in all their tribulations, that they may be able to comfort them which are in any trouble, with the ſame comforts wherewith they themſelves are comforted of God, 2 Cor, 1. 4. So he afflicts them, that they might pity and help others, as being under the ſame troubles, with which themſelves have been afflicted. A man that hath only travelled in Geographical Books and Maps, is not able to give you ſuch lively deſcriptions of, or directions about foreign Countreyes, as he hath travelled to, and been upon the places; ſo, they who have read and ſtudied much about afflictions, can never give ſuch enlivening, ſtrengthening, heartning counſel, as they who have been afflicted, and have dwelt ſometime upon the Land of ſorrows. To paſs on,

For now it would be heavier then the ſand of the Sea.

That is, it would be moſt heavy. Who can tell how heavy that is, which is heavier then the heavieſt?

If my calamity (ſaith Job) were weighed, it would have been found heavier then the ſand of the ſea, that account would be given of it; though you (my friend Eliphaz) ſeem to account it as light as a feather.

The ſand of the Sea is applied three wayes in Scripture.

Firſt, To ſet forth an exceeding great number (Gen. 22. 17.) I will multiply thy ſeed as the Stars of the Heaven, and as the ſand which is upon the Sea-ſhore: That is, I will exceedingly multiply thy ſeed, thy Children ſhall be not only numerous, but numberleſs; though a Book of Numbers be written concerning Abraham's poſterity, yet their total number is not written. So (Pſal. 78. 27.) He rained fleſh upon them as duſt, and feathered fowls like as the Sand of the Sea, that is, he rained abundance of feathered Fowls.

Secondly, The Sand of the Sea is uſed to expreſs the largeneſs, the mighty extent or capacity of a thing; the ſand of the Sea is of a vaſter extent then the Sea it ſelf, as being the outward line or bound of it; therefore (Jer. 33. 22.) it is ſpoken of, as a thing impoſſible, for the ſand of the Sea to be meaſured; As the hoſt of heaven (ſc. the Stars) cannot be numbred, neither the ſand of the Sea meaſured, ſo will I multiply the ſeed of my ſervant David. Meaſure is taken both of the content and extent of things: The ſand of the Sea is immeaſurable both wayes; it cannot (as we ſpeak of humane impoſſibles) be meaſured by the Pole, or by the Veſſel. And in 1 Kings 4. 29. it is ſaid, God gave Solomon wiſdom and underſtanding exceeding much, and largeneſs of heart as the ſand of the Sea, that is, as the ſand encompaſſes and takes the Sea in its arms; ſo Solomon had a heart comprehending all the depths and oceans of knowledge; he had the compaſs of all learning in his underſtanding. Hence, when a man attempts a thing impoſſible, we ſay to him proverbially, Thou meaſureſt the ſand.

Arenam metiris.

Thirdly, The ſand of the Sea is applied in Scripture, to note the exceeding weight and heavineſs of a thing: That inſtance is pregnant for it (Prov. 23. 7.) A ſtone is heavy, and the ſand is weighty, but a fools wrath is heavier then both; when Solomon would ſhew us how intolerably burdenſom the manners of a wicked man are, he compares them to a ſtone, and to the ſand: The wrath of a wicked man is very weighty, but (by the way) the wrath of God is incomparably more weighty. Wrath proceeding from extream folly, is weighty; but wrath proceeding from infinite wiſdom, is infinitely weighty. The wrath of a fool upon his brother, is heavier then a ſtone, or then the ſand; how heavy then will the wrath of the moſt wiſe God be upon that fool?

Stulti mores intolerabiles.

It is further conſiderable, that, he ſaith not barely, heavier then the ſand (any ſand is very heavy, but) heavier then the ſand of the ſea. Rivers have ſand, and dry pits have ſand, but ſea-ſand is the vaſteſt and the heavieſt ſand.

Triplex eſt arenæ genus foſſitia, fluvialis & marina. Plin. l. 3. Nat. Hiſt. c. 23.

Again, He ſpeaks not in the ſingular number, Heavier then the ſand of the ſea; but (the Hebrew is plural) heavier then the ſand of the Seas: as if Job had ſaid, if thou ſhouldeſt ſhovel up all the ſand that is upon the ſhores of all the Seas, together on a heap, it would not be ſo heavy as my calamity: In ſuch Hyperbolies or high ſtrains of eloquence, Job rhetoricates about his ſad condition, as if he reſolved to put more weight into his expreſſions, as he found more weight put into his afflictions.

Hence obſerve, Afflictions are heavy burdens.

The judgments of God upon wicked men, are frequently in Scripture called burdens; and they are heavy burdens, Iſa. 15. 1. We read of the burden of Moab; that is, the judgment and calamity that ſhould fall upon Moab. &, Iſ. 17. 1. The burden of Damaſcus. &, Iſa. 19. 1. The burden of Egypt. & Iſa. 21. 1. The burden of the Deſart of the Sea. And afterwards, The burden of the valley of Viſion, that is, of Jeruſalem. &, (2 Kings 9. 25.) When Jehu had killed Jehoram, he ſaid to Bidkar his Captain, Take him up, and caſt him in the portion of the field of Naboth the Jezreelite; for remember, how that when I and thou rode together after Ahab his Father, the Lord laid this burden upon him, that is, that he ſhould be ſlain, and thrown out in this manner. As afflictions upon wicked men are burdens, ſo, afflictions upon the godly, are burdens too; they are alſo heavy burdens (Their ſins are burdens upon them; My ſins (ſaith David) are gone over my head, they are a burden too heavy for me to bear, Pſal. 28. 4. Their ſins are burdens, and their ſorrows are burdens. Sin doth not only burden man, but it burdens God: I am preſſed under your ſins, as a cart is preſſed that is full of ſheaves, ſaith God; Amos 2. 13. As man, by ſin burdens God, ſo God, by affliction burdens man. But of all afflictions, inward afflictions are the greateſt burdens: As the ſpirit of a man is ſtronger than his fleſh, ſo the afflictions which are upon his ſpirit, are weightier then thoſe that are upon his fleſh: The Spirit hath wonderful ſtrength; all ſpirits are ſtrong; Angels are mighty in ſtrength: One good Angel is an over-match for all men. And the Devils (who are Spirits) are called not only Principalities, but Powers; becauſe of their ſtrength. Proportionably, the ſpirit of a man hath a mighty ſtrength in it; and ſo the afflictions, which are upon the ſpirit, may have a greater weight in them. The affliction which Job complains of, as heavier then the ſand, was not ſo much the calamity that preſſed his fleſh, or the pain that tormented his body (as is plain in the next verſe) but it was the calamity of his ſpirit, the affliction lying there; A man can ſuſtain his infirmity, but a wounded ſpirit (that is, when a man hath got a blow, a wound, an affliction upon his ſpirit) who can bear? Prov. 18. 14. As if Solomon had ſaid, I challenge all the world to find me out a man, that can bear a burdened, wounded ſpirit; unleſs Chriſt put under his hand, no ſtrength of mans ſpirit can bear the burden of a wounded ſpirit: A ſpirit hath no weight at all, only fleſhly and material ſubſtances are ponderous; but a wounded ſpirit is heavier then wounded fleſh. The ſpirit is ſtrong enough to bear the burdened fleſh, but nothing in fleſh can bear a burdened ſpirit.

In the cloſe of the verſe, we have the effect of this heavy weight of affliction, both ſpiritual and corporal.

Therefore (ſaith he) my words are ſwallowed up. That is, I want words to expreſs my grief. (a) All Language is too narrow for the vaſtneſs of my ſorrows.

Some read it (b) Therefore my words are bitter; or, therefore my words are ſteeped in bitterneſs; as if he had ſaid, I my ſelf feed upon bitter things, I feed upon Gall and Wormwood, therefore no wonder if my words taſte of them.

The Vulgar goes farther from the Letter of the Text, rendring (c) Therefore my words are full of ſorrow; as if he had ſaid, the ſorrows which are in my mind, flow out upon my Tongue.

The Septuagint yet further off (d) Therefore it ſeems my words are evil, or ill taken. My grief renders my words more liable to exception or miſ-interpretation.

Mr. Broughton tranſlates, Therefore my words come ſhort; there is a weight upon me heavier then the ſand of the ſea; Therefore my words come ſhort, or my expreſſions come not up to my intention. We tranſlate near that ſence, and anſwerably to the Original, My words are ſwallowed up.

The Hebrew word ſignifies to lick up, or to ſwallow down, and by a Metaphor to deſtroy or conſume; in the Propheſie of Obadiah, v. 16. the word is uſed to that purpoſe, They ſhall drink, and they ſhall ſwallow down: And, Prov. 20. 25. It is a ſnare to the man, who devoureth that which is holy, or who ſwalloweth down that which is holy; ſo here, Therefore my words are ſwallowed up; that is, when I would ſpeak, my words are, as it were, half-eaten before ſpoken; or my words are ſnatcht down in the ſpeaking, by the ſharp teeth and devouring ſtomach of my grief and ſorrows.

לען à radice לוע Lambit, abſorbuit, per Metaphoram, perdidit, corrupit. Verba ſemeſa. Jun. Verba mea corrupta ſunt, aut perdita, R. Levi; deleta, R. Moyſes; intercisa, Theod. Laſſa. Chal. Verbum pertinet ad pronunciationem corruptam & ad balbutiem. Vix loqui poſſum, vox faucibus hæret. Vat.

Others from the Letter read, Therefore my words are corrupted, wearied, loſt, blotted, blubbered, ſo cut off, that I cannot ſpeak diſtinctly, alluding unto thoſe that ſtammer. A ſtammerer is in ſuch haſte to ſpeak, that he eats his words, and (as we uſe to ſay proverbially in our Language) he clips the Kings Engliſh, he ſwalloweth up half his mind, when he would bring it out in words; ſuch is the meaning of Job, My words are ſwallowed up, I cannot ſpeak all; my grief takes me off, and cuts me ſhort. And ſo he ſeems to excuſe himſelf.

Firſt, In caſe he had ſpoken abruptly and brokenly, my pain hath been ſo great, that I can hardly ſpeak, therefore take no advantage of the abrupt language and broken ſentences, which have fallen from me; for the truth is, my grief hath ſwallowed up my words. I have rather ſighed, then declared my mind; real ſorrow, as well as poetical paſſionate imitation of ſorrow, makes many an (Apoſiopeſis, or) ſudden ſtop and breach, when the tongue is upon its ſwifteſt ſpeed, and quickeſt motion.

And ſecondly, He ſeems to excuſe himſelf for the matter of his ſpeech; I have not yet ſpoken all my mind, I have not yet given you my full ſence, about my condition; for through grief, I was forced to ſwallow up my words, and to ſuppreſs what I had further to ſay. Therefore ſuppoſe my ſpeech hath been imperfect, yet be not ſcandalized at it; for if you will have patience to ſtay, I ſhall anon bring up the words again which my ſorrows have ſnatcht from me, and ſwallowed down. Stay a while, and you ſhall hear more, you ſhall hear all; I will ſpeak more largely and more diſtinctly then I have done. One of the Rabbins takes the word actively, and refers the act of ſwallowing to Job's Friends: as if he had ſaid, Ye, my friends, have ſwallowed down my words; ye have not leiſurely fed upon and digeſted them, but ſwallowed them in ſuch haſte, that ye have not taſted them. As a man that ſwallows down a morſel greedily, without chewing, never taſtes either the ſweetneſs or the bitterneſs of it. It is a uſual Metaphor to expreſs hearing by eating; and we have it (as many interpret) at the ſixth verſe of this Chapter, Can that which is unſavoury be eaten without ſalt? It is a truth, that when words are thus ſwallowed or gobled down, we take not out the ſtrength or intent of them. But I ſtay not upon this expoſition, becauſe it ſtrains too hard upon the Grammatical conſtruction, and other circumſtances of the Text.

R. Kimchi.

Obſerve out of the former meaning,

First, Great grief interrupteth ſpeech; and makes broken Language.

Therefore my ſpeech or my words are ſwallowed up. As ſometimes our words devour, ſo ſometimes our words are devoured; ſome men ſpeak ſwallowing words, and others ſwallow their words (Pſal. 57. 4.) Thou loveſt all devouring words; or thou loveſt all ſwallowing words, O thou deceitful tongue! There are ſwallowing words, as well as ſwallowed words. Malice makes a man ſwallow the integrity of another with his words; and grief will make a man ſwallow down his own words, ſo that he cannot ſpeak to maintain his own integrity.

Secondly obſerve, That, Some afflictions exceed all complaints, and are too big for expreſſion.

That Note reaches Mr. Broughton's ſence, my words come ſhort of what my condition is; there is no language large enough, no Oratory eloquent enough to deſcribe or make known my ſorrows.

Laſtly obſerve, Not to be able to expreſs our grief, is an encreaſe of our grief.

Therefore my words are ſwallowed up. This is an addition to my ſorrows, that I cannot make known my ſorrows. It is a great part of my trouble, that I can tell you but a part of my trouble. Let a man be hindered from expreſſing his grief, either through want of power, or through the reſtraint of power; both wayes grief encreaſes. Some, who have been dying upon cruel Racks, or under bloody tortures, have yet eſteemed this beyond all their tortures, that they might not freely ſpeak out their minds and ſorrows: to have their mouths ſtopt, was worſe to them, then to have their breath ſtopt. It is a pain to be kept from ſpeaking. To command a man to ſwallow or eat down his words, is next to the command of eating and ſwallowing down his own fleſh. The cruelty of a diſeaſe may gagg a man, as well as the cruelty of a Tyrant; ſuch is my grief, that my words are ſwallowed up.

VERS. 4, 5, 6, 7.

For the arrows of the Almighty are within me, the poyſon whereof drinketh up my ſpirit; the terrors of God do ſet themſelves in array againſt me.

Doth the wild Aſs bray when he hath graſs? or loweth the Ox over his fodder?

Can that which is unſavoury be eaten without ſalt? or is there any taſte in the white of an egg?

The things that my ſoul refuſed to touch, are as my ſorrowful meat?

JOB continueth his Reply and his Complaint. He had expreſt the greatneſs of his calamity, by comparing it with the ſand of the ſea for weightineſs; now he proceeds in the ſame ſad aggravation, by comparing it to an arrow for ſharpneſs, and to an army for terribleneſs: For the arrows of the Almighty are within me; the terrors of the Lord ſet themſelves in array againſt me.

We are in this verſe to open a quiver full of poyſoned arrows, and to marſhal an Army full of divine terrors; The arrows of the Almighty, &c.

An arrow is a deadly engine, ſo called in the Hebrew, from its effect, cutting or wounding. Being taken properly, it is an inſtrument ſhot out of a Bow, of wood or iron, either for ſport or fight: But here figuratively. And arrows in Scripture, are taken in a figure divers wayes.

Firſt, For the Word of God, Pſal. 45. 5. Thine arrows are ſharp in the heart of the Kings enemies, whereby the people fall under thee: That is, thy words are ſharp and piercing, whereby thou convinceſt and beateſt down ſin and ſinners, either converting or deſtroying them. The Rider on the white Horſe, going out conquering, and to conquer, (who is conceived to be Truth, or the Word of God triumphing) is deſcribed, with a Bow in his hand, Rev. 2. 6.

Secondly, Arrows are put for the bitter and reproachful words of men, Pſal. 64. 3, 4. & Pſal. 120. 4. They bend their bows to ſhoot their arrows, even bitter words.

Thirdly, For any evil or miſchievous purpoſes, which a man intends or aims to the hurt of his brother, Pſal. 58. 7. When he bendeth his bow to ſhoot his arrows, let them be as cut in pieces. Bending of the bow, notes the preparing and ſetting of miſchief: The arrow ſhot out of this bent bow, is the miſchief acted and finiſhed (Pſal. 2.) The wicked bend their bow, they make ready their arrow upon the ſtring; that is, they prepare miſchiefs againſt their neighbour.

Fourthly, For any kind of affliction, judgment or puniſhment, Zeach. 9. 14. And the Lord ſhall be ſeen over them, and his arrow ſhall go forth as the lightning. Particularly,

1. For Famine, Ezek. 5. 16. When I ſhall ſend upon them the evil arrows of famine.

2. For Peſtilence, Pſal. 91. 5. Thou ſhalt not be afraid for the terror by night, nor for the arrow that flieth by day. What the terror and the arrow are, is explained in the next verſe; which is not an addition of other evils, from which ſafety is promiſed, but an explication of the ſame. The peſtilence that walks in darkneſs, and the deſtruction (being the ſame peſtilence) waſting at noon-day. The meaning of all is, Thou ſhalt be kept or antidoted againſt the Plague both night and day.

3. Thoſe Thunder-bolts and hailſtones, which God ſends out of the Magazine of heaven, and diſcharges in his wrath againſt wicked men, are called the arrows of his indignation, 2 Sam. 22. 15. Pſal. 144. 6. & Hab. 3. 11. compared with Joſh. 10 11.

Further, The arrows of God ſignifie inward afflictions, troubles of the mind and ſpirit; God often ſhoots an arrow, which pierces into the very ſoul. It was ſaid of Joſeph, The Iron entred into his ſoul. And it is (in this ſence) very uſual for the arrows of God to enter into the ſouls of his people (Pſal. 38. 1, 2.) O Lord, rebuke me not in thy wrath, &c. For thine arrows ſtick faſt in me: Where ſtuck they? He means it not of his body haply; the skin of that was not razed. There is an arrow, which touches not the ſides, but ſticks faſt in the ſoul of a Child of God.

Hæret lateri lethalis arundo.

Underſtand it here of the arrows of affliction; and thoſe either external, outward calamities, faſtning in the fleſh of Job; or internal, galling him to the ſoul and ſpirit. Therefore he ſaith, The Arrows of the Almighty are within me, the poyſon whereof drinketh up my ſpirit.

Theſe Arrows are deſcribed in the Text two wayes.

1. } From the { Efficient cauſe. } The Arrows of the Almighty.
2. } From the { Effect, } They drink up my ſpirit.

They are the arrows of the Almighty, Shaddai. Of which word we have ſpoken in the former Chapter, ver. 17. at large, it being one of the names of God, noting out his power and omnipotency; there he calls them the chaſtnings of (Shaddai) the Almighty; and here, The Arrows of (Shaddai) the Almighty.

First, Becauſe they are ſent out from him. His arm bends and draws the Bow. And,

Secondly, Becauſe of the mighty force and ſtrength, in which they are ſent home to the mark. The ſtrength in which theſe arrows come, and the depth of the wound which they make, ſpeak an Almighty arm to draw the Bow. None but an almighty arm can ſhoot an arrow thus deep, up to the feathers in the ſoul and ſpirit. It is not in the power of all the tyrants in the world to ſtrike or ſhoot thus deep. The ſoul of a Saint hath ſuch armour upon it, as no bodily weapon can enter. And therefore the Martyrs, when all was wound in their fleſh, ſpoke and triumphed, becauſe their ſpirits were whole and untoucht. Only a Spirit can ſhoot Arrowes in our ſpirits.

Poetæ deos arcu, jaculis, ſagittiſque armant, intelligentes quas inferunt mortalibus clades, quæ feriunt eminus quod proprium Dei videtur Bold.

We find it frequent among Heathen Poets and others, to deſcribe their gods armed with bows and arrows. And in that they ſhadowed their power to wound the minds of men, and to wound them ſuddenly and ſecretly. The Scripture deſcribes the true God thus, furniſhed with his quiver of arrows, and his bow (Pſal. 7, 13.) He ordaineth his arrows againſt the perſecutors. God hath an arrow for the wounding of his enemies, and an arrow for the wounding of his friends. He hath arrows for both, and both are wounded, with poyſoned fiery arows; yet, with a vaſt difference: theſe are wounded and poyſoned that they may be healed, and they are wounded and poyſoned that they may be deſtroyed.

Arrows are { 1. Swift } Inſtruments.
{ 2. Secret }
{ 4. Killing }

I will make mine arrows drunk with blood (Deut. 32. 42.) They are inſtruments drawing blood, and drinking blood, even unto drunkenneſs; afflictions are like arrows in all theſe properties:

First, Afflictions often come very ſpeedily, with a glance, as an arrow, quick as a thought.

Secondly, Afflictions come ſuddenly, unexpectedly; an arrow is upon a man afore he is aware, ſo are afflictions. Though Job ſaith, the thing he feared came upon him, he looked for this arrow before it came; yet uſually afflictions are unlooked for gueſts, they thruſt in upon us, when we dream not of them.

Thirdly, They come with little noiſe; an arrow is felt, before, or as ſoon as, it is heard; an arrow flies ſilently and ſecretly, ſtealing upon, and wounding a man, unobſerved, and unſeen.

Laſtly, All afflictions are ſharp, and in their own nature killing and deadly. That any have good from them, is from the grace of God, not from their nature.

The poyſon whereof drinketh up my ſpirit.

Quarum indignatio. Vulg. Furor. Sept. Fervor, Tygur, plurimi venenum.

Sagitta ignita, incaleſcens motu.

There's the effect of his afflictions. Some read it, The fury or anger whereof drinketh up my ſpirit. It may be called the fury and anger of an arrow, becauſe the arrow is often ſent in fury and in anger. We read alſo of the fire of an arrow, or of a fierie arrow (Pſal. 76. 4.) There break'ſt thou the arrows of the bow. Arrows even firing themſelves by the ſwiftneſs of their motion.

Caluit, incaluit ira, ſic dicta quod irati incaleſcunt.

The word of the Text is derived from a root, ſignifying to wax very hot, and in the Nown, heat. Hence by a Metaphor it ſignifies anger, becauſe angry men wax hot; Anger is breathed fire (Iſa. 42. 12.) Therefore he hath poured upon them the fury of his anger, and the ſtrength of battel, and it hath ſet him on fire round about. Fire and fury are near in name and in nature. When fury burns within, fire quickly burns without; and ſo by a Metonymie the ſame word ſignifies poiſon; the reaſon is, becauſe poiſons heat and enflame; poiſons enflame the fleſh, and (as it were) ſet the body on fire, or; becauſe an angry man (like an angry Serpent) ſeems to breath out fire, or ſpit poiſon. Paul, before his converſion, breathed threatnings, fire and ſword, againſt the Church, Acts 9. 1. And therefore, either way, the word is well rendred, The anger whereof, or, the poyſon whereof drinketh up my ſpirit. And in the Greek, the ſame word ſignifies anger and poiſon; becauſe of that inflammation which is about the heart of a man throughly angry.

Pſal. 58. 4. Θυμὸς pro ἰὸς. Sept.

Venenatis gravida ſagittis pharetra. Hor. Qui mortis ſævo geminent ut vulnera cauſas. Omnia vipereo ſpicula felli linunt. Ovid. l. 1. de Ponto.

In theſe words, Job ſeems to allude to the cuſtom of cruel ſavage men, who, when they purſued their enemies with deadly hatred, and would wound them to death, uſed to dip the head of their arrows, the top of their ſpears, or the point of their ſwords, or whatſoever weapon they fought with, in poiſon, that ſo every wound might be a death; the poiſon of ſuch an arrow, ſpear or ſword, drinks up the ſpirit, and corrupts the blood preſently. Some poiſon ſtrikes the heart, almoſt as ſoon as the weapon ſtrikes the arm. Job compares the arrows which God ſhot into him, not to ordinary arrows, which kill only by piercing, but, to poiſoned arrows, which kill by infecting; as if God had ſet himſelf to the utmoſt, to pour out the fierceneſs of his indignation upon him; not only ſhooting an arrow, but an arrow dipt in poiſon, ſuch an arrow, as the moſt barbarous and cruel men ſhoot at their moſt profeſſed and mortal enemies.

Drinketh up my ſpirit.] Poiſon gets quickly to the ſpirit, and there drinks; poiſon is ſubtle and ſpiritful, and therefore (if I may ſo ſpeak) incorporates with that which is moſt ſubtle in man, his ſpirit. Flat, pal'd, groſs, or dreggiſh liquor will not quench the fiery thirſt of poiſon; it drinks nothing but pure ſpirits; yet ſome read, It drinketh up my blood; but this amounts to the ſame ſence, for the ſpirit of a living creature is in the blood: the ſpirits ſwim in the blood,

There are different opinions about this ſpirit, or what we are to underſtand by it.

Tot confeſſus vulneribus vix reſpirare valeo. Aquin.

Firſt, Some take ſpirit here, for the breath, or for the act of breathing; as if he had ſaid, I have received ſo many wounds by theſe poiſoned arrows, that I begin to faint, and cannot draw my breath; theſe arrows ſup up my ſpirit, and by wounding, ſtop my breath.

Dolores mei me penitus enervant, atque exhauſto robore dejiciunt. Pined.

Secondly, Others underſtand it more generally, taking ſpirit for his ſtrength and vigor; ſpirits are ſo ſtrong, that they are put for ſtrength. The Egyptians are men, and not God, and their horſes fleſh, and not ſpirit (Iſa. 31. 3.) that is, they are not ſtrength, but weakneſs. So here, It drinketh up my ſpirit, that is, the ſtrength that is in me, all the powers and abilities of body and ſoul, are waſted and conſumed; theſe calamities ſpend upon my ſpirit, where the ſtock of my ſtrength is laid up, or which is the lock wherein my ſtrength lies.

A third apprehends, that by ſpirit, he means his judgment, reaſon and underſtanding; as if he had ſaid, ſhower, and arrows and troubles come ſo thick upon me, that, they even darken my mind, and drink up the ſtrength of my underſtanding; hence I may ſeem to ſpeak diſtractedly, unadviſedly, weakly: I have not that ſpirit to quicken, that ſtrength of reaſon to judge, which formerly I had; the pains of my body diſable and diſtemper my mind; and therefore if I have ſpoken any thing below what I ought, it is, becauſe I am caſt below what I was.

The terrors of God do ſet themſelves in array againſt me.

Arrows and terrors are the ſame thing, in a different cloathing of words; or the arrow is the affliction it ſelf, and the terrour is the effect or conſequent of it. The word here uſed for Terrour, notes the moſt terrible terrour or affrightment. Terrour is the extream of fear, or fear confuſed into amazement and aſtoniſhment: Death is therefore called the King of terrors, becauſe there are ſo many powerful terrors in death, Pſal. 55. 4. That vexation which Saul felt, when God ſent out an evil ſpirit with commiſſion to vex him, is expreſt by this word, 1 Sam. 16. 14. An evil ſpirit from the Lord, troubled, or terrified him: Such terrors, for the matter, ſuch for the manner and preſent workings of them, ſeized upon upright-hearted Job, and falſe-hearted Saul. A believer, a child of God, an heir of heaven, may feel himſelf haunted and pierced with helliſh terrors.

Theſe are called the Terrors of God, either, firſt, By a common Hebraiſm; becauſe great and ſtrange terrors. In that Language, God is often put as an Epithete, to ſhew exceeding greatneſs, himſelf being the greateſt. So chap. 1. 16. Fire of God, &c, Secondly, Terrors of God, becauſe he ſent and commanded that army of terrors. When Jacob journeyed with his little Army, Gen. 35. 5. It is ſaid, The terror of God was upon the Cities round about, and they purſued them not; that is, the Lord ſent an army of terrors to oppoſe the Cities, leſt they ſhould arm againſt Jacob. The terror of man is very terrible, and therefore the Apoſtle arms the Saints againſt it, 1 Pet. 3. 14. Be not afraid of their terror. The terror of God is infinitely greater; and thereupon the Apoſtle argues, 2 Cor. 5. 11. Knowing therefore the terror of the Lord, we perſwade men.

Nomen terroris frequenter in Scripturis ſumitur pro flagellis, maliſq; graviſſimis à Deo miſſis.

Thoſe terrors of God may be taken two wayes; either actively or paſſively; actively, for that work of God, in terrifying and troubling. Thy terrors, that is the terrors which thou didſt afflict me with; or paſſively, for thoſe afflictions which oppreſs the mind; when God leads that army againſt us, ſets it in array to charge, and commands it to encamp about us; in either ſence we may take this of Job, as alſo that of Heman, Pſal. 88. 15. While I ſuffer thy terrors, I am diſtracted.

Further, There is a twofold terror; Firſt, cauſed by outward imminent danger. Secondly, cauſed by inward guilt. Or, Terror comming from the wrath of man, and terror coming from the wrath of God. Thus it was threatned, Lev. 26. 16. I alſo will do even this unto you, I will appoint over you terrors, Deut. 32. 25. The ſword without, and terror within, ſhall deſtroy both the young man and the virgin, that is, fear ſhall kill thoſe who eſcape the ſword. A people cannot ſtand before an Army of men, who are once ſurprized with an army of terrors. Hence, Joſh. 2. 9. Your terror is fallen upon us, ſaith Rahab, to aſſure the ſpies, that the Canaanites could not ſtand before the people of Iſrael.

Again, The terrors of God afflict the ſoul, Firſt, When ſin is ſet openly (to the eye of Conſcience) in array againſt us. An Army of ſins are an Army of terrors. The Church is called, Terrible as an army with Banners, Cant. 6. 10. when ſhe is ſtrengthened and armed for the exerciſe of all that power which Chriſt hath given her; and when our ſins ſtand before us, are in all that ſtrength which the Law hath given them, they alſo are terrible as an army with banners.

Secondly, When God hides his face from us, an army of terrors quickly faces us; though an army of ſins come out in array againſt us, yet if God appear to us, in the fulneſs and freeneſs of his Grace; if Chriſt our Captain will but lead us on againſt this army, we ſhall quickly overcome them, or they will flie before us: But an army of ſins is exceeding terrible, when Chriſt appears not in the field for us, or when God hides his face from us, and leaves us in the dark. It is uſual in Scripture, to ſet forth terrors, as the effect of that darkneſs, and the hidings of the face of God. Naturally, terror accompanies darkneſs; children are afraid in the dark, and not only children, but men. Hiſtories tell us of great Emperors, who durſt not be in the dark for fear. And as natural terrors meet us in natural darkneſs, ſo ſpiritual terrors, in ſpiritual darkneſs: When the light of Gods countenance is clouded, and (as it were) benights the ſoul, then terror takes hold upon us. Under either of theſe notions we may underſtand the terrors of this Text; The terrors of God do ſet themſelves in array againſt me. It was true in reſpect of outward troubles, they were very terrible; but eſpecially in regard of inward troubles; when God ſets his ſins in array before him, or hid his face, and obſtructed the courſe of his wonted communion.

Set themſelves in array againſt me.

Ordinavit, ratione & proportione diſpoſuit, inſtruxit.

The Original imports, a very exact, curious, artificial ordination and diſpoſal of things; as if the Lord had even ſtudied to be exact and exquiſite in afflicting Job, he puts his ſorrows into a method, and his troubles into order. The Providence of God obſerves a rule, and is harmonious in thoſe things which appear to us a chaos, a heap of confuſion.

The word is applied, Firſt, To the ordering of ſpeech or diſputations: There is a kind of embattelling in diſputation, when it is regular and artificial (Job 32. 14.) Now he hath not directed his ſpeech againſt me (ſaith Elihu) concerning Job; As if he ſaid, Job hath not marſhalled his Arguments againſt me, but all the charge hath been upon you.

Secondly, I find the word uſed in reference unto prayer: Prayer ought to be full of holy order and composedneſs (Pſal. 5. 3.) In the morning will I direct my prayer to thee, and look up. In the morning will I put my prayer in array, I will poſture my prayer in a gracious order, my heart in order, and my words in order; every petition ſhall (as it were) keep rank and file, when I am ſeeking unto God: Be not raſh with thy mouth, and let not thy heart be haſty to utter any thing before God, is the counſel of the holy Ghoſt by Solomon, Eccleſ. 5. 2.

But properly, the word is applied to the marſhalling and embattelling of an Army (Jer. 50. 9.) Lo, I will raiſe, and cauſe to come up againſt Babylon, an aſſembly of great Nations from the North-Countrey, and they ſhall ſet themſelves in array againſt her, &c.

So then, whereas Job ſaith, The terrors of God are ſet in array againſt me, he would intimate, that God afflicted him, both orderly and reſolvedly. It was not ſome confuſed terror, or ſudden ſurprizal; but the Lord God, like ſome great Commander or General, muſtered and marſhalled his Army, and led it up exactly form'd to a pitcht battel againſt him.

Obſerve from hence, Firſt, Afflictions come ſometimes by multitudes.

You

Bellum atq; virum.

You ſhall have a whole Army of them together: Sometime we ſee a duel or ſingle combate, one man match with one trouble; here a man and an affliction, there a man and an affliction; but another time we may ſee, a man and an Army (as he ſpake in the ſtory, when one made good a paſs againſt a whole hoſt of the enemy) in the ſpiritual War, one ſoul grapples with a multitude of troubles and conflicts with a thouſand temptations: As there are legions of evil ſpirits, ſo legions of ſpiritual evils aſſaulting at once.

Obſerve Secondly, God ſometimes appears as an enemy to his own ſervants.

The terrors of God, and the arrows of God (ſaith Job) God ſhoots the arrows, and ſets the terrors in array; Job expected favour and ſuccor from God, but he finds terrors and arrows: Thoſe wounds make our hearts bleed moſt, which we apprehend given us from his anger, whom we have choſen as our only friend. The Church had that apprehenſion of God (Lam. 3.3.) Surely againſt me is he turned, he turneth his hand againſt me all the day. The Church ſpeaks as if God were quite changed, as if he having been her friend, were now turned enemy. So Job, I that was wont to have ſhowers of ſweet mercies, ſhot and darted into my ſoul, now feel deadly arrows there, ſhot from the ſame hand; my ſpirit was wont to drink in the pleaſant influences of Heaven; but now poyſon drinks up my ſpirits. I was wont to walk ſafe, under the guard of divine favours, but now divine terrors aſſault me on every ſide.

Obſerve Thirdly, When God appeareth an enemy, man is not able to hold out any longer.

See, how Job (poor ſoul) cries out as ſoon as he found, that theſe were Gods arrows, and Gods terrors. Job was a man at arms, a man of valour, and of an undaunted courage; a man that had been in many skirmiſhes with Satan, and had often, through the power of God, foiled him, and come off with victory, Caldeans and Sabeans, were (indeed) too hard for his ſervants, and conquer'd his cattel, yet the ſpirit of Job beat thoſe bands of robbers, and triumphed over them; but he was never in battel with God before, and perceiving now God himſelf to appear as an enemy in the field, he cries out, O the terrors of God, O the arrows of the Almighty. When God is angry, no man can abide it; (2 Cor. 5.11.) Knowing the terror of the Lord, we perſwade men: We (ſaith the Apoſtle) who have felt by experience, or by faith have underſtood the terror of the Lord: we knowing it experimentally, or knowing it believingly; we being fully perſwaded, that the terror of the Lord is moſt terrible, perſwade men; O take heed you put not your ſelves under the terror of the Lord, or provoke the terror of the Lord againſt your ſelves. Thoſe terrors of the Lord which come from pure wrath, are altogether intollerable: And thoſe which come from love, and are ſet in array by the infinite wiſdom, and gracious providence of God, ordering all things for good (to his) in the iſſue, even thoſe are very dreadful; no man, not the holieſt of men (and they are the ſtrongeſt in this war) are able to ſtand before them; Pſal. 38.2. Thine arrows ſtick faſt in me, and thy hand preſſeth me ſore, there is no ſoundneſs in my fleſh by reaſon of thine anger: that is, I am as a man, who hath not a whole piece of skin all his body over, all is a wound; or I am as one, whoſe fleſh is all rotten by reaſon of his wounds. As Ely ſpeaks to his ſons, 1 Sam. 2.25. If one man ſin againſt another, the Judge ſhall judge him; but if a man ſin againſt the Lord, who ſhall intreat for him? So, we may ſay on the other ſide, if man contend with man, ſome one may help him, he may have a Second to relieve him; but if once a man be contending with God, who will be his Second? who will undertake for him? who can come in, to the reſcue, when God is fighting and contending with us? We wraſtle not againſt fleſh and blood (ſaith the Apoſtle, Epheſ. 6.12. when he would ſhew, what a terrible thing it is to wraſtle with the Devil) but againſt principalities and powers, againſt ſpiritual wickedneſſes in high places. Fleſh and blood is no match for a Spirit, though a created Spirit, though an unclean Spirit, a Devil; how then ſhall fleſh and blood be able to wraſtle with the creating Spirit; with him, who is a moſt holy Spirit; with God, who is The Principality, The Power, The High, The Strong, The Almighty, Shaddai. In other battels it is man with man, or at worſt, man with Devils; but here it is man with God, weakneſs and frailty, contending with Omnipotency: and therefore when once God appears againſt the ſoul, the ſoul can hold out no longer; His anger, who is the Spirit, quickly drinks up our ſpirits.

Tanto pœna intolerabilior, quanto ſpiritus corpore ſubtilior.

Do not think that the ſoars upon Job's body, fetcht all theſe complaints from him. He ſhews you now, what it was that made him complain indeed; The arrows of the Almighty are within me, the terrors of God ſet themſelves in array againſt me. As the joyes and exultations of the ſpirit do infinitely exceed all the pleaſures which come in from the ſenſes, all bodily pleaſures: ſo the troubles and afflictions, which are upon the ſpirit, infinitely exceed all the troubles and afflictions which fall upon the body. As God hath ſuch comforts, ſuch joyes to beſtow upon his people, as the world can neither give nor take away; ſo likewiſe, he hath terrors and troubles, which all the world is not able to remove or mitigate: There are no medicines in the whole circuit of nature, that can heal a wounded ſpirit; All your friends, all your relations, all your riches, yea all your natural wiſdom, will be but as the white of an egg to your taſte, in the day when God ſmites the heart with theſe terrors.

Theſe arrows and terrors, are often preparatory to converſion; when ſome men are over-come to receive Chriſt, an Army of terrors is ſent out, to take them captive, and bring them in. There are many (I grant) whom God wounds with love, he ſhoots an arrow of favour into their hearts, and overcomes them with Troops of mercies. Again, an Army of terrors is ſent out to try the holy courage of thoſe, who are converted, as well as to conquer the unholy enmity of perſons unconverted. That was Job's caſe here, and theſe ſecond Armies may be as terrible to the ſoul as the firſt, and often are more terrible. And (we have ſuch caſes) a man that was converted without an Army of terrors, may have an an Army of terrors ſent againſt him after converſion. The diſpenſations and methods of God are various, though both his rule and end be ever the ſame: But whether this Army of terror comes before converſion, or after converſion; whenſoever it comes, it muſt needs diſtreſs the ſoul exceedingly. A broken ſpirit is very comfortable, but a wounded ſpirit is very dreadful; Of a wounded ſpirit we may ſay, as I remember the Moraliſt ſpeaks, concerning thoſe barbarous naked fights, among the Romans, when men fought naked with men, or naked with beaſts; ſurely (ſaith he) all the former fights and battels, were ſports and mercy to theſe: So all other troubles, all other terrors, are pleaſures and recreations to theſe: When you come to this bout, when God ſends theſe arrows, and arrayeth ſuch an Army of terrors againſt you, Fire and Sword, Stone and Gout, are, yea Hell it ſelf, (to preſent apprehenſion) is a pleaſure: Many under thoſe aſſaults, have thought they ſhould gain by the exchange, and have wiſhed to be in Hell, ſo they might be out of thoſe terrors.

Quicquid ante pugnatum eſt, miſericordia fuit. Sen.

Few believe this, but they who have had experience of it. As the joyes of the ſpirit, ſo the terrors of the ſpirit, are ſecrets unto moſt: As the Prophet ſpeaks concerning thoſe carnal ones in his time. If one propheſie unto them of wine and ſtrong drink, he ſhall even be the Prophet of this people. To propheſie, or to ſpeak unto ſome of riches, and of honour, and of pleaſure, they find ſome taſte in theſe things, this is wine and ſtrong drink unto them. There is ſome reliſh in theſe things, they underſtand what you mean; but if you ſpeak unto them of joy in the Holy Ghoſt, of peace of Conſcience, of the refreſhings which are had in communion with Chriſt; they underſtand not the language, they know not what is meant. So, on the other ſide, if you would be a Prophet, or ſpeak, or preach to ſome of Fire and Sword, of ſpoiling and plundering their Eſtates, preach to them of Plague and Peſtilence, preach to them of the Gout, and of the Stone, of burning Fevers, and languiſhing Conſumptions, they underſtand theſe and are afraid, they even tremble to hear you ſpeak of theſe things: but preach to them of the arrows of the Almighty, ſhot into the ſpirit, and of the terrors of God ſet in array againſt them; preach to them of trouble of Conſcience, and the hiding of Gods face; they ſmile at theſe things, they wonder what you would have, they know no ſuch matters. Spiritual good or evil, is ſeldom known till felt, yea neither of them is known (to purpoſe) till it is felt: Spiritual troubles are as little known, till felt, as ſpiritual joyes are: The natural man perceives none of the things of God, he cannot know them, becauſe they are ſpiritually diſcerned: And there is as much ſpiritualneſs evidenced in diſcerning ſpiritual ſorrows and afflictions (our own or others) as there is in diſcerning our own or others ſpiritual joyes and conſolations.

I ſhall add a word here to thoſe, who live ſecurely, in, or dally with their ſins: Surely, if Job here in the Text; if David often in the Pſalmes, and Heman (Pſal. 88. 15.) cryeth out, While I ſuffer thy terrors I am diſtracted; If theſe cryed out thus of the terrors and arrows of God, then (I ſay) Sinners and ſecure ones, what will you do, when God bends his bow, opens his quiver, and ſhoots his arrows at your naked breaſts? What will you do, when God ſhall bring up Armies of terrors to charge upon you, when you hear a Job thus crying out of terrors? How ſad will it be with you, who ſhall be a terror to your ſelves, as Paſhur was threatned, Jer. 20. 4. and God a terror to you likewiſe? What will you do, when there is fear round about, and fear within? The ſinners in Zion are afraid, fearfulneſs hath ſurpriſed the hypocrites; who among us ſhall dwell with the devouring fire? Who amongſt us ſhall dwell with everlaſting burnings? Iſa. 33. 14. If they who have a ſhield of faith to keep off theſe arrows, and a rock of ſalvation, Jeſus Chriſt, to hide themſelves in, when theſe Armies come to battel againſt them, are thus afraid; what will become of you, that are unarmed? of you, naked ones? of you, who have no ſhield, no ſhelter, no faith, no Chriſt?

Magor Miſſabi.

One thing more. Foraſmuch, as there are ſuch arrows and terrors ſent by God, even againſt his own, for their trial; take heed of making arrows againſt your ſelves; take heed you be not found to raiſe and prepare an Army of terrors, againſt your own ſouls. All the while men ſin, knowingly and preſumptuouſly, they ſhoot arrows againſt God, and God may take thoſe arrows and ſhoot them back into their breaſts; he can make their ſins recoyl upon themſelves, and pierce their own hearts with the works of their own hands. Men muſter (as it were) whole Armies of terrors, and levy a bloody war againſt themſelves by wilful ſinnings. That Text, Pſal. 50. 21. telleth us, that God will bring the ſins of wicked men, as an Army againſt them; I will reprove thee, and ſet thy ſins in order before thine eyes; It is the ſame Hebrew word, we have in the Text, I will ſet thy ſins in array before thine eyes; as if he ſhould ſay, thou thoughteſt all thy ſins were ſcattered and diſperſt, that, there was not a ſin to be found, that they ſhould never be rallied, and brought together; but I aſſure thee, I will make an Army of thoſe ſins, a compleat Army of them, I will ſet them in rank and file before thine eyes, and ſee how thou canſt behold, much leſs contend with ſuch an hoſt as they. Take heed therefore you do not levy war againſt your own ſouls; that's the worſt of all civil or inteſtine wars. If an Army of divine terrors be ſo fearful, what will an Army of black helliſh ſins be? When God ſhall bring whole Regiments of ſins againſt you, here a Regiment of oaths, there a Regiment of lies, there a third of falſe dealings, here a Troop of filthy actions, and there a Legion of unclean, or prophane thoughts, all at once fighting againſt thy life, and everlaſting peace?

Significat quaſi diſtinctio ordine bellico apparatu catalogum omnium ſcelerum proponere.

Laſtly, You that have never felt theſe arrows, nor ſeen any of theſe Armies, and yet God hath been pleaſed to diſcover to you his love in his Chriſt, ſee what cauſe you have to bleſs God: Or if you have at any time felt them, and are now again at peace; and if thoſe terrors are removed, and the poyſon of thoſe arrows ſucked out, and the heads of the arrows drawn out; bleſs God. Do you not hear how Job complains of arrows and of terrors? The arrows of the Almighty are within me, poyſon whereof drinketh up my ſpirit; the terrors of God, do ſet themſelves in array againſt me.

Verſ. 5. Doth the wild Aſs bray when he hath graſs? Or loweth the Ox over his fodder? &c.

The three verſes following contain ſimilitudes, taken from nature, by which Job tells on the ſtory of his ſorrows, and juſtifies his complaint. The ſence in general is this, as if he had ſaid, I do not cry out without cauſe; I ſhould be more unreaſonable then bruit beaſts in ſo doing, The wild Aß doth not bray, when he hath graſs, &c. Or thus, We blame not beaſts, if they complain, when they have cauſe: take away graſs from the Aſs, and fodder from the Ox; Pinch them with hunger, and they will tell you of it in their language, they will low and bray, till you underſtand they want meat: Therefore ſurely you have no reaſon thus to find fault with me, or to charge me ſo heavily, becauſe I have complained, when my graſs and fodder, my comforts and my neceſſaries are taken from me: Nor is it any wonder, if you complain not, who have contentments to the full, and know not (by experience) what ſorrow meaneth.

Doth the wild Aſs bray, when he hath graſs?

The Hebrew word for a wild Aſs, comes from a root, ſignifying, To bring forth: and the reaſon is given, becauſe wild beaſts uſually are more fruitful, and bring forth more plentifully then the tame. The word alſo notes wild in general; and is applied to wild and ſavage men, who delight in wild beaſts, or wild places, Foreſts and Wilderneſſes. So (Gen. 16. 12.) God ſpeaks of Iſhmael, whom Hagar bear unto Abraham, that he, ſhould be A wild man, that is, wild among men; or as a wild Aſs among men, ſtrong and active, delighting in Fields and Foreſts.

Doth the wild Aſs (ſaith Job) bray, when he hath graſs? When the Aſs hath meat, he is quiet; you hear not of him: but if he wants graſs, he brayes, and makes a diſmal noiſe, (Jer. 14. 6.) The wild Aſſes did ſtand in the high places, they ſnuffed up the wind like Dragons, their eyes did fail, becauſe there was no graſs; ſpeaking of a time of drought and famine; the wild Aſs is very impatient, both of hunger and of thirſt. And therefore the Rivers are (by name) aſſigned to them for drink, Pſal. 104. 10, 11. He ſendeth the ſprings into the valleyes, which run among the hills: they give drink to every beaſt of the field; the wild Aſſes quench their thirſt. Hence wild Aſſes are obſerved by natural Hiſtorians to delight in, and frequent Rivers and Springs.

To which that prophane fiction of the Roman Hiſtorian (in abuſe of the Jews) hath relation; who ſpeaking of the travels of the Iſraelites, through the wilderneſs, tells us (to obſcure the miracle, which God wrought for them) that they being ready to die with thirſt, at laſt eſpied a company of wild Aſſes upon a rock: which advantage Moſes took, and preſently followed them, knowing that they would lead him to the waters, if any were to be had in thoſe parts. In purſuance of which Lie, Plutarch affirms, that the Jews worſhiped an Aſs, as a Deity, which they had in ſpecial honour and veneration, for that famous deliverance. Upon this ſtock of Lies, the Heathen grafted that uſual ſcorn againſt the Chriſtians, That they worſhipped the head of an Aſs; as that great Aſſertor of the Chriſtians honour againſt Heatheniſh cavils and helliſh imputations, hath obſerved.

Cornelius Tacitus, l. 21.

Plutarch, l. 14. Convivaliū Queſtionū. queſt. 5.

Tertul. adverſ. Gentes, cap. 16.

But, that is a harmleſs and a witty obſervation (how ſolid I leave the Reader to judge) which hath been hinted from this natural thirſtineſs of the wild Aſs: namely, that the Lord gave Samſon water out of the jaw-bone of an Aſs, Judg. 15. 19. thereby advancing the miracle, that a dead bone of that thirſty creature ſhould be made a ſpring of water to revive him, who was ready to dye with thirſt.

The intendment of this digreſſion, is only to clear up the Text, by ſhewing that the wild Aſs is moſt fitly inſtanced in, to ſhew the great cauſe which Job had to cry out as he did, of his afflictions; foraſmuch as the wild Aſs (who is ſo greedy of graſs and thirſty after the waters) will not bray for either, till he is afflicted with the want.

Or loweth the Ox over his fodder?

This carries the ſame meaning with the former inſtance; that being in wild creatures, and this in tame: as if Job had ſaid, look amongſt all ſort of cattel, wild or tame, you ſhall find they are content, when they have food convenient for them. And hereupon grounds his argument, that if brutes led only by ſenſe and appetite, complain not without reaſon, then ſurely he at leaſt a reaſonable creature, had reaſon to complain, or elſe he had not complained.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, Brute beaſts complain not without cauſe.

They complain not till want provokes them. Surely, men are more then brutiſh, who complain when they have no want: But moſt of all, They, who are not content with abundance. Some are diſcontent, not only, though they have daily bread, and (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks) Food and raiment (wherewith all ſhould be content) but though they have ſtore of bread and cloathing laid up for many years. Shall not the Ox or Aſs condemn theſe, who bray and low not when they have graſs and fodder plenty, when they ſtand continually at rack and manger? By whom ſhall theſe men be accuſed think you? We ſhall not need to ſend for the Angels out of Heaven, to witneſs againſt them; no, we may call the wild beaſts and bid them be witneſs: we may empannel a Jury of Aſſes and Oxen to paſs a verdict upon ſuch men. As God upbraids his people in caſe of their ingratitude for mercies, The Ox knoweth his owner, and the Aſs his Maſters crib; and (Jer. 8.7.) in caſe of their neglect of judgments, The Stork in the Heavens knoweth her appointed times, and the Crane, and the Turtle, and the Swallow, obſerve the time of their coming, but my people doth not know the judgment of the Lord. As if the Lord had ſaid, whither ſhall I go to fetch witneſs againſt this people? ſhall I go up to Heaven for Angels? or call in men out of other Nations? No, I need go but to the Air for birds, for the Turtle the Crane, and the Swallow; any thing in nature will ſerve to condemn them, who act againſt, or below the dictates of Nature. Men are worſe then beaſts, when they do worſe. Their preheminence of conſtitution is loſt in the baſeneſs of their actions; and they put themſelves by ſo much inferior to beaſts, by how much they were placed above them. The Pſalmiſt charges it ſadly upon himſelf, that he walked in the ſphear of a beaſt, So fooliſh was I and ignorant, I was as a beaſt before thee (Pſal. 73.22.) How ſadly then ſhall they be charged, who walk in a ſphear below beaſts, who are more fooliſh and ignorant, then a beaſt? Take heed of complayning without cauſe; if beaſts are ſatisfied with what is agreeable to nature, man ſhould be ſo, much more; When Nature hath not enough, Grace hath all. Grace will not bray or low, when there is no graſs, no fodder: ſurely then they have a ſcarcity of grace in their hearts, who bray and low over their graſs and fodder. Spiritual accommodations will make a good heart forget temporal incommodities; and it is reaſon they ſhould. God promiſeth (Iſa. 30.20.) Though I give you the bread of adverſity and the water of affliction, yet thy Teachers ſhall no more be removed into a corner, but thine eyes ſhall ſee thy Teachers. As if had ſaid, though your bodies are courſely fed, yet your ſouls ſhall be feaſted; Good chear ſhall daily be ſerved into them, both at your eyes and ears, Thine eyes ſhall ſee thy Teachers and thou ſhalt hear a voice behind thee. Thy ſight and thy hearing ſhall be refreſhed with heavenly Meſſengers, and good news from Heaven. Now beſides this promiſe expreſt, there is a duty implyed in the Text, namely, that becauſe their ſpirits were ſo well fed, therefore they muſt not complain, though their fleſh come ſhort in feeding; The bread of affliction ſhould be pleaſant to us, while we eat Goſpel-dainties. In theſe times God gives more plenty of ſpiritual food then formerly, yet many complain, becauſe their natural bread is ſhortned; remember beaſts complain not, when they have what is ſutable to nature; then let not Chriſtians complain, when they have what is ſutable to grace, though nature have but ſpare diet, and ſhort commons.

Verſ. 6. Can that which is unſavoury be eaten without ſalt.

He proceeds to another ſimilitude. It is, as if Job had ſaid, Nature will complain, when it wants meat; yea oftentimes Nature will complain, when it wants pleaſant meat. Nature is not pleaſed, if it want a grain of ſalt; if it have not ſauce, it is not ſatisfied. Therefore, ſurely I am to be born with, and not to be charged thus deeply, who complain, when you offer me that which is unſavoury, when you give me meat without ſalt, without ſauce, without any thing to render it either pleaſing to my palat, or eaſie to my diſgeſtion: Unleſs I were ſenceleſs like a ſtock or a ſtone, how ſhould I not diſ-reliſh and diſguſt ſapleſs, ſaltleſs, how much more, bitter things?

Can that which is unſavoury.] The word, which we render unſavoury, is the ſame uſed, Chap. 1. verſ. 22. which we there opened at large; Job did not charge God with folly or fooliſhly, or he ſpake not unſavourily of God.

There is a Three-fold application of that word in Scripture.

First, To unpleaſant meats.

Secondly, To untempered morter.

Thirdly, To indiſcreet ſpeeches, which want the ſeaſoning either of wit, wiſdom, or of truth, Lam. 2.14. Thy Prophets have ſeen vain and fooliſh things for thee; Lying viſions without truth, vain words without wiſdom. So here, Can that which is unſavoury be eaten without ſalt?

Seaſoning makes unſavoury things ſweet; As ſalt gives a reliſh to meat, ſo wiſdom and wit to words. And therefore the Latines expreſs wiſe, witty ſpeeches, pleaſant diſcourſe, a good grace in ſpeaking, and ſalt, by the ſame word.

Sales, pro facetiis, quod ſint quaſi condimentum ſermonis, Literæ Sparſæ ſale humanitatis. Cicer, ad Artic.

There is another Interpretation of that word, which we render without: for ſome underſtand it, not as a Prepoſition, governing the word Salt, but as a compound word, noting the oldneſs or ſtaleneſs of meat, wherein the very Salt it ſelf is putrified; and ſo, whereas we ſay, Can that which is unſavoury be eaten without ſalt? They tranſlate thus, Can that which is unſavoury through the corruption of ſalt be eaten? Or, can that meat be eaten, which having been ſalted, is now putrified? Salt which keeps meat from corruption, may in time be overcome with the corruption of the meat. And a learned Interpreter gives the reaſon why he rather chuſeth this Interpretation of the word, becauſe (ſaith he) it carries a ſtronger Emphaſis with it; Job ſpeaks as of a thing, (in a manner) unpoſſible to be done; now, it is very poſſible to eat unſavoury meat without ſalt? A good appetite will down with unpleaſant food, and hunger will diſpence much with Cookery. But when ſeaſon'd or ſalted meat corrupts and putrifies, whoſe ſtomack doth not loath and abhor it? Therefore it is a fuller and a more flat denial to ſay, Can that which is unſavoury through the corruption of ſalt be eaten? then to ſay, Can that which is unſavoury be eaten without ſalt?

מבלי. Eſt præpoſitio abſq; ſive. Sed quidam accipiunt pro nomine expoſito ex Min, quod eſt, ex & Beli, à Balab, quod eſt vetuſtas. Hinc locum reddunt Infatuatum ex vetuſtate ſalis, potius quam inſipidum abſq; ſale. Bold. Job rem præ horrore prorſus impoſſibilem vult ſignificare; Numquid comedetur, &c. At impoſſibile omnino non eſt comedere inſipidum ſine ſale, carnes autem corruptæ ex vetuſtate ſalis manducari nullatenus poſſunt. Bold.

Or is there any taſte in the white of an Egg?

Theſe words are much obſcured, by moſt Tranſlators, and have found almoſt as many expoſitions, as Expoſitors. Some tranſlate thus, Is there any taſte in that, which being taken, brings death? So the Vulgar; doubtleſs a man hath but little pleaſure to taſte that, which taſted, will be his death: So the words are an aggravation of the unſavourineſs of thoſe things, which were offered him by his friends; to touch or take them, was to take poiſon, or to drink in a deadly cup.

בריר חלמות An poteſt aliquis guſtare quod guſtatum affert mortem? Vulg.

To clear up this Expoſition, they make the Hebrew word (Challamuth) which we tranſlate, Egg, a compound from Muth, ſignifying to die, whence Maveth, death, and Chala, ſignifying froth or foam, or from Chali, ſignifying infirmity; as if the word having theſe parts put together, had this ſence, The froth and foam of death; Or, The infirmity of death: That is deadly froth or deadly infirmity, as if he had ſaid, is there any pleaſing taſte, in the ſpittle of dying men, who, we know often foam and froath at their mouths, when they lie drawing on.

Others thus, Is there any taſte in the ſpittle of a healthy man. The word (Rir) which we tranſlate white, ſignifies ſpittle or froth. As when David acted the mad-man before the King of Gath, it is ſaid, that he let his ſpittle fall down upon his beard, 1 Sam. 21.13. And the word which we tranſlate, Egg, ſignifies Health, and the Verb, to be healthy, Chap. 39.4. of this book, Their young ones are in good liking. So Iſa. 38. verſ. 16. But I leave this, as a very diſeaſed and ſickly interpretation.

I ſhall therefore paſs from theſe, to our own rendering,

In albumine vitelli.

Is there any taſte in the white of an Egg? The word ſignifies ſtrictly, but the yolk of the Egg, ſo Mr. Broughton, Is there any taſte in the white of the yolk? And in the root, to wax fat or ſtrong; and it is therefore taken for the yolk of the Egg, becauſe that is the fatter, groſſer, and more condenſe part of the Egg. As the white being the thinner, and much like ſpettle, is therefore expreſt by a word, which alſo ſignifies ſpettle.

The white of an Egg, is an emblem of things without taſte or ſavour. And ſo the ſum of all is, that Job in this place by a Proverbial ſpeech (for ſo I take this to be) intends only thus much, that he had very inſipid taſteleſs things preſented to him; ſuch as he found no reliſh at all in, ſuch as no way raiſed his appetite or quicken'd his ſtomach to receive them; all were unſeaſoned and flat. In the next word he goes yet higher, even to the higheſt Antipathy againſt them.

Verſ. 7. The things which my ſoul refuſed to touch, are as my ſorrowful meat.

Here is the Application and Explication of both the former ſimilitudes, The things which my ſoul refuſed; that is, the things which I exceedingly refuſed or abominated: (The ſoul is here taken for the Appetite) as to deſire with the ſoul, notes a ſtrong intention of deſire (Iſa. 26. 9.) With my ſoul have I deſired thee in the night, yea with my ſpirit within me will I ſeek thee early. That is, I have moſt vehemently deſired, and in my moſt retired thoughts ſought the Lord; When the ſoul is expreſſed to do that, which nothing can do but the ſoul, it imports the higheſt actings of the ſoul in doing it. To deſire with the ſoul, implies the ſweeteſt delight; and ſo to refuſe with the ſoul, implies the bittereſt averſation, a refuſal to the uttermoſt. The word, refuſe, is proper to the nauſeating of the ſtomach, at the ſight of any filthy thing (Iſa. 30. 22.) Thou ſhalt defile the covering of the graven images, &c. Thou ſhalt caſt them away as a menſtruous cloth, thou ſhalt ſay unto them, get ye hence. So here, the things which my ſoul refuſeth, as a man refuſes a filthy clout, or, as he ſhould refuſe that which is more loathſom then any filthy clout, an Image, or an Idol.

Anima, τὸ ἐπιθυμητικὸν, partem, ſcilicet animæ, qua concupiſcimus, notat hoc loco.

Theſe things (ſaith he) are now my ſorrowful meat, or, the meat of my ſorrow. The terms of this latter clauſe are at fartheſt diſtance from, and oppoſition with that which went before. Not to touch a thing, notes the greateſt averſation from it; and to have a thing given us as meat, notes our greateſt communion with it. That which a man will not touch with his finger, how far is he from chewing it between his teeth, or letting it down into his ſtomach, and digeſting it into himſelf? So that Job's meaning ſeems to be this, that, what he deſired to be the greateſt ſtranger from, was now offered to his neareſt familiarity and acquaintance: He was now (as it were) to eat, what before he would not touch. This we call ſorrowful meat. Pſal. 127. 2. We read of the bread of ſorrow, that is, bread gotten with ſorrow, bread eaten with ſorrow, or, courſe bread; as bread of pleaſure (Dan. 10. 3.) is fine bread: here ſorrowful meat is either unpleaſant meat, or any meat eaten in that time of his ſorrow.

That relative (the Things) is not in the Hebrew, and ſo we may render word for word thus, My ſoul refuſeth to touch them as my ſorrowful meat: Or as another, My mind refuſes to touch them; theſe are plainly the very ſickneſs of my meat. As if he had ſaid, I am ſo far from being refreſhed with theſe things, that (the truth is) they make my very meat, and ſo my whole life unpleaſant to me.

Mr. Broughton varies the latter clauſe, Thoſe things which I have loathed to touch, are now the very ſickneſs of my fleſh. The word (Lechem) which we tranſlate meat, or prepared fleſh, ſignifies alſo living fleſh, in the Syriack and Arabick Languages, as the learned Grammarians obſerve: Beſides, we render the word (Lechem) fleſh, Zeph. 1. 17. Their blood ſhall be poured out as duſt, and their fleſh as dung. Hence he tranſlates, Theſe things are to me as the ſickneſs of my fleſh; that is, the things which my ſoul refuſed to touch, are now brought very near, and laid cloſe upon me, as ſickneſs or ſoars cleave unto, and are in the fleſh, or they trouble me as much as the ſickneſs of my fleſh.

The right application of theſe words, is as difficult as the tranſlation of them; there are divers wayes to make out the ſence; I ſhall reduce them unto two: Either, Firſt, That all theſe unſavoury, taſteleſs, ſorrowful meats which Job ſpeaks of, are but the ſhadows of his afflictions and troubles, received from the hand of God. Or, Secondly, That they are ſhadows of the councels and reproofs, which he had received from the mouth of his friends.

Firſt, Some refer and apply all to the troubles which were upon Job: and ſo theſe words are a fuller juſtification of himſelf, that he had great cauſe to complain, becauſe his graſs and fodder, that is, comforts ſutable to mans nature (as they to a beaſts) were taken from him, and he was now fed and dieted with unſavoury meat, meat without ſalt, the white of an egg, diſtaſtful, grievous afflictions, very gall and wormwood; The things which heretofore my ſoul refuſed to touch, are as my meat; I am put (as it were) to feed upon that, which I would not willingly come near: poverty and ſoars, ſorrows and worms are my companions, and my cates.

Nauſeabam ego quondã ad cujuſmodi ærumnas movebant mihi ſtomachũ ſqualor paupertas, vilior cibus ulcera, ſanies, vermes nunc ve[illegible] his ipſis [illegible] unde paſcor. Pined.

From that ſence Note, What at one time we loath, at another time may be our diet.

We have a ſaying, What is one mans meat, is another mans poyſon; but it may fall out to the ſame man, that what he diſguſted and avoided as poiſon, he ſhall be conſtrained to receive for his meat and portion, Lam. 4. 5. They that did feed delicately, are deſolate in the ſtreets; they that were brought up in ſcarlet, embrace dunghils? When thoſe gallants were in ſcarlet, how did their ſouls loath to touch a dunghil? they loathed to touch it with their feet, but now they muſt hug it in their armes, and lay it in their boſoms; they embrace dunghils. How many have been brought from faring deliciouſly, from wearing purple and fine linnen every day, to ſcraps and rags, to hunger and nakedneſs every day. The Lord threatens the nice delicate dames of Jeruſalem with ſuch things, as their proud ſpirits and haughty ſouls refuſed to touch, Iſa. 3. 24. It ſhall come to paſs, that inſtead of ſweet ſmell, there ſhall be a ſtink; and inſtead of a girdle, a rent; and inſtead of well ſet hair, baldneſs; and inſtead of a ſtomacher, a girding with ſackcloath; and burning inſtead of beauty. Take heed of coyneſs and curioſity: many a dainty tooth hath been taught by hunger, to knaw bones, and wait for a cruſt of bread.

Secondly Obſerve, That which makes afflictions moſt grievous to us, is the unſutableneſs of our ſpirits to afflictions: Delight and content, conſiſt in ſutableneſs of the object to our affections and deſires.

God offers ſpiritual food to the natural man, but his ſoul refuſes to touch it: he loaths Angels food, and is weary of the Manna of the Word; the precious Goſpel, the bread of life, is an affliction to him, becauſe his heart is unſutable to it; how will ſuch be afflicted at the laſt, when they find, That, as their ſorrowful meat for ever, which their ſouls will for ever refuſe to touch. They, who loath Chriſt and his wayes, ſhall find nothing in the end to feed upon, but what is moſt contrary to their appetite, even fire and brimſtone, and an horrible tempeſt; theſe ſhall be the portion of their cups, and the meat in their diſh for ever. How ſorrowful will that meal be?

But we may rather apply all to the words of Eliphaz, in the two former Chapters: and Job's ready ſubmiſſion in the firſt and ſecond Chapters, to the afflicting hand of God, argues for him, that afflictions, how grievous ſoever, were not the things which his ſoul refuſed to touch. And the apprehenſion of a learned Interpreter ſatisfies me in it; This ſence (ſaith he) is too low for a man afflicted with troubles far above theſe, which concern'd his outward man. The Septuagint are expreſly for this opinion, who tranſlate thoſe words, Is there any taſte in the white of an Egg? thus, Is there any taſte in vain words? they are ſo far off the judgment that theſe unſavoury things, the things which Job's ſoul refuſed to touch, and the white of the Egg, in the Text, are all meant of vain words, that they put it into the very Text. It is a uſual boldneſs with them, and a very unwarrantable one, to vary ſo from the words of the Original, and make their gloſs the Text; but it ſhews us, how ſtrongly they were engaged to that ſence: Moſt of the Greek Writers concur with them in it, viz. that Job aims at the counſels and ſpeeches of Eliphaz, which wanted the ſeaſoning of wiſdom and prudence, yea of truth and ſoundneſs, as applyed to the ſpirit of ſo ſick a man, as Job was.

And beſides, many Modern writers are clear in the ſame apprehenſion, giving the ſum of all plainly, to this effect, as the mind of Job in thoſe fore-going paſſages; I would not have complained of the things which ye have ſpoken, if they had been meat for me, but I aſſure you, your counſels are not nouriſhing: I can find no food, much leſs any ſweetneſs or fatneſs in them; your counſels want the due ſeaſoning of wiſdom, and the right temperament of holy zeal: They are either unſavoury, or taſteleſs, ſapleſs ſtuff; ſuch, as I am ſo far from being refreſhed with, that indeed they are a burden to me; and the remedy you preſcribe me, is worſe then my diſeaſe. How can you expect, that I ſhould ſubmit or ſubſcribe to what you have ſpoken, or that I ſhould reſt and acquieſs in your reproofs or advice, ſeeing I aſſure you, they are not for me, they hit my ſtate or ſpirit no more, then unſavoury meat doth my pallate; or that which I abhor to touch, can pleaſe my taſte. And therefore, with my ſoul, I refuſe and reject what you have ſpoken; and you have not only not ſatisfied me all this while, but you have vext or tyred me, and in ſtead of mitigating my ſorrows, have added to them.

Tantū abeſt ut ſermonibus veſtris recreor, aut eorum condimento reficiatur vita mea, ut è contra cibū ipſum mihi amariorem vitamq; injucundiorem reddunt. Jun.

But an objection ariſes againſt this; and one of the Ancients is very angry with thoſe, who make this application to the counſels of Eliphaz, as if Job had rejected them as unfit food, and unſavoury meat. Let no man (ſaith he) think that this holy man deſpiſed the counſel of his friend, who himſelf was humble, as a ſervant.

Abſit ut vir ſanctus, aliquando amicorum ſuorū dicta deſpexerit, qui & humilis ſervus fuerit. Greg.

To which I anſwer, That the counſels of Eliphaz, are to be conſidered, either in the doctrine, or in the uſe. His counſels, in the doctrine of them, were good and ſavoury, he ſpake wholſom food; but as to Job's caſe, he was quite miſtaken in their uſe, and ſo in ſtead of eaſing, troubled him. A Phyſician may give his ſick Patient, that which is good in it ſelf, very cordial and ſoveraign, and yet it may kill him in ſtead of curing him, if it be not proper for his body, and his diſeaſe. Thus it is alſo in giving counſel: what we ſpeak, muſt be fitted to the perſon, and to the ſeaſon; there are many good counſels, of which we may ſay, as Huſhai did of Achitophels ill ones, 2 Sam. 17. 7. They are not good at this time. That which is good counſel to a man at one time, may be, or might have been, ill, to the ſame man at another. I have many things to ſay, ſaith Chriſt, but ye cannot bear them now, Joh. 16. 12. And that which one man can bear, another cannot at the ſame time. And therefore the Apoſtle was made all things to all men, 1 Cor. 9. 2. And accounted himſelf debtor, both to the wiſe, and to the fooliſh, to the learned and unlearned, to the weak, and to the ſtrong; that is, he looked upon it as his duty, to ſpeak truths, ſuiting the ſtate of every degree and ſort of men; which is the meaning of his rule to all the diſpenſers of holy myſteries, that they divide the word aright: The rightneſs reſpects, not only, or not ſo much the ſubject or word divided, as the object, or perſons to whom the diviſion is to be made, in giving every one his portion, or food convenient for him. One man may ſurfet with that which another digeſts kindly; what fattens a ſecond, may ſicken or ſtarve a third. This plainly is the meaning of Job; what Eliphaz had ſaid was not ſavoury food for him, nor dreſt for one in his condition: His ſoul did even refuſe to touch, what he ſpake, becauſe his ſoul was not of that temper, for which Eliphaz had fitted his ſpeech; he was a Phyſician of no value to him, becauſe he brought a wrong potion, and miſtook his caſe; his was good ſearching Phyſick for the foul ſtomach, and groſs ſpirit of a hypocrite: but it is enough to kill the heart of an upright-heart, when God ſeems angry with him, and appears againſt him, when he is ſmitten without, and ſmitten within, by ſore afflictions of mind and body; then for his comforters to ſmite him with their tongues, to lay at him with hard words, and wound him with their unreaſonable jealouſies, then for his councellours and helpers to be angry with, and oppoſite againſt him too.

Obſerve hence, That, not only words untrue, but words miſapplied, are unſavoury, and may be dangerous.

They are no food, and they may be poyſon: Prudence in applying, is the ſalt and ſeaſoning of what is ſpoken. As a word ſpoken in the right ſeaſon is precious, and upon the wheele, ſo is a word right placed: When that faithful Prophet (Ezek. 13.) reproves the falſe prophets, he ſaith, They daubed with untempered morter, ver. 10. It is the word of the Text: and why was theirs untempered morter? even, becauſe they applied the word of God wrong. They made ſad the hearts of thoſe, whom God would have refreſhed; and they cheared the ſpirits of thoſe, whom God would have ſadned; they ſlay the ſouls that ſhould not die, and ſave the ſouls alive that ſhould not live. This was untempered morter: The Apoſtle adviſes all, Col. 4. 6. Let your ſpeech be alwayes with grace, ſeaſoned with ſalt. And ſpeech muſt be ſeaſoned, not only with the ſalt of truth, but with the ſalt of wiſdom and diſcretion: and therefore the Apoſtle adds, that ye may know how to anſwer every one; that is, that you may give every man an anſwer, fitting his caſe, and the preſent conſtitution of his ſpirit. Of ſome have compaſſion (ſaith the Apoſtle Jude ver. 22.) making a difference, and others ſave with fear. This ſhews the holy skill of managing the word of God, when we make a difference of our patients, by different medicines, and not ſerve all out of the ſame box. Hence our Lord calleth thoſe great Teachers of the Goſpel, and Diſpenſers of his Oracles, Light and Salt; Ye are the Light of the world, and ye are the Salt of the earth; becauſe they were to ſpeak ſavoury things to every perſon, to every palate, as well as to enlighten them with knowledge, and prevent or cure the corruption of their manners, and keep their lives ſweet. As there is an unſavourineſs in perſons, when they are miſimployed; ſo there is an unſavourineſs in ſpeeches, when they are miſ-applied. The Hiſtory of the Church, ſpeaks of one Eccebolius, who changed religion ſo oft, and was ſo unſetled, that at laſt he caſt himſelf down at the Congregation door, and ſaid, Trample upon me, for I am unſavoury ſalt. And that word (though in it ſelf a truth) which is unſeaſonably delivered, or unduly plac'd, may be caſt at the doors of the Congregation, to be trampled on, for (in this ſence) it is unſavoury ſalt: Such corrupt the word, and theirs is but corrupt communication, ſuch as cannot miniſter grace unto the hearers, and often grieves the Holy Spirit of God. Theſe work-men, for their ill diviſion of the word of God, have reaſon enough to be aſhamed; and the Lord may juſtly reprove them, as he did Job's friends, Chap. 42. 7. Ye have not ſpoken of me (nor of my wayes) the thing that is right.

Conculcate me ſalem inſpidum. Niceph.

VERS. 8, 9, 10.

O that I might have my requeſt! and that God would grant me the thing that I long for!

Even that it would pleaſe God to deſtroy me, that he would let looſe his hand and cut me off.

Then ſhould I yet have comfort, yea, I would harden my ſelf in ſorrow; let him not ſpare, for I have not concealed the words of the Holy One.

IN the former part of this Chapter, we have had Job defending his former complaint of life, and his deſire of death. In this Context, from the 8. verſ. unto the end of the 12. he reneweth and re-inforceth that deſire. He not only maintains and juſtifies what he had done, but doth it again; begging for death as heartily and importunately, as he did in Chap. 3. O that I might have my requeſt! and that God would grant me the thing that I long for.

The requeſt it ſelf, is laid down in verſ. 8, 9. and the reaſons ſtrengthning it, in verſ. 10, 11, & 12. So theſe 5. verſes are reduceable to theſe two heads.

Firſt, The renewing of his deſire to die.

Secondly, An inlargement of reaſons confirming that deſire.

O that I might have my requeſt!

It is ſuch a vehement deſire, and ſo expreſt, as David's was, 2 Sam. 23. 15. And David longed, and ſaid, O that one would give me drink of the water of the well of Bethlem, which is by the gate. David did not more long to taſte a cup of that water, then Job did to taſte the cup of death.

The ſum and ſcope of Job's thoughts in this paſſage, may be conceived thus. He would aſſure his friends, that his faith was firm, and his comforts flowing from it, very ſweet; that it was not impatience under the troubles of this life, but aſſurance of the comforts of the next; which cauſed him ſo often to call for death. That, theſe comforts cauſed his heart to triumph and glory in the very approaches of the moſt painful death, and made him deſpiſe, and lightly to eſteem all the hopes of life. That, he was gone further then the motives which Eliphaz uſed, from the hopes of a reſtitution to temporal happineſs: he now was pitcht upon, and lodg'd in the thoughts of eternal happineſs. That, he call'd for death, not, as that, with which he had made any Covenant, or was come to any agreement with; but only, as that, which would bring him to his deſired home, The one Thing he deſired. That his comforts had not their foundation in a grave: where all things are forgotten, but in the Covenant of God, who remembers mercy for ever; and therefore it ſhould not trouble him, to die, before he was reſtored to health, riches and honour (which his friends propoſed to him) as a great argument of comfort and of patience. For in death he ſhould have riches and glory; and hence it was, that he had rather endure the extreameſt pains of death, then ſtay to receive any outward comforts in this life. His deſires to be diſſolved, were not ſo much, from the ſence of his preſent pain (for he would harden himſelf to endure, yet more) as from the apprehenſion of future joy; this, was not a phanſie or a dream, but he had good proof, and real evidence of it in the whole courſe of his life, which had been as a continued acting of the word of God, and ſo a fitting him for neareſt communion with God. This in general.

The letter of the Hebrew runneth thus, Who would give me, that my requeſt, or that my petition might come? He had ſent up a requeſt, a prayer, a prayer for death, and he thought his prayer too long gone, upon that meſſage; Prayer was not quick enough in its return from Heaven, every hour was a year till he heard of it; therefore (ſaith he) O that ſome body would give me, that my requeſt might come back again unto me: The word whereby he expreſſes his requeſt, notes a very ſtrong deſire, a ſtrong cry, a ſtrong prayer; implying, that Job had ſent up mighty requeſts, or ſtrong cries about it. As it is ſaid of our Lord Chriſt, Heb. 5. That in the dayes of his fleſh, he ſent up ſtrong cries unto God, who was able to deliver him; Chriſt ſent up ſtrong cries to be delivered from death, and Job ſent up ſtrong cries for death. A word of the ſame root, ſignifies the grave; the grave is a craving, a begging thing; the grave is never ſatisfied, as it is in the Proverbs; The grave ſaith not, it is enough: And the grave is therefore expreſt by a word that ſignifies to deſire, or requeſt, or to ask a thing importunately; becauſe the grave, hath a mouth, as it were, continually open to ask, and beg, and cry out for more morſels, it conſumeth all, and is never full; ſuch a deſire Job put forth for death.

And that God would grant me the thing that I long for.

It is a repetition of the ſame deſire, in other words. What it is to long, hath been opened in Chap. 3. verſ. 21. Who long for death: Here Job reneweth the ſame ſuit again, O that I might have the thing that I long for, or the thing which I expect with great expectation and vehemency of affection! I ſhall not ſtay upon it: But only give you the general ſence a little varied.

In this paſſage, Job ſhews himſelf aſſured, that his comforts ſhould not end, though his life ended, before he was reſtored to earthly comforts. And he thus ſeems to anſwer Eliphaz, who had made large promiſes of outward felicity. I am not ſtayed at all in my deſire to die, becauſe I may poſſibly live in greater worldly honour and fulneſs, then ever I enjoyed: All that is in the creature, is below my longing, I have not a ſweet tooth after worldly dainties: I ſhall not envy any, who out-live me to enjoy them; let them divide my portion, whatſoever it may be, among them alſo: The thing which I long for, is death (not for it ſelf) but as that, which will bring me to the laſt of my ill dayes, and the firſt of my beſt. Job's thoughts were in a higher form then his friends: They thought a golden offer of riches, would have made him agogg to live. But Job's heart lived above theſe, even upon the riches of eternal life: To enjoy which, he even longs for temporal deſtruction, and cutting off.

Job expectationem proximam facit mortē tanquam eā, quæ patiendi ultimam & quietis ac fœlicitatis primam repræſentet lineam.

I have ſpoken at large in Chap. 3. concerning the lawfulneſs of ſuch a requeſt, and how far Job might be approved in it; therefore I need not diſcuſs it here.

Only Obſerve in general, That, A praying ſoul, is an expecting ſoul.

Job had prayed, and prayed earneſtly, and though it was but a prayer to die, yet he lived in the expectation of an anſwer. When prayer is ſent up unto God, then the ſoul looks for its return. Prayer is as ſeed ſown: After this ſpiritual husbandry, the ſoul waits for the precious fruits of Heaven, Pſal. 62. 1. My ſoul waiteth upon God; and (Pſal. 85. 8.) I will hearken what the Lord God will ſay; Job had ſent up his requeſt, and now he was hearkning for an anſwer, O that I might have the thing I look for! Habbakkuk in the ſecond of that Prophecy, verſ. 1. having prayed about the great concernments of thoſe times, reſolves, I will ſtand upon my watch, and ſet me upon the Tower, and will watch to ſee, what he will ſay unto me. They who ſend Embaſſadors to forraign Princes, wait for a return. Thus it is with the ſoul, having put up its requeſt and ſent an Embaſſie to God.

Obſerve Secondly, Anſwer of our prayer is the grant of God.

Nothing ſtands between us and our deſires, but his will. If he ſign our Petition, no creature can hinder us of our expectation.

Obſerve Thirdly, God often keeps the Petitions of his ſervants, by him unanſwered.

Obſerve Fourthly, The return of prayer is the ſouls ſolace and ſatisfaction.

As cold water to a thirſty ſoul, ſo is good news from that far countrey, Prov. 25. 25. O that my requeſt might come, and O that I might have the thing that I long for!

Would you know what his requeſt was? He explains that in verſ. 9. And a man would wonder, that one ſhould be ſo very earneſt to have ſuch a requeſt. Many have prayed to God to ſave and deliver them, but how unnatural doth this prayer ſeem, to be cut off and deſtroyed? Yet the thing which Job doth more then pray for, long for, is this, That it would pleaſe God to deſtroy him, and that he would let looſe his hand and cut him off.

That it would pleaſe God to deſtroy me.

Some read, that he who hath begun, would make an end in deſtroying of me; For the word ſignifies both to be willing to do a thing, and likewiſe to begin to do a thing; therefore they make out the ſence thus, That he who hath begun thus to deſtroy me, to tear and conſume me, would finiſh his work, and make an end of me; As if Job had ſaid, I am already near unto deſtruction, a borderer upon the grave. God hath begun to deſtroy me, I would have him to go on and perfect that work. As in works of mercy, Deut. 32. 4. He is the Rock, and his work is perfect. When he begins to deliver, he will make an end. So likewiſe when he begins to deſtroy, he can make an end too; Job deſires, that his afflictions might be perfected, to the deſtruction of his dying body, and that mercy might begin in the triumph of his ſoul.

But rather, take it in the other ſence, as we render it, To be willing to do a thing; Even that it would pleaſe God, or, even that God would be willing to deſtroy me: As if he had ſaid, I find as it were a kind of unwillingneſs in God, to make an end of me, his bowels ſeem to yern over me, he ſeems yet to be upon the diſpute, whether to cut me quite off, or no: now I even deſire that God would lay aſide that his tenderneſs and compaſſion, that he would determine and reſolve to deſtroy me, that he would acquieſce, and fully reſt ſatisfied in that reſolution.

The word here uſed, to deſtroy, notes to beat a thing to powder, or to beat a thing to pieces, Pſal. 143. 3. He hath ſmitten my life down to the ground, that is, he hath beaten me as it were to dirt. So Job here, I would have the Lord even beat me to duſt or dirt. The word is uſed for contrition of ſpirit, Iſa. 57. 15. I dwell with him that is of an humble heart, and of a contrite ſpirit; that is, with him, that hath a ſpirit beaten to powder, or all to pieces, as any hard thing is with a hammer or peſtle; A hard heart is a heart all in a lump, condenſate, and cloſed together; but an humble, a repenting heart, is a heart beaten ſmall and ground to powder; Thus Job deſires here, O that it would pleaſe God to beat my life down to duſt, and break me all to ſhatters!

ſhatters! that he would cruſh me (as Eliphaz ſpake in Chap. 4. verſ. 19.) as a Moth.

Obſerve then in how ſad a contrition, Job was, who not only makes, but renews, ſuch a requeſt, as this. Some upon a ſudden pang, wiſh to die, and haſtily call for death; yet are willing it ſhould take it's own time, and come leiſurely: and as ſoon as death appears, they are crying as hard for life. It is rare for any mans ſecond thoughts, to keep up, to ſuch deſires. Job ſpake once, and he ſpeaks it over again; O that I might die! yea, he wooes deſtruction, and is an importunate ſuiter for the grave. How ſad is a mans outward condition, when he hath only this complaint left, that he cannot die? when a man hath no help, but in deſtruction, or healing, but in a deeper wound? Job in this appears like a man (that is to be preſſed to death) lying under a heavy weight, yet the weight not heavy enough to cruſh him to death, he cryes out, more weight, more weight. It will be a kindneſs to cruſh out my breath and bowels; the greateſt favour I expect in this world, is, but to have more weight laid upon them, that I may die. Some of the Martyrs, when the fire was ſcant, have cried out, more fire. The cruelleſt flame was their friend, and the more the fire raged, the more merciful it was to them. The Book of our Martyrs reports of reverend Latimer, that when he was giving witneſs to the truth, and glorifying the Name of Chriſt in the fire; he cried out, Oh, I cannot burn! the fire came not faſt enough upon him. Such, this expreſſion of Job ſeems to be, Oh, I cannot die, I cannot die, I cannot be deſtroyed, I cannot periſh yet; O that the hand of God would lay more weight upon me, that I might die! He ſeems to ask ſuch a curteſie, as that Amalekite ſaid, King Saul craved of him, 2 Sam. 1. 9. Stand I pray thee upon me, and ſlay me: for anguiſh is come upon me, becauſe my life is yet whole in me. This is the favour, the only favour, that remains for me. I am capable of no worldly comfort, but a quicker diſpatch out of the world.

And that he would let looſe his hand, and cut me off.

Loco movit, evulſit, excuſſit.

Here is the ſame Petition, though other language, That he would let looſe his hand. That's an elegant expreſſion; the word ſignifies to looſe the bond, that a man may have uſe of his hands or feet: As priſoners are looſed, Pſal. 146. 7. The Lord looſeth the priſoners: So that, it is, as if Job had ſaid, Lord, thou haſt been ſmiting and wounding me, but I ſee thou haſt not given thy hand the full ſcope, thy hand is as it were bound or tied behind thee: As you know, a man that hath great advantage of another, or is much his overmatch, will ſay to him, I will fight with thee with my hand tied behind me. The truth is, God is able to contend with all the creatures, with his hand bound behind him, with his hands faſt bound, that is without putting forth the leaſt part (to ſpeak on) of his power; he can overcome with ſpeaking: Job obſerving here that God contended with him (as it were) with his hands bound or tied up, deſires now, that, God would give himſelf full ſcope, and put out his ſtrength, and not ſtrike, as if his hand were a priſoner. And he may have a reſpect in ſpeaking thus to the reſtraint or binding up of Satans power; In this work Satan was Gods hand; God put power into the hand of Satan, All that he hath, is in thy power, or in thy hand, Chap. 1. 12. Firſt, God looſned Satans hand, to take away his eſtate. Next, he let looſe his hand a little further, to the afflicting of his body; but ſaith God, ſpare his life; there he bound up his hand again. Now Job alluding (probably) to that reſtraint; Lord (ſaith he) looſen thy hand a third time, do not only looſen it, to take away my eſtate, to take away my health and ſtrength; but O that thou wouldſt looſen it, to take my life too! enlarge I pray thee, Satans Commiſſion, who is thy hand, let it quite looſe, that he may make an end of me, and cut me off.

The word here uſed to cut-off, comes up to heighten Job's ſence ſtill, ſignifying to cut off, with an unſatiable appetite of revenge; as if he ſhould ſay, cut me off, ſpare me not, ſpare not my blood; do it, as they who are moſt greedy of blood, and thirſt moſt vehemently for revenge. Let Satan that blood-ſucker, come with as great revenge (thy hand being looſened from reſtraining his) as ever the greateſt Tyrant haſtned with, to ſuck the blood of innocents; Let him greedily cut me off, even as it were to have ſome great gain, or get ſome rich booty by my blood; What profit is there in my blood? (ſaith David, Pſal. 30. 9.) Let him make what profit he can of my blood, ſaith Job. The word ſignifies to covet or deſire gain; and it notes the worſt kind of covetouſneſs, covetouſneſs of filthy lucre, or covetouſneſs of bloody lucre. Hence Job ſaith, Let God cut me off, as if he were to have profit, or raiſe himſelf a revenew out of my blood; or let Satan come upon me, and take his peny-worths out of my blood; let him murder me, as if he were to find all manner of treaſure in my bowels, and could thence fill and adorn all his chambers of darkneſs with ſpoyl. We may Note from hence,

Avidè me abſumat, quaſi ex mea morte ingens lucrū reportaturus.

Firſt, That, God diſpenceth and acteth his power as he pleaſeth.

He looſeth his hand gradually, as to him ſeemeth good. Firſt, To the eſtate, then to the body, and when he will, he can reach the life.

Secondly Obſerve, If God put out his power, no creature can ſtand before it.

If God do but let looſe his hand, man is cut off preſently; it is but as a little twig, or as graſs before the ſithe, or before a ſword, there is no more in it. As when God openeth the hand of his mercy, he ſatisfieth the deſire of every living thing, Pſal. 145. 2. So when God looſeth the hand of his judgments, he takes away the life and comforts of every living thing. God hath a hand full of bleſſings and mercies; if he pleaſe but to open that hand, all things are filled with comfort: God hath another hand full of judgments and afflictions; if he open or looſen that, all creatures fall before him, like a withered leaf. The reaſon why the enemies of God live and are mighty, is, becauſe God doth not fully looſen his hand againſt them: if he would but unpriſon his power, and let out his hand, he can with eaſe deſtroy, and cut them off in a moment. Therefore the Prophet prayes but for this one thing, Pſal. 74. 11. That God would pluck his hand out of his boſom; Why with-draweſt thou thy hand, even thy right hand? pluck it out of thy boſom: Lord (ſaith he) this is the reaſon, why enemies yet prevail, thy hand is tied up; that is, thine own act hath tied up thy hand, thy will ſtayes thy power, or thy power is hid in thy will. Gods power kept in by his will, is his hand in his boſom. Among men, a hand in the boſom, is the emblem of ſloth, Prov. 19. 24. Man hides his hand in his boſom, becauſe he will not be at the pains to work: God is ſaid to hide his hand in his boſom, when it is not his will and pleaſure to work; therefore he ſaith, Lord, if thou wouldſt but let looſe, and put out thy hand, all mine enemies ſhall be conſumed. And that's the reaſon, why there are ſuch various diſpenſations of providence in theſe times; when the enemy prevails, God with-draweth his hand, he keepeth his hand in his boſom. And when at any time, his ſervants have victory, it is, becauſe his hand hath liberty. If God holds his hand, men ſtretch forth theirs in vain.

Thirdly Obſerve, Aſſurance of a better life will carry the ſoul with joy through the ſorrows and bittereſt pains of death.

It was not any Stoical apathy, or ignorant regardleſneſs of life, which raiſed the heart of Job to theſe deſires. He did not invite his end, like a Roman, or a Philoſopher, or by the height and gallantry of natural courage, ſet the world at nought, and bid defiance to deſtruction: But he had laid up a good foundation againſt this day; upon this he builds his confidence. He knew, as Paul, that he had Chriſt, while he lived, and ſhould have gain, when he dyed. The joy which was ſet before him, made him over-look the croſs, which was before him. So much of his requeſt, now he tells us the conſequence, or effect, it would have upon him, in caſe it were granted.

Verſ. 10. Then ſhould I yet have comfort, yea, I would harden my ſelf in ſorrow; Let him not ſpare, for I have not concealed the words of the Holy One.

Then ſhould I yet have comfort.] If I had but this ſuit granted, I were refreſhed, notwithſtanding all my ſorrows, the very hope of death would revive me. Nothing doth ſo much refreſh the ſoul, as the hearing of a prayer, and the grant of a deſire; When deſire cometh, it is as a tree of life, (ſaith Solomon) therefore Job might well ſay, when my longing comes, I ſhall have comfort; and leſt any ſhould think, that as David would not drink the water, he ſo longed for, when it was brought unto him; ſo, when the cup of death ſhould be brought to Job, he might put it off ſomewhat upon thoſe terms, which David did, and ſay, I will not drink it, for it is my blood, my death; therefore he adds, Yea, I would harden my ſelf in ſorrow.

As if he had ſaid, though ſome call haſtily for death, and repent with as much haſte, when death comes, yet not I, I would harden my ſelf, &c.

The Hebrew (to harden) hath a threefold ſignification among the Jewiſh Writers, though it be uſed but this once only in all the Scripture. And hence there is a threefold interpretation of theſe words, I would harden my ſelf in ſorrow. It ſignifies,

1. To pray or to beſeech.
2. To heat or to warm; yea, to ſcorch and to burn.
3. To harden or to ſtrengthen; ſtrengthning is hardning in a Metaphor.

According to the firſt ſenſe, the Text is rendred thus, Then ſhould I yet have comfort; yea, I would pray in my ſorrow, that is, I would pray yet more for an encreaſe of my ſorrow, that I might be cut off: If I had any hope, that my requeſt ſhould be granted, this hope would quicken my deſire, and I would pray yet more, that I might obtain it.

Hac ſpe certiſſima moriendi incaleſcerem, reſocillarer.

Secondly, As the word ſignifies to warm or to heat, the ſence is given thus, Then ſhould I have comfort, yea, I would warm my ſelf in my ſorrow. And ſo it refers to thoſe refreſhings, which his languiſhing ſoul, his ſoul chilled, as it were, with ſickneſs and ſorrows ſhould receive, upon the news of approaching death. This news (ſaith he) would be as warm cloaths to me, it would fetch me again, out of my fainting, to hear of dying. But, beſides a warming or a refreſhing heat, the word alſo notes ſcorching, burning heat. Mr. Broughton takes that ſignification of the word; I ſhall touch that, and his ſence upon it, by and by.

We tranſlate according to the third uſage of the word. I would harden my ſelf; and ſo the conſtruction is very fair, I ſhould yet have comfort; yea, I ſhould harden my ſelf in ſorrow, that is, I would now ſet my ſelf to endure the greateſt ſorrows and afflictions which would come upon me, for the deſtroying and cutting off the thred of my life. And ſo, he ſeems in theſe words, to prevent an objection before hinted; Why Job, doſt thou deſire to be cut off, and to be deſtroyed? thou haſt more pain upon thee already then thou art able to bear; thou crieſt out of what thou haſt; thou muſt think, when death comes, thy wound will be deeper, and thy pain ſharper: Job ſeems to anſwer, I have conſidered that before, I know there will be a hard brunt at parting; I prepare for it, and I am thus reſolved, I would harden my ſelf in ſorrow; that is, I would ſet my ſelf to bear the pangs and agonies of death, if I had but this hope, that my miſery were near expiring. The Apoſtle uſeth that phraſe (2 Tim. 2. 3.) in his advices to young Timothy, Thou as a good Souldier of Jeſus Chriſt, endure hardneſs, or bear evil. As if he had ſaid, thou doſt not know, what hardſhip thou ſhalt be put unto in thy Miniſtry; I, who am a Veterane, an old beaten (though never conquered) ſouldier, in this warfare of Chriſt, have been put to much hardſhip in my time; and from my own experience I adviſe thee, to enure thy ſelf to hardſhip, to lie hard, to fare hard, to work hard, to hear hard words, and receive hard uſage. A tender ſpirit, and a delicate body, which muſt have warm, and ſoft, and fine, and ſweet continually, is unfit for the warfare of the Goſpel. Such a ſence is here, I know I muſt endure more then now I do, but I would harden my ſelf againſt that time, and reſolve to endure it; let come what could come, I am reſolved, and have forethought the worſt.

Further, For the clearing of theſe words, it is conſiderable, that ſome learned Interpreters put the two middle expreſſions into a Parentheſis, and read the whole thus; I ſhould have comfort (though I ſhould ſcorch with pain, and though God ſhould not ſpare me) for I have not concealed the words of the holy One. One thus; This yet is my comfort, even while I ſcorch with pain, and God doth not ſpare me, that I have not concealed the words of the holy one. Mr. Broughton (as I touched before) comes near this ſence and tranſlation. So I ſhould yet find comfort, though I parch in pain, when he would not ſpare; for I kept not cloſe the words of the moſt Holy. That is, when the long expected hour of my death ſhall come, though God, to take away my life, ſhould heat the furnace of my affliction ſeven times hotter then hitherto, ſo that I muſt parch in pain, yet, I ſhould have comfort. Or, take it in Mr. Broughton's own gloſs, In all theſe pangs, if God would make an end of me, it ſhould be my comfort, and I would take courage in my ſickneſs, to bear it, by my joy, that I ſhould die, becauſe I profeſſed the Religion of God. So that the ſtrength of Job, to bear the hand of God, was from the conſcience of his former integrity, in doing the will, and maintaining the truth of God.

Junius.

Let him not ſpare.

Job having taken up this hope, that he ſhould have comfort; and this reſolution, that he would harden himſelf in ſorrow, ſpeaks now as if he were at a point; let God do what he pleaſeth, let him not ſpare; as if he had ſaid, what courſe ſoever the Lord ſhall ſee good to take for the cutting me off, I am content he ſhould go on with it, Let him not ſpare. The word ſignifies, to indulge or ſhew mercy to him, whom, by all right, a man might juſtly deſtroy, (Ezek. 5. 11.) Becauſe thou haſt done thus and thus, ſaith God, therefore will I alſo diminiſh thee, neither ſhall mine eye ſpare, neither will I have any pity: Job ſeems to invite, what God threatens others; Let him not ſpare, let him not have any pity, let him take his full ſwinge in deſtroying of me.

In this ſence it is ſaid, Rom. 8. 32. That God ſpared not his own ſon; that is, he abated not any thing which Juſtice could inflict; Chriſt therefore ſaves to the uttermoſt, becauſe he ſuffered to the uttermoſt. He was not ſpared one blow, one drop, one ſigh, one ſorrow, one ſhame, one circumſtance of all, or any one of theſe, which Juſtice could demand, as a ſatisfaction for mans ſin. Yea, though (in a ſence) he cried to his Father, that he might be ſpared, yet he was not.

There is a threefold mercy in God. There is a preventing mercy, mercy that ſteps between us and trouble; and there is a delivering mercy, mercy that takes us out of the hand of trouble: There is a third kind of mercy, coming in the middle of theſe two, and that is called ſparing mercy; and that is twofold: Firſt, Sparing for the time, when God delayes and ſtayes long ere he ſtrike. Secondly, Sparing for the degree; when the Lord moderates and mitigates, abates and qualifies our ſufferings, not letting them fall ſo heavy upon us as they might: This ſparing mercy ſtands (I ſay) in the middle of the two former; it is not ſo much as preventing mercy, ſtopping trouble that it come not; neither is it ſo much as delivering mercy, removing it, when it is come. Now, Job did not only, not ask delivering mercy, that he asked not ſparing mercy; let him not ſpare me in the time, let him not delay or loſe time, let him come as ſoon as he will; and let him not ſpare me in the degree and meaſure; let him ſtrike me as hard, and lay his hand as heavily upon me as he will. David (Pſal. 39. 13.) makes this his requeſt; O ſpare me, that I may recover ſtrength, before I go hence, and be no more; That is, abate and mitigate my ſufferings, that I die not; but Job deſireth not to be ſpared at all. He rather ſaith, take away all my ſtrength, that I may go hence, and be ſeen no more. Hence obſerve,

> That, The hope troubles will end, comforteth, yea, hardneth in bearing preſent troubles.

Then will I comfort my ſelf, then will I harden my ſelf, let him not ſpare, if I may have my requeſt, and die. The ſharpeſt ſting of trouble is, that it is endleſs: and that it is next to that, when we cannot look to the end of it, nor ſee any iſſue or way out of it. That which diſcourages the damned in bearing their ſorrows, and ſoftens both their fleſh and ſpirit, to receive home to the head every arrow of wrath, and dart of vengeance, is, they ſee no end, and are aſſured there will be none. They know, they cannot be cut off, and therefore they cannot harden themſelves to ſorrow; no, that very conſideration, makes their hearts, which have been hardnend to commit ſin, tender to receive puniſhment, and exactly ſenſible of their pains; could they ſee, that at laſt they ſhould be cut off, even they, would be hardened to bear the torments of hell; in the mean time, though that time ſhould be very long, yea, as long as time can be, only not endleſs. The pain it ſelf doth not afflict ſo much, as the thought that they ſhall be afflicted for ever. As the aſſurance that the glory of heaven ſhall never end, infinitely ſweetens it; ſo the aſſurance that the pains of Hell ſhall never end, infinitely ſharpens them: And not to ſee the ending of worldly troubles near, puts us further off from comfort, then the bearing of thoſe troubles; therefore, ſaith Job, if I might be aſſured, that God would cut me off, I would harden my ſelf in ſorrow, and let not God ſpare; I would not deſire him to hold his hand, to mitigate or abate my pains *. Yea, I would account every blow an embrace, and every wound a reward.

* Et hæc mihi merces eſſet ejus ſeu pro eo, quod non occultavi unquam, ſed diligentiſſimè obſervavi & quam commendatiſſima habui verba Domini, Opin. nonnullorum Hebræorum apud Merc.

For not concealing the words of the holy One.

In theſe words, Job gives the reaſon, or an account of his renewed prayer and requeſt to die. As the deſire of Job was ſtrong and paſſionate, ſo likewiſe it was well-grounded. He had a very high reaſon, an excellent ground, upon which he bottom'd this requeſt to die: His reaſon was ſpiritual, and therefore ſtrong. He begs to be delivered from the troubles of his life, though by a painful death, becauſe he was clear in himſelf, that he had led a blameleſs life. That which ſet him above the pains of bodily death, was the tranquility of his ſpirit in this teſtimony of his conſcience. I have not concealed the words of the holy One. As if he had ſaid, You may wonder why I ſhould be ſo forward and ready to die, why I ſeem ſo greedy after the grave, why I am ſuch an importunate ſuiter for my diſſolution; the account I give you, is this, I have the teſtimony of a good conſcience within me, notwithſtanding all the troubles which are upon me, notwithſtanding all your harſh, unfriendly accuſations, jealouſies and ſuſpitions of me, yet my own breaſt is my friend, my heart ſpeaks me fair, and gives me good words, even theſe; it tells me that I have not concealed the words of the holy One, that I have not ſmothered any light he hath ſent me; that I have not refuſed any counſel he hath given me; that I have not wilfully departed from any rule he hath preſcribed me; that I have been faithful to God, to his Cauſe, and to his Truth; that I have declared his will, and ſpoken his mind to others; that I have not hidden any thing that he hath given me in charge to declare, or committed to my truſt; the word of God hath appeared in my life, and therefore I am not afraid; yea, I have boldneſs to die, and to appear before God.

But may we not conceal the words of the moſt High? It is ſaid of Mary, that ſhe hid the words of Chriſt in her heart; and of David, that he hid the Commandments of God in his heart, Pſal. 119. 11. Did not the wiſe Merchant hide the treaſure, namely, Goſpel-truth (Mat. 13. 44.) as ſoon as he had found it? It ſhould ſeem all theſe concealed the word of God; how then is it that Job improves this, as a ſpecial point of comfort, that he had not concealed the words of the holy One?

There is a double hiding or concealment of the truth. There is firſt, a hiding from danger. Secondly, a hiding from uſe. There is a hiding to keep a thing ſafe, that others ſhall not take it from us; and there is a hiding to keep a thing cloſe, that others may not take the benefit of it, with us. When it is ſaid that Mary and David, and the wiſe Merchant hid the word of God, it was, leſt they themſelves ſhould loſe it, leſt any ſhould deprive them of it, they hid it from danger; they laid it up as a treaſure in their hearts; but they did not hide it from the knowledge, or uſe of others: and that is it which Job affirms of himſelf; I have not concealed the words of the holy One.

And there are four wayes by which the word of God is ſinfully hid or concealed, from all which Job ſeems to acquit himſelf.

The firſt is, When we conceal the word of God by our own ſilence; when we know the word and truth of God, and yet we draw a vail over them, by not revealing them: The Apoſtle Paul (Acts 20. 27.) acquits himſelf in this, to the Church of Epheſus, I have not ſhunned to declare unto you the whole counſel of God; and, v. 20. You know how I have kept back nothing that was profitable unto you. Silence to what is ſpoken, is conſent; and ſilence when we ſhould ſpeak, is concealment.

There is a ſecond way of concealing the word of God, and that is by ſilencing others. Some conceal the words of the holy One themſelves, and they cannot endure that others ſhould publiſh them. The chief Prieſts and Rulers, (Acts 4. 18.) charged Peter and John, that they ſhould not ſpeak at all, nor teach any more in the name of Jeſus. They would ſtop the Apoſtles mouths from ſpeaking the words of the holy One. Theſe keep the truth lock'd up (as Chriſt chargeth the Lawyers, (Luke 11. 52.) by taking away the key of knowledge,

Thirdly, There is a concealing of the word of God, under falſe gloſſes and miſinterpretations, or a hiding of it under errors and miſconſtructions. This is a very dangerous way of concealing the words of the holy One. The Phariſees made the Law of God of none effect by their expoſitions, as well as by their traditions; by the ſence they made of it, as well as by the additions they made unto it.

Fourthly, The word of the holy One may be concealed in our practice and converſations. The Apoſtle exhorts (Phil. 2. 16.) To hold forth the word of life in a pure converſation. The lives of Chriſtians ſhould publiſh the word of life. The beſt way of preaching the word, is by the practice of the word. The wrath of God is revealed from Heaven againſt all ungodlineſs and unrighteouſneſs of men, who hold the truth in unrighteouſneſs, that is, who by their unrighteous practices, and ungodly converſations, impriſon, fetter, reſtrain and keep in the word. Mans holy life is the loudeſt proclamation of the word of God; and a ſinful life is the concealment of it.

Job here acquits himſelf from all theſe concealments; I have not concealed the words of the holy One, either by my own ſilence, or by impoſing ſilence upon others; I have not concealed the word of the holy One, by my own corrupt gloſſes or interpretations, nor by a corrupt practice or converſation; I have deſired and endeavoured, that the whole word of God might be viſible in my actions, and audible in my ſpeeches, that I might walk cloathed, as it were, with the holy counſels and commandments of my God.

There is a reading of the words, different from this. Whereas we ſay, I have not concealed the words of the holy One, that gives it thus, I would not conceal the words of the holy One; and ſo the word of the holy One, is taken, not for the truths of God in general, but for that ſpecial word of decree or ſentence which God ſhould paſs out againſt him; As if he had ſaid, Let not God ſpare me, let him write as bitter a ſentence againſt me, as he pleaſeth, for my part, I would not conceal the word of the moſt high, but I would publiſh his judgment and ſentence againſt me; yea, I would praiſe him and extol him for it. The Vulgar Latine to this ſence, I would not contradict the word of the holy One; Let him not ſpare me, for as for my part, whatſoever God ſhall determine and reſolve, whatſoever word God ſhall ſpeak concerning me, I will never withſtand or open my mouth againſt it. This is a truth, and carries in it a high frame of holineſs; when we can bring our hearts to this, that let God write as bitter things againſt us as he pleaſeth, we will never contradict his word or decree, but our minds and ſpirits ſhall ſubmit wholly and fully to his diſpoſitions of us, and diſpenſations towards us. It is as clear an evidence of Grace to be paſſive under, as to be active in the word of God; not to contradict his writ, for our ſufferings, as not to conceal what he ſpeaks for our practice. But I rather ſtick to the former interpretation, Job giving this as a reaſon of his great confidence in purſuing his petition for death, becauſe he had been ſo ſincere, holding forth the word of God both in doctrine and in life. And ſo we may obſerve from it, Malo potentialiter exponi omnia; utinam inquit, non parceret: Neque enim occultarem dicta ſancti ſed ejus in me ſententiã prædicarem & laudare. Merc.

First, That, The teſtimony of a good conſcience is the beſt ground of our willingneſs to die.

That man ſpeaks enough for his willingneſs to die, who hath lived ſpeaking and doing the will of God; and he is in a very miſerable caſe, who hath no other reaſon why he deſireth death, but only becauſe he is in miſery. This was one, but not the only reaſon, why Job deſired death; he had a reaſon tranſcending this, I have not concealed the words of the holy One, and I know if I have not concealed the word of God, God will not conceal his mercy and loving kindneſs from me. David bottoms his hopes of comfort in ſad times upon this, Pſal. 40. 9, 10. I have preached righteouſneß in the great Congregation, I have not refrained my lips, O Lord thou knoweſt (he was not actively or politickly ſilent) I have not hid thy righteouſnes within my heart, (it lay there, but it was not impoiſoned or ſtifled there) I have declared thy faithfulneſs and thy ſalvation; I have not concealed thy loving kindneſs and thy truth from the great Congregation. Upon this, he falls a praying with a mighty ſpirit of believing, ver. 11 With-hold not thou thy tender mercies from me, O Lord; let thy loving kindneß and thy truth continually preſerve me: for innumerable evils have compaſſed me about.

The remembrance of our active faithfulneſs to the truth of God, will bear up our hearts for hoping in the mercy of God. He that in David's and in Job's ſence can ſay, I have not concealed the words of the moſt High, may triumph over innumerable evils, and ſhall be more then a conqueror over the laſt and worſt of temporal evils, Death: God cannot long conceal his love from them, who have not concealed his Truth.

Secondly obſerve poſitively, That, The counſels of God, his truths, muſt be revealed.

God hath ſecrets which belong not to us, but then he puts them not forth in a word, nor writes them in his book; he keeps his ſecrets cloſe in the cabinet of his decrees and counſels; but, what he reveals either in his word, or by his works, man ought to reveal too. It is as dangerous, if not more, to conceal what God hath made known, as to be inquiſitive to know, what God hath concealed. Yea, it is as dangerous to hide the word of God, as it is to hide our own ſins. And we equally give glory to God, by the profeſſion of the one, as by the confeſſion of the other. Paul with much earneſtneſs profeſſes his integrity about this, as was even now toucht, Acts 20.

Fourthly obſerve, That, The ſtudy of a godly man is to make the word of God viſible.

I have not concealed, that is, I have made plain, I have revealed, or I have publiſhed the words of the holy One; Much of Job's mind is concealed under that word, I have not concealed. For in this negative there is an affirmative; as if he had ſaid, this hath been my labour and my buſineſs, my work in the world, to make known ſo much of the will of God as I know. This was the work of Chriſt here below; Father, I have glorified thee upon earth, I have finiſhed the work which thou gaveſt me to do, John 17, 4. What this work was, he ſhews, ver. 6. I have manifeſted thy name unto the men which thou gaveſt me out of the world.

Laſtly obſerve, That, It is a dangerous thing for any man to conceal the word of God, either in his opinion, or in his practice.

For it is, as if Job had ſaid, if I had ever concealed the words of God, I had been but in an ill caſe, at this time: God might now juſtly reveal his wrath againſt me, if I had concealed his word from others; or, God might juſtly hide his mercies from me, if I had hid his word from men. Smothered truths will one time or other ſet the Conſcience in a flame; and that which Jeremiah ſpake once, concerning his reſolution to conceal the word of God, and the effect of it, will be a truth upon every one, who ſhall ſet himſelf under a reſolution to do, what he under a temptation did, Jer. 20. 9. Then I ſaid, I will not make mention of him, nor ſpeak any more in his name: What follows? Then his word was in my breaſt, as a burning fire ſhut up in my bones, and I was weary with forbearing. If a gracious heart hath taken up ſuch a ſudden reſolution to conceal the word of God, he quickly repents of it, or ſmarts under it: He finds that word as a burning fire in his bones, he is not able to bear it; I was weary with forbearing (ſaith the Prophet) Nothing in the world will burden the conſcience, ſo much as concealed truth. And they who have taken a meditated reſolution that they will not reveal the word of God, may be ſure, that word will one time or other, reveal it ſelf to them, in the light and heat of a burning fire, feeding upon their conſciences.

I have not concealed the words. Whoſe words? The words of the holy One. Who is that? The holy One is a Periphraſis for God. When you hear that Title, The holy One, you may know who is meant. This is a title too big for any but a God: All holineſs is in God, and God is ſo holy, that properly he only is holy; hence the Scripture ſets God forth under this, as a peculiar attribute, The holy One: The Prophets often uſe this addition or ſtile, The holy one of Iſrael.

The holy One, is One ſeparate or ſet apart from all filthineſs and uncleanneſs. No evil dwells with God, none comes near him; therefore he is The holy One. He is ſo ſeparated from evil, that he cannot behold evil, or look on iniquity, (Hab. 1. 13.) except with a vindictive eye. Sin never got a good look from God, or ever ſhall.

Deus vocatur Sanctus Iſrael, vel Sanctus ſimpliciter, vel quod ſanctè à nobis colendus eſt, vel quod ipſe ſolus verè ſanctus eſt.

Further, God is called The holy One, in three reſpects. Firſt, Becauſe he is all holy in himſelf. Secondly, Becauſe we receive all holineſs from him. Thirdly, Becauſe we are to ſerve him in holineſs and righteouſneſs all our dayes. A holy God muſt have a holy ſervice. God is the holy One.

Firſt, In his Nature; his eſſence is purity. Or, he is eſſential purity.

Secondly, He is holy in his Word: Thoſe are frequent adjuncts of the Word of God, holy, pure and clean.

Thirdly, He is holy in his Works: there is not the leaſt imaginable ſtain or defilement upon any thing he hath done.

Theſe three put together, lift up the glory of God in this Title, The holy One. He that is holy throughout in his Nature, holy in his Word, holy in his Works, is the holy One; yea, he is, as Moſes ſtileth him in his triumphant Song, Exod. 15. Glorious in holineſs, a glorious holy One.

Or again, We may conſider God, The holy One;

Firſt, Radically and fundamentally, becauſe the Divine Nature is the root and original, the ſpring of all holineſs and purity. All holineſs is in God, and there is no holineſs to be had, but in God alone.

Secondly, God is The holy One, by way of example and pattern, or in regard of the rule and meaſure of holineſs, (1 Pet. 1. 16.) Be ye holy, as I am holy; the holineſs of God, it is the exemplar and pattern of all the holineſs that is in the creature.

Thirdly, God is The holy One, by way of motive: He is, as the rule of holineſs, ſo, likewiſe the reaſon of our holineſs; therefore another Scripture ſaith, Be ye holy, for I am holy; I am The holy One, and that is the reaſon, why you muſt be holy too.

Fourthly, God is The holy One effectively, becauſe he works, conveyes and propagates all holineſs to, and in the creature. Nothing can frame a heart to holineſs, but the finger of God. Man can no more make himſelf, or another holy, then he can redeem another or himſelf.

Fifthly, He is called The holy One by way of eminency or ſuper-excellency; becauſe his holineſs is infinitely beyond all the holineſs of men and Angels. Angels are holy, and God is pleaſed to ſay of men, that they are holy; but nor man nor Angel can be called The holy One. His ſupereminency in holineſs ſhines forth in ſuch beams and rayes as theſe.

Firſt, Holineſs in God is not a quality, but his eſſence. Holineſs in Angels is a quality; the eſſence of many Angels continues, though their holineſs be loſt and vaniſhed; the lapſed Angels, who are now Devils, keep their nature, but their holineſs is gone; therefore holineſs was but a quality, or accidental to them: So, in the Saints, holineſs is an infuſion, a quality, a grace; moſt men never had any holineſs, and the man would remain though his holineſs ſhould be loſt. But in God, his eſſence and his holineſs are the ſame, The holineſs of God is the holy God, as the wiſdom of God is the wiſe God; and the power of God, is the powerful God. The Attributes of God, for our learning, are diſtinguiſhed from his Nature, but in him they are the ſame.

Secondly, God is The holy One eminently, above men and Angels, becauſe he is abſolutely perfect in holineſs. Abſolutely perfect; Firſt, Becauſe he is holy, extenſively (if we may ſo ſpeak of God) in all parts, he is holy throughout, and then he is holy intenſively; as he is holy in all parts, ſo he is altogether holy in every part. Holy men have holineſs in every part, yet they are holy but in part; and though Angels be holy in every part extenſively, and have alſo a perfection of holineſs; yet they have not an abſolute perfection of holineſs; therefore Angels themſelves are chargeable with folly, compared with God, chap. 4. 18. God is ſo light, that in him there is no darkneſs at all; he is ſo holy, that in him there is no unholineſs at all. But men, the beſt of men, all the Saints upon earth, have darkneſs with their light, and unholineſs mixed with their holineſs.

Therefore in the third place, the eminency of God in holineſs, appeareth in this, that, God is ever equally holy, ever in the ſame degree and frame of holineſs; Angels are ſo too, becauſe they are confirmed; and though at the preſent, the Saints are not, yet, when Chriſt ſhall ſet them up in that glorious eſtate, they ſhall keep the ſame frame for ever. But the Saints upon earth are unequally holy, ; for firſt, they are growing, their eſtate here is an encreaſing eſtate; they are more holy one year then another; as they grow more in knowledge, ſo in every grace: And then, in regard of the exerciſe, they are more holy at one time then at another. Which of the Saints hath not found, or doth not find much variety in his ſpirit? Now a heart enlarged in prayer, and anon ſtraightned, now a heart believing, and anon doubting; now humble, anon lifted up with pride, &c.

But as the holy One is perfectly and abſolutely holy, ſo, he is ever equally in the ſame degree and tenor of holineſs, not the leaſt variety or ſhadow of turning in him. Put all theſe together, and the title is clear, how God by an excellency, is called, The holy One. As he is ſo ſtrong, that all the power of the creature, compared with his, is weakneſs; and ſo wiſe, that all the wiſdom of the creature, compared with his, is folly; ſo he is ſo holy, that, compared with him, all holineſs is unholy, and he alone, The holy One. Hence obſerve,

First, That, The holineſs of man conſiſts in his conformity unto God.

Sanctitas dicitur per quam mens ſeipſam & ſuos actus applicat Deo.

Holineſs is our likeneſs to God, or the application of our minds and actions to God, as the Schools define it. God, the holy One, is (if we may ſo ſpeak) the ſtandard, the pattern, and the object of all holineſs. There is a twofold conformity to God in holineſs.

Firſt, A conformity to the Nature of God.

Secondly, A conformity to the will of God, or to that which God wills. Theſe make up the total holineſs of the Creature.

Firſt, Holineſs is our conformity to the Nature of God. And therefore Believers are ſaid to be partakers of the divine Nature (2 Pet. 1. 4.) This participation is our analogical reſemblance unto the Divine Nature; Firſt, In his Attributes. Secondly, In his Affections. In his Attributes, when we are patient, merciful, juſt, faithful, true, loving, as God is. Theſe are the Image of God in us, and by theſe God becomes (as it were) viſible in man. As thoſe inviſible things of God, even his eternal power and God-head are ſeen in the things which are created; ſo, thoſe other inviſible things of God, even his eternal holineſs and purity, are ſeen in thoſe who are ſanctified. And in the ſame ſence that God ſpeaks of Magiſtrates, in regard of his power depoſited in their hands, I have ſaid ye are gods; we alſo may ſay of all the faithful, in regard of his holineſs infuſed into their hearts, ye are gods; and as to live or do ſinfully, is (as the Apoſtle phraſeth it) to walk (κατ' ἄνθρωπον) as men; ſo to live and do holily, is, in our ſphear to walk (κατὰ Θεόν) as God. And as this holineſs ariſes from a reſemblance of God in his Attributes, ſo in Affections; when we love what God loves, when we hate what God hates; when what pleaſes God, pleaſeth us alſo; when what provokes his Spirit, provokes ours. This is holineſs.

Secondly, Holineſs is our conformity to the will of God. That is, to whatſoever God wills us either to do, or not to do. The will of God is the rule of holineſs, as his nature is the patern of it. His internal will, called by the School-men, The will of his good pleaſure, is the firſtly-firſt rule (as they ſpeak) his external will, or his will expreſſed and ſignified by his word, is the ſecondly-firſt rule of holineſs. Every action of man is holy or unholy, according to his conformity with, or variation from this will. There is no more holineſs in any work, then there is of the will of God in any work. To do holily, and to do the will of God, are the ſame. David, a holy man, is deſcribed by both theſe, Acts 13. 22. I have found David the ſon of Jeſſe, a man after mine own heart; there's conformity to the nature of God; which ſhall fulfil all my will; there's conformity to the will of God; the reſult of both is holineſs.

Unholineſs and impurity ariſe from our conformity or adheſion to thoſe things, which are unclean and unholy: In externals and corporals, if a mans hand or his garment touch an unclean thing, he hath the mark or impreſſion of of that uncleanneſs upon his hand or upon his garment; and this likeneſs to an unclean thing, makes his hand or garment unclean: So for inward uncleanneſs or defilement, when the ſoul inordinately cleaves, and the mind drenches it ſelf in filthy things, or drinks in filthy objects: when our thoughts are ſteeped in puddle-waters, this defiles the mind, and makes our thoughts unclean; Our thoughts are ſuch, as the things they are familiar with: If they converſe with filthy and unclean things, with worldly and baſe things, the image and impreſſion of ſuch things is ſealed upon our thoughts, and the ſpring of them, our ſpirits. On the other ſide, by our converſing and reverend familiarity with Chriſt in holy Ordinances, we receive ſtamps and impreſſions of holineſs from him. When our hearts and affections are raiſed up and pitcht upon God, this makes them holy.

Sicut impuritas naſcitur ex contactu inferiorum, ut cum facies aut veſtis luto aſpergitur, vel cum anima, per affectus inferioribus inordinatè inhæret; ita puritas oritur ex contactu ſuperiorum, cum affectus ad ſublimiora & nobiliora aſſurgit, & iis adhæret. Leſſ. De Perf. Div. l. 8. c. 1.

God is the Objective cauſe of holineſs; looking upon him, we become holy (2 Cor. 3. 18.) We (ſaith the Apoſtle) all with open face, beholding as in a glaſs, the glory of the Lord (that is, we looking upon that glory, holineſs and excellency which is in the Lord) are changed into the ſame image; that is, we are made conformable unto him: we receive (as it were) the engravings of holineſs upon our ſouls, by beholding the Holy One. The eye of faith (as well, yea more, then the eye of ſence) affects the heart. Laban's ſheep conceived according to the colour of the rods which lay before them in the water-troughs. Viſion aſſimilates both in Nature and in Grace, yea, and in Glory too. In heaven we ſhall be perfectly holy, becauſe we ſhall perfectly (in Chriſt, who is the expreſs image of his perſon) ſee God, and ſo be like him; that's the Apoſtles argument, 1 John 3. 1. We ſhall be like him, for we ſhall ſee him as he is. And proportionably here, ſuch as our viſions of God are, ſuch is our likeneſs unto God.

Secondly obſerve, They who want holineſs, muſt go to God for it; for he is the holy One.

Are any of your hearts unholy? whither will you go? To what Coaſt will you trade for holineſs? Or, where ſhall you find the merchadize of it? Go whither you will, go to what holy Ordinance, to what holy Duty, to what holy Miniſter you will, your veſſels will return unfraight and empty of holineſs, if you trade not to the holy God. We muſt deal with Ordinances, and by Ordinances; but, if we only have to do with them, neglecting to meet with God, we ſhall make nothing of them; we ſhall not traffique in them, to any ſpiritual enriching or advantage. Ordinances have a relative holineſs, or a holineſs paſſing through them; but they have no inherent holineſs, or holineſs paſſed by them; They are Conduit-pipes, not Springs, or the Well-head. Therefore, as when you would have mercy you go to the merciful God; as, when you would have pardon of ſin, you go to the ſin-pardoning God; as, when you would have wiſdom and light to direct your way, you go to the wiſe God, and the Father of lights: So, when you would have holineſs, and be made pure, whither will ye go, but to the pure and holy God? Be diligent in holy duties and holy ordinances, but ſtay not in them, paſs through them, and never reſt till you come to God in Chriſt, who is the Holy One; and he only can, and he hath ſaid he will make you holy,

Thirdly obſerve, All ſin and unholineſs are contrary to the very Name and Nature of God.

Contrary to the name of God, He is called holy; and contrary to the nature of God, He is the holy One. And in this, we ſee the reaſon, why God hates ſin with a perfect hatred; man hates that, which is contrary to his nature, and contrary to his name. And in this alſo we ſee the reaſon, why God is ſuch a ſevere avenger of ſin, He is the holy One: Can he (think you) take part with, or ſpare that which is contrary to himſelf? Sin, as much as in it lieth, puts God out of the world, therefore ſin is called God-murther, as being that, which would murther God: Sin would not allow him a being in the world, who gave the world its being. Sin (in the nature of it) is, The unholy thing, and God is, The holy One; theſe two muſt contend for ever: ſo far as things or perſons are unholy, they directly ſtrike at the being of God; Sin would put down all rule and all dominion but its own. Obſerve, Deicidium.

Fourthly, They who deſpiſe holineſs, deſpiſe God himſelf.

They who deſpiſe holineſs, deſpiſe the very glory of God; God is glorious in holyneſs, and this is his glorious Name, THE HOLY ONE. Some of the prophane, wretched Jews, derided and blaſphemed God, under this title; the Prophet had long threatned judgment, and had told them, that the holy God would be avenged on them for their filthineſs and profaneneſs, for their hypocriſie and idolatry. But when theſe wretches ſaw God delaying to come out, and bring forth the treaſures of his wrath againſt them, they fall a jearing, and they jear at God, under this title (Iſa. 5.19.) Let him make ſpeed, and haſten his work, that we may ſee it; as if he had ſaid, God is too ſlow, let him make more haſt, and let the counſel of the holy One of Iſrael draw nigh, and come that we may know it; him, that you have ſo often told us of, The holy One, let him make haſt and bring on his work. Without queſtion God came ſpeedily upon thoſe, and he will come ſpeedily upon all thoſe unclean ſpirits and tongues who blaſpheme that holy Name, The holy One. Hence we learn, Laſtly, Why none can ſee God, why none have any fitneſs for communion with God, but holy Ones, holy perſons.

The reaſon is, becauſe God is the holy One. That great Law is gone out from the mouth of God, Levit. 10. 3. I will be ſanctified in thoſe that come near me; why ſanctified? Becauſe God is the holy One; unleſs we ſanctifie God, we cannot draw nigh to God. As holineſs is a ſeparation from evil, ſo it is an approximation to the chiefeſt good. But ſome may demand, how can man ſanctifie God? God ſanctifies us, but can we ſanctifie him? We cannot ſanctifie God, as he ſanctifies us. We do not ſanctifie God by adding or communicating any holineſs unto him; but we ſanctifie God by acknowledging his holineſs, or by acknowledging that he is, The holy One; drawing nigh unto God with a holy heart, with holy affections, is the ſanctifying of God. For this is the language of ſuch preparation, I have a holy God to go unto, therefore I muſt have a holy heart to come unto him with; this is ſanctifying God: And that's the reaſon why none can ſee God, but they that are holy, Heb. 12. 14. Without holineſs, no man ſhall ſee the Lord; becauſe God himſelf is holy, therefore they cannot ſee God, who are unholy. There muſt be an inward holineſs, holineſs in the Organ, to take in the holineſs of the object; God firſt works holineſs in us, and then we behold him, the holy God: And that was the reaſon, why the Prophet (Iſaiah Chap. 6. When the voice proclaimed that thrice holy Name of God, Holy, Holy, Holy) cried out, I am undone, becauſe I am a man of unclean lips; I have an unclean heart, and how ſhall I ſtand before this holy, holy, holy God; this made his ſpirit recoyl, though he was a holy Prophet: If the remainders of unholineſs in him, made his ſpirit faint, when there was an appearance of the holy God: How will they that are nothing but corruption, or a lump of uncleanneſs, lying ſtill in the dregs of nature, be able to ſtand before God, The holy One, that holy, holy, holy One?

This is the ſum of the firſt reaſon, upon which Job grounds his requeſt to die, it was not the miſery he ſuffered, but the integrity in which he had lived. He had not concealed the words of the holy One, therefore as his affliction made his life troubleſom to him, ſo the goodneſs of his cauſe and conſcience, made death welcome to him.

VERS. 11, 12, 13, 14.

What is my ſtrength, that I ſhould hope? and what is mine end, that I ſhould prolong my life?
Is my ſtrength of ſtones? Or is my fleſh of braſs?
Is not my help in me? And is wiſdom driven quite from me?
To him that is afflicted, pity ſhould be ſhewed from his friend; but he forſaketh the fear of the Almighty.

JOB (as hath been ſhewed) in this context from verſ. 8. renews his former requeſt and deſire of death, confirming it by divers arguments: Some of which were opened in verſ. 10. eſpecially, that, from the clearneſs and integrity of his own conſcience, in that, he had not concealed the word of the holy One: He hath dealt faithfully in the cauſe of God, and therefore he was not afraid to appear before God. And his deſire did not hang about his lips, as if it would return and deny it ſelf: Therefore in verſ. 11. he puts forth two reaſons further, why he moves or re-enforces his motion to die. The firſt is grounded upon the ſmall hope he had to live long, if he ſhould deſire it, What is my ſtrength, that I ſhould hope? The ſecond is grounded upon the ſtrong hope, yea, aſſurance which he had, that it ſhould be well with him in death, or that death could be no dammage to him. And what is my end, that I ſhould prolong my life? Put theſe two together: And then conſider, is it any wonder, that a man in much miſery deſires to dye ſpeedily, when he hath no hope, no ground of hope, that he can live long, and when he hath no fear, no ground, no nor ſhadow of fear, that it ſhall be ill with him when he dies? This I conceive is the ſum and ſtrength of his reaſoning, contained in verſ. 11.

I ſhall now open the words diſtinctly.

What is my ſtrength, that I ſhould hope?

Some render it, What is my ſtrength, that I ſhould bear? I ſhould be able to ſuſtain this weighty burthen, this mighty load of affliction, preſſing my wounded ſoul, and wearied body? Thus it refers to his preſent ſufferings, to the enduring and ſtanding under, which he found his own ſtrength altogether inſufficient. And ſo the [My] in the Text, What is [my] ſtrength, ſeems to be oppoſed to ſome other ſtrength? As if Job had ſaid, Eliphaz you adviſed me (in the former Chapter, verſ. 8.) to ſeek unto GOD, and to commit my cauſe unto him, to ſeek help at his hands. Why, do you think I have not done that all this while? Do you believe that I have ſtood out theſe aſſaults in My own ſtrength? What is My ſtrength, that I ſhould bear? That I ſhould bear this burthen ſo long, as I have born it? Surely I have been held up by the power of God and prayer all this while; GOD hath put his everlaſting arms under me, otherwiſe I had fallen before this day, had I not prayed in aid from Heaven, I had not lived thus long upon the earth; for what is my ſtrength compared to theſe burthens which are upon me.

His ſuſtinendis imparſu; hac mea vita miſeriis obnoxia ſuſtentatur non meis viribus, ſed divina gratia, fide, dilectione in filium Dei. Pined.

This is a good ſence; for, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks (Gal. 2. 10.) The life which I now live, I live by the faith of the Son of God. So Job ſeems to ſay, the life which I have lived, ever ſince the afflictions have encompaſs'd me, I have lived by the power of God, and the ſtrength of faith in him, What is my ſtrength, that I ſhould bear; We have this treaſure (ſaith the Apoſtle, 2 Cor. 4.7.) in earthen veſſels, that the excellency of the power, may be from God, and not from us; as he ſpeaks there, reſpecting the burthen of the Miniſtry: So we may, in reſpect of any burthen of trouble, or weight of affliction, We have theſe afflictions laid upon our earthen veſſels (and one would wonder, that an earthen veſſel ſhould not crack and ſhatter to pieces under them) but it is, that the excellency of the power might be from God, and not from us; when we are weak, then are we ſtrong, ſtrong in God, and in the power of his might. God loves to ſhew the world, what his ſtrength can do in a weak creature, as well, as what his grace and mercy can do for a ſinful creature.

This (I ſay) is a good ſence, but the word rather ſignifies to hope; and yet theſe two are not at any great odds: for vel ſignificat anxia ſpe potiendi volo rē aliquā expectare, & agrè ferre protractionem rei expectatæ. Chemn. Spes, eſt, cum præparatio ad boni futuri & promiſſi ſuſceptionem, tum patientia moræ ex intuitu illius boni.

for hope is the ſtrength, the bearing ſtrength of the ſoul: What is my ſtrength, that I ſhould hope? That I ſhould wait and tarry, that I ſhould expect and ſtay for ſuch and ſuch changes, as thou haſt promiſed? Pſal. 130. 5. we have theſe words put together, I wait for the Lord, my ſoul doth wait; and in his word do I hope. The ſoul which is in a hoping condition, is alſo in a waiting condition; waiting and hoping ever attend the ſame thing. No man will wait at all for that of which he hath no hope, and he who hath hope, will wait alwayes. He gives not over waiting, till he gives over hoping. The object of hope is ſome future good, but the act of hoping is a preſent good, and that is preſent pay to bear our charges in waiting. So then, the word implies both a patient waiting, and a hopeful truſting. So Chriſt expounds it, Matth. 12. 21. rendring that of the Prophet, Iſa. 42. 4. The Iſles ſhall wait for his Law, thus, In his Name ſhall the Gentiles truſt. Noah (after the ſtrength of the deluge was ſpent) opened the window of the Ark, and ſent forth the Dove, and ſhe returned; then ſaith the Text, He waited ſeven dayes, and again he waited, yet other ſeven dayes, hoping at laſt the floud would be dryed up, and the waters return into their ancient channels. Now (ſaith Job) what is my ſtrength, that I ſhould hope or expect deliverance, and therefore, why ſhould I wait for it. The waters of my afflictions are ſo deep, and ſwoln ſo high, that I have no hope to ſee dry ground again.

Gen. 8. 10, 12.

And in this paſſage he ſeems to anſwer, what Eliphaz ſpake in Chap. 5. verſ. 16, & 25. (for doubtleſs Job applies himſelf exactly to what Eliphaz had ſpoken, and the trueſt interpretation of his anſwer will be in finding out, and ſuiting the references to what the other propounded) Eliphaz in Chap. 5. verſ. 16. (where he makes a report of the wonderful works of God) had ſaid, So the poor hath hope, and iniquity ſtoppeth her mouth; and at verſ. 25. he tells Job that a godly man (notwithſtanding all his afflictions) may know that his tabernacle ſhall be in peace, and that his ſeed ſhall be very great. Job in anſwer to thoſe words, replies; What is my ſtrength, that I ſhould hope. As if he had ſaid, Eliphaz you ſpeak of great hopes, that the poor may have; and you ſpeak of a peaceable Tabernacle, of a flouriſhing off-ſpring: Alas, my condition is ſuch, I am ſo worn out with pain, with ſickneſſes, with diſeaſes. with diſtempers, with griefs, that I have no hope left, in regard of my ſtrength in me, ever to enjoy ſuch promiſes. What is my ſtrength that I ſhould hope? What is my ſtrength that I ſhould expect to live to ſee ſuch good dayes, as you ſpeak of; that my Tabernacle ſhould be in peace, that I ſhould have plenty, that I ſhould have a numerous Iſſue? Alas, my ſtrength is gone; what is my ſtrength that I ſhould look after theſe things. Not that Job meaſured all his hope by his own ſtrength; but here he expreſſes the grief and pain, which was in his ſenſitive part, or upon his outward man, thereby to anſwer the ſowre reproofs and ſweet promiſes of Eliphaz: For we find Job himſelf in Chap. 13. verſ. 13. reſolving thus; Though he kill me, yet will I truſt (or hope) in him; he would truſt or hope in God, though he died; therefore he did hope while he lived. And it is the property of that grace (and where it is in ſtrength, it ſhews as much) to hope againſt hope: Rom. 4. 18. Who againſt hope believed in hope; when there was no ſtrength in Abraham, no poſſibility in nature, yet againſt hope, he believed in hope: So at this time there was ſuch a grace in Job, he had a hope, by which he could hope againſt hope; but when he looked into his own ſtock of ſtrength, What is my ſtrength, that I ſhould hope? I know the ſtrength of God, is a rock ſure enough for my hope to anchor in: Abraham ſaid in effect, what is my ſtrength, that I ſhould hope to have a child? for he looked upon himſelf as a dead man, but, ſaith he, there is power in God; he knew his own weakneſs, but he conſidered it not, waxing ſtrong in faith, and giving glory to God. So here, while Job ſaith, What is my ſtrength that I ſhould hope? my ſtrength is dryed up and withered, and ſo is my hope in my own ſtrength: The ſtrength of God is vigorous and green, and in him my hope is alſo green and vigorous: Though all the earth about us be like a dry heath, and barren wilderneſs; yet our hope buds and bloſſoms like a plant, while it is rooted by the ſprings of heavenly promiſes.

Quæ fortitudo mea, ut ſperem liberos. Vatab. Quid in longiorem ſpem me adducitis quū ſperando non ſim, jam propè mortuus videar. Hoc à Jobo dicitur, ut conſilii importunitatem, expreſſo ſenſitivæ partis affectu, retunderet, non quod de divina potentia diffideret.

And what is mine end, that I ſhould prolong my life?

אאריך נפשי

The letter of the Hebrew is, That I ſhould prolong, or lengthen out my ſoul, that my ſoul ſhould inhabit longer in the tabernacle of my body: The word prolong, is indifferently joyned to life, or dayes, Deut. 5. 16. Honour thy father and thy mother, as the Lord thy God hath commanded thee, that, thy dayes may be prolonged, &c. Ezek. 12. 22. Son of man, what is that proverb that you have in the Land of Iſrael, ſaying, The dayes are prolonged, and every viſion faileth? To prolong dayes, and prolong life, are the ſame. Yet here the word (Nepheſh) ſoul, which we tranſlate, life, may be taken for deſire, which is a vehement act of the ſoul. The ſoul expreſſes it ſelf ſo much in deſires, that the ſame word may expreſs both. And ſo we may render Job's ſence, thus, What is my end, that I ſhould lengthen out, or extend, my deſires any further after the things of this world: or that I ſhould defer, and put off my deſires after the things of the world to come: Is there any thing in this life worth my ſtudying for it, or any thing ſo worthleſs in the next, that I ſhould not wiſh preſently to enjoy it? In this ſence the word (Nepheſh) is often uſed, as Gen. 23. 8. Abraham ſpeaks to the children of Heth; If it be your ſoul or your deſire, we tranſlate, if it be your mind, that I ſhould bury my dead. So Prov. 23. 2. If thou be a man given to thy appetite, or whoſe deſires are thy Lord and Maſter, as the elegancy of that place bears. And again, Pſal. 27. 12. Pſal. 41. 2. Eccl. 6. 9. The word is applied, to ſignifie the will or deſire. So here,

What is mine end, that I ſhould prolong my life, or my deſire of life?

His [End] may be conſidered two wayes.

Firſt, His End, may be taken for the latter part of his life, which Eliphaz promiſed would be very comfortable. Thou ſhalt come to thy grave in a good old age, as a ſtock of corn cometh into the ſtore: As if Job ſhould ſay, you are promiſing me good dayes, and a happy old age; but, what is mine end? what's the latter part of a mans life, that he ſhould deſire to prolong his dayes, to take it out? Why ſhould I deſire to prolong my life, I am now well ſtricken in years, and as for the end, the latter part of a mans life, it is nothing (for the moſt part) but trouble and ſorrow? As old Barzillai (2 Sam. 19. 35.) when David offered him the pleaſures of the Court, anſwers, I am thus old, and can I taſte my meat, and taſte my drink, and hear muſick? What is the Fag-end of mans life, that one ſhould hunger after it? The ſweeteſt comforts of this life are in the fore-part of life, in the ſpring of youth, in the ſtrength and flower of age; as for the the winter of life, what is that but wet and cold, but clouds and darkneſs? What is my end, (of old age) that I ſhould deſire my life to be prolonged or eeked out to that.

But rather, we may take this End, Firſt, for the end of his troubles; as if he had ſaid, What end ſo gainful or comfortable can I have of theſe evils, that ſhould recompence my pains in bearing them, till I receive it? No worldly comforts can anſwer my ſorrows; and therefore why ſhould I deſire to prolong my life for them.

Secondly, Take End, for the very laſt term of life, not that latter part or condition of a mans life, troubleſom old age, as before; or a renewed eſtate as here. But take End, for the ending, the termination, the period of life; What is my End, that I ſhould ſo prolong my life? and ſo End is as much as death, What is my death, that I ſhould ſo deſire to live? I know no evil in death, that ſhould make me afraid of the end of my life; I know no ſuch trouble in dying, that I ſhould be deſirous to ſpin out this troubleſom life longer; ſurely the trouble and pain of death is not ſo much as the preſent trouble and pain of my life; and as for any other trouble, I fear none: then what is my end, that I ſhould prolong my life, that I ſhould not deſire death, or that you ſhould be ſo angry with me for deſiring it? Hence Obſerve, > Firſt, There is no ſtrength in man, that may give him aſſured hope of long life.

What is my ſtrength, that I ſhould hope? No, though man be in the flouriſh of his age, the greenneſs of his years: yet what is youth, or ſtrength, or beauty? what all thoſe fair leaves and fruits which hang upon, and adorn this goodly tree, that he ſhould hope to ſtand long? Man in his beſt eſtate, is altogether vanity, Pſal. 39. 5. He that hopes to live upon any of theſe things, hopes in a vain thing, and truſts, but in a ſhadow. Our hopes to live this natural life as well as the ſpiritual, and eternal, muſt be in the living God. The Image of death ſits upon the beſt of our ſtrength and beauty; while we grow, we decline, and we flouriſh, we wither. The lengthning of our dayes, is the ſhortning of them, and all the time we live, is but a paſſage unto (and ſhould be but a preparation for) death. We are moſt miſerable, if in this life only we have hope; and we are moſt fooliſh, if our hopes of this life, be in our own ſtrength.

And becauſe there is no ſtrength in nature, which may give us hope to live long; it is our greateſt wiſdom, to conſider what proviſion we have in grace, to maintain our hopes, that we ſhall live for ever. They are in an ill caſe, who when they cannot hope to live long, care not to ſettle their hopes of living eternally. It is a moſt ſad ſpectacle, to ſee a languiſhing body, and a languiſhing hope meet in one man. Some have a Kalender in their bones, ſhewing them, they have but few dayes here, and many diſtempers upon the whole body, crying in their ears with a loud voice, What is your ſtrength, that you ſhould hope to live? who yet prepare not at all to dye. They are both unready and unwilling to be diſſolved, when they ſee no hope to keep up their Tabernacle from diſſolution.

Secondly, (Taking the word in the laſt ſence, which I conceive rather to be the mind of the Holy Ghoſt in this place) Obſerve,

> That, there is no evil in the death of a godly man, which ſhould make him unwilling to dye, or which ſhould make him linger after this life.

What is the end of a godly man, that he ſhould prolong his life? All the bitterneſs of death is removed, or ſweetned by Chriſt. Death the King of terrors, is made a ſervant, to let us in, to our comforts, by the power of Chriſt, that Prince of life, who hath aboliſhed death, and brought life and immortality to light by the Goſpel. A believer buries all his fears of death in the grave of Chriſt. He looks upon death as the funeral of his ſorrows, and the reſurrection of his joyes. When the Pſalmiſt had deſcribed the troubles and ſtormy conflicts of a godly man, together with the flouriſhing outward pomp of the wicked, he concludes with this advice, Marke the righteous man (obſerve him well, take ſpecial notice of him) the latter end of that man is peace; if his end be peace, there is nothing in his end, which can make him affraid of it, or put it off. All deſire peace, they eſpecially, who are wearied out with war. The life of the holieſt man is a warfare, and his end is peace. Then what is his end, that he ſhould prolong his life?

Pacem te poſcimus omnes.

When a worldly man looks upon his end, he ſaith, O what is my end, that I ſhould deſire to dye? His end is ſuch, as makes him juſtly affraid to die. There is nothing in the end of a wicked man, but matter to feed the fear of death, and the deſire of prolonging life, as long as he can. This is the reaſon, why, when God calls him to die, he is deaf at the call; yea, that call is death to him, before he dies. Lot had a mind to prolong his time in Sodom, it was a goodly City, and he was not well aſſured, whether to go, or how he ſhould be lodged next night. This cauſed him to linger ſo long, till the Angels came and thruſt him out: Natural men have all their portion and eſtates in the Sodom of this world. And if they hear a meſſage of departing or going out, they linger and make excuſes, they run behind the door, or hang about the poſts, till God thruſts them out of the world, and pulls them from their pleaſures by head and ſhoulders, as we ſay. They would never leave the world, if they might enjoy it, becauſe they have nothing to enjoy beyond it.

A worldling groans, becauſe he muſt be uncloathed of his houſe of earth; and the Saints groan earneſtly, that they may be cloathed upon with their houſe from Heaven: Who would not be willing to exchange a ſuit of fleſh, a ſuit of ſack-cloath and ſorrow, for a ſuit of glory, for a cloathing of immortality, and garments of everlaſting praiſe.

Verſ. 12. Is my ſtrength the ſtrength of ſtones? or is my fleſh of braſs?

Theſe words may refer to the former part of verſ. 11. What is my ſtrength, that I ſhould hope? What is it? Let us ſeriouſly examine and conſider what my ſtrength is, Is my ſtrength the ſtrength of ſtones, or is my fleſh of braſs? Am I made of ſuch hard mettle, think you, that I am able to endure any thing? Only a body of braſs, and ſinews of iron, are ſtrong enough to endure this trial. Stones and braſs are hard bodies, and heavy bodies, they can bear blows and knocks without breaking; they yield not eaſily to the hammer; it is hard to make an impreſſion upon them, with many, and thoſe violent ſtroaks. To ſay a man is ſtrong, as ſtones, or that he hath a body of braſs, is to give him ſtrength, which is not mans, and to ſet him two degrees below himſelf. Beaſts are ſtronger, and can endure more hardſhip then man. Trees are ſtronger, and can endure more than beaſts. Stones are yet ſtronger, and can endure more then trees. Therefore, while he asks, whether his ſtrength be not only, like that of beaſts, who have no reaſon; or like that of trees, which have no ſence; but like that of ſtones and braſs, which have no vegetation or growth, he puts it to the utmoſt: As if he had ſaid, If a man had as much ſtrength as a beaſt, or a tree, he muſt needs fall at theſe ſtroaks and troubles; but it ſeems, ye put me lower then beaſts, or ſenſleſs trees, and that I can ſtand it out againſt all ſtorms and batteries, like a ſtony rock, or a brazen wall. I confeſs, though the Ox loweth, when he wants fodder; and the wild Aſs brayeth, when he hath no graſs; yet the ſtone complains not, when ye give it no food; nor doth braſs cry out when ye melt it in a furnace: unleſs you can find, that I am in nature like ſtones or braſs, you have no reaſon to find fault with me. Allow me to be either man or beaſt, and you muſt allow me to be ſenſible of my ſorrows, and deſtroyable by them. Only ſtones can be thus trampled on, and braſs thus hammer'd without pain and dying.

Deficio, Saxeus aut Calybeus non ſum. Lapides corpora ſunt non ſolum gravia, ſed robuſta & dura, quæ non facilè cedunt aliis corporibus, unde robur lapidum pro duritia.

As when man (in his ſpiritual capacity) is ſaid in Scripture to have a heart of ſtone, an iron ſinew, a brow of braſs. It notes him reſolved, againſt all threats, and ſtrong, againſt all oppoſitions of the word, to commit the evil of ſin. So in this natural capacity, to ſay his ſtrength is the ſtrength of ſtones, notes him a man able to bear all the evils of trouble, and to ſtand againſt all the ſtorms of tribulation.

Such kind of ſpeaking is frequent among the ancient Writers, who, when they would expreſs a man of undaunted courage, a man whoſe ſtrength would not eaſily be broken, or his ſpirit be taken down: a man inſuperable, whom no difficulties could overcome. Of ſuch an one they ſay, he hath, an heart of braſs, and a back of ſteel, he is a man made up of ſtones, born of a rock; he is a man of Adamant, he hath treble braſs about his breſt; as he was deſcribed, who firſt ventured in his ſhip to Sea. The common uſe of the word hath made it proverbial in all languages: for a man of more ſtrength then is commonly found in man, or for a Maſter of dangers and extremities.

Job's queſtion denies, Is my ſtrength the ſtrength of ſtones? Or is my fleſh of braſs? No, it is not: As if he had ſaid, I am made of fleſh and blood as well as others, I muſt ſhortly yield to theſe ſtroaks, I am not able to hold out and contend everlaſtingly with afflictions, I cannot ſtand againſt theſe aſſaults and batteries for ever; I am made of the ſame mould whereof your ſelves are, I am ſenſible how it is with me, I feel what I endure, and I cannot long endure what I feel, my ſtrength is not the ſtrength of ſtones. Note hence, > Firſt, Mans natural conſtitution makes him ſenſible of affliction, and ſubduable by it.

Mans body is no impregnable caſtle. We are not made of ſtones and braſs, but of fleſh and blood; I will not contend for ever (ſaith God, Iſa. 57. 16.) neither will I be alwayes wrath. For the ſpirit ſhould fail before me, &c. The Spirit of a man (that is his courage and reſolution) is far ſtronger then his fleſh, (namely his natural temper and conſtitution) and yet that cannot hold out for ever. The Spirit will come down whether we will or no, if God contend long with us: how then muſt the fleſh wither like a leaf before him? And therefore, the bodies, the fleſh and blood of the damned, who are to bear the wrath and contendings of God for ever; their fleſh and blood (I ſay) are (in a ſence) made ſpiritual, that is, they have more ſtrength given them, then fleſh and blood yield naturally, otherwiſe it were impoſſible for them to hold out for ever under the wrath of God, and the torment of their accurſed condition. Their ſtrength is made the ſtrength of ſtones, and their fleſh as braſs, they are made immalliable: their ſenſe of pain ſhall be admirably quickned, and yet they ſhall continue, as if they had no ſence at all: they ſhall be for ever wounded, and never die of their wounds. As it is in reference to that everlaſting miſery, ſo in proportion to thoſe temporal miſeries, there is no ſtrength of man, no fleſh and blood, able to endure and hold out, if God lets out his hand to afflict, and put not under his hand to ſupport.

Verſ. 13. Is not my help in me? And is wiſdom driven quite from me?

This and the verſe following, are of a very difficult conſtruction and underſtanding, which cauſed a learned Interpreter to ſay, If there be any hard Text in the whole book, this is one; and after all his thoughts about it, he concludes with this ingenious acknowledgment, I do not yet underſtand the meaning of it.

Firſt, As we read it, the Text ſeems to carry an harſh connexion with the words fore-going. There Job queries, Is my ſtrength the ſtrength of ſtones? And yet immediately to ſay, Is not my help in me? ſounds incongruous. For if he had help in him, he had ſtrength in him, and ſuch as might well be called, the ſtrength of ſtones, extraordinary ſtrength. So then, Job having ſaid with his laſt breath, that he had no ſuch ſtrength; how is it, that here he ſhould ſay, and more ſtrongly affirm, that he had ſuch ſtrength, ſo much this queſtion implies; Is not my help in me? As if he had ſaid, do not I know which way to help my ſelf? How to extricate my ſelf out of this condition?

Beſides, how is this a truth? For there is no man that hath his help in himſelf, not help enough in himſelf for any natural work, much leſs for any ſpiritual work, and moſt of all leſs for the holy carriage of their heart under affliction, or to deliver himſelf from it. Man hath no help in himſelf. The voice of the Church is, Our help ſtandeth in the Name of the Lord; and the voice of David was, The Lord is my helper; how then doth Job ſay, Is not my help in me? Mans ruine is of himſelf, but how unlike is this to the voice of truth, to ſay, My help is in my ſelf? We can undo our ſelves faſt enough, but we cannot repair and make our ſelves up again.

Nor can any creature be our help, no Man, no Angel can be our help. God reproveth the Jews, Iſa. 31. For going down to Egypt for help, though they were a ſtrong people: Certainly it is as bad, for a man, to make himſelf his help, as to make another man his help. How then ſhall we give a wholſom underſtanding of theſe words, Is not my help in me? And is wiſdom driven quite from me?

For the clearing of it. Conſider the divers readings. Some thus, Was not my help in me? And ſo they make the meaning to be this; Did not I help my ſelf, as much as I could? Was I faint-hearted and cowardly? Did I ſink as a man of a poor ſpirit under the burden? Did not I put my ſelf forth to the uttermoſt that I could, to ſtand under theſe troubles and afflictions? There is much in that, for ſome men do not help themſelves as they might, but their own ſpirits ſink, and their hearts fail; yea, their hearts fail before their ſtrength fails. Job diſclaims this, I did not ſo, I helpt my ſelf while I was able, I put out the utmoſt of my power, to bear and ſet a good face on't, as long as ever I could, Was not my help in me?

The Septuagint, with the Greeks in general, refer theſe words to God, making Job ſpeak thus, Did not I truſt in him? But my help is departed from me, and the mercy of the Moſt High hath with-drawn it ſelf from me. As if he had ſaid, I never put my truſt in my ſelf, nor did I promiſe my ſelf great matters, as from my ſelf; for, alas! What is my ſtrength? I am acquainted well enough with mine own frailty, but that which I only truſted to, hath left me; I truſted unto God, and unto his help, now he ſeems to forſake and withdraw his aſſiſtance from me: But I leave this with the Authors, it hath little authority with me, or ſutableneſs to the courſe and tenour of Job's ſpirit under theſe afflictions.

The Vulgar tranſlates the whole verſe negatively, and ſo it makes a plain and good ſence. Whereas we read it interrogatively, Is not my help in me? &c. He reads it thus, Behold, my help is not in me, and my friends who ſhould help me, are departed from me; That which we tranſlate wiſdom, Is wiſdom departed from me? He tranſlates friends, my friends, who ſhould be my helpers, are departed from me. And ſo the meaning of all is, as if Job had ſaid, I cannot help my ſelf, and they who ſhould, have deſerted me: And ſo connects or joyns it with that, which went before; What is my ſtrength, that I ſhould hope? my ſtrength is not the ſtrength of ſtones; there is no help in me, and they who ſhould help me, are departed from me; I was once an eye to the blind, and a foot to the lame (Chap. 29 15.) When a man hath no help in himſelf, he may have it in another; If a man want an eye, he may have an eye of his neighbour; and if he want a hand, his friend may be a hand to him; but (ſaith Job) they that ſhould be eyes and hands, helpers unto me, are gone and departed from me.

Ecce non eſt auxilium mihi in me & neceſſarii quoque mei receſſerunt à me. Vulg.

There is yet another rendring, which makes a very clear ſence; What though I have not help in me, is wiſdom driven quite from me? Though I have no ſtrength, and ſo no help in my ſelf, wiſdom is not therefore driven quite from me. As if he had ſaid, Will you conclude that I am a wicked man, an hypocrite and a fool, becauſe I am not able to help and deliver my ſelf out of theſe troubles?

Fifthly, Conſider the words as we tranſlate them, with which moſt of the Rabbins and Jewiſh Writers concur, only they uſually expreſs the Text affirmatively, we interrogatively, yet both equivalent, and meet in the ſame meaning. Our Queſtion, Is not my help in me? is to be reſolved into this affirmation, My help is in me; and the latter branch, Is wiſdom departed from me? into this negation, Wiſdom is not departed from me: Job's ſence may be taken thus; Have not I that in me, which is, and will be a help unto me, notwithſtanding all the objections and aſſaults which you make againſt me? Have not I that in me, which may furniſh me with wiſdom to anſwer all the exceptions which you have taken at my complaints? Mr. Broughtons tranſlation favours this ſence very much, Have not I my defence? and is judgment driven away from me? Though I thus complain, and deſire death, yea renew my deſire; Have not I my defence? Have I nothing to ſay, why I made this requeſt? Have I no Argument to help my ſelf, and bear up my ſpirit under the weight of theſe calamities? Is wiſdom quite departed from me? Do you take me for a man deſerted of God, deſerted of his ſpirit, and deſerted of my own wiſdom and underſtanding too; becauſe I am deſerted of the world, and deſtitute of outward comforts? And ſo the help which Job knew he had in ſtore, was the innocency and integrity of his heart, Is not my help in me? I have no help, no ſtrength, no comfort in my fleſh? what is my fleſh? My fleſh is not of braſs, but have I no help in me neither? my outward man is deſtroyed, my houſe of clay is almoſt battered down, tottering, falling it is; but have I nothing within to help at a dead lift? have I no grace, no hope, no teſtimony of a good conſcience, no witneſs in my ſelf? Do you think me clean diſrobed and ſtript, and emptied of all wiſdom and comfort? Hath the Devil, think you, robbed me of my grace? Have the Sabeans plunder'd and ſpoyled me of my underſtanding? Is not my help within me, notwithſtanding all the troubles that are upon me? Thus the interpretation is fair and clear, that when all his outward comforts were gone, when the ſtrength of his fleſh could hold no longer; yet then he had help within him; and his ſpirit could bear, though his fleſh could not. Grace can hold out beyond Nature; and when bodily ſtrength can do no more, wiſdom comes in with her Auxiliaries.

Is not my help in me? and is wiſdom departed from me?

The word [Wiſdom] in the Hebrew, is of various ſignifications, as was touched, Chap. 5. 12. Here one renders it, The Law is not departed from me. As if his meaning were, I never forſook the Law of God. Another thus, Was my duty driven from me? As if his meaning were, I ever kept cloſe to the rule of my place and calling. A third, Is my ſubſtance driven from me? So a fourth, Is my ability of ſubſiſting gone from me? As if he had ſaid, Cannot I live, becauſe I have not the world to live upon? To which ſence thoſe words of Chriſt are appliable, Luke 12. 15. The life of man conſiſts not in the abundance of the things which he poſſeſſeth: All which Interpretations meet to make up a compleat Apology of Job's piety, conſtancy, patience, and flouriſhing reſolutions in his dying, withering condition. The Sabeans drove away his cattel, but they could not drive away his underſtanding; they offer'd violence to his ſubſtance, but his reaſon and his graces were untoucht. Hence Obſerve, Firſt, Then when all outward helps depart from a godly man, he hath ſomewhat abiding in him, to help and ſtay up his heart.

As when the outward glory and ſtrength of the Church is utterly decayed, Yet (the Prophet tells, Iſa. 6. 13.) in it ſhall be a Tenth, as a Teyle-tree, and as an Oak whoſe ſubſtance is in them, when they caſt their leaves, ſo the Holy Ghoſt ſhall be the ſtrength thereof. Thus alſo, when the outward glory and ſtrength of any true member of the Church, is utterly decayed; even then, he ſhall be as an Oak, his ſubſtance ſhall be in him, the ſeed of holineſs ſhall be his ſubſtance. Is not my help in me? I know my eſtate is gone, my beauty is gone, my ſtrength is gone, the ſtrength (I mean) of my fleſh, yet I have inviſible ſupports, ſomewhat unſeen to truſt unto. It is the comfort of believers, that they have an eſtate, riches and poſſeſſions, lying as far beyond the reach of mens power, as their eye; and as far beyond the reach of Satans malice, as either. When they feel nothing but pain in the fleſh, when nothing but weakneſs inhabits the houſe of clay, the outward man; then the inward man is renewed with ſweet refreſhings, and ſtrong conſolations day by day. The ſpirit of a man (of a godly man) will bear his infirmities, when his body cannot. The ſtrength of nature is not the ſtrength of ſtones, nor is it the fleſh of braſs; but the ſtrength of grace is ſtronger then the ſtrength of ſtones, and the ſpirit is more durable then braſs: Grace wears not out by uſing, nor doth it ſpend by imploying: Afflictions are but the higher ſervices and employments of Grace. A ſtock of grace is an inexhauſtible treaſure, and a good heart aſſures us better then the bars of a Caſtle. Faith and a good conſcience, are (under Chriſt) our beſt helps in trouble; they are friends that will never forſake us: They are to us as their Author, who hath promiſed that he will not. Grace is our participation with the Divine Nature, and grace participates with the Divine Nature in this, it is an unchangeable good, an everlaſting comfort.

And yet we muſt take this warily, grace and holineſs, faith and a good conſciencc, are not to be truſted upon, no more then riches or any outward means. We may make an idol of our faith, and a vain thing of a good conſcience. The meaning then is, faith and a good conſcience are our beſt helps and friends, becauſe faith carries us unto Chriſt who is our beſt help. Faith pitches upon Chriſt, and a good conſcience feaſts us in the favour of God. Faith alone is no help, but faith is our help, becauſe it is not alone: Grace left alone, would be our ſtrength, but little more then nature is; and our ſpirit little more then the fleſh: And therefore our comforts are not to be reſolved in this; That we have grace in our hearts: but into this, That we and our graces are in the hands of Chriſt. Faith can live no where but upon Chriſt; that which faith reſpects as our help, is Chriſt, in whom we believe, not the act of believing. We are helped by the grace within us, but the grace within us, is not our help. Obſerve,

Secondly, A godly man in the darkeſt affliction or night of ſorrow, finds a light of holy wiſdom to anſwer all the objections of his enemies, and the ſuſpitions of his friends.

Is wiſdom departed quite from me? Do you think I have nothing to ſay? nothing to reply by way of apology for what I have done or ſpoken?

Though Job had many afflictions upon him, and friends againſt him, yet ſee how he recollects himſelf, Is not my help in me? He makes out the goodneſs of his cauſe in the midſt of a thouſand evils, and can plead his own integrity in the throng of many jealouſies and contradictions. Is not my help in me? Do you think you have ſo daunted me, that I am not able to make out my own eſtate? or that I know not what I am? The truth is, ſometimes God leaves his ſervants in ſo much darkneſs, for their trial and exerciſe, that they cannot ſee their own eſtates, but cry out, they are loſt and undone; many a good ſoul cannot reflect upon his graces, or get his heart into any communion with Chriſt in promiſes. This is walking in darkneſs, and ſeeing no light. As our ſins are ſometimes ſecret to us, ſo alſo our graces may. But let a man be encompaſſed with never ſo many afflictions, yet if his ſpirit be free, he is able to judge of his own intereſts, through all the black clouds which hang over him, through all the diſtractions and confuſions that are about him. The eye of faith is uſually quick in a dark night. And while trouble is near at hand, beholds Chriſt near at hand. He can never be without help, who carries his help about him, or within him. Nor can he utterly want counſel to direct him, whoſe heart is a Counſel Table, where Chriſt (the wiſdom of God) is ever Preſident in the Chair. My worldly comforts are quite driven from me, but wiſdom is not: I am afflicted, and therefore ſhould not be thus ſuſpected, but pitied.

Verſ. 14. To him that is afflicted, pity ſhould be ſhewed from his friend; but he hath forſaken the fear of the Almighty.

This verſe begins the third Section of the Chapter, wherein Job draws up a ſtrong charge againſt his friends, for their uncharitableneſs. See the progreſs and links of this Diſcourſe.

Firſt, He refuted and anſwered their objections againſt him, from the firſt to the eighth verſe.

Secondly, He renewed his complaint, which was the ground of all their objections, from the eighth verſe unto the end of the thirteenth.

Here at the fourteenth verſe he begins a charge againſt his friends of unkindneſs, indiſcretion, yea of cruelty in managing this diſpute againſt him. He giveth it firſt in general, or by way of preface; To him that is afflicted, pity ſhould be ſhewed from his friend. But he hath forſaken the fear of the Almighty: As if he had ſaid, You ſhould have dealt otherwiſe with me then you have, in this caſe; though (bleſſed be God) I find help within me, God hath given me the light of his Spirit, and wiſdom to diſcern my own condition, yet it is no thank to you: I have found no help in my friends, you have dealt unfriendly with me: you ſhould have pitied me, but you have oppoſed me, and ſo forſaken that duty which the fear of the Almighty teaches. He proceeds to illuſtrate this more particularly, by way of ſimilitude, comparing his friends to a brook, whoſe waters fail when we are a thirſt, or when there is moſt need of water.

To him that is afflicted.] The word ſignifies, Him that is melted: And the reaſon is, becauſe affliction diſſolves the ſpirit of a man, and (as it were) melts his heart, therefore it is called the fire of affliction: To be diſſolved or melted, and to be afflicted, are the ſame. And that effect is aſcribed to fear, and trouble of ſpirit, ariſing from affliction, Pſal. 22. 15. My heart (ſaith David, a type of Chriſt) in the midſt of my belly, is like melting wax: By reaſon of the heat and greatneſs of his trouble, and the anguiſh of his ſpirit, he was as mettle melted in a furnace. At the defeat of the Iſraelites before Ai, it is ſaid, the hearts of the people melted, and became as water, Joſh. 7. 5. And in Pſal. 6. verſ. 6. David cryes up the exuberance of his ſorrows, by this word, I melted or watered my couch with tears. Thus the Prophet threatning a day of great fear againſt Jeruſalem, tells them, They ſhall be, as when a ſtandard-bearer fainteth, Iſa. 10. 18. When the battel waxes hot, and a vanquiſht army is running and crying for quarter, the ſtandard-bearer is in greateſt danger, all make up to him, and then he fainteth, or melteth away with fear.

* Tributes and taxes are expreſt in the Hebrew by a word coming from this root, becauſe if heavily impoſed, they melt away the eſtates of a people. † It is a witty obſervation, that whereas ſome of the Papiſts conceive their word [Maſs] was derived from this Hebrew word [Maſſas] which ſignifieth to melt; one of ours anſwers, let it be ſo: It ſuites this ſence of the word exactly, and the effect of that abominable Idolatry; for the Maſs hath diſſolved and melted away truth and piety out of the Popiſh territories.

To him that is afflicted [pity ſhould be ſhewed.] That word Pity in the Hebrew, ſignifies a ſacred ſweet affection of mercy, benignity, goodneſs and piety: And by contraries (in which ſence words are often uſed in that language) it notes, Firſt, Reproach; Prov. 14. 34. Sin is (Cheſed) a reproach to any people: Secondly, Impiety and cruelty, harſhneſs and ſeverity: Thirdly, It ſignifies any abominable wickedneſs (Levit. 20. 17.) where Moſes ſpeaking of inceſt, inceſt between brother and ſiſter, calls that abomination by this word (Cheſed) A wicked thing. That may have a good name, the nature whereof is ſo ill, that it is not to be named.

Further, the word, as we tranſlate, imports more then a bare act of pity or commiſeration; as ſuppoſe a man ſee his brother in miſery, compaſſionates him, but relieves him not, this is no pity. Such the Apoſtle James deſcribes, in Chap. 2. verſ. 15. If a brother or a ſiſter be naked, and deſtitute of daily food, and you ſay unto them, Be filled, be warmed, be clothed: Poor creatures, ye are hungry, ye are naked, I pity you, I am ſory to ſee you thus; be filled, be cloathed, I wiſh it were otherwiſe with you; and yet in the mean time, he gives them nothing wherewith either to cloath or feed them. Is this fulfilling the law of love? Is this charity? Nothing leſs. The pity here ſpoken of, is not a verbal pity; our ſaying to a brother in trouble, be comforted, or, I would courſe were taken for you, I wiſh you well with all my heart, ; and ſo we beſtow a mouthful of good words, but not ſo much as a morſel of bread, or a cup of cold water. Good words alone are cheap charity to a mans expence, and they are ſo cheap in Gods eſteem, that they will not be found of any value at all in the day of reckoning: good words, not realized, if they be found any where, will be found in the treaſury of wrath. This is not the pity which (Job teacheth us) ſhould be ſhewed to him that is afflicted. The Apoſtles queſtion ſhakes ſuch out of all claim to this Grace, 1 John 3. 17. Whoſoever (ſaith he) hath this worlds goods, and ſeeth his brother in need, and ſhutteth up his bowels of compaſſion from him, how doth the love of God dwell in him? Though a mans mouth be open with good words, yet if he ſhut his bowels from good deeds, there's no love to God or man hous'd in that mans heart. It is no pity (to ſpeak of) only to ſpeak pity; and therefore the Apoſtle adds, ver. 18. My little children, let us not love in word and in tongue, but in deed and in truth; that's the true meaning of this word, To him that is afflicted pity ſhould be ſhewed; but you (my friends) have not given me ſo much as the ſound of pity; you have not bemoaned me, much leſs have you relieved me, which is the ſubſtance of pity, real pity: you have not loved me in tongue, giving me good words, much leſs in deed and in truth. Deed-pity is both the duty and the diſpoſition of a godly man; therefore this word (Cheſed) in the concrete, is often uſed in Scripture, to ſignifie a godly man; he is one that hath obtained much grace and pity from the Lord, and he is kind, gracious and pitiful unto men. The holy Proverb aſſures us, That a good man is merciful, pitiful to his beaſt, but much more to a man; and moſt of all to a godly man, who is his brother in the neareſt bond. And it is conſiderable how this word was uſed by way of diſtinction among the Jews, who caſt their whole people or nation into three ranks, (and it is grounded upon Rom. 5. 6, 7. Where the Apoſtle alludes to thoſe three ſorts.) Firſt, There were (Reſhagnim) ungodly men, the prophane rabble. Secondly, There were (Tſadikim) righteous men. And thirdly, There were (Chaſidim) good men, or pitiful men. Scarcely (ſaith the Apoſtle) will one die for a righteous man, for a man fair and juſt in his dealings? peradventure (for one of the Chaſidim) for a good man ſome one may chance to die: He that had been pitiful, might (haply) find pity; and having done ſo much good in his life, all would deſire he ſhould live ſtill. But herein God commended his love to us, that while we were yet ſinners (Reſhagnim) in the worſt rank of men, Chriſt died for us. No man had either love or pity enough to die for them who had ſo much impiety. The fartheſt, that the natural line of mans pity can reach, is to do good to thoſe who do him good, or are good.

Pity, notes out ſuch a ſort of men, and ſuch a ſort of actions as are fulleſt of love, of bowels of brotherly kindneſs and compaſſion; hence the Stork, which by divers of the Ancients was put for the Embleme of love and benignity, is expreſt in the Hebrew by this word, Lev. 11. 19. The Stork is very tender toward her young ones, and her young ones are as tender of her when ſhe is old, as Naturaliſts have obſerved. So then, this word imports the height of all offices and affections of love from man to man, eſpecially from Chriſtian to Chriſtian, in times of trouble, and caſes of extremity. This pity you ſhould have ſhewed me, ſaith Job.

Antiqui vocant Ciconiam pietatis cultricem. Ciconiis pietas eximia eſt. Sol.

But he forſaketh the fear of the Almighty.] That is, he forſakes all godlineſs, goodneſs and religion; fear takes in all that's good; and ſo it is conceived, that Job retorts the words of Eliphaz in the fourth Chapter, Is this thy fear? or, where is thy fear, thy religion? Now Job ſaith, Is this your fear? You have forſaken the fear of the Almighty. Is this your Religion, to deal ſo harſhly with a diſtreſſed friend, or to give him ſuch cold comfort? Surely you have forſaken that fear of the Almighty, which you have charged me with. Have not I reaſon to ask, Is this thy fear? or to conclude, You have forſaken the fear of the Almighty.

Theſe words are diverſly rendred. Some thus, He that takes away pity from his friend, hath forſaken the fear of the Almighty. And that's a truth, and a good ſence; though not ſo clear to the letter of the Text.

Qui tollit ab amico ſuo miſericordiam, timorem Domini dereliquit. Vulg.

Mr. Broughton joynes this with the former verſe, By him whoſe mercy is molten toward his friend, and who leaveth the fear of the Almighty. So referring this (melting) to mercy, and not to the man, joyning it to the former thus, Have not I my defence, and is judgment driven away from me, by him whoſe mercy is molten away toward his neighbour, and who leaveth the fear of the Almighty? As if Job had ſaid, Eliphaz, doſt thou think thou haſt driven away all wiſdom from me by thy diſpute? doſt thou think that I have loſt my reaſon, as thou haſt loſt thy pity? Thou thinkeſt wiſdom and underſtanding have forſaken me; but it appears by thy dealings, that thou haſt forſaken the fear of God, which is the beginning of wiſdom.

Thirdly, It is rendred in the contrary ſence. The word (Cheſed) being taken for reproach and harſh dealing, and ſo the meaning is made out with a kind of admiration, thus; Should reproaches be caſt upon a man that is afflicted, from his friend? ſhould he be told that he hath forſaken the fear of the Almighty, and that wiſdom is driven from him? Do you think I am not able to diſcover your dealings? ſhould you go about to reproach me in this condition? ſhould you tell me thus harſhly, that I am departed from the fear of God? Is this think you, a fair carriage towards me, when you ſaw me melted and afflicted, you ſhould have given me ſweet and comfortable words, not reproachful words.

An diſſoluto à ſodali ſuo convitium, & quod timorem omnipotentis deſeruerit? An hoc amicitiæ jus? &c. ut nunc ego à vobis audio. Merc.

Job (according to this ſence) found his friends dealing with him as the Jews with Chriſt, to whom being athirſt, they gave vinegar to drink; or, as David in the type ſpeaks, They gave me gall for my meat, and in my thirſt they gave me vinegar to drink: here ſeems to be a like meaning; you have given me reproaches in ſtead of comforts, ſlandered me in ſtead of refreſhing me; and is this the courſe you ſhould take? As Abſolom ſaid to Huſhai, 2 Sam. 16. 17. Is this thy kindneſs to thy friend? when he ſeemed to fall away from David unto him. So Job might ſpeak to Eliphaz, Is this thy kindneſs to thy friend, to load him with reproaches, when you ſee him overladen with afflictions?

A fourth thus, Shall he that conſumes by reproaches of his friend, forſake the fear of the Almighty? The meaning whereof is this, Do you think that all men, whoſe riches and comforts are loſt, have loſt their reaſon and judgment? And do you think that they who are reproach'd by men, do not fear God? The world commonly judges none wiſe but thoſe that are rich; and that they fear God moſt, who rejoyce moſt. But my practice and example (I doubt not) ſhall confute that opinion, and give all the world to know, that a man conſumed and ſpent by the reproaches of men, and the ſtroaks of God, may yet fear God, and keep up his ſtock to the full in holineſs and wiſdom.

Qui tabeſcit ab amico ſuo probro, etiā timorem omnipotentis relinquet? Fœlices ſoli videntur ſapere, miſeri deſipere.

Fifthly, This melting is referred, not to the pity of his friends, but to Job melting or conſuming, by that which they called pity; thus,

Contabeſcens charitas, non tam dicitur erga quem ſocii charitas contabeſcit, quam qui per ſocii charitatem præpoſteram (ſcilicet) & ſine ſcientia exercitam contabeſcit. Cocc.

Shall he be charged to have forſaken the fear of the Almighty, who conſumes by the charity of his friends? that is, who is more afflicted by the counſels which his friends (in love) give him, then by all his other afflictions. As the mercies of the wicked are alwayes cruel (Prov. 12. 10.) ſo ſometimes the mercies of the godly are; eſpecially when they give prepoſterous and indiſcreet counſel; and this interpretation ſuits well with the title which Job gave his friends, Miſerable comforters are ye all, Chap. 16. 2. That is, you have done your good will to comfort me, but God hath not ſhewed you the way, nor given you the tongue of the learned, that ye might know how to miniſter a word in ſeaſon to him that is weary; and ſo notwithſtanding all your good intentions, ye have added to my miſeries.

Hunc diſſolutū (præ doloribus) ab amico ejus (exhibenda) miſericordia (derelinquit) & (eundem diſſolutum) timor Saddai derelinquit.

A ſixth thus, That pity which friends ſhould ſhew this man melted with afflictions, hath forſaken him; but hath the fear of the Almighty forſaken him alſo?

Horum duorum verſiculorum terminos ita digerimus, ut in poſteri, vox diſſolutus ſit maſculini generis, & accuſativi caſus, regaturque à verbo derelinquit: cujus duo nominativi ſint, miſericordia & timor Saddai, illi vero diſſolutus ſit Job loquens de ſeipſo in tertia perſona, Apparet ex hac explicatione ל cum nominativo, ut in ולשרים Iſa. 31. 1. & Ezra 1. 5. Coc.

The meaning whereof may be made out to this effect, as if Job had ſaid thus, You plainly ſee, that there is no help in me, for my pains and unceſſant troubles have quite bereaved me of all that ſtrength, upon which I ſhould naturally ſubſiſt; and as for you (my friends) that pity and compaſſion which you ſhould afford a man thus melted with ſorrows, is quite fled and gone from your hearts and lips. But what then? Is the fear of God departed alſo from this ſorrowful ſoul? It is confeſs'd, ſtrength is gone from my body, and I ſee pity towards me is gone from your ſouls. O how miſerable then were I, if I ſhould go from my God, and forſake his fear! You ſhall ſee, that though the pity of men hath forſaken me, a melted man, yet (as you object) the fear of God hath not.

Vau apud Hebræos variè ſumitur, & interdum pro alioqui.

A ſeventh reading, varying from ours only in a word, gives the ſence very fair and eaſie. To him that is afflicted, or melted, pity ſhould be ſhewed by his friend, otherwiſe he forſakes the fear of the Almighty. Whereas we ſay, [but he forſaketh] this tranſlation ſaith, [Otherwiſe he forſaketh] the fear of the Almighty; that is, if a man do not ſhew pity to his friend in affliction, that man ſheweth that he hath forſaken the fear of the Almighty. Thus, as I hinted at the entrance of this paſſage, Interpreters are much divided about the Grammatical conſtruction of theſe words; there is a truth in every ſence given, and their variety may teach us to adore the fulneſs of the holy language, which leads our thoughts ſo many wayes, as alſo to be humbled for our own blindneſs of mind, and narrowneſs of heart, to ſee or comprehend the mind of God fairly written to us.

But I take the laſt to be the cleareſt meaning of Job in this paſſage, and that, to which moſt of the former are reducible, and therefore ſtaying upon this ſence, I ſhall give two or three Obſervations from it.

First, It is the common duty of friends, and the ſpecial duty of godly friends, to pity and help one another in affliction.

I ſay, to pity and help (for that's the compaſs of the word) we have not done our duty in pitying the diſtreſſed, unleſs we come to real aſſiſting them. We ſatisfie not our obligation to the bond and law of love by giving comfortable words. As that faith, which is alone without works, doth not juſtifie us; ſo that pity which is alone without works, doth not juſtifie our faith; ſuch empty pity will go for little better then cruelty, and not to help, will be interpreted oppreſſion. Word-pity is but the leaf of love, Deed-pity is the fruit of it. As we ſhould labour to be filled with all the fruits of righteouſneſs, which are by Chriſt; ſo with all the fruits of love, of compaſſion, and of tenderneſs, for theſe alſo are by Jeſus Chriſt, unto the glory and praiſe of God, Phil. 1. 11. Obſerve,

Secondly, That, the fear of God is ever joyned with love to our brethren.

True religion (that we mean by fear) hath a double bond in it, a bond of obedience to God, and a bond of love to men. The Apoſtle puts ſo much of religion in the latter, that in one place he makes it all religion, the very definition of religion, Jam. 1. 17. Pure religion and undefiled before God (what is it?) It is this, to viſit the fatherleſs and the widow in their affliction. This is religion and pure religion, that is, this is a great branch of religion, and a ſpecial fruit, which ſprings from that goodly tree, Religion. To viſit the fatherleſs, is more then to look upon them, and to aſk them how they do: To viſit them is to help them: It is like that viſit (in its proportion) which Chriſt made into the diſtreſſed world. He viſited and redeemed his people, or he viſited his people to redeem them. And the fatherleſs, to whoſe viſit religion leads us, are not only poor children, or Orphans, whoſe parents are lately dead, and they not able to ſhift for themſelves; but the fatherleſs are all the afflicted, who want our help, or patronage. Every helpleſs and comfortleſs ſoul is as an Orphan without parents, as a widow without an husband, To relieve ſuch is pure religion. In the 1 Joh. 4. 20. the Apoſtle makes that an everlaſting conviction againſt any man, that he loves not God, if he loves not his brother; If a man ſay he loveth God, and hateth his brother, (there is no medium in this point, between hating and not loving, or between hating and not helping, if it be in our power) he is a lyar; for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath ſeen, how can he love God whom he hath not ſeen? Job puts it ſo here, you ſhould ſhew pity to your friend in affliction, but you forſake the fear of the Almighty; and where the fear of God is not, the love of God is not. Love to God is viſible in love to man. And in affliction the love of man to man is made moſt viſible. A true friend can hardly be diſcovered in proſperity, and a falſe friend can hardly be hid in adverſity. Obſerve, Laſtly, It is not enough, not to be cruel to, or to grieve the afflicted.

We muſt ſhew them favour, and do them good. The light of nature condemns the oppreſſor, and the light of Religion condemns them who ſhew no pity.

VERS. 15, — 22.

My brethren have dealt deceitfully as a brook, and as the ſtream of brooks that paſs away;

Which are blackiſh by reaſon of the Ice, and wherein the Snow is hid.

What time they wax warm, they vaniſh: when it is hot, they are conſumed out of their place.

The paths of their way are turned aſide; they go to nothing, and periſh.

The Troops of Tema looked, the Companies of Sheba waited for them.

They were confounded, becauſe they had hoped; they came thither and were aſhamed.

For now ye are nothing; ye ſee my caſting down, and are afraid.

JOB having in the former verſe begun to charge his friends with unkindneſs, proceeds in this context to illuſtrate his charge by a ſimilitude, to make their unkindneſs yet more notorious and viſible, he ſets it out by things which are viſible: that ſo their own eyes or experiences might convince them, as well as his diſcourſe. The whole ſimilitude is extended from verſ. 15, to 21. The ſum of all is this, That Job had found his friends like thoſe brooks which hold leaſt water when there is moſt need, and greateſt enquiry for water; they gave him no comfort when he was nothing (to the eye) but ſorrow. He was parcht and ſcorcht in thoſe hot regions and fiery climates of affliction; and they gave him not to his (taſte) ſo much as a drop of water to cool his tongue, to eaſe his complaints. That in general.

For the better underſtanding of this elegant ſimilitude, we may obſerve the parts of it.

We have here { 1. The Protaſis or propoſal
2. The Exegeſis or explication
3. The Apodoſis or application } of this ſimilitude.

Or more plainly, we have four things conſiderable in it.

1. } The ſimilitude is { Propoſed.
2. Explained.
3. Confirmed.
4. Applied.

It is, Firſt, Propoſed, verſ. 15. My brethren have dealt deceitfully as a brook, &c.

Secondly, Explained, *verſ.*16,17,18. Which are blackiſh by reaſon of Ice, and wherein the Snow is hid; what time they wax warm, they vaniſh, &c.

Thirdly, Confirmed, verſ. 19,20. The Troops of Tema looked, the Companies of Sheba waited for them, they were confounded, becauſe they had hope, &c.

Fourthly, Applied to them, verſ. 21. For now ye are nothing, ye ſee my caſting down, and are afraid.

So much for the parts, now to the opening of the words.

Verſ. 15. My brethren have dealt deceitfully, as a brook, &c.

My brethren.] The words ſignifie, firſt, a brother of the ſame bowels (ſo brother is taken in the ſtricteſt ſence) a natural brother.

Secondly, A brother of the ſame blood, any kinſman.

Thirdly, It ſignifies any one that is knit to us in affection, or like us in manners and diſpoſition.

Fourthly, It notes all thoſe, who are bounded with us in the ſame Nation, or aſſociated in the ſame profeſſion, though ſcattered all the world over. As in Scripture that relative word Father is taken, not only for a natural father, but for any leader, guide, or director of others in Spiritual or Civil reſpects; ſo they who are near one to another in Civil or Spiritual reſpects, are called brethren, though they be never ſo far diſtant in blood or place.

And it is obſervable, that this word likewiſe is attributed to things inanimate, or without life, when they have a ſimilitude or likeneſs one to another. So *Exod.*25.20. The Faces of the Cherubims ſhall look one to another. The Hebrew is, Each man to his brother. And Exod. 26. 3, 5. The Curtains of the Tabernacle, the loops, and (verſ. 17.) the Tenons, are all called woman and ſiſter, becauſe they were all to be of the ſame materials and dimenſions.

אח Frater cognationem habet cum אחד unus, vel יחד pariter, quoniā ſimiles ſunt, vel in uno conveniunt; fratres dicuntur. אחי שנם יחד.

Some Criticks obſerve, that the Hebrew word for a Brother, is of near brother-hood or alliance, with two other words, whereof the firſt ſignifies One, and the other Alike, or Together, to ſhew that brethren ought to be as One, and Alike, or Together: which latter is by an elegant Paranomaſia, joyned with it, Pſal. 133. 1. Behold how good and pleaſant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity, or as we put in the margin, To dwell even together.

So then, the very word, whereby brethren are expreſſed, notes, that there ought to be a Nearneſs, a Similitude, a Oneneſs (if I may ſo ſpeak) between them in their affections and actions. Yet (ſaith Job) theſe men, whoſe relation thus obliges them, have laid themſelves out to my greateſt diſadvantage.

My brethren [have dealt deceitfully with me.] The word imports, dealing perfidiouſly, or treacherouſly in any kind, Iſa. 21.3. The Treacherous dealer dealeth treacherouſly. And it is applied to that treachery or perfidiouſneſs, which is the higheſt in civil relations, the treachery of the wife to the husband, Jer. 3. 20. Surely as a wife treacherouſly departeth from her husband, ſo you have departed from me; Idolatry is the violation of our faith to Chriſt, and therefore often called adultery.

Fortè quod veſtimentū ſit primæ hominis contra Deū perfidiæ tegumentū & teſtimonium, cum antea homo nudus fuerit. Buxt.

This word (to note that by the way) as it ſignifies to deal perfidiouſly, in the Verb, and perfidiouſneſs and treachery, in the Nown; ſo alſo a garment, or veſture, made up of any kind of matter or ſtuff. And the reaſon is thus given by a learned Hebrician, Becauſe a garment is both the cover and the witneſs of mans firſt perfidiouſneſs and treachery againſt God. Our firſt parents in innocency had no garment, but innocency: they were without cloathing, and wanted no cloathing; they were naked, and did not perceive their nakedneſs; but as ſoon as they departed from God treacherouſly, their ſin told them, that is, made them feel, that they were naked; therefore they put themſelves on aprons of leaves, but God clothed them with skins, and that clothing he veſted in a word of that Language, which ſhould ever mind man of the reaſon, why cloaths were firſt put upon him, namely, his perfidious and treacherous dealing with God. That (take it in paſſage) which now ſo many make a matter of their pride, is a witneſs of their ſhame, their ſhameful rebellion, and falling away from God.

Put theſe together, My brethren have dealt deceitfully with me. Job meaneth it of his three viſiting friends, theſe (if not brethren of his blood, yet) were of great familiarity and correſpondence with him; therefore he at once titles and reproves them thus, My brethren have dealt deceitfully with me. Hence Obſerve, > Firſt, That, there is no obligation ſo near, but an evil heart will break thorough it.

My brethren have dealt deceitfully. Though I ſuppoſe Job here charged his brethren too deeply, if ſo deep as their hearts: who, notwithſtanding they failed in the buſineſs they came about, yet I believe, had no intention to wrong or to deceive him: yet many have been intentionally deceived by brethren; and it is a truth in poſition, That brethren will deceive.

Secondly, Whereas he puts ſuch an Emphaſis upon it, My brethren have dealt deceitfully with me. As if he had ſaid, you are not enemies, you are not ſtrangers that ſpeak theſe things, but my brethren. Note from it,

> That, as it is ill for any to deal deceitfully, ſo worſt of all for brethren.

It is a trouble to be deceived by any, and a ſin for any to deceive, but it is worſe to be deceived by thoſe we truſt. And when a brother deceives, the ſin of the deceit is doubled, whether he be a brother in the fleſh, or a brother in friendſhip, or a brother in the profeſſion of the faith. Deceit from a brother is exceeding bad in all, but worſt of all in the laſt. Deceit from a brother in the faith, is more then double unfaithfulneſs. David complains (Pſalm 55. 12.) of the wrong he had received from ſuch a brother, It was not an enemy that reproached me, for then I could have born it (the reproach had not been half ſo heavy or grievous unto me, if an enemy had reproached me; the wound had not been half ſo wounding, if an enemy had ſmitten me) But it was thou, a man, mine equal, my guide, and my acquaintance, we took ſweet counſel together, and we walked to the Houſe of God in company; to be reproached and wronged by thee, this is the thing that lies heavy upon my ſpirit. God himſelf complains moſt, when they deal perfidiouſly with him, who are near him, his own people; he cannot expect any other of Heathens and Strangers; but when his children deal deceitfully with him, he complains of this, as much with admiration as with anger. I have nouriſhed and brought up children, and they have rebelled againſt me, Iſa. 1. 2. He calls Heaven and earth to bear witneſs of this unfaithfulneſs. Men are wicked beyond all reaſon (not that there is reaſon in any wickedneſs, but ſo we ſpeak of all exceſſes) men (I ſay) are wicked beyond all reaſon, when God appeals againſt them, to things without all ſence. David ſatisfied himſelf in the evil meaſure he received from a ſtranger, becauſe he had received evil from a ſon. As greater benefits and favours ſwallow up the thought of leſſer; ſo do greater afflictions, and unkindneſſes. A man hath no leaſure to think of his diſcurteſie, who gives him ill language, when another aſſaults him to cut his throat. When Shimei railed on David, (2 Sam. 16. 10, 11.) Abiſhai heats his ſpirit to revenge; What, ſaith David, my ſon which came forth of my bowels, ſeeketh my life, how much more now may this Benjamite do it? This ſtranger, one of another Tribe and Family: As if he had ſaid, I have no reaſon to be much troubled, to hear a ſtranger ſpeak hard words againſt me, when my ſon is up in arms againſt me: to hear the one curſe me, when the other would kill me. Moſes uſes this argument to umpire between the two Hebrews, Sirs, ye are brethren, why do you wrong one to another? Acts 7. 26. It will be a mighty aggravation of ſin, when God ſhall ſay, My children have dealt deceitfully with me: Or man, my bowels, my brethren have dealt deceitfully with me.

My brethren have dealt deceitfully, [as a brook.] Here is the ſhadow of their deceit, Job explains himſelf by a ſimilitude, They have dealt deceitfully. But how? I will tell you how, They have dealt deceifully, as a brook, and as the ſtream of a brook they paſs away. I can go to the ſtreams, and to the brooks, and ſhew my friends the face of their hearts to me (I am ſure of their dealings with me) in thoſe waters.

Significat hæreditatē, deinde fluvium, & quoniam torrens plerumque in valle labitur, accipitur aliquando pro valle. Merc.

They are as a brook.] The word ſignifies both a Brook and a Valley; becauſe brooks uſually run in valleys, therefore one word expreſſeth both. The ſame word ſignifies alſo to inherit, and an inheritance: Hence ſome joyn all the three ſences together in this one word, A brook, a valley, and an inheritance; becauſe valleyes inherit the brooks which deſcend to them from the mountains; valleyes are the heirs or inheritreſſes of the ſtreams which iſſue from the hills, Pſal. 104.. 10. The Holy Ghoſt deſcribes a ſpring or a brook, thus, He ſendeth ſprings into the valleyes, which run among the hills; hills are the original of rivers, and they run among the hills; hills ſend them down as a portion to the valleyes.

But the Brook here ſpoken of, is not ſuch a brook as hath a ſpring in a hill, mountain or rock, but a brook or torrent cauſed by rain, or melted ſnow; the Text clears that meaning: My friends have dealt deceitfully, as a brook; a brook ſpringing from a hill will not deceive, ſuch a brook being fed with continual ſupplies of water, will give us drink continually; but a brook falling from a hill, fails quickly: ſuch a brook the next words expreſs more clearly, And as the ſtream of brooks they paſs away.

Aqua impetuoſa & violenta quæ fluit cū vi & impetu.

As a ſtream of brooks.] That is, as thoſe torrents and overflowings of brooks; a brook hath a conſtant channel, and it hath an accidental channel: We ſee many ſtreams running into a brook in a time of rain, and that brook ſwoln above its banks, ſending out many ſtreams: So that to ſay they are like the ſtream of brooks, is to ſay they are like brooks when they ſtream forth, or to thoſe ſtreams of brooks which, by waters from the clouds, are ſuddenly increaſt: Theſe ſtreams of brooks uſually called Land-floods, have their ſpring or fountain in the clouds; which ſometimes diſtil in ſoft, ſoaking, deawy ſhowers, and often pour out in ſtrong, violent ſtormy rains, whence theſe ſtreams (which in the Hebrew are denominated from their impetuous violent ſtrength) run violently, and ſpend their ſtrength as quickly. That which is violent cannot be permanent, much leſs perpetual. We have the word, Pſalm 126. 4. where the Church prays, Turn again our captivity, O LORD, as the ſtreams in the South; which ſome render, As the mighty waters in the South. Why would they have their captivity turned like thoſe mighty floods in the South? The reaſon is this, becauſe the South is a dry country, where there are few ſprings, ſcarce a Fountain to be found in a whole deſart. What then are the waters they have in the South, in thoſe parched Countries? They are theſe mighty ſtrong torrents, which are cauſed by the ſhowers of Heaven: So the meaning of that prayer in the Pſalm, is, that God would ſuddenly turn their captivity. Rivers come ſuddenly in the South: where no ſpring appears, nor any ſign of a river, yet in an hour the water is up, and the ſtreams overflow. As when Eliah ſent his ſervant toward the Sea (in the time of Ahab) he went and looked, and ſaid, There is nothing; that is, no ſhew of rain, not the leaſt cloud to be ſeen, yet preſently the heavens grew black, and there was a great rain, 1 King. 18.44. Thus let your captivity be turned, thus ſpeedily and ſuddenly, though there be no appearance of ſalvation, no more then there is of a fountain in the ſandy deſart, or of rain in the cleareſt heavens, yet bring ſalvation for us. We uſe to ſay of things beyond our ſupply, Have we a ſpring of them Or can we fetch them out of the clouds? So though no ground appears whence ſuch rivers ſhould flow, yet let our ſalvation be as rivers in the South, as rivers fetched out of the clouds, and dropt in an inſtant immediately from the heavens. Job compares his brethren and friends to thoſe ſtreams of brooks, they came ſuddenly, but they are quickly down again. The compariſon in the Pſalm is made only with reſpect to the ſudden appearance of thoſe rivers, but Job applieth it to the ſudden paſſing away of thoſe rivers; as the ſtream of brooks they paſs away. Their coming ſo ſuddenly is a great refreſhing, but their ſudden departure is as great a diſappointment.

Nullum violentum perpetuum. Tanquam aquas validiſſimas. Jun.

Eſt præterire et penitus evaneſcere, quia quæ prætererunt non amplius exiſtunt.

The word notes two things; Firſt, motion: and ſecondly conſumption. In both ſences violent torrents paſs away. Firſt, they paſs away with a ſtrong motion; and then they paſs away with a ſudden conſumption, they run ſo faſt, that they run themſelves off their legs, they come to nothing; their motion ſpends them, whereas the motion of a river doth not. So the word is uſed, Pſal. 37. 36. He paſſed away, and lo, he was not; yea, I ſought him, but he could not be found. Thoſe things that paſs away, are many times ſaid to loſe their being and their uſe; He paſſed away, and lo, he was not. So Job meaneth here, theſe ſtreams paſs away, and lo, they are not.

Having thus propoſed this ſimilitude, that his friends dealt deceitfully as a brook, and ſhewed what kind of brook he meant, thoſe violent torrents which paſs away; now he gives a further deſcription of thoſe brooks.

Verſ. 16. Which are blackiſh by reaſon of the Ice, and wherein the Snow is hid.

The vulgar Latine puts a ſtrange ſence upon this paſſage, rendring it thus, He who fears the froſt, ſhall be overwhelmed by ſnow. Which ſeems to be a proverbial ſpeech, to ſet forth thoſe, who ſhifting from one danger or extream, run into another more dangerous, like that of the Prophet Amos, Chap. 5. 19. As if a man did flie from a Lion, and a Bear met him, or went into his houſe, and leaned his hand on a wall, and a Serpent bit him. But as their tranſlation is a corruption of the Text, ſo their ordinary gloſs corrupts their tranſlation. * I feared ſmalleſt ſins, but now I am puniſhed after the rate of great ſins, Whereas indeed Job was ready to acknowledge that the leaſt ſin he ever committed, deſerved a greater puniſhment then the greateſt pain he felt; and yet never lookt upon any of his pains, as the puniſhment of his ſins. But to paſs that:

Qui timet pruinam irruet ſuper eum nix. Vulg.

Elegans dictum in ſocios Jobi, ſed minus concordat cum hebraica veritate. Druſ.

* Timebam peccata minima, nunc punior quaſi pro magnis ſceleribus. Gloſſ.

Take the mind of Job, as purſuing his ſimilitude in more words to this effect; Theſe mighty ſtreams are but for a while, they paſs away: or if at any time they continue, it is not from any quality or fitneſs they have in themſelves to continue; but as their coming is extrinſecal (not out of the ground, but from the air) ſo is their continuance; I grant, theſe great land-floods ſometimes ſtay with us a while, not becauſe they have any ordinary natural ſupply or ſtay, they are only blackiſh by reaſon of the Ice: after a great rain in Winter, a great froſt comes, and then your water courſes, or brooks, ſwelling above their channels, are ſurprized by cold, and cannot get away; the cold condenſeth the waters, and freezeth them up, and the ſnow is kept cloſe from melting: then theſe torrents, or ſtreams, ſeem to be laſting fountains, and treaſures of water.

Or take it thus, He compares thoſe friends, who adminiſter no comfort in trouble, to brooks, which in time of rain, when we have no need, overflow with water; but in cold Winter-weather, are lockt up with froſts, or in hot Summer-weather, are exhaled and dried up by the Sun. As it follows:

Verſ. 17. What time they wax warm, they vaniſh; when it is hot, they are conſumed out of their place.

Theſe ſtreams you might think living, laſting ſtreams, or ſtanding, fixed waters, when you ſaw them frozen into great mountains of Ice and Snow compact together: but ſtay a while, and you ſhall ſee what becomes of them; at the next thaw they are conſumed out of their place: Such friends have I, and ſuch is the friendſhip of man-kind, unleſs God renew the heart, or reſtrain it from its natural baſeneſs.

The word which we tranſlate, to wax warm, is uſed but this once in Scripture: it ſignifies alſo, ſcattered, or diſſipated. And the reaſon is, becauſe heat or warmth, diſſipates and ſeparates thoſe things which were united or congealed. The Sun warms the ſtreams, and then the waters, which ſtood on a heap, ſcatter and diſperſe. The ſum of all is: Theſe ſtreams in winter have nothing to ſtay their conſuming, but their hardening; and as ſoon as heat comes, they diſſolve, and are gone, in Summer theſe brooks are dry. This is yet further illuſtrated.

Verſ. 18. The paths of their way are turned aſide, they go to nothing and periſh.

What he had ſaid before in thoſe words, They vaniſh and are conſumed out of their place, he ſaith again in theſe, The paths of their way are turned aſide, they go to nothing and periſh. That is, theſe ſtreams are as if they had never been, you cannot find them in their former channels; theſe waters are quite ſpent, the Sun at a few draughts empties theſe veſſels, and draws them dry; ſo that there is not a drop left, either for man or beaſt.

The word which we render, Turned aſide, ſignifies to gather up or contract into a narrow compaſs, as when a man of courage gathers or ſhrinks up himſelf; or, as we ſay, buckles to a buſineſs, that he may put out the uttermoſt of his ſtrength; ſo Judg. 16. 29. When Samſon came to the pillars on which the houſe ſtood, the text ſaith, He turned himſelf with all his might. It is the word of the Text) as if Samſon would collect all the power he had into one place, to pull the pillars out of theirs. He that would do a great ſervice, will have all his outward ſtrength about him, or near at hand. And at ſuch a time a man will have all his inward ſtrength cloſe together, and therefore puts his body into leſs room, if he can, that all his members may act as one. We ſhrink up our bodies alſo in ſudden fear. The word is ſo uſed, Ruth 3. 8. When Boaz, that good man, awakening, found Ruth at his feet, and perceived there was a woman on the floor, he gathered or ſhrunk up himſelf, as a man that is afraid in his bed, will gather up his limbs nearer together, and lies in leſs room. In ſuch a manner the heat gathers or ſhrinks up the waters.

Thus the paths of theſe waters (ſaith Job) are ſhrunk up or gathered together, as it were, into one channel, or they creep under the banks, to ſhelter themſelves from that great drinker, and river-drinker the Sun; but all their ſubterfuges are in vain; the Sun dries up all, nothing remains; ſo it follows in the next words.

They go to nothing and periſh.] It is the word uſed, Gen. 1. 2. The earth was without form and void. There was a nothingneſs upon that confuſed heap before a ſecond creation ſtampt a form upon it: that which is uſeleſs, is but as good as nothing. The Jews expreſs an Idol by this word, 1 Sam. 12. 21. Which ſuits excellently with that of the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. 8. An Idol is nothing in the world. So theſe ſtreams, theſe rivers which ſeemed ſuch goodly pleaſant ſtreams, ſuch as might have relieved the thirſty traveller at all ſeaſons, come to them in ſummer, they are gone to nothing, they are like that rude maſs when the world lay undigeſted into parts, void and without form.

Before I come to the general Obſervations from the whole ſimilitude, obſerve, from this deſcription of paſſing ſtreams,

That, Things or perſons cannot hold long, which are not ſupplied from an inward principle.

Metaphora in ſignis & Hieroglyphicum clariſſimè exprimens, vanitatem magnæ ſpeciei, pietatis & charitatis quæ non ex vera fide provenit. Coc.

Job deſcribes ſtreams, having no ſpring to maintain them, the rain filled them, the cold froze them, and the warmth of the Sun emptied them. As it is in things, ſo in perſons, no man can hold out either in gracious and ſpiritual, or juſt and honourable civil acts, unleſs he have a principle within, anſwerable to what he undertakes (Job 27. 10.) Will the hypocrite alwayes call upon God? Not alwayes; why? becauſe he hath not a ſpirit (or ſpring) of prayer: Therefore hypocrites are well compared to ſuch brooks, as Job here deſcribes. A failing brook is a clear embleme of a falſe heart, both to God and man.

And that is the reaſon why regeneration is ſet forth by the gift of a new principle, of a new heart, or of a new nature. It is to no purpoſe to work a man by ſome extrinſecal motive, by hopes, or by fears, by threats, or by promiſes, by rewards or puniſhments, to do, or forbear good or evil: unleſs he have a new heart, all vaniſhes and comes to nothing. A regenerate perſon hath a new heart, a new ſpirit, is a new creature, a new man; all which notes a laſting principle, an everlaſting frame of holineſs in the main; though it may ſometime decline and need repairs. It is far better to be a rivulet, a little ſpring, then to be a great torrent; it is better to have a little ſpring of grace, then a great loud ſtream of profeſſion. It is reported by Geographers, in their deſcriptions of America, that in Peru, there is a River called the Diurnal River, or the day-river, becauſe it falls with a mighty current in the day, but in the night is dry. This may ſeem to be a fabulous report, but the reaſon given (which is direct to the point in hand) makes it not only probable, but very plain; for they tell us, that this River is not fed by a fountain or ſpring, but is cauſed meerly by the melting of the ſnow, which lies on the mountains thereabouts; in the day-time, when the Sun is up and warm, the Snow melts; but when night comes and the Sun goes down, the Snow freezes, and ſo the channel dries. Thus it is with thoſe who have not an inward principle of holineſs, they may have a great flood of profeſſion, when the Snow melts down into their boſoms, by the ſhine of outward proſperity; but when night and and cold, when troubles and dangers come, their waters freeze up, or paſs away, and go to nothing. So much of the cauſes, why theſe ſtreams, theſe water-brooks vaniſh, they have no ſpring to maintain and feed them: Rain and froſt, and ſnow (uncertain all) are all they have to truſt to.

Job having thus explained his ſimilitude, and ſhewed what he means by brooks, and what kind of brooks he means; he now confirms all by an experiment. You ſhall ſee it thus, theſe brooks will yield nothing at a time of need, many have dried them; who are they? The troops of Tema looked, the companies of Sheba waited for them.

Hos torrentes deſignaverunt, ſive pro ſtatione ad refocillationem. Coc.

Itinera, ſc. homines iter facientes.

The troops of Tema.] That is, the travellers who came in great companies from Tema, and paſſed through thoſe deſart Countries, where they had obſerved in the winter, ſtreams and floods of water frozen, and full of ſnow; now in their ſummer travels, being parcht with heat, and diſtreſſed for want of water, they expected relief from thoſe brooks which they had markt out for themſelves, and of which they had ſaid, Theſe will be watering places for us, and refreſhings in extreameſt heat. We read often in the Old Teſtament of ſuch travellers, Gen. 37. 25. Behold a company of Iſhmaelites, came from Gilead, with their Camels, bearing ſpicery and balm, and myrrhe, going down into Egypt. Such are now called a Caravan. The letter of the Hebrew is, The paths of Tema; the path or road in which they travelled, is put for the travellers. So, Iſa. 21. 13. O ye travelling companies of Dedanim! the Hebrew is, O ye paths of Dedanim! that is, O ye who travel in the paths of Dedanim! Thus here; The wayes of Tema, or the troops of Tema; and the companies of Sheba, waited and looked in theſe places for water, and (as it followeth) they found none.

The troops of Tema [looked.] Why did they look? why did they wait for thoſe ſtreams? They had ſeen plenty of water there, and therefore being thirſty, they looked and waited for water. Hence note, Firſt, That, The ſenſe of want carries us out to look for a remedie.

The troops of Tema looked; After what? after the ſtreams of brooks; why? becauſe they were parched with thirſt. They that are thirſty, will be looking for a ſtream, for a river; they that are hungry, will be enquiring after bread. As it is in natural, ſo in ſpiritual things; when once the ſoul is parched and thirſty, Oh how it longs for the rivers of mercy, for the ſtreams of conſolation! it looks and waits for them too. As the heart panteth after the water-brooks, ſo panteth my ſoul after thee, O God! my ſoul thirſteth for God, for the living God, Pſal. 42. 1, 2. That's the reaſon why Job inſtances in Tema and Sheba, becauſe they were often diſtreſſed in their travel for want of water.

Theſe troops of Tema looked, and as they looked, they ſearched for waters; they waited, becauſe it was probable that they ſhould find water where they had obſerved water. As (Mat. 21. 19.) Chriſt himſelf when he was an hungry, ſaw a fig-tree afar off (ſaith the Text) having leaves upon it: A fig-tree having leaves, in probability hath fruit alſo; becauſe the fig-tree (as Naturaliſts obſerve) puts forth her fruit as ſoon as her leaf; therefore when Chriſt ſaw leaves upon the fig-tree, it was an argument that there was fruit too. And whereas Mark ſaith, For the time of figs was not yet; he means the time of in-gathering figs; ſo that, the tree having leaves, ſhewed it might have fruit growing, and the time of gathering figs not being paſt, both theſe were ground enough for the Lord Chriſt to go and ſeek fruit upon it; for in this he acted according to the rule of humane reaſon, not of Divine omniſcience. Many object againſt ſeeking God, and humbling themſelves before him: It is a thing doubtful, whether ever they ſhall ſpeed, whether ever they ſhall find or no; they know not whether God will be merciful unto them or no; he will be merciful to ſome (they know) but whether they be the men, is very doubtful. I may anſwer ſuch from the point, A probability of ſpeeding, is ground enough for ſeeking. If Chriſt ſought for fruit when he ſaw leaves, becauſe it was a thing probable to find it; and if theſe of Tema and Sheba would ſeek for water, becauſe they had obſerved water in thoſe places; ſurely then, there is ground enough of ſeeking unto God for mercy, though we ſuppoſe there is but a probability of having mercy. The Prophet perſwades that afflicted people to faſt and humble themſelves, upon this ground; who knoweth if he will return and repent? (Joel 2.) that is, it is very probable he will return and repent. Heathen Nineveh is carried by the ſame argument, Jonah. 3. 9. Who can tell if God will return? &c. No man is ſure he will not, end though we are not ſure he will, yet let us venture. A peradventure from God, is better then a promiſe, or an aſſurance from the creature: And if probability be ground enough, what ground is there in aſſurance and certainty? and that is the ground we have of ſeeking God; if we ſeek to him, and wait upon him in faith, we ſhall be ſure to find, Pſal. 9. 18. The expectation of the poor ſhall not periſh. The companies of Tema found no water, but God is a living fountain, whoſe waters fail not; his banks are alike filled, ſummer and winter; Chriſt is not a water-brook, but a ſpring of waters: We ſhall never miſs water of life, if we ſeek to, and wait upon him for it; and if we believe on him, out of our bellies ſhall flow rivers of living waters, John 7. 38.

We have ſeen the endeavour of theſe troops of Tema: Now ſee how they ſpeed.

Verſe 20. They were confounded, becauſe they had hoped; they came thither and were aſhamed.

The ſum is, they hoped to have found water there, and it grieved and repented them, that ever they had hope to find water there, becauſe there was none to be found.

They were confounded.] The word ſignifies indifferently to be aſhamed or to be confounded, and to be confounded in regard of events or actions. The word is very near in ſound to our Engliſh Abaſhed: It notes alſo a waxing pale and wan, when the colour failes and withers, comes and goes. If a man be failed much in what he much hoped, his countenance failes too, his viſage changes, as his thoughts change, and he waxeth pale, Therefore we tranſlate it well, confounded. And it is expreſſed by confounding, for two reaſons.

Firſt, Becauſe the complexion is confounded at ſuch a time, ſhame and bluſhing make a kind of confuſion upon nature.

Secondly, The ſpirits are confounded, the heart is troubled; Diſappointment of our hope perplex a man both within and without. He is diſordered quite through. And becauſe long delayes cauſe ſhame, therefore by a Metonymie of the cauſe for the effect, this word ſignifies to delay time (Exod. 32. 1.) And when the people ſaw that Moſes delayed to come down, &c. that is, when the people ſaw, that Moſes made them aſhamed by his long delay, they gathered themſelves together, &c. They waited for Moſes forty dayes, and now Moſes had ſtayed ſo long, that they were aſhamed of his ſtay; that is, they expected, but he came not as they expected; this troubled them. We read the word in the ſame ſence (Judg. 5. 28.) The mother of Siſera looked out at a window, and cried through the lattice, why is his chariot ſo long in coming? why tarry the wheels of his chariots? Why is his chariot aſhamed? that is, why doth his chariot ſtay ſo long, as to make us aſhamed of our ſtay? We have long looked what Trophies Siſera would bring home, why doth his chariot by delayes make us aſhamed? Thus in the Text, theſe travellers are ſaid to be confounded, becauſe they had great hope to find water, but were diſappointed; They were confounded becauſe they had hoped; the latter clauſe carries the ſame ſence, They came thither and were aſhamed.

חפר Fodit, effodit, per Metaphoram traductam à fodientibus, erubuit; nam qui rubore perfuſi ſunt à peccato, caput in terram dimittunt, inſtar eorum qui terram defodiunt. Cartw.

Yet there is a ſpecial elegancy in the word, aſhamed; which ſignifies to dig, to dig that we may hide a thing; as it is ſaid of the evil ſervant, who received but one talent that he went and digged, and hid his Lords money, Mat. 25. 18. And ſo by a Metaphor this word is tranſlated to ſignifie being aſhamed, becauſe a man that is aſhamed, would hide his head in a hole (as we ſay) if he could, he would run his head into the ground, and rather be at the pains in digging of a hole in the earth, to hide himſelf, then to endure the ſhame of ſhewing himſelf. No man loves that ſhould appear, or to appear in that, which is his ſhame.

Theſe two things, to be aſhamed and confounded are often owned by the Saints in their repentance. It is beſt not to do any thing whereof to be aſhamed; but when we have done evil it is good to be aſhamed; To hide our ſins for ſhame, and not to be aſhamed of them when they are not hid, are equal aggravations of ſin. Hence when the holy Ghoſt would ſet forth men impudent or ſhameleſs in ſinning, who ſinned and cared not who ſaw them, he ſaith (Jer. 2. 34.) Alſo upon thy skirts is found the blood of innocents, I have not found it by ſecret ſearch; ſo we tranſlate it, the Hebrew is, I have not found it by digging; as if he had ſaid, ſome men are ſo aſhamed of their ſins, that when God comes to find them out, he muſt dig for them, becauſe they have digged into the earth, as it were, to hide their ſins; but others are ſo impudent in ſinning, that God needs not dig to find out their ſins; they are ſo ſhameleſs, that they let their ſins lie above ground; or as the Prophet ſpeaks (Iſa. 3. 9.) They declare their ſins like Sodom, that is, openly. Truth and holineſs never ſeek corners, and ſometimes ſin and wickedneſs do not. And as the doing of evil forbidden, cauſeth or ſhould cauſe ſhame; ſo doth the not receiving of good expected; hence when the Lord would aſſure his people that they ſhould undoubtedly receive all the good he had promiſed, and which they on that ground could expect, he concludes with them thus, And my people ſhall never be aſhamed. Why? The reaſon is plain in the Text; Ye ſhall eat in plenty, and be ſatisfied, Joel 2. 26. Which is directly oppoſite to this in Job. The Temanites were aſhamed, becauſe being thirſty, they were not ſatisfied. And becauſe Jeſus Chriſt ſhall ſo abundantly ſatisfie all the hunger and thirſt, and ſupply all the wants and weakneſſes of every believing ſoul, therefore it is expreſt under this word and notion, Whoſoever believeth on him, ſhall not be aſhamed, Rom. 9. 33.

Foderunt puteos, ſc. ad aquam inveniendam.

Such a meaning the word bears in this text [They were aſhamed.] That is, when they ſaw there was no water to be had, they would have hid themſelves in the earth, or digged holes to hide themſelves in for grief and ſhame.

And ſome render this word here (though to another ſence) They digged; that is, when they ſaw that there was no water in the ſtreams, then they fell a digging, to ſee if they could find any ſprings. That's a good ſence. But rather take digging as before; to ſhew what ſhame would have us do, when we have done amiſs, or when we miſs what we would find, then we ſeek covert and hide our ſelves. Hence theſe two are often joyned in Scripture, Shame and hiding, with the diſappointment of hope. Read a Text of near compliance with this in the letter (Jer. 14 3.) Their Nobles have ſent their little ones to the waters, they came to the pits, and found no water (it was in a time of drought) they returned with their veſſels empty: What followeth? They were aſhamed and confounded, and covered their heads. Again, v. 4. Becauſe the ground is chapt, for there was no rain in the earth; the plough-men were aſhamed, they covered their heads. And, Joel 10. 11. The corn is waſted, the new wine is dried up: What followeth? Be aſhamed, O ye husbandmen; howl, O ye Vine-dreſſers, becauſe the harveſt of the field is periſhed. So that in the common language and current of rhe Scripture, ſhame is an effect of diſappointment, and hiding the face, or covering the head an effect of both. Hence obſerve, > Firſt, That, Deceived hopes trouble us as much if not more then preſent wants.

A preſent want is a preſent ſmart; but deceived hopes are a perpetual ſmart; and that's the reaſon why the burden of ſorrow is ſo heavy, and the drought of the damned (who as Dives in the Parable, ſhall never have a drop of water) ſo intollerable. They (to allude to the Text) hoped to come to the overflowing ſtreams of their former earthly delights: But alas, the paths of the way of thoſe brooks are turned aſide for ever, they are gone to nothing and periſhed. All the while they travel (and that will be an eternity) through that howling Wilderneſs and fierie Deſart ſhall not meet with one Rivolet, nor taſte one drop of comfort to cool their parched tongues, or refreſh their enflamed bowels. Hopes delayed, trouble; but hopes deceived, confound.

Secondly, Obſerve from this paſſage, That, Deceived hopes fill with ſhame. Deceived hopes make a man hide his head.

Shame ariſes two wayes, either from doing a thing againſt common principles; or from loſing a thing againſt common expectation. The Lord threatens the Idolatrous Iſraelites, That they ſhall be aſhamed of the Oaks which they have deſired, and confounded for the Gardens which they had choſen, Iſa. 1. 29. Why aſhamed of Oaks and Gardens? becauſe in gardens and under ſhady oaks they ſet up and worſhipped Idols, in which they truſted for deliverance and protection; therefore when deſtruction ſhould overtake them, they muſt needs be aſhamed of oaks and gardens, becauſe their hopes were ſo foully deceived by them. In the ſame ſence the Lord foretels them by the ſame Prophet, that they ſhall be aſhamed of Ethiopia their expectation, and of Egypt, their glory, chap. 20. 5. becauſe they had hoped for ſo much help from confederacies with theſe Nations, who in the iſſue would delude their hopes, and give them no help at all. Thus alſo he ſpeaks hiſtorically, chap. 30. 5. They were all aſhamed of a people that could not profit them, nor be a help. All they who hope in any thing, ſave the Lord, ſhall as (theſe troops of Tema) be aſhamed, becauſe they have hoped, for they ſhall be deceived of their hopes.

And this is the reaſon, why hypocrites, at the laſt day, when Chriſt comes to judge them, ſhall be filled with ſhame. The reaſon (I ſay) is, becauſe they have been ſo full of deluding hopes. It appears they had great hopes, becauſe they ſpeak great words, and make great boaſts. They preſume if any are to be ſaved, they are the men; they ſhew fair for heaven, Mat. 7. 22. Many ſhall ſay unto me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not propheſied in thy name, and in thy name caſt out Devils? &c. They ſhall ſay, Lord, we have done thus and thus; what doth this repetition of their great works intimate, but the greatneſs of their hopes? Now when Chriſt ſhall ſay, I know you not, how will ſhame cover their faces for ever? and how will they cover their faces for ſhame, wiſhing they might never be either ſeen or known. When Jacob had ſerved a full apprentiſhip in order to his marriage with beautiful Rachel, and at laſt, through the guile of Laban, was put off with blear-eyed Leah; the holy Ghoſt expreſſeth him in a kind of paſſionate amazement, And it came to paſs, that in the morning, behold it was Leah; and he ſaid unto Laban, what is this thou haſt done unto me? As if Jacob had been in ſuch a diſtraction, that he could not tell how to expreſs himſelf: and therefore ſaith, What is this thou haſt done unto me? I know not by what name to call ſuch a uſage or diſappointment as this. Oh, in what a caſe will they be at the laſt day, who have ſerved out (as it were) an apprentiſhip in hopes of Rachel, the beauty of heaven and ſalvation; and yet when they awake at the reſurrection, Behold it will be (infinitely worſe than Leah) Hell and Damnation; how will ſhame and confuſion of face take hold of ſuch for ever?

So much for the letter of this ſimilitude; the failing of thoſe ſtreams, exemplified in the ſad experiences of the troops of Tema, and the companies of Sheba, as often deceived and aſhamed as they came to them for water.

Now follows the application of the ſimilitude, as if Job had ſaid, I have ſpoken in the clouds, and told you ſtories of foreign concernment. I tell you, my friends, I muſt even apply all this to you, and leave it at your doors. As Nathan, when he had told David the parable of the poor man, and his little Ewe-lamb, which his rich neighbour took away to dreſs for the way-faring man that was come unto him; he (I ſay) brings it home to David in the cloſe, ſaying, Thou art the man. So after Job had told a ſtory in the general, or in a third perſon, about deceitful brooks, and travellers deceived by them, now he applies it to his friends, Ye, my friends, are the men I mean by theſe brooks; ye are they, I have all this while delineated and ſet forth by theſe unfaithful and unconſtant ſtreams of water.

Verſe 21. For now ye are nothing, ye ſee my caſting down, and are afraid.

הייתם לא Fuiſtis non. Eſtis mihi nihili & vaniſſimi, & ut torrentes deſcripti. Merc.

For now ye are nothing.] What! nothing? Ye are nothing at all unto me. Ye are no more to me in any way of refreſhing, then thoſe ſtreams of the brook, which I even now deſcribed, were to the troops of Tema, for now ye are nothing. As out of nothing comes nothing, ſo that is as nothing unto us, out of which nothing comes.

Ex nihilo nihil fit. Ex quo nihil fit nihil eſt.

If we render it word for word according to the Hebrew, it is, Ye were not; you are unto me as if you had never been, or ye have deceived me in what I took you to be; I hoped for floods of comfort, for rivers of joy, and ſtreams of conſolation from you, but now I cannot find a drop, Ye are not unto me. That man is indeed, who doth that, for which he is, or that which is expected.

The Chaldee tranſlates Ye have been as if ye were not. And there is a difference in the Hebrew word; for ſome read it with the Pronoun Them, moſt with the Adverb Not; but though the tranſlation differ, yet it comes to the ſame ſence, Ye are them, that is, like to them, like to thoſe ſtreams, or, Ye are not; that is, ye are nothing to me; as thoſe ſtreams were nothing, or were not to the Travellers. The phraſe, Ye are not, imports the deceivableneſs of thoſe men; Job thought they would be ſomething to him; yea, they thought they would be very much to him, even as much ar water-brooks to a thirſty man; but they proved nothing at all to him: For as the word [Yea] in Scripture notes aſſurance, conſtancy, fidelity and faithfulneſs; ſo the word [Not or Nay] both in the Hebrew and in Greek ſignifies unconſtancy and unſetledneſs, eſpecially when theſe two are joyned together: And ſo it hath a clear ſence with that (2 Cor. 1. 20.) where the Apoſtle ſpeaking of Chriſt and of his faithfulneſs, ſaith, The Son of God was not yea and nay, but in him was yea, that is, he was not various, inconſtant and uncertain, but he was the very ſame; look what you have found Chriſt at one time, you ſhall find him a ſecond and third time, yea, the ſame for ever: He will not ſtart from you an inch; ſo ver. 17. of the ſame Chapter, When I was minded to come, did I uſe lightneſs? or the things that I purpoſe, do I purpoſe after the fleſh, that with me there ſhould be yea, yea, and nay, nay? that is, that with me there ſhould be I and No, ſomething and nothing. It is of a near importance with the words of Job, Ye are no to me; ye promiſed to be I to me, to be yea, yea, but now it comes to the trial, ye are No, No to me, that is, ye are nothing to me; ye are no ſuch thing as I expected you would be.

Ye ſee my caſting down.] That is, my affliction; To be caſt down, and to be afflicted, are the ſame. The word ſignifies dejection & conſternation of ſpirit, to be heart-falter'd the falling of a mans mind, as well as of his eſtate, Deut. 1. 21. Fear not, neither be diſcouraged, let not your ſpirit or courage fall, Job's caſting down was in his body and goods, his ſpirit and courage ſtood upright upon their feet: Ye (ſaith Job) ſee my outward caſting down, the caſting down of my eſtate abroad, ye ſee how all is broken and loſt; and now what is the help ye give me? Do ye ſtand to me, or lift me up now I am thus caſt down? Do ye ſupply me with comfort, and prop me up with counſel? No, ye are afraid your ſelves: ye are ſo far from removing my trouble, that you your ſelves are troubled.

Ye are afraid.] Their fear may be referred to his perſon, or to his condition; ye are afraid to come nigh me, ye are afraid I will infect you; or ye are afraid ſome ſuch evil will fall upon your ſelves; I had thought ye had come as friends, to deliver me from my fears, and now ye are fallen into fears your ſelves: Thus, Ye are not, ye are no ſuch thing as ye promiſed me; ye promiſed to comfort, at leaſt to pity me, but ye do not: So the Septuagint, Ye viſit me. but ye are not moved with any compaſſion towards me. I had been as well without your company; or, if no ſuch men had been in the world.

Vos me viſiſtis nulla miſericordiâ moti. Sept.

Obſerve firſt from theſe words, For now ye are nothing.

He that is not what he ought to be, or what he promiſed to be, is nothing.

To be uſeleſs is (in a ſence) to be eſſenceleſs. To be uſeleſs in the world, is to be as out of the world: A man who lives only to eat, and drink, and ſleep, may be ſaid not to live at all. What we ſay in our Engliſh Proverb, is true, both in perſons and of actions, As good never a whit as never the be; as good not to be, as do no good. The Apoſtle Jude ſpeaking of unprofitable perſons (ver. 12.) calls them trees without fruit; and what then? Twice dead, plucked up by the roots; as if the Apoſtle had ſaid, I look upon fruitleſs perſons, as dead perſons, yea, as doubly dead, that is, dead ſure enough. As a man can be born but once, in one kind (Nicodemus argued from a truth, though not to a truth, becauſe he could not diſtinguiſh natural from ſpiritual, John 3. 4.) ſo a man can die but once in one kind. Theſe men of whom the Apoſtle ſpeaks, were alive naturally, though dead ſpiritually; how then is it ſaid, that they were twice dead? They were judged twice dead, either, becauſe a ſpiritual death is ſo great a death, that it may well go for two; yea, one ſpiritual death is worſe then a thouſand natural deaths;

Or ſecondly, they are ſaid to be twice dead, becauſe they were dead both in regard of the truth of grace, and in regard of any outward actings of grace; for ſome hypocrites who are indeed dead in ſin, yet act grace in many outward fruits, as if they were alive: but of theſe perſons it is ſaid, their fruit withereth, and they are without fruit; they were not ſo much as externally active, they had no life of union with Chriſt, and they did no good with the life of their profeſſion in Chriſt, and therefore are juſtly ſaid to be twice dead. They who have leaves, and look freſh and lively, as if they had more then one life in them, yet, if uſeleſs, are called liveleſs, and they who do nothing in the world, are to be reckoned no-bodies in the world. In the Parable of the Prodigal, the concluſion is, This my ſon was dead, and is alive; why dead? becauſe he was unanſwerable to thoſe purpoſes, to thoſe ends for which he received life. He was a prodigal, and had deſerted his fathers ſervice, therefore his father looked upon him, as if (all that while) he had not been at all. That's the deſcription of the dead, as Jacob ſaid of Joſeph (when he concluded him torn by a wild beaſt) Joſeph is not; and Rachel would not be comforted for her children, becauſe they were not; ſo ſaith the father of the prodigal, This my ſon was dead, or, he was not; he was no help nor comfort to me. We no longer deſerve the name or reputation of any thing, than we do thoſe things for which we are. If we leave our duty (upon the matter) we loſe our nature, and are as if we had no being, while we reach not (at leaſt, while we reach not after) the end of our being. A heathen concludes of ſuch a man, He hath only been, he hath not lived. But we may from the warrant of Job's Rhetorick, go a degree further, and deny that he hath been; for he is as if he had never been, a meer nothing.

Fuit, non vixit.

From thoſe words, Ye ſee my caſting down, and are afraid; Note,

That, Some man is able to bear more then another is able to behold.

The ſight of fearful things cauſeth fear. Further obſerve,

A fearful man will never be a helpful man.

Courage in a day of trouble, either of our own or others, is a great cure of trouble, yea a victory over it. There is one fear very good when we ſee the caſting down of our friends, To be afraid of provoking God to caſt us down (Deut. 17. 13. they ſhall hear and fear, and do no more preſumptuouſly. What ſhall they hear? They ſhall hear how God hath caſt men down, or caſt down a Nation by his judgments, they ſhall hear of this and fear. How ſhall they fear? They ſhall fear to do preſumptuouſly, fear to provoke that God, who can thus caſt down men and kingdoms. It is good to be thus afraid. But there is a ſinful fear, when fear diſorders or unfits us to put our hands to the help of thoſe who are caſt down, and to adminiſter comfort to thoſe who are in ſorrow; ſuch was the caſting down and the fear here meant: They were ſo afraid, that they could not lend Job a hand, or give him adviſed counſel to ſupport his ſpirit.

I ſhall add one Obſervation from the general ſcope of the ſimilitude.

That, An unfaithful friend fails us moſt, when we have moſt need of him.

That's the ſum of all. In Winter, when there is water in every ditch, thoſe brooks abound with water; but in Summer, eſpecially in a dry Summer, when the rain of the Land is duſt (as Moſes ſpeaks) theſe brooks are duſt too, they vaniſh and are conſumed out of their place, they afford no refreſhing at all. When the man that went down from Jeruſalem to Jericho, and fell among Thieves, (Luke 10. 30.) lay in the way ſtript and wounded, even half dead, A certain Prieſt came that way (ſaith the Text) and when he ſaw him, he paſſed by on the other ſide; and likewiſe a Levite, when he was at that place, came and looked on him, and paſſed by on the other ſide; but the Samaritan went to him (not from him) and had compaſſion on him. Job ſpeaks very near this language, but fully this ſence, of his friends. They, like the uncharitable Prieſt and Levite, paſſed by him, as the ſtreams of brooks they paſs away; whereas they ſhould have been like the good Samaritan, a fountain, a river of ſetled, ſpringing comfort to him.

This is the great difference between the love of God, and that of moſt men; God is the beſt friend to us at all times, (he is beſt to us in the beſt times; if we had not him to our friend, it would be very ill with us when we have moſt friends.) But God is beſt of all to us in the worſt times, a beſt friend to us, when we have no friends; he is our ſpring when the rain falls; but he is our ſureſt, ſweeteſt ſpring, when there is neither rain nor dew upon the face of the earth. Therefore he is compared (as Jer. 2.) ſo in other places, unto a living fountain, where you may be ſure to find water in the hotteſt ſeaſon. This infinitely commends the love of God beyond that of men, who at the beſt, are but broken ciſterns, which leak out the comforts they are truſted with, and for the moſt part, are but like Job's brooks, that turn aſide, and paſs away when we have moſt need of them.

It is obſerved of the Samaritans in Joſephus, that whenever the Jews affairs proſpered, they would be their friends, and profeſs much kindneſs; but if the Jews were in trouble, and wanted their aſſiſtance, then they got them far enough off, they would not have to do with them, or own them. The rich hath many friends (ſaith Solomon, Prov. 14. 20.) but the poor is hated even of his own neighbour. Worldly friendſhip ends with riches, and he that wants money, ſeldom abounds with friends.

Ubi deficit pecunia; labaſcit & amicitia.

But conſider how far this is from the very nature of a brother, and from the Law of friendſhip. Solomon (Prov. 17. 17.) deſcribes a true friend, to be one who loveth at all times, and a brother is born for adverſity. As if he had ſaid, This is the reaſon God hath raiſed up relations, and made men near one to another, becauſe himſelf orders there ſhall be times of adverſity, when they ſhall have need of one another. Some render the place, A brother is born in adverſity; as if the meaning were, that, when a man is in trouble, God raiſes up a brother to help him; or, as the Septuagint hath it, A brother is born for this end and purpoſe, to help in adverſity. Therefore a brother loſes the very end and purpoſe why he was born, if he refuſe to help thoſe who are in adverſity. Ruth was a true pattern of a faithful friend and brother, though a daughter; I went out full (ſaith the Mother-in-law) but the Lord hath brought me home empty; but though ſhe was emptied of the world, yet Ruths heart was full of love to her; I will not leave thee, God do ſo to me, and more alſo, if ought but death part thee and me. So ſaith faithfulneſs in friends, eſpecially in Chriſtian friends. It is one of the greateſt duties and commendations of Chriſtian profeſſion, to ſtick to, and ſtand by one another, be it foul weather, or be it fair, blow the winds high or low, let it be ſtormy or calm, ever to be the ſame. The Heathens wondred in the primitive times at the great love of the Chriſtians one to another. Let us take heed we do not put heathens, natural, carnal men to wonder, Oh how little do Chriſtians love one another! Let us not give them occaſion to ſay, Oh how the Chriſtians hate one another! How like are they at beſt, to ſtreams of brooks, who fail when their friends and brethren need the benefit of their aſſiſtance?

Let me only give you this caution, God ſuffereth men to be thus unfaithful unto men, yea ſometimes a Chriſtian brother to fail a Chriſtian brother (which is their ſin, and ought to be their ſorrow;) I ſay, God leaves them to this evil of their own hearts, that we may have a greater good out of it, then the higheſt actings of their love and faithfulneſs could eſtate us in: Namely, that we may learn to truſt upon God alone, and may better know what creatures are. Truſt not in a brother (Jer. 9. 4,) ſo as to let out your hearts upon him, think not you are ſafe in the love of a brother, no, not of a godly brother: The Apoſtle (1 Tim. 6. 17.) to draw off rich men from truſting in their riches, riches, uſeth this argument, Charge them that are rich, that they truſt not in uncertain riches, but in the living God: Why ſhould they not truſt in riches? He giveth the reaſon in the Epithite, uncertain; they are uncertain riches, therefore truſt them not. So we may ſay of men, Truſt not in men, no, not abſolutely in godly men; for the beſt of men are uncertain, poſſibly they may be as theſe ſtreams of brooks, whoſe waters failed, Pſal. 146. 3. Put not your truſt in Princes, nor in the ſon of man, in whom there is no help. Why not? For his breath goeth forth (that's one reaſon, he muſt die, he muſt return to the earth,) therefore truſt him not. But beſides that, we may ſay, Truſt not in Princes, &c. while their breath tarrieth in them, for it is poſſible their help and faithfulneſs may go forth, though their breath doth not. Therefore truſt only in the living God, he will never leave us, though men do; God only is unchangeable, he only hath preſerved this honour without touch or ſtain, Never to forſake thoſe who truſted in him, how forlorn and forſaken ſoever their condition was.

VERS. 22, 23, 24, 25.

Did I ſay, Bring unto me? Or give a reward for me of your ſubſtance?

Or deliver me from the enemies hand, or redeem me from the hand of the mighty?

Teach me, and I will hold my tongue: and cauſe me to underſtand wherein I have erred.

How forcible are right words? But what doth your arguing reprove?

JOB having ſhadowed out his friends unfaithfulneſs by an elegant ſimilitude in the context fore-going; now aggravates their unfaithfulneſs to him in his wants, by his own modeſty, in ſeeking to them for ſupplies. Did I ſay, Bring unto me? or give a reward for me of your ſubſtance? As if he had ſaid, I have not been burthenſom or troubleſom to you, I have uot called for your contributions and benevolences, or ſought to have my eſtate made up out of your purſes? Why do ye charge me with impatience at my loſs, as if that were it which pinches and preſſes me? did I ever charge you for my reparation or redemption? That (indeed) might have been, either burdenſom or dangerous to you. All that I expected from you, was your comfort, and your counſel; theſe would not have put you to much expence; or if you could not have reacht ſo far as to comfort me, yet you might have forborn to contribute ſo largely to my ſorrows, by overtaxing me with impatience, aud charging me with hypocriſie.

Did I ſay.] I was not clamorous or importunate, no, I did not ſo much as open my mouth to move you in that point; I have been ſo far from begging, that ye have not heard me, ſaying, Bring to me.

Bring unto me?] The word is, Give unto me, Hoſ. 4, 18. Their Princes love, Give ye, or Bring ye, ſo ſaith Job, I did not ſay, Bring ye, or give ye, my ſpirit was not ſet upon money, or the repair of my loſſes out of your eſtates; I did not either write or ſend for your charity; you were not invited to viſit me, that you might contribute to my neceſſity.

The word here uſed for a reward, properly taken, ſignifies that which is given to a Judge, to corrupt or turn him aſide in judgment. One of the Rabbins gives this reaſon, why it notes a Bribing reward, becauſe it is compounded of a word ſignifying One; and a bribe makes the giver and the receiver, the Judge and party One, or of one mind; a Judge ſhould ever ſtand indifferent between both parties, till the cauſe be heard, but a bribe makes him One of them.

Yet ordinarily, this word is put for any gift, or help, ſubſidy or ſupply of anothers wants.

Of your ſubſtance.] The word implies, the native, natural ſtrength, which ſupplies the wants, or ſupports the weakneſſes of the body; as alſo the ſtrength of the earth, by which it puts forth fruit, Levit. 26. 20. And becauſe riches are a mans civil ſtrength, therefore the ſame word expreſſes both.

Verſ. 23. Or did I ſay, Deliver me from the enemies hand?

The enemies.] Or the hand of thoſe that have brought me into ſtraights; for the original imports, the ſhutting of man up in a narrow compaſs, ſo that he knows not how to get out; he that is in the hand of an enemy, is in a ſtraight hand. Ahab commands, (1 King. 22. 29.) Go carry Micaiah back, and feed him with the bread of affliction, or with the bread of ſtraights, ſuch bread as an enemy provides. The Greek word uſed by the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. 4. 8. reaches this fully, We are troubled but not diſtreſſed, or ſtraightned. Now ſaith Job, did I ſay, deliver me out of the hand or power of mine enemies, who have brought me into theſe ſtraights? alluding, as is conceived, to thoſe Chaldeans and Sabeans, who had ſpoiled his eſtate, and ſlain his ſervants.

Or redeem me out of the hand of the mighty.

Redeem me.] That is my goods which they have carried away captive. To redeem, ſignifies the fetching back of a thing by price or force. Chriſt is a Redeemer in both ſences, he redeemed or fetcht back captivated man, by compact and by price, in reſpect of God his Father. We are bought with a price, 1 Cor. 6. 20. that is, bought with a full price. Chriſt did not compound with the juſtice of his Father, but ſatisfied it, to redeem us; And he redeemed us by force, out of the hands of Satan, Spoyling Principalities and Powers, and making a ſhew of them openly, Col. 2. 15. As in Triumphs, the Romans uſed to do with their ſpoiled, captivated enemies. Job had not begg'd redemption of his friends, from the power of his enemies either way: Did I deſire you, by compact, and by price, to ranſom me? Or did I deſire you to levy an Army, with power and force, to recover my eſtate out of the hands of thoſe mighty oppreſſors.

The word [Mighty.] ſignifies alſo terrible; the hand of the terrible one: It is often applied to God, when he ſhews himſelf in terror to wicked men, Pſal. 89. 7. God is greatly to be feared, Iſa. 2. 19. He ſhakes terribly the earth. But moſt commonly, to cruel, powerful men, who make no other uſe of their ſtrength, but to be a terror to innocents. The Apoſtle, Phil. 1. 28. explains this word, while he ſaith, and in nothing be ye terrified by your adverſaries; that word in the Greek, anſwers this in the Hebrew, your adverſaries are terrible men, men who think to beat down all with their great looks, but be not ye terrified by theſe terrible ones. So here, Did I call unto you, to redeem me out of the hand of the mighty, the terrible? out of the hand of thoſe cruel plunderers, the Sabeans and Chaldeans.

De manu Tribulationis. Vatab. Puto eum Allegoricè tam graves & vehementes calamitates intelligere. Merc.

Further, Some underſtand by the hand of the mighty, not the perſons afflicting him, but the affliction it ſelf, which was upon him: Trouble is ſometime compared to a mighty enemy, Prov. 6. 11. So ſhall thy poverty come, as one that travelleth, and thy want as an armed man. Want ſtrips us: but is it ſelf, not only cloathed, but arm'd; Evils have ſo much life and ſtrength in them, that they are compared to the ſtrongeſt, who live, armed men. Hence Obſerve, > Firſt, It is an aggravation of unkindneſs, to thoſe, who are in want, not to be kind to them, when they are modeſt in asking a ſupply of their wants.

Love ought to prevent asking, and ſhould be moved to give moſt to them (who being in need) complain leaſt.

Again, He ſpeaks this to wipe off that aſperſion, as if the loſs of his eſtate were the thing which grieved and pinched him ſo ſore. Did I ſay unto you, bring me a reward, &c.

> It is an argument that a man over-loves that which he hath loſt, when he is over-importunate to have his loſſes repaired.

If you had ſeen me call out unto you for an eſtate, then you had reaſon to think that the loſs of my eſtate, was the loſs of my patience.

Thirdly, Obſerve the temper of a gracious heart under loſſes and afflictions.

> A gracious heart under loſſes: is not forward to complain to creatures, or to ask help of men.

Did I ſay, bring unto me, or give me a reward of your ſubſtance? He complains to God, and ſheweth him his trouble, he opens his wants to God, and asketh ſupplies of him; but he is very modeſt and ſlow in complaining to, or in ſuing for help at the hand of creatures.

It is not unlawful for thoſe, that are in want, to make their loſſes and wants known to men; it is a duty, rather ſo to do: only it muſt be done with caution, leaſt, when we ask of creatures too importunately, we give an argumen againſt our ſelves, that we are too much in love with creatures.

As it is reproved in thoſe Rulers before ſpoken of, Hoſ. 4. 18. that they did love, give ye; it is a crime in the rich, to love, give ye; and certainly it is a ſin, at leaſt an infirmity in thoſe that are poor and in want, to love, give ye, or to ſay as Job here had not, bring to me. Solomon ſpeaks of the daughters of the horſe-leach, that they are alwayes crying give, give, noting their inſatiable thirſt after blood. Some poor are alwayes crying give, give, which notes a very inordinate deſire after riches. Job is very careful to take off the ſuſpition of ſuch a blemiſh from himſelf, I did not ſay, bring ye, or give ye me of your ſubſtance.

It is the duty of thoſe that are full, to give to their empty brethren, it is their ſin if they give not; and it is their ſhame, if they are not moſt free in giving to thoſe, who are moſt modeſt in asking; but when God hath emptied us, we ſhould not be eager in filling our ſelves. When God takes creatures from us, we ſhould take heed of purſuing them: we ſhould not do any thing, which may argue our hearts glued to them, when the Lord hath looſen'd them out of our hands. It is an honour to a poor Chriſtian, when in his greateſt ſtraights he can approve himſelf to God and men, and can ſay as the Apoſtle (Acts 20. 33.) I have coveted no mans ſilver, or gold, or apparel. It is as ſinful to covet in our wants, as it is in our abundance. And it is as bad (if not worſe) to be greedy of the creature, when we are empty, as when we are full. A poor man oppreſſing the poor, Prov. 28. 3. and coveting from the rich, are ſights of equal abomination.

Verſ. 24. Teach me, and I will hold my tongue: and cauſe me to underſtand wherein I have erred, &c.

This and the next verſe, contain the fourth branch of Job's reply; and the general ſence of them, is a ſubmiſſion of himſelf to his friends, if yet they ſhould ſpeak reaſon, or diſcover his error. Teach me and I will hold my peace; as if he had ſaid, Though I have to the beſt of my underſtanding, thus far acquitted my ſelf, and cleared mine own innocency; though I have, as I think, with truth and juſtice, laid this charge of uncharitableneſs and unfriendly dealing with me upon you; yet you ſhall ſee I am ready to hear you, I am teachable: if you can yet teach me, I will keep ſilence, and if you cauſe me to underſtand wherein I have erred, I ſhall do ſo no more.

Teach me.] The Original word notes in ſtrict ſence, to caſt a thing forth, to throw a thing as a dart or ſtone is thrown, either downward or upward, or in a direct motion forward. Hence by a Metaphor, it ſignifies rain, becauſe rain is (as it were) darted forth from the clouds, and caſt down upon the earth: And from hence (yet one remove further) the Metaphor is carried to ſignifie teaching; hence the holy Prophet is commanded to drop his word, Ezek. 20. 46. & 21. 2. Son of man, ſet thy face toward the South, and drop thy word towards the South. Son of man, ſet thy face toward Jeruſalem, and drop thy word toward the holy places: And the reaſon is this, becauſe Doctrines, Truths, and wholſom inſtructions, are inſtilled and caſt down among the people, or dropt into their ſpirits, as rain is caſt or dropp'd from Heaven upon the Earth: And ſo we may read the words out of the Metaphor thus, rain down upon me; do ye, O my friends, like clouds full of water, diſſolve and ſhowre down inſtructions upon me, and ſee if I do not receive and drink them in. And from this word, all doctrine and inſtruction in the Hebrew is called Torah, Prov. 13. 1. and Pſal. 1. 1. And the Jews by way of eminency, call the five books of Moſes (as alſo all the books of the Old Teſtament) the Torah, that is, the Law or rule of holy Doctrine, which God rained down from Heaven, and diſtilled graciouſly upon his people, for their growth in knowledge and in holineſs: And ſo a Teacher, from the ſame root, is called Moreh, Job 36. 22. Who teacheth like Him? who raineth like him? there is no man can diſtil truths, as God doth. Moſes (Deut. 32. 2.) elegantly ſets forth his preaching, by an allegory of rain and dew. My doctrine ſhall drop as the rain; my ſpeech ſhall diſtil as the dew, as the ſmall rain upon the tender herb, and as the ſhowres upon the graſs. And the Apoſtle Paul, Heb. 6. 7, 8. compares a taught people to ground that is well watered with rain; For the earth which drinketh in the rain, that cometh oft upon it, and bringeth forth fruit, is bleſſed; but that which beareth thornes and bryers, is rejected, and is nigh unto curſing, whoſe end is to be burned. A people well inſtructed, are like that ground which is under continual ſhowres and dews.

And doctrine is fitly compared to rain, and teaching to raining; Firſt, becauſe all true and holy doctrine comes from God, as the rain doth. The rain is Gods proper gift, (Jer. 14. 22.) Can any of the vanities of the Gentiles give rain? All the men in the world, are not able to make one drop of rain; ſo we may ſay of this figurative rain of truth and holy doctrine, Can any of the vanities of the Gentiles? yea, can any of the moſt learned among the ſons of men give this rain? Can any man make any one truth, which hath not firſt been made above? Truth like rain comes from Heaven, it drops from beyond the clouds. Art not thou He? O Lord our God? therefore we will wait upon Thee, ſay they of the natural rain, Jer. 14. 22. and ſo we muſt in regard of the ſpiritual. Hence the word which Moſes uſes (Deut. 32. 2.) for doctrine, dropping as the rain, ſignifies a received learning: Holy truths are ſo called in that language, becauſe the doctrine of Religion is received from God, not deviſed by men. So the Apoſtle phraſes it (1 Cor. 11. 23.) I received of the Lord, that which I delivered unto you. And Chriſt himſelf, As my Father hath taught me, ſo I ſpeak theſe things, John 8. 28. That which Nicodemus ſaid of Chriſt, is true of every one that teacheth truth, Joh. 3. 2. Thou art a Teacher come from God. As truth it ſelf, ſo the teachers of it are from God: as a lie, and the tellers of it are from the Devil, Joh. 8. 44.

Secondly, Like rain (as in regard of the original whence it comes, ſo) in regard of the effect: rain refreſheth the earth, when the earth is weary and faint, when the earth gaſpes and is parched, how doth a ſhowre of rain revive it? When the Pſalmiſt had ſpoken of the rain coming down upon the earth, he preſently adds this effect, The little hills rejoyce on every ſide, they ſhout for joy, they alſo ſing. Thus alſo a people wearied, and languiſhing, and fainting in ignorance, when they receive truths and holy inſtructions, how do their hearts rejoyce, how do they laugh and ſing? In the parable, Math. 13. Some are ſaid to receive the word with joy; even they who are but formaliſts and hypocrites (for it is ſpoken of them) rejoyce and are refreſhed for a ſeaſon with the word. Truth is ſuch a gracious ſhowre, that they ſometimes receive it with joy, who have no grace. And if truth refreſh men, who are but nature, or move in ſpiritual works, but upon natural principles, how will it refreſh thoſe who have grace, and ſpiritual principles ſutable to it. Thou, O God (ſaith David, Pſal. 68. 9, 10.) didſt ſend a plentiful rain, whereby thou didſt refreſh thine inheritance when it was weary. That's a truth in the letter, and ſome underſtand it of natural rain; but others interpret that plentiful rain in a figure, for the rain of doctrine which God ſent down upon his people, when he gave the Law and dropt thoſe heavenly Oracles from Mount Sinai upon his people Iſrael, that ſhowre of the Law came indeed in a ſtorm, Thunder and Lightning, and a terrible tempeſt accompanied it; But though the thunder terrified, yet the ſhowre refreſhed; and the Saints have ever delighted in the matter of thoſe inſtructions and holy counſels given there, though Moſes a chief among the Saints, feared and quak'd exceedingly, at the manner of giving them.

Thirdly, As rain, ſo teaching makes fruitful. The Prophet Iſaiah makes out this part of the ſimilitude expreſly, Chap. 55. 10, 11. As the rain cometh down, and the ſnow from Heaven, and returns not thither, but waters the earth, and makes it bring forth and bud, that it may give ſeed to the ſower, and bread to the eater: So ſhall my word be that goeth out of my mouth, &c. Hence alſo the people of God are compared (Deut. 32. 2.) to graſs and tender herbs which grow and flouriſh, which are fed and bring forth fruit, when watered with the rain. It cannot be denyed, though it be much to be lamented, that many ſouls upon whom much of this rain falls, are altogether barren and unfruitful. But, Oh! How barren are thoſe ſouls, upon whom not a drop of this rain ever fell! They that are deprived of theſe ſhowres are under a grievous curſe, even ſuch a curſe as David imprecates upon the Mountains of Gilboa, 2 Sam. 1. 21. Ye Mountains of Gilboa, let there be no dew, neither let there be rain upon you, &c. When God ſaith unto a people, let there be no dew, no rain upon you, no Moſes to drop doctrine upon you, no Paul to plant, no Apollo's to water you with the Word, this is the ſaddeſt ſhowre of curſes that can fall upon a People; as without rain, ſo without the Word, ordinarily, there can be no fruitfulneſs. You ſee at this time how upon a little with-holding of the natural rain, we preſently fear barrenneſs and famine; the want of ſpiritual rain brings in a worſe barrenneſs, though there are not many who fear it, or are ſencible of it.

This was preach'd in a time of drought

Fourthly, The Word taught is like rain in regard of the diſpenſing of it. The rain comes not down alike, at all times; ſhowres are very various; ſometimes it rains ſoftly, then we call it a ſtill, ſoaking rain; ſometimes we have a ſtrong mighty rain; at another time rain is accompanied with Thunder and Lightning, while the ſhowres deſcend, the great Ordnance of Heaven diſcharge from the clouds, and fill the Air with terror. Thus alſo it is, or ſhould be in teaching: Many ſouls require a ſtill, ſoft, quiet rain: Others muſt have ſtronger ſhowres, mighty rains you muſt pour down upon them. A third ſort muſt have thunder joyned with rain, they need a Boanerges, a ſon of thunder, a mixture of terror with inſtruction to bore their ears, and break their hearts. Thoſe teachers miſtake their work, who in ſtead of raining are alwayes Thundering and Lightning. As if their Pulpet were ſet upon Mount Sinai. And I believe, it is as great a miſtake to think Teachers need never thunder. The word of God in all parts of it, and in all manner of diſpenſations of it, is exceeding uſeful. A Miniſter without teaching, is (as Jude ſpeaks) a cloud without water; and he ſhall do but little good upon ſome, if he have nothing but water in his cloud. Fire ſometime muſt mingle with the rain, and a Tempeſt come after or before the dewing, diſtilling, ſtill voice. The word of God is compared to fire, as well as unto water. Only it muſt be the wiſdom, and it is the duty of every Teacher, to know how to give every one his portion, or as the Apoſtle Jude counſels, verſ. 22, 23. Of ſome to have compaſſion, making a difference, and others to ſave with fear, pulling them out of the fire: A difference muſt be made, ſome are to be dealt with compaſſionately, and gently rained upon; others muſt be ſaved with fear, that is, they muſt be made affraid with Thunder and Lightning, with ſtormy and tempeſtuous doctrine. Some ſpirits will not be kept out of the fire, but by caſting them into the fire; ſo much that Text in Jude imports. Others ſave with fear, pulling them out of the fire; as if he had ſaid, your terrifying them with the fire, will be as pulling them out of the fire. A ſhowr of ſpiritual brimſtone (ſuch as God rain'd on Sodome in the letter) is beſt for them, if you ſpare them, you deſtroy them.

Teach me, [and I will be ſilent.] Or, I will hold my tongue. The word properly taken, ſignifies to dig or to plough: And ſometime improperly to meditate or think, and it implies much thoughtfulneſs; becauſe a muſing, meditating, thoughtful man is ever digging into matters, he reſts not in the outſide and face of things, but puts in his plough deep, turning them up to the very bottom. From whence, by one ſtep further into the Metaphor, it is tranſlated to ſignifie ſilence, or to hold our peace: becauſe they who have many thoughts, have feweſt words; Muſing men are no great talkers; when the mind is much at work, and very buſie, the tongue uſually doth little. Job promiſes ſilence, as if he meant to ſit down and conſider fully, what they ſhould further ſay unto him.

This promiſed ſilence or holding of his tongue, may have a threefold reference.

Firſt, in general to the duty of a learner, Teach ye me, and I will keep ſilence, I will learn.

Or ſecondly, To his former complaints, Teach me, and I will be ſilent: That is, I will give over complaining, I confeſs I have made a bitter complaint in the third Chapter: but if you will teach me better, I will complain no more.

Thirdly, It may have reference to that which they ſhould ſpeak to him in their next advices. Teach me aright, and I will hold my tongue, that is, I will reply no more, I will not gain-ſay your counſels, but rather (if I have offended) acknowledge my error, and ſit down in ſilence, I will not wrangle, when I cannot anſwer, I can do nothing againſt the truth, but for the truth. From hence we may Obſerve,

First, That, a gracious ſpirit is a teachable ſpirit.

A gracious heart calls for teaching. Teach me, and I will hold my tongue. As a gracious heart calls for ſtrengthning from Chriſt, ſo it calls for teaching from Chriſt, and from any who can teach the truth, as it is in Chriſt. A weak ſoul ſaith, Lord draw me, and I will run after thee; an ignorant ſoul ſaith, Lord inſtruct me, that I may underſtand thee. Give me the wiſdom of the prudent, that I may underſtand my way, and I ſhall walk therein. A godly man loves not to be at his own diſpoſing, nor at his own Tutoring; He that will learn of none, but himſelf, hath (ſure enough) a fool to his Maſter; And there is more hope of a fool then of him, that is (thus) wiſe in his own conceit, Prov. 26. 12. Obſerve, Secondly, A teachable ſpirit is an excellent ſpirit.

A man that is willing to be taught, is in a better condition then many who are able to teach. It argues a holier temper of the heart, to be willing to be taught, then to be able to teach. And it is far worſe to be unwilling to learn, then not to be knowing; Unteachableneſs is more dangerous then ignorance. It is ſad to conſider how unteachable many are, they will not be taught, or they think they have learned all, they have devoured all knowledge, they are full and need no more: Some deceived ſouls (and they moſt) carry it, as if they had a ſpirit of infallibility: what? teach them? they are above teaching. It is a ſweet frame of ſpirit, when a man ſees he may be out of frame. He is in a fair way to truth, who acknowledge that he may be in an error. And he who will not acknowledge that he may be in an error, is certainly out of the way of truth. The Apoſtle reſolves it, 1 Cor. 8. 2. If any man think that he knoweth any thing, he knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know. Not as if the Apoſtles meaning were, that all knowledge muſt be ſpecial or uncertain, all in queries and nothing in concluſions, that we ſhould halt between two opinions, and hang like meteors in the Air. Nor doth he commend to us that proud modeſty, which will not let us acknowledge we know what we know; but his mind is to meet with thoſe who think they know any thing ſo well, that they need not or cannot know it better, and abound ſo in their own ſence, that they have no room to admit the ſence of others. As he who thinks himſelf ſo good, that he cannot be better, was never ſo good as he ſhould; ſo he that thinks he knows ſo much, that he can learn no more, knows nothing as he ought. It is beſt to be fixed in judgement, but it is very ill to be fixed in opinion. It is to be feared that man is much divorced from right reaſon, who is ſo married to his own, that he reſolves nothing but death ſhall part him and his opinion. What if this man have eſpouſed a fancy of his own, not any truth of God? To be ſo fixed, that a man may be fixed in evil, is as dangerous, as to be ſo unfixed, that he may be unfix'd in good. It was a high breathing of holineſs, when David ſaid, Pſalm 57. 7. My heart is fixed, O God, my heart is fixed: While we are upon a known duty, or have a known truth on our ſide, our hearts cannot be too much fixed and ſet upon them. To be of an unfixed, moveable, wavering ſpirit in goodneſs, is within one degree of falling into evil; but to ſay, I am fixed, I am fixed, I am reſolved, reſolved, when yet things are doubtful, and under difficult diſpute, is actually to be in an error, though poſſibly the thing we fix on be a truth. The Apoſtle cautions his Epheſians, and us in them, Chap. 5. 14. That they, and we, be not henceforth children, toſſed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine; and yet they are under a rebuke, who will not be moved by any wind of doctrine; that is, let never ſo powerful and forcible a wind of Truth, breathe and blow upon them, they will not be carried or moved in judgment by it. Obſerve,

Thirdly, Silence becometh learners.

Yet not all ſilence. There is a ſpeaking helpful to learning. To move doubts is the way to be reſolved, and to ask the queſtion, the readieſt means for inſtruction. But he that will have all the talk, ſhall have but little profit. The ear is the Organ of diſcipline: Hearing is the ſenſe of Learning, and the ſeaſonable ſtopping of our own mouths, a ready means to open our underſtandings. To be ſwift to hear, and ſlow to ſpeak (Jam. 1. 19.) is the ſpeedieſt way to attain wiſdom. Obſerve, Fourthly, He that is ſhewed his error, ſhould ſpeak no more, but ſit down convinc'd.

Teach me (ſaith Job) and I will hold my tongue; that is, I will reply no more upon you, I will never ſtand up in maintaining an error; I will be no patron of evil, though my ſelf am in the fault. Error ſhall not be excuſed, or a miſtake apologiz'd for by me. Some wits are able to make a fair cover for, and put a gloſs upon the moſt deformed and groſſeſt errors. There was never any opinion in the world, but ſome have ſeconded it, and undertaken it's protection. When Conſcience hath never a word to ſay, wit will be very talkative; and when they have ended reaſoning, ſome can wrangle everlaſtingly. When wit and learning undertake a cauſe, and leave conſcience out of the Commiſſion, there muſt either be a very ill end of it, or no end. A ſubtil Sophiſter will diſpute any thing, and bring probable Arguments (where Reaſon alone ſits Judge) againſt the moſt undoubted truths. It is an ill office to be an Orator for our own or others errors, for our own or others ſinful practices, Prov. 30. 32. If thou haſt done evil in lifting up thy ſelf, or if thou haſt thought evil (or maintained evil) lay thine hand upon thy mouth; ſpeak no more, never be an Advocate in a bad cauſe, though it be thine own; when our faults are ſhewed us, we ſhould not open our mouthes, unleſs it be to renounce and diſclaim them. A ſad account will be given of that time, and of thoſe parts, which have been laid out in the patronage of our failings and miſtakes. It is as ſinful to ſew fig-leaves, or make fair pretexts to cover the nakedneſs of our opinions, as of our practices.

And cauſe me to underſtand, wherein I have erred.

As if Job had ſaid, When once you bring me to ſee clearly, that I am in an error, and caſt light into my conſcience, you ſhall find me readily ſubmitting to you.

Conceſſio eſt quâ Quintilianus dicit eſſe cum aliquid iniquum videmur cauſæ fiducia pati. Apud eum dicitur conſeſſio nihil nocitura. Quint. l. 9. c. 2. Non ſubmittit ſe erraſſe, ſed humiliter ſe ſubmittit amicorum cenſuræ. Bold.

A queſtion ariſes here in the general, whether Job doubted his cauſe, or whether or no there were an heſitancy in his ſpirit, about what he had done or ſpoken?

I anſwer, this ſpeech implies not, that he had any doubt of himſelf, or an admiſſion that he had erred, Job ſpeaks like Orators or Diſputants, who when they are ſure of a point, will yet grant a little doubtfulneſs, or raiſe doubts about what they are able to maintain and confident to carry. It is ordinary to put things by way of ſuppoſition, of which we make no queſtion. When Job ſaith, Cauſe me to underſtand, wherein I have erred; it is not an acknowledgment that he had erred; but a ſubmiſſion in caſe he had, or a conceſſion that he might; Job was not lifted up with an opinion of his own infallibility; he knew to err was common to man, and therefore he ſpeaks of himſelf under the common notion of all men: not from any conſciouſneſs of his own error.

Cauſe me to underſtand.] It is but one word in the Original, and it ſignifies to convince by Reaſon or Argument. Cauſe me to underſtand, that is, do not think to force my opinion, or to offer violence to my judgment; do not think to club me down with great words and clamorous threats, but do it by ſolid Arguments, by evident demonſtration of Reaſon: Do it by ſavoury advices and counſels, not by bitter reproaches and invectives. Deal with my underſtanding, not barely with my affections, Cauſe me to underſtand

My error.] It ſignifies local, corporal wandrings and errors, and bodily erring or wandring; and ſometimes it ſignifies the wandrings of the mind, judgment and affections, Prov. 5. 19, 20. Solomon bids the Husband, Rejoyce in the Wife of his youth, let her be as the loving Hind and pleaſant Roe, let her breaſts ſatisfie thee at all times, and be thou raviſhed alwayes with her love. The Hebrew (as our Tranſlators put in the Margin) is, err thou alwayes in her love; that is, Let all thy wandring, erring thoughts and affections be reduced and brought whom to the Wife whom God hath given thee. The next words ſeem to interpret ſo, for why (my Son) wilt thou be raviſhed with a ſtrange woman, and embrace the boſom of a ſtranger? That's dangerous erring in love: Therefore (ſaith he) let all thine errings and wandrings, all thy delights and raviſhments be (chaſte and conjugal) towards the Wife of thy youth.

Further, It ſignifies erring or wandring out of mere ignorance. This word is often uſed in Leviticus for the ſin of Ignorance, Chap. 4. 2. & 5. 18. & 22. 14. If any man hath ſinned through ignorance, or committed an error, then he ſhall offer theſe and theſe Sacrifices and Oblations. So Pſalm 19. 12. Who can underſtand his errors? That is, thoſe ſins which he commits out of ignorance and inadvertency. Hence he concludes with this prayer, Cleanſe thou me from ſecret faults. He doth not mean faults which he committed privately, and ſo were ſecrets to others; but faults which he had committed ignorantly, and ſo were ſecrets to himſelf: that is, they were ſins of ignorance. And I conceive he means not only ſuch ſins as he had committed ignorantly, but then knew they were ſins, but even ſuch ſins as he was ignorant whether ever he had committed them or no; that is, he prays for the pardon of all thoſe ſins which poſſibly he might have committed, though to him as yet altogether unknown and undiſcovered.

The Title of Pſalm 7. is, Shiggaion of David; it is the ſame Original word we have in the Text, and ſome tranſlate it, A wandring Song: and the reaſon for it, is either becauſe of the variable and wandring Poetry, or becauſe of the variable or wandring tune in which that Pſalm was ſung, and to which it was ſet for greater delight; others make the Title (ſuitable to the tranſlation of the word here) The Pſalm of David's Errors; becauſe it ſets forth his fears and dangers, which made him wander in body, and ſometime alſo to go a little aſtray in mind. This Pſalm was ſung to the Lord, concerning the words or the buſineſs of Cuſh the Benjamite, that is, of Saul who was of Kiſh and of Jemini (1 Sam. 9. 1.) called here Cuſh, that is, Ethiopian or Black-moor (figuratively) from his black and ill conditions, his heart not being changed, as the Black-moor changeth not his skin. Saul was a bitter enemy to David, and made him flie and wander, and ſometime go a ſtray in his ſpeeches and actions, upon a ſudden guſt of temptation. And ſo a Pſalm of that ſubject may well bear this ſtile, either from his corporal or ſpiritual errors. There is a third apprehenſion upon Shiggaion, taking it for delight or raviſhments of mind, and ſo the Pſalm is ſuperſcribed, David's delight or ſolace; that is, the Pſalm which he compoſed and ſung to the Lord, to comfort himſelf in all his troubles with Saul; his ſoul wandred Heaven-ward in holy raviſhments and delights in God, while his body wandred about the Earth in aſtoniſhment and ſorrows, cauſed by a bloody-minded man.

Cantio erratica.

The very ſame Title is given to the prayer of Habakkuk, Chap. 3. 1, A prayer of Habakkuk upon Sigionoth, which ſome interpret to be ſo called becauſe of the ſtrange variety or variableneſs of the Song and tune, the Prophet being in a holy rapture, raviſhed in ſpirit, and ſwallowed up in the contemplation of Gods Power and Majeſty, ſoars up and wanders (like Paul in another caſe) he knows not whither, or how.

But the Vulgar renders it, A prayer for ignorance, or a prayer for error; which tranſlation is ſurely an error, if not of ignorance, as to the ſcope of that prayer; though the letter of the original word (as in the former inſtances, and in the Text before us) bears that ſence.

When Job ſaith, Cauſe me to underſtand my error, his meaning is, that his errors (whatſoever they were) in that buſineſs, were ſecret to him, he had not gone againſt the light of his own conſcience, nor as yet had they brought any light to convince his conſcience; he had been charged with errors, extravagancies and wandrings; but he underſtood not what they were, and therefore deſires them to cauſe him underſtand his error. Obſerve hence,

First, Man is ſubject to error.

To error in ſpeech, to error in practice, to error in judgment. Man by nature can do nothing elſe but err, All his goings, are goings aſtray, and all his knowledge is bottom'd upon an heap of falſe principles. All his works (by nature) are errata's, and the whole edition of his life, a concontinued miſtake. Obſerve,

Secondly, That man is in a fair way to truth, who acknowledgeth he may err.

Cauſe me to underſtand wherein I have erred, ſaith Job; he thought he had not erred: but he grants it was poſſible for him to err. That which hath faſtned ſo many errors to the Popes Chair, and from thence ſcattered them all over the world, is an opinion, that he in his Chair cannot err; his ſuppoſed ſpirit of Infallibilty, hath made him the great Deceiver, and deceived him. He that thinks he cannot err, errs in thinking ſo, and ſeldom thinks or ſpeaks, or doth any thing, but it is an error. He is moſt ſecured from error, who ſuſpects he hath erred, and humbly acknowledges that he may.

We may here Obſerve what an Error is.

Thirdly, An Error ſtrictly and properly taken, is that which we hold or do, out of bare ignorance of the Truth.

It is an Error in practice, when we are ignorant of what is better to be done. An Error in opinion is, when we are ignorant of what is better for us to believe or hold. Hereſie is an Error and more, for Hereſie hath theſe three things in it.

Firſt, In regard of the matter, it muſt be in ſome great and fundamental truths. The word Hereſie is by ſome derived from chooſing; by others from taking away, becauſe it takes us off from Chriſt, or from the foundations of ſaving knowledge.

Secondly, Hereſie is accompanied with pertinacy and obſtinacy, after clear light offered: It is poſſible one may have an Error about things which are Fundamental, and yet be no Heretick: An Heretick is condemned of himſelf, Tit. 3. 10. But he will not be convinced by another. Not that he doth formally and in terms, give ſentence againſt or condemn himſelf; but equivalently he doth, as the Apoſtle (Acts 13. 46.) ſpeaks to the unbelieving Jews, Seeing ye put the word from you, and judge your ſelves unworthy of everlaſting life, &c. Theſe men did not judge themſelves ſuch formally, they came not to the Apoſtle and ſaid, we willingly ſubmit our ſelves to Hell and wrath. No, they thought very well of themſelves, and judged themſelves worthy of eternal life. But their practice judged them, and gave a real ſentence againſt them, while they acquitted themſelves. Thus alſo an Heretick (who ever hath a very high opinion of himſelf and his opinions) is condemned of himſelf.

Thirdly, In Hereſie there is taking of pleaſure and delight: therefore Hereſie is numbred among the luſts of the fleſh, adultery and fornication, &c. Gal. 5. 20. Hereticks deſire to diſperſe and vend their opinions. A man alone in an error, will weep over his opinions, and it grieves him that he diſſents and goes contrary unto others: But he that ſtifly maintains an error, inſults over others, and delights to maintain his oppoſition: he triumphs and boaſts of his war, though he can never obtain victory (Truth only is victorious.) And ſome learned Criticks obſerve as much from the form of the Greek word, Tit. 3. 11. So then, Hereſie is not only an error in judgment, but a pertinacy in the will, and it takes in delight at the affection.

Hæreticus eſt cui voluptas eſt falſas tueri opiniones, ea enim eſt nominum Græcorum in ικὸς deſinentiū proprietas, ut ad qualitatem deſignandam non adhibeantur modo, ſed etiam ad innuendā delectationem, quam in ea capit, cui illa qualitas ineſt. Camer. Myroth. Evang. in cap. 2. Epiſt. ad Titum.

Obſerve from theſe words, Cauſe me to underſtand, wherein I have erred, Fourthly, That, an erring brother, or friend, muſt not be importuned barely to leave his error, but he muſt be made to underſtand his error.

Error ſhould not be left, nor truth received blindfold; a man may ſin in leaving an error: they do (without queſtion) who lay it down thinking it to be a truth; and there is little queſtion but they do, who leave it before they underſtand it to be an error. It is much alike to reject an opinion as an error, which we do not underſtand, and to practice an opinion for a truth; which we do not underſtand. If a man practice or believe a truth, not convinced that it is, or not conceiving it to be a truth, that truth is but an error to him; becauſe he doth not believe or practice it under the notion of a truth; and ſo, if he leave an error, which he is not convinced to be an error, his leaving it is not much better (and in ſome caſes it may be worſe) then his holding it; becauſe he leaves it not under the notion of an error. We muſt not dance after other mens pipes, or ſee with other mens eyes: Except we know it is good we do, and evil which we leave undone, our not doing evil, is not good to us, and our doing good is (to us) no better then evil.

Verſ. 25. How forcible are good words! But what doth your arguing reprove?

Job ſpeaks by way of admiration, How forcible! I cannot tell how forcible. It is an elegant way of expreſſing the highneſs of our thoughts, as Pſal. 84. 1. How amiable are thy dwelling places, O Lord of Hoſts! He admires in ſtead of ſpeaking: they are ſo amiable, as I cannot tell how amiable they are. Put your thoughts to their utmoſt conceptions of beauty, and that beauty is in the dwellings of the Lord: ſo ſaith Job here, How forcible are right words! they are ſo forcible, as I know not how forcible they are, I muſt admire and be ſilent.

In Hebræo Admirativum eſt elegans & patheticum. Bold.

How forcible are right words! The Chaldee Paraphraſe reads it, How ſweet are right words! interpreting it by that, Pſal. 119. 103. O how ſweet are thy commandments unto me! they are ſweeter then the honey and the honey comb. But the originals differ, though that be a good ſence.

We read, How forcible! The word ſignifies any thing that is ſtrong, potent, or mighty; it notes alſo acrimony, ſharpneſs or ſmartneſs, and ſo it is often applied to words either good or bad, 1 King. 2. 8. when David lay upon his death-bed, giving his laſt advice to Solomon, Thou (ſaith he) haſt Shimei with thee, who curſed me with a grievous curſe. In the Hebrew it is this word, who curſed with a ſharp, ſtrong, forceale curſe, he curſed me with all his heart, with all his might he laid load upon me. Evil words are ſtrong, right words are ſtrongeſt. Job had before at verſ. 6. of this Chapter, called the diſcourſes of Eliphaz unſavoury, in this he taxes them for flat or weak: right words have a pleaſing acrimony upon the palate of the ſoul, and a power upon the judgment, to ſway and carry it; but yours are dull and feeble.

Some render it after the letter of the Hebrew, words of right, or truth: Others in the concrete, How forcible are the words of a right, or upright man! But take it as we tranſlate, How forcible are right words! Words are right three wayes; אמרי ישר Eloquia rectitudinis Mont. ἀληθινῦ ῥήματα. Sept. λόγοι ἰσο-[illegible]. Aquil.

Firſt, In the matter, when they are true.

Secondly, In the manner, when they are plain, direct, and perſpicuous.

Thirdly, In their uſe, when they are duly and properly applied; when the arrow is carried home to the white, then they are right words, or words of righteouſneſs. When this three-fold rightneſs meets in words, how forcible, how ſtrong are ſuch words?

But what doth your arguing reprove? I confeſs there is great ſtrength in right words, and in the words of the upright; but you have been long diſputing the matter with me, and what have you got? where are your gains? The word ſignifies, to rebuke with conviction and argument, to ſhew what is right, and to refute that which is contrary; Job 13. 3. the word is ſo uſed, Surely I would ſpeak to the Almighty, and I deſire to reaſon with God, to reaſon it out as it were by force of argument with God. The word is anſwerable in ſence to that in the Greek, uſed by the Apoſtle Heb. 11. 1. Faith is a conviction, or the evidence of things not ſeen, that is, an evident conviction: Faith gives a ſtronger evidence then any reaſon, yea then ſence: therefore though faith be of things that fall not under ſence, and are above reaſon; yet faith is an evidence or a conviction, fuller then any Logical conviction or demonſtration. The Argument from ſuch authority as faith grounds upon, is ſtronger and more convincing then any, or then all the reaſon in the world.

What doth your arguing reprove? Word for word, What doth your diſputation diſpute? Or, what do your Arguments argue? as if he had ſaid, Your arguing is no arguing, your reaſons are no reaſons; that which you have been arguing all this while with me, doth not ſo much as deſerve the name of an argument (in my caſe) it hath no power or ſtrength in it: Job layes a charge upon his friends by this oppoſition; Right words are forcible, but your arguments are not right, or, you are not right who argue; therefore what force, what power is there in what you have ſpoken? I can blow it all off as eaſily as a man can blow off a feather. Mr. Broughton varies ſomewhat from this ſence. And what can your blame ſoundly blame? That is, you ſhall find nothing blame-worthy, or reprovable in me. Obſerve hence,

Quid diſceptando conficiet diſceptatio veſtra, q. d. quod vos redarguitis, redarguendi verbo non eſt donandum.

First, Words rightly ſpoken are very forcible.

Take it in the general. What mighty things have words, words duly ſpoken, done? Abigail, a weak woman, by a few right words overcame the ſtrength and wtath of mighty David, and turned his whole army back: David with all his men, were in the heat of reſolution, and upon a hot march to deſtroy Nabal, yet ſhe ſtops them; and that woman ſpeaking to Joab (when Sheba fled to the City) with a few right words prevailed to ſave the City, and ſtay the fury of war.

Take the Point more ſtrictly; the words of truth, are full of power, full of ſtrength.

Naked truth is too hard for armed error.

Truth hath the ſtrength of God in it, therefore that muſt needs prevail. The Apoſtle profeſſes, 2 Cor. 1. 3. We can do nothing againſt the truth; he means it in regard of the bent of his ſpirit, his heart could not move againſt truth; but we may uſe it in another ſence, We can do nothing againſt the truth, that is, let us put out the uttermoſt of our power, we can never prevail againſt the truth. Look upon truth in the promiſes, that will conquer all; look upon truth in the threatnings, that's forcible to overcome all, Jer. 1. 10. God gives the Prophet a commiſſion, I have ſet thee over the Nations, and over the Kingdoms, to root out, and to pull down, and to deſtroy, and to throw down, to build and to plant: Here's a ſtrange commiſſion for a Prophet; how could Jeremiah plant or root up, build or pull down Nations? He never drew Sword, yet he performed this commiſſion fully by his Word: he pulled them down, and rooted them up by the Word of threatning, and he planted them and built them with the Word of promiſe, Zech. 1. 10. Your fathers are dead, they are gone, but my words (ſaith the Lord) which I ſpake by my ſervants the Prophets, did not they take hold of your fathers? Your fathers are dead, and the Prophets are dead, but my words live ſtill, and did not they take hold of your fathers? you eſteemed my words as wind, but they were a ſtrong wind, they blew down the power of your fathers. The Apoſtle gives this honour to all the Word of God (which is all right) that it is mighty, or forcible, through God, to bring down ſtrong holds, and to bring every thought into ſubjection unto Chriſt. And Heb. 4. 12. The word of God is mighty in operation: The energy of it is ſuch that nothing can ſtand before it, no luſt can ſtand before it, no error can ſtand before it, it bears down all with fine force.

Therefore take heed of ſtanding in the way of right words. Truth comes with ſuch a force, that no man is able to bear up againſt it. It is better to have all the men of the world againſt us, then to have one Word of God againſt us. One word of Truth will do more againſt us, then all the Armies in the world; no force can ſtand againſt this force, the force of the Word will deſtroy the force of the Sword. Truth will be the great Conqueror at laſt.

Take it in the Concrete, in reference to the ſpeaker, How forcible is the word of an upright man! Then Obſerve, Thirdly, The words of one that is upright-hearted, carry great ſtrength and power with them.

Truth looſes by the patronage and defence which ſome give it. Truth gets little by the tongues of thoſe men who have no grace in their hearts. Truth in the mouth of a wicked man is weakned by the falſneſs of his heart and filthineſs of his life. Sometimes precious truths are ſpoken by vileſt men, but what force have they? they are not received or owned. Chriſt could not abide to hear the Devil ſpeak truth. A godly man ſpeaks with authority, as it is ſaid of Chriſt, He ſpake as one having authority, and not as the Scribes; the Scribes taught that which was truth ſometimes, and the Scribes had alwayes authority to teach; the chair of Moſes was theirs, they were not intruders upon an office they had no call to. When Chriſt ſaith, The Scribes and Phariſees ſit in Moſes chair (Mat. 23. 2.) He ſpeaks not only (de facto) of what they did, but (de jure) of what they had right to do; they were not uſurpers, or actors beyond their line. But though the Scribes had the right of authority to teach, yet their teaching had no force of authority, it was but talk. And it appears plainly, that the words of that hypocritical generation, the Scribes and Phariſees bare no weight with the people; becauſe Chriſt gives them a charge, to obſerve and do what the Scribes and Phariſees bid them: As intimating that the doctrine of thoſe Scribes (though true) was low-priz'd, and lay much unpractis'd, Matth. 23. 3. We muſt not ſhorten the hand of God, as if he might not uſe thoſe who have no truth to publiſh a truth; he may imploy what inſtruments he pleaſes, and he can make thoſe that are evil, inſtruments of good. But look upon it ordinarily, thus it is, the word of truth hath moſt power, ſtrength and force, from the lips of thoſe who are upright in heart and holy in life. How forcible are their words? The words of the wiſe are like goads, or like nails, faſtned by the Maſters of the Aſſembly, Eccleſ. 11. But the words of wicked Maſters in the Aſſembly, are like nails without points, they will not drive, or take hold, there's no faſtning of them; or the words of wicked men are like weak nails, which break in the driving: What do you arguing, reproving, teaching, you that carry your ſelves thus, what force have your words? Truth looſes both ſtrength and credit in your mouths: Thou that teacheſt another, teacheſt thou not thy ſelf? thou that preacheſt a man ſhould not ſteal, doſt thou ſteal? thou that ſayeſt a man ſhould not commit adultery, doſt thou commit adultery? &c. are the Apoſtles chiding expoſtulations with the Jewiſh Doctors, Rom. 2. And upon this he charges them with diſhonouring God, and cauſing his Name to be blaſphemed among the Gentiles, verſ. 23, 24. But what was the blaſphemy? Surely this, The Gentiles grew to have a low eſteem of the word of God, his Law was of no force with them, becauſe thoſe Teachers were ſo falſe to it, and unſpoke with their lives whatſoever their Tongues had ſpoken. That which hath no force upon the ſpeakers heart, hath ſeldom any upon the hearers. What do your teaching teach, or your comfortings comfort? what do your arguings argue, or your reprovings reprove? Shall vice reprove ſin? as we ſpeak proverbially: or if it doth, ſin is not much hurt with thoſe reproofs. Words ſpoken from the heart, go to the heart; and words read in the life, are moſt forcible to reform the life: Then the word goes firſt cloathed with life and power, when the Preacher can read his Sermon in his own heart, and the people in his life. He that ſpeaks only out of books, does much after his rate, who (as we ſay) ſpeaks without-book: And he that lives not what he ſpeaks (what in him lies) kills what he ſpeaks. And how ſhall ſuch a dead letter ('tis almoſt a miracle if it doth) conveigh a quickning ſpirit? Such arguings ſeldom reprove any but the arguer, and him they alwayes reprove.

VERS. 26, 27, 28, 29, 30.

Do ye imagine to reprove words, and the ſpeeches of one that is deſperate, which are as wind?

Yea, ye overwhelm the fatherleſs, and you dig a pit for your friend.

Now therefore be content, look upon me, for it is evident unto you, if I lye.

Return, I pray you, let it not be iniquity, yea return again: my righteouſneſs is in it.

Is there iniquity in my tongue? Cannot my taſte diſcern perverſe things?

IN the two former verſes, Job made an humble ſubmiſſion of himſelf unto the better counſel and inſtruction of his friends, if they could yet ſhew him wherein he had errred. In theſe five verſes, he doth two things further.

First, He expoſtulates with his friends about their former ſpeech and carriage toward him.

Secondly, He admoniſhes them to be better adviſed, more moderate and conſiderate, in what they had yet to ſay unto him.

The former of theſe is contained in verſ. 26, 27. And there are two branches of it.

Firſt, He taxes them for making ſo light of what he had ſaid, Do ye imagine to reprove words, and the ſpeeches of one that is deſperate, which are as wind? verſ. 26.

Secondly, He taxeth them for laying ſuch heavy load upon him, in what they had ſaid, Yea, ye overwhelm the fatherleſs, and you dig a pit for your friend, v. 27. As if he had ſpoken plainly thus, You have carried the matter hitherto with me, as if I had ſpoken nothing but bare empty words, words without any weight; yea, as if I were raging mad, diſtracted, deſperate, not knowing, nor caring what I did, or what I ſpake; as if my whole diſcourſe were no better, then meer vapouring, a puff of wind, a nothing; and ye your ſelves rage againſt me with ſuch violence, as a cruel hard-hearted Tyrant is enraged with, againſt a poor, helpleſs, innocent and forſaken, friendleſs Orphan; or at beſt, ye deal with me, as cunning ſophiſters and ſubtil diſputants, ſeeking to catch me in your intricate diſcourſes and doubtful debates, you make a pit for your friend.

This for the general ſence of thoſe two verſes, containing an expoſtulation about his friends unfriendly dealing with him. Now to the particulars.

Do ye imagine to reprove words?

חשב Ad crepandum tantum verbis concinnatis. Vulg.

The word we tranſlate [Imagine] notes a very curious, exquiſite and elaborate invention of any thing. The Vulgar refers imagining to the words with which they did reprove, not to the act of reproving. Ye make a neat frame of words to reprove me; and ſo the ſence riſes thus, you artificially imagine, mint and coyn eloquent ſpeeches and ſubtil arguments, to reprove and convince me with; as if you came hither to ſhew your ſelves Logicians and Orators, rather then loving friends. This is your dealing, You imagine words to reprove with. Others thus, Do you think that words reprove? That great words ſhall overcome me, without weight of reaſon? This ſence refers alſo to the ſpeech of Job's friends; as if he had ſaid, Do you ſtand deviſing words againſt me, or wording it with me? Do you think that your fine phraſes and elaborate poliſht language will carry the matter with me, will words reprove me? And ſo we may connect it with the ſence immediately foregoing, How forcible are right words? But what doth your arguing reprove? Your arguings that are ſlight arguings? Your words are meer words, a ſound and a noiſe; * words ſet alone, are often taken for words only, for naked words, words without any due cloathing of comlineſs and moderation, and without any ballaſt or weight of reaſon and diſcretion. And do you (my friends) imagine to gain me, by ſuch a parcel of words as theſe?

Num verba nuda putatis arguere, q. d. putatiſne verba ſatis eſſe ad arguendum & diſceptandum ſine ratione. Planior fuerit ſenſus, ſi ב ante מלים ſubaudias, an cogitatis arguere במלים meris verbis. Merc.

* Verba nuda & ſola. Ut mulier, mulier bona, Lana, lana alba, & ſi quæ alia Gramaticis obſervata. Druſ.

But according to the ſence touch'd before, Job rather refers to the opinion, which his friends had of his words; Do ye imagine to reprove words? That is, do you think that you have nothing to anſwer, or reprove, but a company of empty ſillables; have I not ſpoken reaſon or ſence all this while? Do you think you diſpute with ſome idle-headed fellow, who cares not what he ſaith, or ſaith he knows not what? Do you think, that your words are ſtrong and full of reaſon: that yours are irrefragable arguments, and mine, but idle talk or a frothy diſcourſe? That's a ſecond Interpretation, and that which I conceive more clear to this place. It followeth,

And the ſpeeches of one that is deſperate, which are as wind?

We muſt underſtand or repeat the firſt branch, And do ye imagine to reprove the ſpeeches of one that is deſperate, which are as wind?

נואש à radice יאש Diffidit, deſperavit, ſpe omnem rei alicujus efficiendæ aut conſequendæ abjecit ſeu amiſit.

The ſpeeches of one that is deſperate.] The word ſignifies a perſon that is quite without hope, who thinks his eſtate paſt remedy or redreſs, his wound incurable, his loſs irreparable, and his breaches ſuch as can never be made up or heal'd. So Jer. 2. 25. where the Prophet counſels the Church to return and repent: but, Thou ſaidſt there is no hope; or as we read it in the margin, thy caſe is deſperate; what do you talk of repentance, and of returning now, all's loſt, all's gone, I am undone, my eſtate can never be recovered, Do ye imagine to reprove the ſpeeches of one that is deſperate?

Some refer this alſo, to the friends of Job, thus: Do ye think that bare words are anſwer enough for me, and that the ſpeeches of a deſperate mad man, which are nothing but wind and ſound, are ſufficient to refute me. And therefore you riſe up againſt me in this ſtorm and fury, ſpeaking any thing, without ſtudy or premeditation.

But we may rather underſtand it of Job himſelf, and that as before, he gave their ſence of his words, that they were but wind; ſo here he gives us their apprehenſion of his perſon, that ſure he was mad or deſperate.

Do ye imagine that I am deſperate or diſtracted, becauſe I have little or no hope to be reſtored? Becauſe I have loſt my eſtate, my ſtrength, my children, do ye alſo think I have loſt my wits, my reaſon and underſtanding. I confeſs I am even worn to pieces, and brought to nothing, I am ſpent and conſumed with ſorrows, that's my condition, but am I therefore deſperate, and regard not what I ſpeak? It is an eaſie and a compendious way of refuting all a man can ſay, to ſay he is mad. His words muſt needs be but wind, without weight, who is himſelf without reaſon. Do ye think to reprove the words of one that is deſperate, that are as wind? Or, as Mr. Broughton reads, Do ye hold the terms of the forlorn, a wind? That is, do ye think, becauſe I am in ſuch a ſad condition, and in appearance in a deſperate condition. that therefore my words are light and vain, ſuch as are no more to be regarded or heeded, then a puff of wind? And ſo it is, as if he had ſaid, ye ought not to ſlight what I ſpeak, becauſe I am in ſuch a low forlorn condition. That of Solomon comes to this ſence, Eccleſ. 9. 16. The poor mans wiſdom is deſpiſed, and his words are not heard.

Haud ſane ita convenit, ut pro futilibus, verba mea habeatis, eo quod afflictionibus attritus ſum & tabefactus. Merc.

It is common in Scripture to put light, vain, and unprofitable words under this expreſſion, they are but wind. In Job 15. v. 3. Should he reaſon with unprofitable talk, or with ſpeeches wherewith he can do no good? Should a wiſe man utter vain knowledge, and fill his belly with the Eaſt-wind? That is, ſhould a man talk nothing but that which is vain and unprofitable? And ſo, Jer. 5. 13. The Prophets ſhall become wind; that is, their propheſies ſhall become wind; whatſoever they ſpeak (ſaid that unbelieving people) ſhall be but as a vain thing, it ſhall be as nothing, it ſhall paſs away, and the place of it ſhall be known no more; thus they undervalued the Prophets in thoſe times, when they ſpake the truths of God, and brought them immediate meſſages from Heaven. Hence Obſerve, > Firſt, That words without reaſon, meer vain words, are no words, they are but wind.

Hence thoſe prophane ones in Jeremiah, who ſaid the true Prophets had belied the Lord, and were but wind, add preſently, And the word is not in them: That is, the words of theſe Prophets are no words. Indeed the Lord anſwers for his Prophets, at verſ. 14. telling the people, becauſe they had thus diſhonoured his meſſengers, that they ſhould find thoſe words, which they accounted wind, to be a fire, Thus ſaith the Lord, becauſe ye ſpeak this word, behold, I will make my words in thy mouth fire, and this people wood, and it ſhall devour them. Whoſoever eſteems the Word of God to be wind, ſhall find it to be a fire: and they who will not be taught by it, ſhall be conſumed by it. But to the point in hand, we ſee in that Scripture, vain words are windy words, and windy words are as no words: The Prophets (as they ſuppoſed) were wind, and thence they infer, the word is not in them: That is, their words have no ſubſtance, ſtrength, or power at all in them. So, Hoſ. 12. 1. Ephraim feedeth on wind, and followeth after the Eaſt-wind; what was the wind that Ephraim fed upon? Some vain words, ſome promiſes he had from the creature to be delivered, ſome hopes raiſed by the word of man, who is a wind; therefore his feeding upon thoſe hopes, was but a feeding upon wind, there was no ground or ſtrength to make thoſe words good: So the next words interpret, He daily encreaſeth lies.

Such words are (by the Learned) called bubbles; and why bubbles? Becauſe a bubble upon the water is only fill'd with wind, touch it and 'tis nothing. Theſe words have nothing in them, but the breach of the ſpeaker.

Unleſs the ſpirit of reaſon fills our mouths, we ſpeak nothing but our breath, or as we phraſe it in our Language, we do but vapour. The Apoſtle Peter deſcribes ſuch (2 Epiſt. 2. 8.) They ſpeak great ſwelling words of vanity; and the Apoſtle Jude uſes the ſame expreſſion in verſ. 16. of his Epiſtle:

ὑπέρογκα ματαιότητος φθεγγόμενοι.

Epiſtle. Their mouth ſpeaketh great ſwelling words; that is, words greatly ſwel'd with vanity. Or ſwel'd, as the fleſh ſwells, by the gathering of corruption, and ill humors. The greatneſs of theſe words was their diſeaſe, and not their nature. Wiſe men ſpeak great things, and fools ſpeak great words. Obſerve,

Secondly, That windy, empty words, will never either convince, or convert.

Such words do no work: they are wind, and they paſs away like wind without any impreſſion upon the hearers. They trouble the ear, but touch not the heart. When the noiſe of them is paſt, all is paſt. They are a ſound, and beſides that, a nothing. Windy meats are not nouriſhing for the body, neither are windy words for the ſoul. Some knowledge doth not build up, but puff up, 1 Cor. 8. 1. and that's all the knowledge which ſuch words can breed, when they breed any. Obſerve, Thirdly, We are apt to judge the words of thoſe that are greatly afflicted, to be but vain windy words.

And we are ready to conclude, they complain more then they need. When the Iſraelites groaning under the preſſures of that bondage, ſent to Pharoah for ſome abatements of their burdens: we will not diminiſh the tale of the bricks, only let ſtraw be given us: no ſaith Pharoah, Exod. 5. 17. They are idle, let more work be laid upon the people, that they may labour therein, and let them not regard vain words. He reſolved to deal wiſely with them, and therefore muſt count them mad; their perſons were near Job's condition, and their words were fully under the ſame cenſure. Hence note,

Fourthly, That it is very ſinful to eſteem the words of the afflicted to be but wind.

It was great uncharitableneſs in Job's friends, thus to expound and gloſs the Text of his complaints. We ſhould hear a man in affliction, as if every word were drenched and ſteeped in the ſorrows of his heart; and take every ſentence, as coming bloody from his wounded ſpirit.

Obſerve how Job deſcribes his own eſtate, he was as a man deſperate (not utterly deſparate, for in another place he profeſſes in higheſt confidence, that though God kill him, yet he will truſt in him) yet deſperate he was in regard of outward help, or temporal ſuccor.

Laſtly, A godly man in affliction may ſometime think his caſe deſperate and remedileſs.

Wicked men reſolve in the Pſalm, There is no help for him in his God; and a good man under a cloud of temptation may ſay, Surely there is no help for me in my God; that is, I ſee not which way I ſhall be helped, I have no aſſurance, no evidence that God will help me: Not that he doubts the power of God to help him: But the providence of God ſeems to ſpeak that he will not, I ſhall one day periſh by the hand of Saul, ſaith holy David. Heman looked upon himſelf, as a man that had no ſtrength, free among the dead, Pſal. 88. 5. As if he had got a diſcharge from the ſervice of this world, and was enfranchiz'd a Citizen of the grave, where all are free. As (to note that only in paſſage) it is ſaid of Azariah, being ſmitten with Leproſie, and ſo put from the exerciſe of the Government, which was a civil death; that he dwelt in a ſeveral houſe, or in a houſe of freedom, 2 King. 15. 5.

Verſ. 27. Yea, you overwhelm the fatherleſs, and you dig a pit for your friend.

After he had convinced them of their uncharitableneſs in accounting his words light and windy, he ſhews them how they dealt with him, what kind of words theirs were towards him: their words were as ſwords, their words were blows, every expreſſion of theirs to his ear, was an oppreſſion upon his ſpirit; Ye overwhelm the fatherleſs; he ſets forth their (as he conceived) cruelty againſt him, by two things, very odious both;

Firſt, The undoing of a fatherleſs child.

Secondly, The digging of a pit (not for an enemy, but) for a friend.

Ye overwhelm the fatherleſs.] The Original is full of Emphaſis, word for word, it may be tranſlated thus, You throw your ſelves upon the fatherleſs; and ſo it is an alluſion to hunters, either to men when they hunt wild beaſts, or to wild beaſts, when they hunt their prey; as ſoon as the hunter can reach the game, he overwhelms it, he caſts himſelf down, or layes all his ſtrength upon it. A dog having caught the hare, falls upon it, and keeps it under. Some conceive that expreſſion, Gen. 49. 9. concerning Judah, compared to a Lion, reaches this ſence, Judah is a Lions whelp, from the prey my ſon thou art gone up, he ſtooped down, he couched as a Lion, and as an old Lion, who ſhall rouze him up? As if that crouching and lying down were when he hath taken his prey; who dares to ſtir up a Lion, when he hath his prey under him? if any dare, the Lion will make them a prey too. We ſee in daily experience, how angry a dog will be, if you ſtir him up, when he hath but a bone under him. Such a violence is noted in this expreſſion, you throw your ſelves down upon a poor fatherleſs one, a man in a low condition, as if you would tear him to pieces, and eat him up at a morſel. Our tranſlation comes near the ſignification of the word, Ye overwhelm the fatherleſs.

Ruit, irruit.

The word ſignifies to run upon one with violence, and hence Giants are called Nephilim in the Hebrew, which is as much as to ſay Oppreſſors, becauſe they overwhelm the weaker with force and violence.

Maſter Broughton tranſlates the word to another ſence, as noting, not an open violent way of oppreſſing, but a ſecret ſubtil way of circumventing, To lay a ſnare for the Orphan: The word may bear that ſence, namely, to ſet a trap, or to lay a ſnare: And he parallels it with that word uſed often in the New Teſtament, To ſcandalize or offend a brother, which properly ſignifies to lay a trap or a ſnare, to ſet ſomewhat whereby to entangle or catch a man, that he may be ſtopt and hindred in his way. Thus Job, of his friends, you ſet a trap to enſnare, and make a pit for me to fall into, or you lay a block to cauſe me to ſtumble in, or turn out of the wayes of holineſs, while you would perſwade me, that he who walks uprightly in that way, ſhall never meet with any rub of outward trouble. What is this but to diſcourage me in the way I walk, becauſe therein I have met ſo many troubles. Thus you lay a ſnare for σκανδαλίζω Scandalum eſt impedimentum in via, ut quis vel collabatur & ruat, vel ab inſtituto curſu impediatur.

The fatherleſs.] The word ſtrictly taken, notes a child whoſe parents are dead. Some of the Ancients ſay, the word Pupill, which is from the Latine, ſignifies one without ſight, or wanting the apple or Pupill of his eyes; becauſe being deprived of his Parents, he wants the light of counſel and direction, to carry him on in his courſe through the world. What Moſes ſpake to Hobab his Father in law, is a truth of all good Parents to their Children, They are to them in ſtead of eyes, Numb. 10. 31. But here by fatherleſs, we may rather underſtand any one that is deſtitute of help, though himſelf be a Father. He that hath many Children may (in this ſence) be an Orphan, that is, friendleſs and comfortleſs. So Pſal. 10. 14. Thou art the helper of the fatherleſs; that is, Thou art the helper of all thoſe who want help. That's the meaning of Chriſt's promiſe to his Diſciples, I will not leave you comfortleſs; the Greek is, I will not leave you Orphans or fatherleſs; Orphans and fatherleſs are uſually full of ſorrows, therefore to be left fatherleſs, and to be left comfortleſs are the ſame. In this larger ſence take Job's mind, You overwhelm the fatherleſs; that is, you overwhelm me, who am a poor, deſtitute, helpleſs man, who have no friend, ſuccor or ſupport.

And you dig a pit for your friend.

Word for word thus, You dig for your friend. And this is on all ſides agreed on, to intimate the ſecret circumvention or ſubtle practice (as Job apprehended) of his friends. For in Scripture, to dig a pit, is a proverbial ſpeech, and imports the laying of ſecret plot to circumvent another either in word or deed. So, Pſal. 7. 15. He made a pit and digged it, and is fallen into it himſelf; that is, he deviſed ſome miſchievous device to entrap his brother, and the miſchief is fallen upon his own head, Pſal. 64. 5. They commune of laying ſnares privily; & Iſa. 29. 21. The Prophet deſcribes evil workers thus, They dig deep to hide their counſel from the Lord: Wicked Politicians are diggers and underminers; ſometime this is true literally (as in our Powder-plotters) but myſtically and myſteriouſly every one that layes a plot (though he never breaks ground) is ſaid to to dig a pit for his neighbour. In the old Law (Exod. 21. 33.) a proviſion was made, that whoſoever digged a pit, ſhould cover it, becauſe pits were dangerous, both for men and cattel. To dig a pit for a friend, is to endanger a friend.

In this ſence, the latter part of the verſe agrees with Mr. Broughton's tranſlation of the firſt, Ye lay a ſnare for the Orphan, and ye dig a pit for your friend. Falſe and fallacious arguments are traps and pits, in which the innocent are entangled. And Job ſuppoſes his friends intended to caſt him down into the pit of deſpair, by charging him with hypocriſie and rottenneſs of heart in his profeſſion.

There is a further apprehenſion concerning this word, You have digged a pit; Some of the Hebrew Doctors tranſlate thus, You make a feaſt upon your friend. The word ſignifies not only to dig a pit, but to feaſt and banquet; and it notes a ſumptuous exquiſite banquet, 2 Kings 6. 23. And he prepared great proviſion for them. In this Book, chap. 41. 6. The word is uſed in that ſence, where Leviathan is deſcribed too big for a banquet, Shall thy companions make a banquet of him? that is, are the fiſhermen able to catch and eat Leviathan? As if Leviathan ſcorned the fiſhermens engines, their nets and hooks.

Taking the word ſo, the meaning of the clauſe may be thus conceived, You overwhelm the fatherleſs, yea, you are not contented with that, but you feaſt upon your poor friend, that is, you rejoyce in his miſery, and make your ſelves merry with his ſorrows, as the Philiſtines dealt with Samſon when they had put out his eyes; Come, let us bring him out, and make ſport with him: So, ſaith Job, you deal with me, you oppreſs me, and then you make your ſelves merry with my ſorrows. The tears of an oppreſſed poor man are as wine to the oppreſſor, he drinks them down; the groans of a poor man are as muſick to a wicked oppreſſor, and his fleſh is as meat to him.

> Hence obſerve, Firſt, To be fatherleſs, is to be in a ſad condition.

They who are fatherleſs, are friendleſs, and ſo moſt ſubject to oppreſſion. They who have leaſt help in themſelves, have uſually leaſt help from others, and often receive moſt hurt from others. Hence we find (Pſal. 10. 18.) the oppreſſed and the fatherleſs put together; as if the fatherleſs were to expect oppreſſion for their portion, and they who needed moſt protection, ſhould be ſure to find moſt vexation. We uſe to ſay, where the hedge is loweſt, there men go over; it is ſo in every dayes experience. The mighty Nimrods ride over the backs of the poor; and where the hedge is low, they make lower gaps to paſs over more eaſily to their own deſigns. This ſpirit of oppreſſion is deſcribed raging againſt thoſe who are under heavieſt preſſures, Pſal. 69. 26. They perſecute him whom thou haſt ſmitten, and they talk to the grief of thoſe whom thou haſt wounded. When wicked men ſee a man afflicted by the hand of God, they afflict him more; when they ſee God hath wounded him, they will kill him. The trouble he is in, makes their victory more eaſie: As when the Philiſtines fell before Jonathan, (1 Sam. 14.) his Armour-bearer ſlew after him; ſo do theſe, they ſlay thoſe who are fallen before the afflicting hand of God.

> Obſerve ſecondly, That, It is a great aggravation of the ſinfulneſs of oppreſſion and wrong doing, to oppreſs or do wrong to the fatherleſs.

Commonly the poor are moſt oppreſſed, but alwayes there is more ſin in oppreſſing the poor, though to oppreſs or wrong the rich be a ſin, and a very great one. What a ſtock of wickednes do they gather who take from thoſe to whom they are bound to give; who make them naked and hungry, whom they ſhould cloath and feed; who are ſtraightned in juſtice towards them, to whom they ought to be enlarged in charity? It is a ſin to deny them juſtice, who need not your charity; but to be unjuſt where we ſhould be charitable, how ſinful is that! It is a great ſin to take away from him who hath abundance, but to take away from him who is in want, is an abounding ſin. Therefore we find that given, not only as a rule, but as a charge, Prov. 22. 22. Rob not the poor becauſe he is poor; make not poverty your advantage for robbery. There is much baſeneſs in it (beſides the ſinfulneſs) to trample upon thoſe who cannot reſiſt, and perhaps dare not complain. God is moſt reſiſted in wronging thoſe who cannot reſiſt others, or right themſelves. When we help a poor man (eſpecially a godly poor man) God himſelf gains, and (in a ſence) is enriched by it; becauſe God receives glory, and is paid (which is his greateſt revenue from man) in honour and in praiſe, for all the help we give ſuch poor. In our almes, we perform Gods promiſes for him, and they who receive promiſes, cannot but return praiſe. On the other ſide, when we wrong the poor (eſpecially the godly poor) God himſelf loſes, and (in a ſence) is impoveriſhed; becauſe not only his praiſe (as much as we can do) is with-held, but his truth and faithfulneſs are queſtioned. Mans uncharitableneſs would make void the promiſes of God; and when promiſes lie unfulfill'd, praiſe lies unreturn'd. Hence that threatning prohibition, Prov. 23. 10, 11. Enter not into the fields of the fatherleſs, that is, make not a forcible or violent entry. Why is it more dangerous to enter into his field, then into anothers? Or, is there any licence here to enter into the field of a rich man, or to treſpaſs upon him? No, there is no licence to treſpaſs upon a rich man, or to enter upon his field; but take heed you enter not into the fields of the fatherleſs; why? For their Redeemer is mighty, he ſhall plead their cauſe with thee: Though poor Orphans and Fatherleſs have no might, no help, they cannot plead themſelves, and they have no friend to help or plead for them, they cannot get an Advocate or Counſeller ſpeak in their cauſe, yet their Redeemer is ſtrong, he will plead with thee; he will plead with thee for the wrong done the fatherleſs, as for a wrong done himſelf; becauſe thou haſt oppreſt one whom he undertook to protect, and ſo (as much as thou canſt) haſt brought up an ill report upon the Lord, as if he were either forgetful of his word, or unable to accompliſh it. We vex and tear the promiſes of God every time we vex and tear the poor of God. How ſinful then is this ſin, by which at once we break the command which God gives us, to relieve the poor, and weaken the promiſe which God hath given the poor, that they ſhall be relieved.

Obſerve further, from that expreſſion of their cunning dealing with him, you dig a pit for your friend.

> Deceitful words are as pits and ſnares to cath men in. The tongue is a great enſnarer.

The tongue teacheth to lay a ſnare. Balaam taught Balak to lay a ſtumbling-block before the children of Iſrael, Rev. 2. 14. He taught him how to dig a pit, and ſet ſuch a ſnare as catcht the people into adultery and idolatry: The tongue is a great Engineer, a trap-ſetter to catch and entangle both the eſtates and ſouls of men,

And we may note another Point, from the relation of the perſon for whom this pit was digged; You dig a pit for your friend.

> It is a great aggravation of unkindneſs to endeavour their hurt, to whom we are bound by many names and obligations to do good, or to whom we have made profeſſion of our readineſs to do them good.

The more duty or reſpect we owe any man, the more is our ſin when we neglect him.

The three remaining verſes of this Chapter contain Job's admonition to his friends, wherein he adviſes them to deal better or more moderately with him, and ſo he makes a tranſition to the latter part of his ſpeech, in the ſeventh Chapter, wherein he returns to the old matter, the juſtification of that complaint made againſt his life, and the equity of his deſire to die,

Verſe 28. Now therefore be content, look upon me, for it is evident unto you, if I lie.

Now therefore be content, &c.] Some read it, Now therefore begin to look upon me, or to look more favourably upon me; as if he had ſaid, all this while ye have hardned your faces, and clouded your brows againſt me, therefore now begin to be more benign in your aſpects towards me. The word ſignifies, to begin, or take a thing in hand willingly; as alſo, to be well pleaſed, content or ſatisfied, the ſence of all comes to one point. We tranſlate in the latter, Now therefore be content, do this thing freely, be ſatisfied, and acquieſce in it; as we uſe to cool and calm an angry friend, who diſputing or ſpeaking to a buſineſs, grows hot and paſſionate, I pray, ſir, be ſatisfied, let us go on meekly and moderately.

Look upon me.] Which notes either his deſire of their friendly compliance with, and reſpect to him, as Mr. Broughton reads; Now therefore be content, regard me: or it notes the ſtrength and firmneſs of Job's reſolution, in this conteſt with his friends, I am not afraid to look you in the face, or to ſpeak face to face; look upon me, you ſhall not read either fear or falſeneſs written in my forehead; the lines and characters of my countenance ſhall ſhew you nothing but ſoundneſs and integrity of my Conſcience. For it is evident unto you, if I lie; you will anon read the lie in my face, if there be a lie in my heart; therefore break not off with me, turn not away in diſcontent, let us diſcourſe a little more about this buſineſs, and the truth will appear.

It is evident unto you, if I lie.] The Hebrew is, It is before your face if I lie, that is (as we tranſlate it) it will quickly be evident, and appear unto you by a little ſober debate of this buſineſs, whether I am right or no.

Et in faciē meam mentior; ſc. deſpeream vel moriar, vel non ſit mihi propitius Deus, vel tale quippiam. Merc.

Some think, there is a kind of ſecret imprecation in this Speech, It will be evident to you, if I lie: As if he had ſaid, Let not the Lord be merciful or gracious unto me, let not the Lord pity or ſpare me, if I am falſe-hearted and lie unto you. It is frequent and familiar in the Hebrew to give ſuch expreſſions of an oath; as in that oath of God, Pſal. 95. 11. quoted Heb. 3. 11. Unto whom I ſware in my wrath, if they ſhall enter into my reſt; which we tranſlate by a plain negative in both places; They ſhall not enter into my reſt. And, Pſal. 89. 39. Once have I ſworn by my holineſs, that I will not lie unto David; or, if I lie unto David, then let not my word be taken any more: So Job here; It will be evident to you, if I lie; and if I do, let me not have help, or ſtrength, or ſupport from God any more.

Mentiri eſt contra mentem ire.

To lie, may be taken two wayes; either ſtrictly, as to lie, is to ſpeak that which is falſe, with an intent to deceive. To ſpeak againſt clear knowledge, is the proper, ſtrict ſence of a lie: or to lie, ſignifies to fail, or to come ſhort in that which is expected from us by others: to fruſtrate any of their hopes, is to lie to them; and ſo it is applied oftentimes to the fruits of the earth (Hab. 3. 17.) Though the labour of the Olive ſhall fail; the word is, though the labour of the Olive ſhould lie, that is, though you coming to find fruit of the Olive, ſhould find none there. The Olive whoſe fair leaves promiſe and ſpeak you fair, as if you ſhould have fruit, if when you come, it yields none, this Olive lies to you. So (Hoſ. 9. 2.) The new wine ſhall lie, we tranſlate it, the new wine ſhall fail, that is, the Vines which ſpeak thus much, that you ſhall have new wine ſhortly, if when you come, there is none, the Vines lie. In either of theſe ſences we may underſtand it; If I lie, that is, if I ſpeak any thing againſt my mind, wittingly or willingly; or if I fail in this buſineſs, if I am like the Vine, or like the Olive, when they give no fruit according to expectation, it will be evident unto you, you ſhall ſee if we diſcuſs this controverſie a little further, the truth will out, whether I ſhall fail or belie your expectation, or no. That place (chap. 24. 25.) will expound it ſo; Who will make me a liar (ſaith Job) and make my ſpeech nothing worth? as if he had ſaid, my words ſhall be made good, and I will not fail in that which I have undertaken, or taken upon me.

Spem mentita ſeges. Hor.

Totus hic verſus eleganter inſinuat rem forenſem, nempe judicis ſtrictiſſimum examen, quo ſontes & teſtes interrogat, non ſolum verbis, ſed etiam nutibus oculorum & intuitu. Bol.

There is a further apprehenſion about theſe words, Look upon me, it is evident unto you, if I lie, as if they were an alluſion to the carriage of Judges and Magiſtrates towards offenders, in publick judiciary trials: when an offender, or one accuſed for an offence is brought before a Judge, and ſtands at the Bar to be arraigned, the Judge looks upon him, eyes him, ſets his eye upon him, and he bids the Offender look up in his face; look upon me (ſaith the Judge) and ſpeak up; guiltineſs uſually clouds the forehead, and cloaths the brow; the weight of guilt holds down the head; The evil doer hath an ill look, or dares not look up; how glad is he, if the Judge look off him. We have ſuch an expreſſion, Pſal. 11. 4. ſpeaking of the Lord, the great Judge of Heaven and Earth, His eye-lids try the children of men, as the Judge tries a guilty perſon with his eye, and reads the characters of his wickedneſs printed in his face: hence we have a common ſpeech in our language, ſuch an one looks ſuſpitiouſly, or, he hath a guilty look. At that great Goal-delivery deſcribed (Rev. 6. 16.) all the priſoners cry out to be hid from the face of him that ſate upon the throne. They could not look upon Chriſt, and they could not endure Chriſt ſhould look on them; the eye-lids of Chriſt try the children of men. That of Solomon may help this ſence, Prov. 20. 8. A King that ſitteth in the Throne of Judgment, ſcattereth away all evil with his eyes. Wickedneſs cannot endure to be under the obſervation of any eye, much leſs of the eye of Juſtice. Hence the Actors of it ſay, Who ſeeth us? It is very hard not to ſhew the guilt of the heart in the face, and it is as hard to have it ſeen there. Job ſeems to offer himſelf to the view of the ſevereſt Judge, Be content, look upon me, if I am guilty it will quickly appear unto you: my hypocriſie will break out in my face, and you may read my conſcience in my countenance. It is noted of Paul, Acts 13. 59. That when he had to deal with Elymas the Sorcerer, he ſeth is eyes upon him, and ſaid, O full of all ſubtilty! The Apoſtle beat him down, as it were, with a caſt of his eye; Job bids his friends look upon him as long and as critically as they pleaſed, he was not afraid of their looks.

Heu quam difficile eſt crimen non prodere vultu. Ovid. ſecund. Met.

Laſtly, thus, look to me, that is, attend well what I ſay, for I will explain my mind ſo fully and clearly to you, that it will quickly be evident to you whether I am right or wrong.

We may obſerve from this paſſage, Firſt, That, Uprightneſs hath much boldneſs.

He that hath a good cauſe and a good conſcience, is not afraid to be ſearched to the bottom; he cares not who looks upon him, or who looks into him. David in regard of the uprightneſs of his heart, calls unto God himſelf, Search me and try me, if there be any way of wickedneſs in me, Pſal. 139. 23. David was ſo aſſured of his own integrity, than he was not afraid to put himſelf upon the higheſt trial in that point. A holy heart is willing that God and men ſhould ſearch it, even ſearch it with candles, as God threatens he would the corrupt and falſe-hearted Jews.

Secondly, note this from it, Where a lie is, it will not long be hid.

A lie will break forth one time or other; ye may cover and hide a lie, you may keep it cloſe, and ſit upon it, as Rachel upon her fathers Images, but at laſt it will be evident, a lie will out. We ſay, Truth is the Daughter of Time, and ſo is a Lie too; a little time will bring that work of darkneſs to light.

Take the word in the other ſence, for failing, and it yields us this inſtruction,

That, He who hath uprightneſs of heart, is ſtedfaſt for ever.

Truth is uniform; which way ſoever the wind and the world turn, his poſture is the ſame; Chriſt will not fail him, and therefore he cannot. Such a man is as Mount Zion, that never ſhall be removed; where the heart is ſound, the actions are ſteady, and he that moves upon a right principle, moves regularly, and in all charges of events, changes not his way; try him, and try him again, it will be evident unto you he will not lie. Grace is ever the ſame, and renders them who have it like him (in their degree) from whom they have it, without variableneſs or ſhadow of turning. He that is not (for the ſubſtance) what he was, was never what he ought to be, ſincere. He that is upon a good ground, and knows his ground, will ſtand to it; truſt him (as a creature may be truſted) and he will not fail.

Verſe 29. Return, I pray you, let it not be iniquity, yea return again; my righteouſneſs is in it.

He goes on to beſpeak his friends to hear him better.

Return.] The word ſignifies,

First, A local return, or returning from a place.

שוב

Redire ſignificat, ſed ſæpe transſertur ad animum; eſtq; à propoſito abſiſtere, inſtitutum vitæ mutare, & pœnitentiam agere.

Secondly, It is uſed Metaphorically, to return from anger, or to turn anger away, Iſa. 5. 25. His anger is not turned away, the Lord did not turn from his fierce wrath. Some underſtand it ſo here, Return I pray you, that is, I beſeech you be not ſo angry, be not ſo haſty and cholerick with me.

Thirdly, To turn or return, notes deſiſting from our purpoſe, or the change of our reſolutions. And thus it is the ſame with repentance; the Scripture abounds with the word in this ſence, I ſhall not need to quote Texts. Thus moſt underſtand it here, return, that is, Reform, repent of your former hard dealing with me, perſiſt not in it, perſevere not in your uncharitableneſs.

Ubi redieritis, & rurſū redieritis, id eſt, ubi iterum atque iterū omnia diligenter diſcuſſeritis, eodem ſubinde redeuntes, & eadem accuratius reputātes, meam cognoſcetis juſtitiam.

Or laſtly, Return, that is, weigh the matter better, return, look it over again, let it have your ſecond and more ſetled thoughts; conſider whether I ſpeak not as one conſtrained to this ſeeming impatience, from real ſorrow, rather then from a profeſſed hypocriſie. So he beſpeaks his friends again, chap. 17. 10. But as for you all, do you return and come now (that is, be better adviſed, as the next words expound his meaning) for I cannot find one wiſe man among you. As if he had ſaid, you have not ſhewed any great treaſures of wiſdom in all your diſputations againſt me hitherto; and therefore he tells them (chap. 19. 28.) what counſels became them to take. Ye ſhould ſay, why perſecute we him? let us give over ſuch hard cenſures and wounding language. Say to your ſelves, Let us return, as here he ſaith to them, return, I pray you.

Let it not be iniquity.] Some underſtand it thus, let not the thing which is objected againſt me, be iniquity, object not unrighteouſly againſt me. Or thus,

Secondly, in this diſputation, as it ſhall be carried on again, deal not ſo unequally, ſo unjuſtly and hardly with me as before, deal fairly, uprightly, candidly and friendly with me; Return I pray thee, let it not be iniquity; let there not be ſuch wrangling and hard ſpeeches between us as hitherto there have been. Mr. Broughton agrees to either ſence, Change your mind now; let not unrighteouſneſs be objected.

Particula אל non ſemper prohibet, ſed aliquando ſimpliceter negat. Non erat iniquitas in verbis meis ſcilicet. Merc.

Yet the Hebrew particle (Al) doth not alwayes forbid, but often notes ſimply to deny; and ſome tranſlate it here, for a plain denial, rather then a forbidding. Not as we, Let it not be iniquity; but, there ſhall not be iniquity, that is, in my words, or in that which I ſhall ſpeak: and we may connect it with the latter part of the verſe, my righteouſneſs is in it.

Yea, return again.] He adviſed them to return before, now he doubles his advice, yea, return again. Such repeated doubled ſpeeches in Scripture, note, Firſt, A vehemency of ſpirit in the ſpeaker.

Secondly, A neceſſity of obedience to the thing which is ſpoken, by the hearer. It is ſurely a weighty and neceſſary point, which is ſpoken and ſpoken again. That's a double duty, and calls for double diligence, which we are doubly called unto. Return, I pray you, do not think that this is a ſmall matter, a matter of indifferency, return again. (As Cant. 6. 13.) Return, return, O Shulamite, return, return. There was great neceſſity for the Shulamite to return, when he was ſo often cried after to return. So, Rejoyce, and again I ſay, rejoyce, ſaith the Apoſtle, to note the vehemency of his ſpirit, and the neceſſity of the Goſpel-duty, or how exceeding becoming it is for Chriſtians to walk chearfully and rejoyce: Here then, Return, yea, return again, is, as if he had ſaid, there is great cauſe you ſhould return, and be better adviſed, that you ſhould conſider otherwiſe of my caſe, then hitherto you have done.

My righteouſneſs is in it.] That is, I am righteous in this matter, in this buſineſs; or upon ſuch a further conſideration and returning to the queſtion, My righteouſneſs (by a true ſtating of theſe differences) will appear unto you. Job was no Juſticiary, no boaſter in, or of his own righteouſneſs; but he ſpeaks of the righteouſneſs of his cauſe, and of the uprightneſs of his Conſcience; according to that of (Pſal. 73. 6.) Thy righteouſneſs ſhall appear as the light, that is, the righteouſneſs of thy cauſe: ſo ſaith Job, My righteouſneſs is in it; when you return, and return again, to conſider diligently and ſeriouſly of this buſineſs you will find the reſult of all will be, that my righteouſneſs is in it, that is, that I am in the right, or free from blame in this buſineſs, that I have not broken the rules of iuſtice, or departed from a good conſcience.

Forte indignabundi diſceſſum parabant, aut jam ſurrexerant diſceſſuri, quare illos invitat ad promovendā diſputationem. Pined.

Further, Others conceive Job beſpeaks his friends in this quick language, Return, yea, return again, to recal his friends, who were ready to go away in a pet, or in a fume, as we uſe to ſay; they were riſing to be gone, and Job haſtily calls them back, Return, I pray return; as a man in diſcourſe growing ſo hot, that the houſe cannot hold him, but he will break away, is uſually re-invited, Pray ſtay, Sir, return again; ſo Job, return again, my righteouſneſs is in it, you ſhall ſee I will make the matter good.

Hence obſerve (taking the return in a Metaphorical ſence)

Firſt, That, A paſſionate or inconſiderate man goes from himſelf, and from the matter.

Paſſion carries as from the buſineſs before us. An angry mans diſcourſe runs wild, he had need to be reduced. Conſideration is the returning of a man unto himſelf, or his coming home. As the paſſions of the concupiſcible appetite, and intemperancies of youth, carry a man beyond his bounds (and therefore the prodigal repenting, is ſaid to come to himſelf (Luk. 15. 17.) ſo likewiſe do the paſſions of the iraſcible appetite. Anger diſorders and diſcompoſes the ſpirit, as much as Luxury.

Secondly obſerve, To perſiſt in evil, is worſe then the committing of evil.

The one is common to man, rhe other peculiar to the Devil and his peculiars, who know no repentance. It is bad enough to do ill, but not to return from evil, is inexcuſable; therefore the Lord often by his Prophets layes this as the heavieſt charge of all, upon his people. He taxes them with their departures from him: but eſpecially with their refuſals to return unto him; yet have ye not returned unto me: this is more ſinful then all the ſins you have committed, you have not returned, you go on and perſevere in evil. The ſword of God proclaims a like voice in our ears at this day, Return, return again. We have departed and gone away from God, let us not draw that ancient charge upon our ſelves, I have ſmitten you, yet have ye not returned unto me. It is not ſinning, but not returning, which brings final condemnation. Impenitency ſeals the ſtone of deſtruction upon perſons and nations.

Thirdly, Whereas theſe words, Return, let it not be iniquity, are referred to Job's friends, as if he had ſaid, Let not this your paſſion make your ſin fouler and greater: you have ſinned already, but if you return not, your ſin will be iniquity ſhortly.

Every ſin, the leaſt ſin is ſin, as the leaſt drop of water is water; but every ſin in a (ſtrict ſence) is not iniquity. The nature is the ſame, but the degree varies. As many a child never comes to be a man, ſo many a ſin comes not to be an iniquity. Happy is he that taketh thoſe little ones, and daſheth them againſt the ſtones, That returns before their ſin be an iniquity.

Fourthly obſerve further, how Job calls upon his friends, when he ſees them tranſported (as he thought) with paſſion; he leaves complaining of his own ſorrows, and gives them good counſel; he, for that preſent forgets his own ruines, that he might amend them.

It is our duty to reclaim and to appeaſe thoſe by gentle entreaties, who we ſuppoſe have wronged us, or gone aſtray from the truth.

Job doth not rail upon or revile his friends, but beſeeches them to be better adviſed, and conſider what they did.

Fifthly, In that he ſaith, Return, yea, return again, taking this for a call to a more ſerious conſideration of the buſineſs, we may note,

That, A mans cauſe and condition muſt be conſidered, and conſidered again, twice, that is, fully conſidered, before he be condemned.

We muſt give account of every idle word, much more then of every unjuſt ſentence or cenſure: It is but wiſdom to conſider that ſtrictly, about which we muſt give ſo ſtrict an account.

Sixthly, In that he ſaith, My righteouſneſs is in it, obſerve,

That, A good cauſe, the more it is ſearched into, the better it will appear.

The deeper you dig into it, the more truth and holineſs you will find in it. Search a godly man, and the lower you go, the better he proves, the nearer you come to his heart, the richer treaſures of grace and uprightneſs will be diſcovered. Whereas take an hypocrite, and you may have a little good metal at his tongue, or his lips may be gilded over with good words, but ſearch him to the bottom, and there is all rottenneſs, even ſeven abominations in his heart.

A godly man is not gilded, but gold. Search a Job quite thorow, try him to the center, righteouſneſs is in all his wayes, the further you ſearch, the better he is, and he will be beſt of all at laſt.

Verſe 30. Is there iniquity in my tongue? Cannot my taſte diſcern perverſe things?

Formula eſt ſeipſum compellantis, & animum ſuū ſcrutantis, facta examinantis. Coc.

Verba per ſtultitiam & temeritatem prolata latentis pravitatis indices.

Thus he concludes his directory to his friends, and his preparatory for what himſelf intended to purſue in the next Chapter; Is there iniquity in my tongue? Doth my tongue ſpeak unequal or evil things? Hath any thing been ſpoken by me againſt common right, or againſt the divine rule? Hath my tongue uttered any iniquity from my heart? Hath the ſinfulneſs of my heart broken forth at my lips? or hath it appeared that I have done wickedly by what I have ſaid? When my words are duly weighed, I ſhall not appear the man you make me.

The word ſignifies calamity or miſery, as well as iniquity, and ſo we may take it here, Is there calamity in my tongue? that is, do my words beſpeak or invite my afflictions? We find the word uſed in that ſenſe, Pſal. 52. 2. Thy tongue deviſeth miſchief, or calamity; Iniquity deviſed or framed by the tongue is often a ſcourge upon the back, Micah 7.3. The great man uttereth his miſchievous deſire; the miſchievous evil words of his ſoul. Is there (ſaith Job) any ſuch miſchievous device in my tongue? Have I ſpoken poyſon to infect you, or blaſphemy to diſhonour God?

Dober Havoth Nappſhi.

Cannot my taſte diſcern perverſe things?

Cannot my taſte?] The Hebrew is, Cannot my palat? And becauſe the palat is exquiſite in taſting, therefore by a trope the organ is expreſſed for the act? Cannot my taſte diſcern? cannot my palat? Or as others, Cannot my mouth diſcern perverſe things? That faculty of the ſoul, whereby we diſcern or diſtinguiſh juſt from unjuſt, truth from falſehood, as ſweet is diſtinguiſhed from bitter by the palat, is elegantly called the palat of the ſoul.

Scriptura ſæpe linguæ faucibus, manibus tribuit quod mentis, & intellectus proprium eſt, ſc. meditari & intelligere.

Cannot my taſte [diſcern?] The Hebrew is, Cannot my taſte underſtand perverſe things? It is uſual in Scripture to aſcribe underſtanding, not only to the ſenſes, but alſo to the tongue, and ſometimes to the hand. Underſtanding is aſcribed to the tongue in the place before named, Pſal. 52. Where the tongue is ſaid to deviſe miſchief: The tongue properly cannot deviſe, the tongue doth but utter miſchief, it is the mind or heart that deviſeth. The ſhop is within, where miſchief is forged and framed; yet the contrivance of it, is in that text, given to the tongue. There is a twofold reaſon of it, why the holy Ghoſt attributes the work of the underſtanding to the tongue, hand or ſenſes.

Magna eſt rationis & orationis cognatio.

Firſt, There is a great affinity between reaſon and ſpeech, and therefore the tongue, which is the inſtrument of ſpeech is honoured with the work of the underſtanding: And ſo great is the affinity between reaſon and ſpeech, that no creature void of reaſon can ſpeak. Speech is a peculiar property of the rational creature. Speech is or ought to be the immediate iſſue or birth of Reaſon. Words are conceived in the mind, and born at the tongue. And words are the image of the mind. We may ſee what work is wrought in the mind, by that which is ſpoken by the tongue. The ſhape of mans heart (when he ſpeaks himſelf) comes out at his mouth. And therefore before he ſpeaks, he meditates. Meditation is the conception of words, as ſpeaking is the production of them. Thus the Lord charges Joſhua (chap. 1. 8.) The Book of the Law ſhall not depart out of thy mouth, but thou ſhalt meditate therein day and night. One would think it ſhou'd rather have been ſaid, The Book of the Law ſhall not depart out of thine heart, but thou ſhalt meditate therein, or if, not out of thy mouth, then thou ſhalt ſpeak of it. Meditation is too high a work for the mouth; yet, becauſe there ought to be much meditation about the Law of God, before a word of it comes out of the mouth, therefore the Lord ſaith, The Book of the Law ſhall not depart eut of thy mouth, but thou ſhalt meditate therein day and night; that is, as oft as thou ſhalt ſpeak, thou ſhalt meditate, thou ſhalt not ſpeak raſhly, it ſhall not be the work of thy tongue alone, but of thy mind and tongue together.

Ita meditaberis ut ex ipſa cogitatione mentis efferveſcente redundent, & ebulliat, in ore verba.

There is a ſecond reaſon why acts of the underſtanding are aſcribed to the tongue, or to the ſenſes; becauſe when a thing is well ſpoken or duly acted by any ſenſe, Reaſon is the guide, and the bodily Organ is under the dictates of the mind or underſtanding. So, Gen. 48. 14. When old Jacob in giving the bleſſing unto Joſeph's children, Manaſſeh and Ephraim, laid his right hand upon the younger, and his left upon the elder, the text ſaith, he made his hands to underſtand; we tranſlate, He guided his hands wittingly; there was ſo much reaſon, ſuch divine reaſon in that act of Jacob's hands, in laying his right hand upon the younger, that the Hebrew gives it wirh this elegancie, he made his hands to underſtand; which one of the Jewiſh Writers learnedly expounds thus, He ordered his hands wiſely, as if they had been made acquainted with that great myſtery of Gods counſels, that the greater bleſſing was the portion of the younger ſon. And ſo the Pſalmiſt (Pſal. 78. 72.) ſpeaking of David's reign and government, ſaith, He governed them by the skilfulneſs of his hands. The Hebrew is, by the underſtanding of his hands; and more, the underſtandings of his hands: Or, as one renders it, The diſcretions of his hands, or the prudency of his palms, aſcribing all kind of political knowledge and underſtanding unto David. David, in the outward adminiſtrations of the Kingdom, acted with ſo much reaſon and juſtice, that his very hands are ſaid to underſtand. His hands underſtood more then the heads of other Princes. As David's hands, ſo Job's palat or taſt, had an underſtanding; Cannot my palat underſtand

Prudenter egit manibus ſuis, acſi ipſæ manus myſteriorum conſciæ erat Onkel.

Yet further, it is frequent in Scripture, Metaphorically to tranſlate things which are only acted or apprehended by the inward ſenſes, to the outward. Taſte, properly is of meat or drink; the humour or moiſture, which is in meats, ſuitable to the ſalival humour in the mouth, cauſeth pleaſantneſs of taſte. Here Job ſpeaks of doctrines or of actions; Cannot my taſte diſcern perverſe things? If a thing be perverſly or properly, truly or falſly ſpoken, cannot I taſte it quickly? And hence the Word of God is compared to thoſe things which are the object of taſte, as to milk and to ſtrong meat, 1 Cor. 3. 2. I (ſaith the Apoſtle) have fed you with milk and not with meat, that is, with eaſie and common truths, not with the more myſterious parts of Goſpel-knowledge, becauſe ye were not able to bear it. The taſte of ſuch myſteries was too ſtrong for your palats. The ſame Metaphor is enlarged by the Apoſtle, Heb. 5. 12, 13, 14. And in this Book we find it more then once, Doth not the ear try words, and the mouth taſte his meat (Job 12. 11, & 34. 3.) That is, doth not the ear try words, as the mouth taſtes meat? Cannot my taſte diſcern?

Perverſe things. [That is, words ill ſpoken, or wrong placed. The word ſignifies alſo any calamity or ſad accident. And ſo Mr. Broughton renders it. Cannot my palat declare any kind of heavy ſorrow? Do ye think I have loſt my judgment of things, and that I cannut tell when I am pincht or pain'd?

Firſt, In that he ſaith here Is there iniquity in my tongue? obſerve,

The tongue oftentimes diſcovers the iniquity of the heart.

If there be iniquity in the heart, it will one time or other break forth at, and bliſter upon the tongue. He that is rotten at his heart, is commonly rotten in his talk, Mat. 12. 34. Out of the abundance of the heart, the mouth ſpeaks. And when there is abundance of iniquity in the heart, there is ſeldom a dearth or ſcarcity of it in the mouth; eſpecially in times of trouble, that iniquity and corruption, that diſeaſe and plague of the heart, will break forth at the lips. As evil words corrupt good manners, ſo evil words diſcover, that our manners are corrupt. There are few men, but, as the Damoſel ſpake to Peter, Their ſpeech bewrayeth them, and you may ſmell the filth of their hearts by their breath.

Secondly, Obſerve from theſe words, Is there iniquity in my tongue?

He whoſe heart is upright, may know that he is upright.

When Job queſtions, Is there iniquity in my tongue? He reſolves There is no iniquity in my tongue; none of that iniquity that you charge me with. I grant a believer hath not alwayes a ſight of his own integrity and uprightneſs; many a ſoul bears falſe witneſs againſt himſelf, and oppreſſes his own innocency; yet for the moſt part, ſincerity hath a witneſs in it ſelf, and holineſs carries a light, by which it is ſeen to him that hath it. An upright heart may know his own uprightneſs.

Thirdly, In that Job is thus ſtiff in maintaining his own uprightneſs, and in denying any iniquity to be in his tongue, Obſerve,

It is a duty to maintain our own integrity and uprightneß.

Job was upon it before, and is now upon it again, and he will be upon it afterward; he never gives over juſtifying of himſelf againſt man, though he had not a word to plead for himſelf againſt God.

Fourthly, From the latter clauſe, Cannot my taſte diſcern perverſe things? Obſerve, Reaſon diſtinguiſhes truth from falſhood, as the pallate diſtinguiſhes bitter from ſweet.

Reaſon it is the ſouls-taſter. Princes have their taſters before they eat, leaſt there ſhould be poiſon in the diſh. God hath given unto man a taſter for his ſpiritual meat. The Pope will not ſuffer the meat he provides and cooks to be taſted, but will have it ſwallowed whole, or elſe he will thruſt it whole down their throats. It is a like ſpiritual tyranny, to ſtarve ſouls, and to cram them. It is our duty, when meat is ſet before us, and we are at a full table of Knowledge, where variety of Doctrines and Opinions are ſerved in, then to call for our taſter; We may be ſurfetted elſe, if not poyſon'd. There may be a wild gourd among good herbs in the pot, and ſo death in the pot too; therefore firſt taſte, then eat, and digeſt. A Chriſtian hath a taſte to diſcern error from truth, why then ſhould he be denied the uſe of it? A wo is pronounced againſt thoſe who offer unwholſom Doctrine, Iſa. 5. 20. Wo to thoſe that call evil good, and good evil; that put light for darkneß, and darkneß for light; that put bitter for ſweet, and ſweet for bitter. A like wo is due to them, who will not give others leave to diſcern for themſelves, what is good or evil, light or darkneſs, bitter or ſweet; as good let another live for us, as another taſte for us. And their miſery will be little leſs, then the woes of theſe men, who cannot, or will not take pains to diſtinguiſh; when evil is called good, and good evil; when light is put for darkneſs, and darkneſs for light; when bitter is put for ſweet, and ſweet for bitter; or (as Job ſpeaks here) whoſe taſte cannot diſcern perverſe things. There are ſome whoſe taſte is ſo far from diſcerning perverſe things, that it is eaſie to diſcern their taſte is perverſe; for bring them wholſom, true and ſavoury doctrine, they ſay it is bitter, or falſe doctrine; bring them falſe doctrine, a lie, a dream, a fancy, a meer humane invention, diſh out ſuch proviſion before them, that's excellent chear. This was the heavieſt curſe which God ſent upon the Gentiles, Rom. 1. 28. God gave them over to a reprobate mind, to do thoſe things which are not convenient: That is, to a mind void of judgment, a mind that could not taſte or diſtinguiſh things; therefore the iſſue or effect was, They did things which were not convenient; as if a man not being able to judge of meats, eats poiſon, or meats moſt contrary to his health and conſtitution. It is a fearful judgment to be given up to an unapproving mind, to a mind that cannot diſcern truth from falſe-hood, the Oracles of God, from the forgeries of men; ſuperſtition, from holy worſhip. It is a ſad thing to looſe our ſpiritual ſenſes. Such as play the wantons with the Word of God, and walk below the truths they know, are at laſt given up to a reprobate mind, to a mind not able to know the Word of Truth; and then they ſwallow down error for Truth, and ſuck in deadly poyſon, like ſweet pleaſant wine. The Apoſtle ſpeaking of the difference of doctrines, under the metaphor of meats, ſaith, Milk is for babes, but ſtrong meat is for them of full age, even for thoſe that by reaſon of uſe, have their ſenſes exerciſed to diſcern good and evil: That is, their ſpiritual ſenſes exerciſed to taſte this from that doctrine, and not to ſwallow every doctrine alike. It is a great bleſſing, when a people have ſenſes exerciſed; and it is a bleſſing we have much cauſe to pray for in theſe times. That many pallats are out of taſte is too apparent by the multitude of heterodox opinions, which go down without diſreliſh. Some which would even make a man tremble to name them, are entertained with delight. Some which diſſolve our comforts, and break us off from comfortable communion with Chriſt: Some which ſhake, if not overthrow the very foundations of faith, are ſwallowed as pleaſant morſels. Doth not this convince, that there's a want of Job's taſte among us to diſcern perverſe things. Therefore get your ſenſes exerciſed, be eſtabliſhed in the preſent truth, that, ye, as this holy man in the midſt of all bodily diſtempers, and outward troubles) which uſually put the natural pallate out of taſte) may yet even then, as he, have your inward ſenſes exquiſite, and your ſpiritual pallate exact to diſcern right from perverſe things. Note, Laſtly, Falſe doctrine, or true doctrine falſly applied, is a perverſe thing.

Falſe doctrine perverts, Firſt, Reaſon; Secondly, Scripture; Thirdly, The Souls of men. The Apoſtle (Act. 20. verſ. 30.) prophecies to the Church of Epheſus, and with them to all Churches; That out of themſelves men ſhould ariſe, ſpeaking perverſe things to draw away diſciples after them. Holy doctrine draws men to God, and falſe doctrine draws men to man. As itching ears heap teachers to themſelves (2 Tim. 4. 3.) So falſe tongues heap diſciples to themſelves. That which is perverſe in it's nature, is perverting in it's effect.

CHAP. VII. Verſ. 1, 2, 3, 4.

Is there not an appointed time to man upon earth? are not his dayes alſo like the dayes of an hireling?

As a ſervant earneſtly deſireth the ſhadow, and as an hireling looketh for the reward of his work:

So am I made to poſſeß months of vanity; and weariſom nights are appointed to me.

When I lie down, I ſay, When ſhall I ariſe, and the night be gone? I am full of toſſings too and fro, unto the dawning of the day.

WHere the knot of connection, between this and the former Chapter lieth, is not ſo diſcernable; which hath given occaſion for much diverſity of conjecture about it.

Firſt, It may be conceived, that Job in this diſcourſe, refutes that tenet of Eliphaz, that he was puniſhed and ſcourged for his wickedneſs: by ſhewing that to be afflicted is the common condition of man, and therefore no ſuch judgment of any mans wickedneſs or ſinfulneſs could be made from his afflictions. Or,

Secondly, That Job here confutes that promiſe, which Eliphaz made about Chap. 6. 20. concerning outward proſperity, He ſhall know that his tabernacle ſhall be in peace, and he ſhall be delivered, &c. by proving it inconſiſtent with the preſent eſtate of mortals to look for ſuch uninterrupted happineſs, or fair dayes without any clouds and ſtorms, as Eliphaz ſeemed to undertake he ſhould, Is there not an appointed time to man upon earth? are not his dayes alſo like the dayes of an hireling, &c.

Or thirdly, the connection may be made with thoſe words, which himſelf had ſpoken at verſ. 24. of the former Chapter, Teach me (ſaith Job) and I will hold my tongue, and cauſe me to underſtand wherein I have erred: In which words we ſhewed, Job makes an humble ſubmiſſion of himſelf: and in caſe his friends could inſtruct him better, he was willing to learn, he was not wedded to his own opinion, or reſolved never to be removed from it.

In purſuance of which promiſed teachableneſs, he in this Chapter grants what was grantable in the former diſcourſe of Eliphaz. Eliphaz had ſaid, Chap. 5. verſ. 7, 8. That man was born to labour as the ſparks fly upward, and thereupon preſently infers, I would ſeek unto God, &c. both theſe, the Doctrine and the Vſe, Job ſeems to proſecute in this ſeventh Chapter; as if he ſhould ſay, what thou haſt rightly ſpoken, I will grant thee; thou haſt ſaid, Man is born to trouble, I ſay ſo too, Is there not an appointed time unto man (of trouble?) and are not his dayes as the dayes of an hyreling? And thou adviſeſt me to ſeek unto God, and apply my ſelf to him; it is good counſel, and therefore I will follow it: As we read he doth, at verſ. 17, & 20. of this Chapter, O remember that my life is wind, what is man that thou ſhouldſt magnifie him; I have ſinned, what ſhall I do unto thee, O thou preſerver of men? Why doeſt thou not pardon my tranſgreſſion, and take away mine iniquity? Language full of humility, and ſounding out the brokenneſs of his heart.

But laſtly, rather thus, Job having in the former Chapter refuted thoſe arguments by which Eliphaz would convince him, and having renewed his requeſt to die, expoſtulated with his friends about their unkindneſs toward him, and admoniſhed them to a more equal dealing with, and hearing of him: he now proceeds to the confirmation of his firſt requeſt to die, which he doth from divers grounds.

Firſt, From the general condition of mans life, verſ. 1. Is there not an appointed time to man, &c.

Secondly, From the condition of ſome particular men, A ſervant earneſtly deſireth the ſhadow, and a hireling looketh for the reward of his work; may not I therefore deſire death, which only will be a ſhadow to me, till when I ſhall not have my reward? And

Thirdly, From his own ſpecial condition at the third verſe, and ſo forward to the ſeventh, therein expreſſing how ſad, how reſtleſs, how troubleſom his life was to him, which (as he apprehended) nothing could give remedy to but only death: My diſeaſe appears curably only by a grave, and my only medicine, is a mouth full of earth: Therefore the matter ſtanding ſo with me, have I not rightly and reaſonably deſired, either that I had not lived at all, or that I may quickly die, and that God would cut off my life.

Having by theſe arguments confirmed that former deſire, in the next place, he again renews his former complaints from verſ. 11. of this Chapter, unto v. 17. Thirdly, he abaſes himſelf before God, as unworthy that God ſhould take any notice of him, or beſtow a thought, a viſit, a ſmile or a chaſtiſement upon him. What is man, that thou doeſt magnifie him? that thou doeſt viſit him, &c. Laſtly, he concludes with confeſſion of his ſin, and earneſt deſire of pardon, at verſ. 20, 21.

Thus in general, both for the dependance of the latter part of his ſpeech upon the former, and the principal parts contained in this.

Verſ. 1. Is there not an appointed time to man upon earth? And are not his dayes alſo like the dayes of an hyreling.

The queſtion affirms, there is an appointed time to man upon earth, and his dayes are like the dayes of an hireling. From whence, we may from his argument thus infer: He that hath a certain term of life appointed him to ſerve in, doth not ſin in deſiring an end of his ſervice: But there is an appointed time, &c. Therefore it is not ſinful to deſire it.

Is there not an appointed time?] The Hebrew thus; Is there not a warfare to man upon earth? So you find it in the margine of your Bibles: Our Tranſlators put warfare there, and appointed time in the Text. The word ſignifies both, becauſe wars of all other actions have their ſeaſons, and their appointed times; and the life of man is well deſcribed under both, or either of thoſe notions.

Conſider it firſt under the moſt proper ſignification, and ſo many read it, Is there not a warfare to man upon the earth? Iſa. 40. 1, 2. Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, ſaith the Lord, ſpeak comfortably to Jeruſalem; Why? Tell her, her warfare is ended. In that place our Tranſlators put appointed time in the margine, and warfare in the Text; as here they put appointed time in the Text, and warfare in the margine: The ſence in both is the ſame. Tell her that her warfare is ended, that is, the time appointed or conſtituted for her trouble is ended: So here, Is there not an appointed time? That is, is there not a ſet, determined time of the troubles, or troubleſom warfaring life of man?

The Greek Tranſlators interpret it, Temptation, Is there not an appointed temptation to man upon the earth? And that gives us the ſame meaning; for temptation is a warfare; temptation is our ſpiritual war, the exerciſe and probation of a Chriſtian. There are three things in which the greateſt exerciſe of a Chriſtian life conſiſt, Prayer, Meditation and Temptation. Firſt, Prayer, wherein man is ſeeking unto, and working his heart towards God: Secondly, Meditation, wherein he is preparing himſelf, by holy thoughts and divine conſiderations, for his nearer addreſſes unto God in prayer, and how to walk in every duty towards man: Thirdly, Temptation, wherein he wraſtles and ſtrives with thoſe enemies oppoſing prayer, meditation and the whole courſe of holy obedience. The life of man is a continued temptation, and that's a ſpiritual warfare, a continual bickering with a world of enemies; and though they without ſtand ſtill, yet a ſoul can ſcarce paſs one hour, but he ſhall have many fights and bouts with his own heart. In this ſence, Is there not an appointed time of warfare, or temptation to man upon earth?

Græci πειρατήριον, quaſi tentationis officinam, ubi homo varia experiatur, variiſq; eventis & periculis ſit expoſitus, ut miles in bello.

Our life is a warfare in divers reſpects.

Firſt, It is a warfare, becauſe Chriſtians do or ought, to live under the greateſt command of any in the world; they ought to ſtand armed at a call. A Souldier is under abſolute command, he muſt not diſpute the Orders of his General, but obey them; the Centurion in the Goſpel ſaith, I have Souldiers under me, and I ſay to one go and he goeth, to another come and he cometh, and to a third do this and he doth it: which he ſpeaks not as commending the ſpecial vertue and good diſpoſition of his own Souldiers, but as deſcribing the duty of all Souldiers: therefore ſouldiary is well defined, To be the obedience of a ſtout and valiant mind, out of his own diſpoſe; A Souldier moves upon direction, ſo muſt a Chriſtian, he is in a warfaring condition, he muſt have a charge or a word from his Commander for every ſtep he treads, or action he undertakes.

Militia eſt obedientia quædam fortis & invicti animi, arbitrio carentis ſuo.

Secondly, It is a warfare, in regard of perpetual motions and travels: A Souldiers life is an unſetled life; while he is in actual ſervice, he hath no reſt, he is either marching, or charging; and when he comes to his Quarters, his ſtay is but little, he cannot build him a houſe, he can but pitch him down a Tent for a night or two, he muſt away again. Mans life hath no ſtop, we have here no abiding City, we dwell in Tents and Tabernacles, waifaring and warfaring out our dayes.

Thirdly, A warfare, becauſe of continual watching. It is the watch-word which Chriſt gave his followers, I ſay unto you, watch; that's the Souldiers word and work too; warring and watching go together: The Souldier ſtands Centinel, fearing the enemies ſurpriſe: A Chriſtian ſhould ſtand upon his guard and his watch at all hours, is not that a warfare?

Fourthly, A warfare, becauſe Chriſtians ought to keep their rank and file, that is, the places and relations wherein God hath ſet them. A Souldier commanded to ſtand ſuch a ground, muſt not ſtir though he die for it, and if he ſtirs (by Martial Law) he ſhall die. There is ſo much keeping of order in War and Battels, that whatſoever keeps order, is ſaid to fight or war. The Stars are ſaid to have fought againſt Siſera in their courſes, Judg. 5. 20. The Stars are embattaild or encampt in their ſphears, out of which they move not, and are therefore often called the Militia, or hoſt of Heaven.

Fifthly, A warfare, becauſe ſo full of hazzards, troubles and labours, or becauſe ſo much hardſhip is to be endured. A Souldier converſes with dangers, and dwels in the territories of death continually: This cauſed Deborah to begin her Triumphant Song, with praiſe to the Lord, becauſe the people offered themſelves willingly. Many are forc'd and preſs'd to the wars; and moſt who are not preſs'd by the Authority of others, are preſs'd by their own hopes of gain, or deſire of vain glory and renown. A true Voluntier in war, is a rare man: There is ſo much danger in it, that there is ſeldom much of the will in it.

The whole life of man, is full either of viſible or inviſible dangers; he paſſes the pikes every day. The Apoſtle reckons eight diſtinct perils in one verſe, which met him which way ſoever he turned, 2 Cor. 11. 26. He was in deaths often. And though there are but few ſuch Heroes as he, yet 'tis ſeldom but any of us are in deaths: Eſpecially while we remember the mighty ſpiritual enemies and oppoſitions which encompaſs and beſet us every day. We wraſtle not with fleſh and blood, but with principalities and powers, &c. And are therefore adviſed to take to us the whole armor of God; never to ſtir without our Sword.

Sixthly, A warfare, in regard of the iſſue; victory and triumph, or ſlavery and death, is the iſſue of our lives. Either we overcome, and are more then conquerors (that's the Apoſtles language, Rom. 8.) or elſe we are conquered, and more then captives; that's the Apoſtles ſence too, (both in alluſion) They are taken captive by the Devil at his will: To be led captive by the Devil, is the loweſt captivity: lower then any captivity unto men. In reference to the ſpiritual part of our warfare, there's no coming off upon equal terms: we muſt be victors or ſlaves, conquer or die. Only this is the Saints aſſurance, that as the Captain of their ſalvation was made perfect by ſufferings, and conquer'd by dying, ſo (at the worſt) ſhall they; ſpiritual death (as ſinners) hath no power over them at all: and when they die (as men) naturally, or by men violently, they ſhall receive fuller power: Thus our life is a warfare upon earth.

But take the word as we tranſlate, for an appointed time; Is there not an appointed time to man upon the earth? And the reaſon why it bears that ſence, is grounded upon theſe two things:

Non ſignificat tempus ſimpliciter; ſed tempus certum ac conſtitutum, eâ analogiâ, quod determinato anni tempore exerceri ſolet militia. Militia ideo tempus determinatum dicitur, quia non quævis ætas bello apta eſt, ſed determinata & certa.

Firſt, Becauſe there is a ſpecial ſeaſon of the year, moſt fit and ſutable for war, 2 Sam. 11. 1. And it came to paſs at the return of the year, when Kings go forth to battel. The time for war, is ſuch a known appointed ſeaſon, that the ſame word ſignifies warfare, and any appointed ſeaſon.

Secondly, Becauſe men go out to war, at a ſpecial time of their age: There is an appointed ſetled time of mans life, wherein he is fit to bear arms. Every age is not fit for arms: Old men and children are not fit for the field: Hence we find, Numbers the firſt throughout, that the muſter of the children of Iſrael is thus made, verſ. 3, 20, 22, &c. From twenty years old and upward; all that are able to go forth to war. The Roman and Greek Hiſtories are diſtinct in this; in ſome Common-wealths, from Fifteen to Fifty; in others from Twenty to Sixty; and in ours the appointed time is between Sixteen and Sixty, ſo men are preſs'd and liſted for war: And becauſe there is ſuch an appointed, or a ſet time of life in all States to go out to war, therefore that word is elegantly applied, to ſignifie a ſet or an appointed time for any buſineſs. Is there not an appointed time to man upon earth?

Upon earth.] In Heaven our time knows no bounds, there are no terms or diſtinctions in eternity; ſeaſons and variety of of times vaniſh and ſhall not be heard of in Heaven. Eternity is time fixt. But there is an appointed time.

Singulis diebus ſua certamina præſto ſunt, adeo non niſi cum ipſa vita terminantur labores vitæ, ac proinde ſecundū naturam finem vitæ expeto. Jun.

To man upon earth.] The word is Enoſh, miſerable, weak, frail man; is there not an appointed time to this man upon earth? That is, while he walks in this lower region of the world, and lives on mould. The ſum of all may be thus conceived, as if Job had ſaid, Every day hath evil annexed, ſome affliction or other waits upon every hour, ſo that there is no period of mans ſorrow, but the period of his life; and therefore I walk by the rule of ſound reaſon, when that I might ſee an end of my trouble, I call for the end of my dayes. Obſerve hence, Firſt, The life of man, is meaſured out by the will of God.

Is there not an appointed time to man upon earth? There is. As God hath ſet out bounds and limits to the Sea (Hitherto thou ſhalt come and no further) by a perpetual decree, ſo he hath alſo ſet out bounds and limits to the life of man, his life is an appointed time: Thus far the line of thy life ſhall reach, and no further. We live not at adventures, neither can our care lengthen out our own dayes. As all our care cannot add one cubit to our ſtature, ſo not one minute to our glaſs or hour. And as we cannot lengthen, ſo we cannot ſhorten our own dayes in reſpect of this appointed time: They who die in a time when God forbids, yet die when God appoints: And they live out all Gods time, who wickedly ſhorten their own: They cut their thread of life, but they cannot cut the thread of Gods decree; we live not at our own will, but at the will of God; we are Tenants at his will, in theſe houſes of clay. He is the maker of time, and the meaſurer of our dayes; he gives us the leaſe of our lives for what years he pleaſes; and it is moſt fit that he who created time, ſhould diſpoſe of time. God is the Lord of time, and farms it out, as, and to whom he thinks good. Chriſt might do what he pleaſed upon the Sabbath, for (ſaith he) the Son of man is Lord alſo of the Sabbath; God is the Lord of time, and therefore hath power to appoint, to one more, to another leſs: My times (ſaith David) are in thy hand, Pſal. 31. v. 15: Thou mayeſt lengthen or ſhorten, continue or break them off, as thy pleaſure is.

Some live as if they were maſters of time, and could appoint out their own term: as if they lived at their own diſcretion, and could make a covenant with the grave, and agree with death, when to come for them. They article with it, for this year and the next; they ſay to the grave, thou ſhalt not take me yet, thou ſhalt ſpare me yet, I have ſuch ends to drive, ſuch pleaſures to take before I would die. They (Iſa. 56. 12.) ſpeak, as if their tongues and their time were their own, and they knew no Lord of either; To morrow ſhall be as this day, and much more abundant; they ſpeak of the next day, as if they could command it, and bid it come to ſerve their luſts. That wretched rich man, Luke 12. could ſay, Soul take thine eaſe, thou haſt goods laid up for many years; ſee how liberal he is to his ſoul, out of anothers right; and becauſe he had got a great ſtock of riches, he gives himſelf a rich ſtock of time, many years. He reſolved to make his life larger, as he had done his barns; and becauſe they were full of corn, he alſo will be full of dayes; whereas the word came, Thou fool, this night ſhall thy ſoul be taken from thee: And he could not live till next morning, who reſolved upon many years to live. Obſerve,

Secondly, That the decrees of God concerning our lives, muſt not leſſen our care to preſerve our lives.

Non in abſurdum trahenda eſt hæc Jobi ſententia, ut temere ſe quiſpiam periculis objiciat, quia ſpatiū vitæ definitū eſt.

Is there not an appointed time to man upon earth? Yes, that there is; man lives at Gods appointment: but he muſt not live upon that appointment; that is, withdraw himſelf from means of his preſervation, and ſay, God hath appointed how long I ſhall live, therefore what need I take care how to live? Or what need I take care for the preſerving of my life? As it is in ſpirituals, ſo alſo in temporals. God hath determined and appointed the portion of every man, all comes under a decree, under an everlaſting and unmoveable decree; yet the decree which is paſt concerning us, muſt not take us off from our care about our ſelves. Though only the elect are ſaved, yet none are ſaved by their election; Infants who attain not the uſe of reaſon, much leſs the actings of grace, yet are not ſaved barely by election; what they cannot do, is done for them, they are ſaved as elect in Chriſt, not preciſely as elect; how they are united to Chriſt, we know not, but we know they muſt be united, or elſe they could not be ſaved. But they who grow in years, muſt alſo grow in the graces of ſanctification, otherwiſe they are not ſaved by the grace of election: The decree of God appoints us to ſalvation, but the decree of God doth not ſave us; we muſt run through all the ſecond cauſes, and wayes which the word of God hath chalked out to eternal life and glory. Thus alſo our temporal life, paſſeth under a decree, it is by appointment: but wo unto thoſe that ſhall ſay, God hath appointed how long I ſhall live, therefore what need I take care about my life? This is to walk contrary to one part of the decree, while we ſeem to ſubmit unto the other, For God who appoints life, appoints all the means which concern the preſervation of life. It hath no ſhadow of a warrant, for any man to caſt himſelf upon needleſs dangers, or to forbear neceſſary helps for the ſuſtaining of his life, becauſe he hears his time is appointed, and that his dayes on earth are all reckoned and numbred to him from heaven.

Thirdly, Foraſmuch as there is an appointed time, we ſhould learn patience, and wait quietly upon God. It is not in creatures (be they never ſo angry) to prolong the time of our ſorrows. The ſame word which ſhews us, that our life is a warfare, ſhews us alſo that it is an appointed time. Men cannot appoint you one moments trouble, or lengthen this war, when God will ſhorten it. Our hairs are numbred, much more our dayes. Honour God, and have good thoughts of him; for whether your times be fair or foul, calm or ſtormy, they are appointed times. The whole life of man on earth is ordered in heaven.

Fourthly, If our lives are for an appointed time, we ſhould be willing to die when God calls. All the time we would live beyond that, is of our own appointment; and we ſhould be willing to live till God calls, for all thats appointed time. As it is ſinful not to be willing to do (though it be burdenſom) what God appoints; ſo is it likewiſe, not to be willing to live what time God appoints, though it be painful and troubleſom.

And are not his dayes like the dayes of an hireling?

An hireling is he, who works a ſet time, for a ſet reward: And ſo this latter clauſe of the verſe is the ſame in ſence with the former. Is there not an appointed time to man, and are not his dayes like the dayes of an hireling? that is, are not his dayes ſet as an hirelings, with whom we agree for ſo many dayes, or for ſuch a day.

שכיר Mercenarius, à שכר Conduxit. Mercenarius eſt qui in certum tempus conducitur, & ſæpe in diem, quem ideo Græci vocant ἀνθημέριον μίσθιον. Sicut in unico die operario, quamdiu lucet Sol, non eſt ulla requies mercenario conſtituta, ita dum luce hujus vitæ fruimur, nulla nobis requies expectanda eſt.

An hireling.] We may take him either for a hired ſouldier, a mercenary in war; or for an hired ſervant, a mercenary in work. An hireling in either notion, is called to labour, ſorrow and ſweat: Such is the common condition of man, His dayes are as the dayes of an hireling, God threatneth Moab by the Prophet in this language (Iſa. 16. 14.) Within three years, as the years of an hireling, and the glory of Moab ſhall be contemned; that is, within three years, which ſhall be like the years of an hireling, troubleſom years, laborious years, vexatious years, weariſom years, and then the glory of Moab ſhall be contemned, and utterly deſpiſed; as if he had ſaid, Moab is now in great glory, but near great deſolation. You ſhall ſee three years trouble will ſtain all the glory of Moab, and wither all her beauty: we feel this truth. England was a Nation of great glory, you ſee how two or three years, like the years of an hireling, troubleſom years, years of affliction, years of hard labour and travel, have almoſt ſpoil'd the glory of it.

And yet here Job makes a general deſcription of the life of man: It is not the lot only of ſome poor afflicted, hard-wrought ſervants, that their dayes are as the dayes of an hireling; he ſpeaks of mankind, of the maſter as well as of the ſervant; His dayes are like the dayes of an hireling. We may note from it,

First, That, Except we labour, we ought not to eat.

For the dayes of man are as the dayes of an hireling; the hireling ſhall not have his meat except he work for it; neither ought he that hires, or ſets him awork. The Maſter is in this ſence an hireling. The Saints are (in this ſence) Hirelings. The Apoſtle ſpeaks to Believers, and reproves them (2 Theſ. 3. 12.) There are ſome who walk among you inordinately, working not at all; now them that are ſuch, we command, that they work and eat their own bread: and ver. 10. If any man work not, let him not eat; even they whom Chriſt hath made free, are to account themſelves as hired ſervants, that is, they muſt not eat the bread of idleneſs; we ſteal all the bread, which (one way or other) we labour not for; and therefore the Apoſtle bids the Theſſalonians work, that they might eat their own bread. It is not our own bread which we buy with our money, unleſs we pay (in what we can, and are called to) labour for it alſo. As we eat that bread pleaſantly, ſo we come by it honeſtly, which is dipt in our ſweat.

Secondly, We are hence taught, That, We ought to take our travels well, we muſt not murmur at our labours, or complain over our work, and ſay, what a wearineſs is it?

As the Lord cannot bear it, that any ſhould murmur at ſpiritual work, or ſay with them, in the Prophet, what a wearineſs is it? ſo it is very diſpleaſing to him, to ſay of our callings and the burdens of them, What a wearineſs are they? Why? It is the common condition of man, why then ſhould we quarrel with that law of labour, which is become the portion of our mortality? The corruption of our Nature hath led us into this condition, and made us all as hirelings. Mans innocency had buſineſs, but ſin hath brought him to ſweat, and changed his labour into toil. Man was put into the garden, as Lord of it, to dreſs and till it; but now he is put there, as an hireling, to ſweat and toil at it. There is a ſtamp of ſervility and drudgery upon all the labours which the children of men take under the Sun. That argument which the Apoſtle uſes, to ſupport us in the bitterneſs of affliction, hath a like ſtrength in it to comfort us in the toilſomneſs of our labours. As there is no temptation hath taken hold of us, but that which is common to man, 1 Cor. 10. 13. So there is no labour laid upon any of us in our lawful callings, but that which is common to man. Even the Saints whom Chriſt hath made free, and ſeparated from the world, are not freed from ſervice while they are in the world. And while Chriſt wou'd not have them careful in any thing, he would have them induſtrious in every thing. That Canon of the Apoſtle is clear for it (1 Cor. 7. 20.) Let every man abide in the ſame calling wherein he was called; that is, your ſpiritual calling doth not void your civil. When you have learned to drive a trade for heaven, you muſt ſtill drive your trade on earth. While there is any thing of ſin in us, there muſt be ſomewhat of the hireling in us. There is not the moſt ingenious, no, nor the moſt ſpiritual labour we go about, but there is ſomewhat of the hireling in it; in the duty of prayer, in the duty of preaching, there is ſomewhat of the hireling, that is, there is bodily pain and wearineſs, a waſte upon our ſtrength, and expence of our ſpirits. Though in theſe things the Saints work not for wages, but their very work is their wages, and their labour their reward, though there be nothing mercenary in their ſpirits, yet they feel the effects of a mercenary work upon their bodies, even wearineſs and waſte of natural ſtrength and ſpirits.

Thirdly, Seeing the dayes of man are as the dayes of an hireling, Obſerve,

There is a reward or wages, ſomewhat follows the labour and travel of this life.

The hireling labours all day, but at night he hath his reward, Mat. 20. Chriſt compares Believers, even in their ſpiritual capacity, unto Labourers in a Vineyard, to hirelings, who wrought for a penny a day, and at night they had every one their pay: It is ſo in reference to the whole courſe of this life, we are hirelings; in the evening we ſhall have our penny; verily, There is a reward for the righteous, their labour is not in vain in the Lord, 1 Cor. 15. And as the righteous have a reward, ſo the wicked ſhall have wages. Satans hireling ſhall have full pay, though no content, for all their works: The wages of ſin is death; there's pay, ſuch as it is, woful pay, a black penny. The dayes of man are as the dayes of an hireling, there is an iſſue and a reward for every work.

Fourthly, Note from the Metaphor, While an hireling is doing his Maſters work, he doth his own too.

That is, his own profit comes in by thoſe acts in which he labours for another. It is thus alſo in the general ſtate of man; above all, Chriſts ſervants and hirelings gain by the duties of obedience they perform to Chriſt, their own profit comes in with his honour. A godly man cannot do a ſtroke of work for God, but he works for himſelf too; the ſervants of God muſt not be ſelf-ſeekers and ſelf-workers, they may not make themſelves their end; but as it is with an hireling, let him be never ſo upright-hearted toward the maſter he ſerves, let him lay ſelf by in all he doth, yet he hath a ſhare of profit in all his labours. God hath ſo eſpouſed and married his own glory and the good of man together, that whoſoever really promotes the one, promotes both. It is ſo likewiſe with thoſe who work the works of darkneſs, and do the luſts of the devil. While his ſlaves are doing his work, they are gaining toward deſtruction, and their own wages encreaſes daily, they are treaſuring up wrath and judgment againſt the day of wrath. As the meaſure of their ſin fills, ſo doth the meaſure of their puniſhment. Thus alſo the dayes of man are as the dayes of an hireling.

There are two general Obſervations which I ſhall but name, becauſe they will occur again.

Firſt, The life of man is ſhort; as the dayes of an hireling.

The ſervant doth not abide in the houſe for ever, a hireling is but for a time. And it is good for a man that it is ſo. Some complain exceeding much, becauſe their lives are ſo exceeding little. But let them weigh it well, and they ſhall ſee cauſe to rejoyce much, becauſe they live ſo little. In ſome reſpect it is good for wicked men, that their lives are ſo ſhort; if their lives were longer, they would be wickeder, and ſo heaping up more ſin, they would heap up more wrath againſt themſelves. And it is very well for the Saints, that their lives are ſo ſhort. Their corruptions and temptations, their weakneſſes and infirmities, their troubles and afflictions are ſo many, that it is well their dayes are ſo few. If they ſhould have length of life added to heaps of ſorrows, and perpetuity with outward miſery, how miſerable were they! Chriſt promiſes it as a point of favour to his, that the dayes of trouble ſhould be ſhortned; Except thoſe dayes ſhould be ſhortned, no fleſh ſhould be ſaved (that is, kept or preſerved alive in thoſe tribulations) but for the Elects ſake thoſe dayes ſhall be ſhortned, Mat. 24. 22. It is a favour alſo to the Saints, that their particular dayes are ſhortned, that theirs are but as the dayes of an hireling, foraſmuch as their preſent dayes are dayes of trouble and travel. The dayes of the beſt are ſo full of evil, that it is good they are not fuller of days.

Secondly, It is good they are ſo evil or full of trouble.

It is well for wicked men that their dayes are full of trouble; the ſweeter their lives are to them, the ſinfuller they are againſt God. Their outward comforts are but fewel and encouragement to their luſts; and while their lives are calm and quiet, they do but ſail more quietly down into that dead Sea of everlaſting miſery. And the Saints have this advantage by the troubleſomeneſs of their lives, to be kept in continual exerciſe, and more dependance upon God; they would love the world too well, and delight in the creature too much, if God did not put bitterneſs into their cup.

Job having thus ſhadowed the ſtate of man, ſeems to make out his intendment or ſcope thus, There is no reaſon why I ſhould be charged ſo deeply for deſiring death; for what is the life of man? Is it not a life full of travel, and of trouble, full of dangers and temptations, is not the time of his life ſhort and ſet? Is it not a ſpeedy paſſing time, and yet a firmly appointed time? Why then ſhould not I think the period of my life to be at hand? Why ſhould not I think my appointed time is come? Foraſmuch as I have ſo many evidences and ſymptomes of death before me, and have heard ſo many meſſages and ſummons to the grave. Death ſits upon my lips, ready to come in while I am ſpeaking. Death hath taken poſſeſſion of me already, and ſeiz'd my ports. Death is in my face, I am the very picture of death, and images of death ſtand round about me. Therefore Eliphaz, why ſhould I not call to have my dayes ſummed up, that I may ſee the end and ſum of theſe troubles; Or, wherefore wouldſt thou ſtay my complaint againſt my life, or ſtop my deſire of death, by giving me hopes of many dayes, and of a flouriſhing eſtate in this world?

Plurima mortis imago.

That's his firſt argument, from the general condition of mankind. Now he proceeds to conſider ſomewhat more ſpecial in that condition.

Verſe 2. As a ſervant earneſtly deſireth the ſhadow, and as a hireling looketh for the reward of his work.

Verſe 3, So am I made to poſſeſs moneths of vanity, and wearisome nights are appointed to me.

As a ſervant earneſtly deſireth.] To deſire earneſtly, is but one word in the Original; it is ſo full of ſence, that we cannot empty it into any one word in our language. The Letter is, As a ſervant breaths after the ſhadow: And becauſe a man that hath an earneſt longing deſire for a thing, pants, breathes and gaſpes after it, therefore that word, which ſignifies to gape and draw in the air pantingly, ſignifies alſo to deſire, or to deſire earneſtly, As a ſervant earneſtly deſireth.

The ſhadow.] Some underſtand it of the night, when the ſervant comes to reſt himſelf after his labour all the day. Night is but a great ſhadow.

Secondly, We may take it for the ſhadow of the day: A ſervant that is heated in labour abroad in the open field, earneſtly deſires a ſhadow, to get under a tree or a buſh; a little to refreſh himſelf. Or,

Thirdly, The ſhadow may be taken for the houſe; to come into a mans houſe, or under a mans roof, is called a coming under his ſhadow, Gen. 19. 3. Therefore are they come under my ſhadow, ſaith Lot to the men of Sodom, that is under the covert of my roof.

The ſhadow is uſed often in Scripture to note protection and mercy; Shadows are ſubſtantial mercies, and the promiſe of a ſhadow is a real favour, Iſa. 4. 6. The Church hath a promiſe under this notion; There ſhall be a Tabernacle for a ſhadow in the day-time from the heat. Iſa. 25. 4. A refuge from the ſtorm, a ſhadow from the heat. And, Iſa. 32. 2. The Lord promiſes that he will be as the ſhadow of a great Rock in a weary Land unto his people. And David flies to this ſhadow for ſafety. Under the ſhadow of thy wings ſhall be my refuge, till theſe calamities be overpaſt, Pſal. 57. 1. So, Pſal. 17. 8. Pſal. 91. 1.

Umbra id ſignificat quod protegendo & cuſtodiendo obumbrat.

So that in theſe words, As a ſervant earneſtly deſireth the ſhadow, Job means that which is moſt refreſhing and deſirable by a ſervant: And in thoſe Eaſtern hot countries, ſhadows were very refreſhing and much deſired. Jacob reporting his labours in keeping Laban's ſheep, ſaith, In the day-time I was conſumed with heat, or parched with heat. Therefore a ſervant hath reaſon to deſire the ſhadow.

And as an hireling looketh for the reward of his work.

There are two things which a ſervant or an hireling deſires much, reſt and reward; ſhadow and pay. When he is hot, the ſhadow refreſhes him: and when he is hungry, his pay refreſhes him; while his hand is at work in the day, his heart is upon the wages he ſhall receive at night. Hence the Lord in compaſſion to ſervants, made a gracious proviſion for them by a Law, Deut. 24. 14, 15. Thou ſhalt not oppreſs an hired ſervant, &c. at his day thou ſhalt give him his hire, neither ſhall the Sun go down upon it, for he is poor and ſetteth his heart upon it, leſt he cry againſt thee to the Lord, and it be ſin unto thee.

Job puts the inſtance in both, As the hireling looks for the reward of his work, &c.

He looketh.] The word ſignifieth to expect a thing with an eye toward it; what we earneſtly expect, our eyes move after it. David, in his waiting upon God, ſaith, Mine eyes are towards thee; I lift mine eyes and my heart to God; the ſame word is here uſed, The hireling looks.

For the reward of his work.

So we tranſlate it. The Hebrew is, He looks for his work: Why? He had work before, he had his work all day long, his Maſter ſhewed him his work, he needed not look for that; then his work is the reward of his work. In the Scripture, the word work ſignifies three things.

Firſt, The very act of labour.

Secondly, The effect of labour, the thing wrought, or that which is the product of labour. When a man hath laboured, what he laboured about is viſible, and that we call his work, as well as the act of his labour.

Thirdly, The reward or the wages which a man receives for his labour, Lev. 19. 13. We read a plain Text for it. The wages of him that is hired ſhall not abide with thee all night, until the morning. The Hebrew is, The work of him that is hired ſhall not abide with thee. So, Pſal. 109. 20. Let this be the reward of mine adverſaries from the Lord; The Hebrew is, Let this be the work of mine adverſaries from the Lord. And, Jer. 22. 13. We have the word in the ſame ſence, work for wages. As it is uſual to put prayer for the thing prayed for, a petition for the thing petitioned, or for the thing obtained by petition; The Lord hath given me my petition (ſaith Hannah, 1 Sam. 1. 27.) That is, the child for whom I did petition. It is uſual alſo in Scripture, to put ſin for the puniſhment or reward of ſin, Opus eſt fructus ſeu merces operis, quæ pro labore datur, per Metonymiam.

Geneſ. 4. 13. My ſin is greater, that is, my puniſhment is greater then I can bear. And the Maſter is forbid to detain the ſervants wages, leaſt it be ſin to him, Deut. 24. 15. That is, leaſt he be puniſhed for detaining it. Thus alſo it is uſual to put the work for the reward of the work, The hireling expects his work, that is, he earneſtly looks that he ſhall have wages in the evening for his work. Now (ſaith Job) as theſe wait, the ſervant and the hireling, for the ſhadow in the day, and for their wages at night; ſo I am made to poſſeſs months of vanity, &c.

I ſhall Note a point or two in paſſage from the words, as they contain a general truth, before I examine them in this application.

Take the words as they are a direct propoſition, A ſervant deſires the ſhadow, and an hireling looks for the reward of his work. Hence obſerve,

First, The condition of a ſervant is a very laborious and weariſom condition.

He longs for ſome reſt, he earneſtly deſires the ſhadow. Obſerve,

Secondly, The ſervant muſt have a reward.

There's all the reaſon in the world he ſhould. Obſerve,

Thirdly, The hireling hath earneſt thoughts upon his reward.

His reward is in his eye. It is the reaſon given, why the wages of the hired ſervant ſhould not be with-held, Deut. 24. 15. The Lord the righteous judge between Maſters and Servants, gives this account or ground of his Law, Thou ſhalt not detain his wages, for he ſetteth his heart upon it; Poor man he hath been working all day, and he hath had his heart upon his wages; the hopes of that gave him ſome relief and eaſe in going through his hard task and ſervice, therefore thou ſhalt not keep it from him, his heart is ſet upon it.

But it may be queſtioned: is not this a ſin in the ſervant, to ſet his heart upon his wages? A charge is given, Pſal. 62. v. 10. If riches increaſe, ſet not your hearts upon them; and is it approveable in a ſervant, to ſet his heart upon his wages or encreaſe?

There is a great difference (and it is worthy our notice) between thoſe two Scriptures. The word in Deutronomy, (ſpeaking of the poor ſervant) notes the lifting up of the Soul: He hath lifted up his ſoul unto it, ſo we read in the margin of our Bibles; But in the Pſalm (where he ſpeaks of the covetous rich man) the word imports, the letting down or ſetling of his heart upon it. A poor man hath but a little, and his wages (it may be) is above him, his wages (poſſibly) is more then he is worth, therefore he lifteth up his mind to it, as a mercy and a bleſſing from God, for the relief of himſelf and family; take heed (ſaith the Lord) that thou detain not his wages; for the poor man lifteth up his ſoul to it, as a thing he reacheth upward for; It is very dangerous to take that out of the hands of a man, which he is taking (as it were) out of the hand of God. But a rich man, who hath aboundance, lets his heart down, he croucheth and broodeth upon the creature. A godly poor man, looks up to his reward, and fetches his bread from Heaven; a covetous rich man looks down to his reward, and takes his bread from the Earth; a godly man is above all earthly things, and yet he lifts up his mind to receive them. A meer natural man is below earthly things, and yet he deſcends that he may receive them: The things which both receive, are the ſame, but the conveiance and derivation differ alwayes, as much as Heaven and Earth, ſometimes as much as Heaven and Hell. But to the Text. Obſerve, Laſtly, That, it is the property of an hireling (take it ſtrictly) to eye his reward.

This is the deſcription of an hireling, he is one who looks to his reward, whatſoever he doth to his work. Chriſt, Joh. 10. 13. confirms this character, The hireling fleeth, becauſe he is an hireling, and careth not for the ſheep; he cares much for the fleece, and for the fleſh, but he cares little, if at all for the ſheep; that is, how or whether the ſheep be fed and proſper. He that works for Chriſt, finds his reward in his work, and his eye is upon his work, as a reward, as well as upon the reward of his work; he is pleaſed as much, yea far more with his buſineſs, then he is with his wages: Did he not take content, and pay himſelf in this, that he is in a work acceptable to Chriſt; he could take no content, he could not be pleaſed at all, that he is in a work profitable to himſelf.

Now Job applies this general, about the nature of a ſervant and an hireling, to his own condition.

So I am made to poſſeſs months of vanity, and weariſom nights are appointed to me.

Similitudo diſſimilis.

So am I made.] It looks like a ſtrange, and a very unlikely ſimilitude; As a ſervant deſireth the ſhadow, ſo am I made to poſſeſs months of vanity: Therefore to clear it, we muſt remember, that this is a ſimilitude with a diſſimilitude: The ſimilitude is conceal'd, the diſſimilitude is expreſt; we may make it out thus, As a ſervant deſireth the ſhadow, and an hireling looketh for the reward of his work; ſo I, who am labouring in the heat of theſe afflictions, do earneſtly deſire a ſhadow; and I who am at work as an hireling, would have a reward; that is, I would ſee the end and iſſue of theſe troubles: But (here's the diſſimilitude) I am made to poſſeſs months of vanity, and weariſom nights are appointed to me; as if Job had ſaid, When the ſervant hath wrought all day, and is weary, he can lie down at night quietly and reſt himſelf; but alas! the night is as troubleſom, and as laborious to me as the day; When the hireling hath laboured and taken pains, he receives his reward at evening; but my wages are months of vanity, and my rewards are nights of trouble; I am paid in ill coyn, months of vanity, wearyſom nights are appointed for the reward of weary dayes. Thus the ſence is plain.

I am made [to poſſeſs.] The word ſignifies poſſeſſing by inheritance and deſcent. Two things are implied in that phraſe:

First, That troubles and afflictions belong to us by right, they are poſſeſt as an inheritance, which we receive from our Parents and Progenitors. I am made to poſſeſs. And

Secondly, It notes the continuance of troubles upon us: We have not only an ill lodging for a while, or we ſtay not with trouble, as travellers for a night, but we poſſeſs and inherit them as our own. Job's troubles, were not to him as an hired houſe, or a lodging, but as an inheritance wherein he was ſetled and eſtated: I am made to poſſeſs months of vanity; as if he had ſaid, you ſee what the patrimony and inheritance is which deſcends to me: I have waited for comfort, and have been in expectation of good dayes, but I poſſeſs months of vanity, that's all I have found and felt, as the iſſue of my labours.

Months of vanity.] Some read, Empty Moons (the word bears that ſence) as if Job's Moon were alwayes in the wane, or ever in the Eclipſe. The word ſignifies any kind of vanity, whether in word or in deed, perſonal vanity, or real vanity, falſhood or deceit, any thing that is trivial or light. Such months have I appointed to me.

But ſome may ſay, Months of vanity? Why doth Job complain of this? Hath any man in the world any other then months of vanity? Why then doth Job take it ſo ill, that he poſſeſſeth months of vanity, when no other fall to the lot or poſſeſſion of any man? David, Pſalm 39. 5. affirms, that man at his beſt eſtate is altogether vanity; what reaſon then hath Job to complain of months of vanity in his worſt eſtate? It was with him as well as with any of his neighbours, we know not who hath any other then months of vanity. The Preacher makes this the preface of his Sermon, Eccleſ. 1. 2. Vanity of vanities (ſaith the Preacher) vanity of vanities, all is vanity.

I anſwer, It is true, our whole life is a life of vanity; but yet there is more vanity in ſome mans life, or in ſome part of the ſame mans life then in another. Vanity is gradual. There is a vain, and a vainer vanity, and there is the vaineſt vanity. Months of vanity may be underſtood two wayes.

Inanis & vacua, quia erat vacua hominibus, jumentis & plantis.

First, Months of vanity, that is, months empty of comfort, fruitleſs months, months bringing me no refreſhing or content. As Gen. 1. 2. it is ſaid, The earth was without form and void: void, that is, it had neither man, nor beaſt, nor plant upon it; there was nothing but emptineſs upon the face of the earth, as it lay in that rude maſs; ſo Job ſaith here, mine are months of vanity, void months, that is, months not filled up with any comfort, with any refreſhing, with any joy, with any light or content; all theſe which are as the filling up of our months, and the beauty of time, are taken away from me; mine are empty months, my dayes are all Dog-dayes, or at beſt, the dayes in the Kalendar of my life are blanks.

Secondly, Months of vanity, becauſe he had not what he expected, or the iſſue which he waited for: Job expreſſes himſelf in a poſture of waiting, by the former ſimilitudes; The hireling looks for his wages, and I look for ſomewhat, but it is in vain I cannot enjoy it. So the word is uſed, Pſal. 78. 33. where the Pſalmiſt deſcribes the ſinful diſtempers of the people of Iſrael, and Gods anger towards them; They believed not his word, &c. What then? Therefore their dayes did he conſume in vanity, and their years in trouble. The dayes of all men are conſumed in vanity, as we ſaid before; but here was ſomewhat more judicial and penal; it is a ſore judgment to conſume our dayes in vanity, as that people did; As ſoon as they came out of Egypt, they were in a fair way to Canaan; but God leads them about by the wilderneſs, and there lets them wander out forty years, expecting and waiting for Canaan, but no Canaan came, or they came not to Canaan; this was the ſpending of their years in vanity, becauſe they were travelling to their deſired reſt, but enjoyed it not; they went toyling up and down the wilderneſs, as in a maze, finding no way out, but at the door of the grave; their carkaſſes fell in the wilderneſs; thus their dayes were conſumed in vanity. So ſaith Job, I poſſeſs months of vanity, that is, months wherein I am tyred out in continual troubles, and they are fruitleſs, iſſuleſs troubles; I have no ſenſible benefit by them, I ſee no end of them, my hopes are fruſtrate, and put far off from me. And are not theſe months of vanity? Obſerve hence,

Vacuum tempus eſt, quod nullam nobis affert utilitatem.

Firſt, Troubles will prevail upon us, whether we will or no.

I am made to poſſeſs, &c. As if Job had ſaid, I would fain have got over theſe months of vanity, or worn them out, but whether I will or no, I am made to poſſeſs them. The bands of affliction are too ſtrong for the creature to break: when the Lord ſends trouble, he will make a man poſſeſs it, how diſpleaſing ſoever it is; It is beſt for us to ſubmit, where we cannot remedy, and to yield quietly to that which we cannot avoid. Obſerve, Secondly, Troubles come to us, as our natural inheritance.

I am made to poſſeſs months of vanity, they are as mine inheritance, and I would wave my right but I cannot. There are two parts of our natural patrimony, ſin and ſorrow; both theſe deſcend to us, and we are made to poſſeſs them, till we come to our purchaſed inheritance, reſerved in Heaven for us. Obſerve, Thirdly, That, though every mans life have vanity in it, yet ſome men have more.

That is, more troubles and trials, more diſquietments and diſappointments. The common condition of all men, in their beſt eſtate is, that they are altogether vanity; but the vanity of ſome men is more vain, their afflictions more afflicting, their troubles more troubleſom, and their ſickneſs more ſick then their brethren. Job ſpeaks as if he had ſpoiled all the world of this inheritance, and had engroſs'd all vanity to himſelf; I am made to poſſeſs months of vanity: That vanity which is the portion of all men, ſeems ſometimes to be the portion of one man alone. I am the man that hath ſeen affliction, ſaith the Prophet Jeremiah, Lam. 3. 1. why, is that ſuch a ſtrange ſight, who hath not ſeen affliction? True, but Jeremiah had ſeen more then moſt, and therefore he ſpeaks, as if he only had ſeen affliction, I am the man.

And weariſom nights are appointed to me.

Weariſom nights.] Or nights of labour and wearineſs; at if Job had ſaid, though the ſervant be wearied all day, yet the night is not weariſom to him, he reſts at night, but I am wearied in the day, and wearied in the night: weariſom nights are appointed to me; the night which is given unto others for reſt, is meaſured out to me in watchings and in ſorrows. And this is a great aggravation of his ſad condition; It is ſaid before, that he had moneths of vanity, yet it might be ſuppoſed his nights were comfortable intervals of refreſhing: as a man may ſay, I have had ſeven years of hard labour, yet it is ſuppoſed he reſted all the nights of thoſe years; ſo when Job ſaith, I had months of vanity, it might be conceived, he had at leaſt ſometimes a good night; therefore he adds weariſom nights are appointed to me, I ſpeak not after the rate of ordinary men, whoſe months labor, is a month of dayes, my labouring months include the night alſo.

Noctes plenæ vigiliis & anxietatibus. Noctes laboris, i. e. laborioſas, Menſes habeo omni ſolatio vacuos, ut nec in noctibus quidem liceat mihi quieſcere. Alluſio ad ſervi & mercenarii nocturnam quietem. Pined.

A ſtrong healthy man goeth forth to his labour and to his work, until the evening, Pſal. 104. 23. But a ſick, weak man, goeth forth to his labour in the evening. The night is moſt laborious to ſick men, then they revolve their troubles, and being free from viſits of friends, they viſit their own afflictions, and ſtudy their own diſtempers freely.

Nox ægris maximè infeſta eſt, toti ſunt in cogitandis malis ſuis.

Are appointed to me.] The Hebrew is, are numbred, or reckoned to me; as if he ſhould ſay, God ſets down my nights by tale, or by ſcores; It is an Arithmitical word, it notes to number by art and skill: And ſome obſerve, that it notes Arithmetick in that operation of it, which we call Subſtraction or Subduction; not that which we call Addition or Multiplication. Weariſom nights are numbred or appointed to me, in a kind of Subſtraction, that is, God takes or ſubſtracts the nights out of the months, and makes them as weariſom and as troubleſom to me, as the dayes are. And becauſe thoſe things which are thus numbred by way of ſeparation or ſubſtraction, are uſually appointed or appropriated to ſome ſpecial uſe, therefore the word is well tranſlated, to appoint or conſtitute: if you ſee a man ſeparate or ſubſtract one thing from another, it is an argument that he hath a reaſon for what he doth, and intends it to ſome extraordinary purpoſe: The word is ſo taken here, to note a ſpecial end to which theſe nights, being ſubſtracted from the reſt of his time, were appointed, namely, they were to be as Job's pay and reward; He was troubled all day, and if he looked for his reward or comfort in the evening, this was given him, A night as weariſom as his day, or he had an ill nights reſt given for his hard dayes labour. The Prophet gives us the word in ſuch a ſence, Iſa. 56. 11, 12. He tells the Jews their ſin in the former words, Ye furniſh a drink-offering to that number; Some underſtand his meaning to be a reproof of that wicked and ſuperſtitious cuſtom, wherein the Jews (it ſeems) did ſymbolize with the Heathens, who were wont to drink to their Idols by number, to ſuch an Idol they would drink ſo many cups, and that was called a drink-offering to that number; Now ſaith God, becauſe you have done thus, namely, furniſhed a drink-offering to that number, therefore I will number you to the ſword, or therefore I will appoint you to the ſword; I will ſubſtract and take you out, and you ſhall be the men ſeparated for the ſword to deal with and deſtroy; I will number you to the ſword, that ſhall drink your blood, becauſe you have been ſo accurate in wickedneſs, to drink by number. The word is applied to Chriſt (Iſa. 53. 12.) He was numbred amongſt the tranſgreſſors; that is, he was taken aſide, and ſeparated from the innocent, and ranked amongſt tranſgreſſors; which notes him appointed, or ſet apart to that end, that ſo he might be the Saviour of tranſgreſſors, and a deliverer of the wicked from their ſins. In Daniel 1. v. 10. when thoſe children of the Hebrews, deſired to be ſpared from eating the Kings diet, I dare not do it, ſaith the Steward, for I fear my Lord the King, who hath appointed your meat and your drink; as if it ſhould be ſaid, he hath numbred out to you ſo many diſhes of meat, he hath numbred out to you ſo many flagons of wine; he hath ſubſtracted ſuch a proportion, and appointed it to you, and I dare not alter it. And in the Propheſie of Jonah, chap. 1. verſ. 17. it is ſaid, God prepared a great fiſh to ſwallow up Jonah, ſo we tranſlate: the Hebrew is, God numbered a great fiſh to ſwallow up Jonah; That is, God did ſeparate or ſubſtract a fiſh from all the reſt of the fiſhes of the Sea, for that end and purpoſe to ſwallow up Jonah. From all which inſtances it is clear, that the word notes an appointment, by way of deſign, or the draw-drawing of a thing to ſome ſpecial uſe and ſervice. When a Party is drawn out of the body of an Army, they are numbred or appointed to ſome deſign; ſuch a meaning is in Job's words, theſe nights are ſubſtracted or drawn out, and then appointed to be my reward and wages. The ſum of all is, Job comparing his eſtate with that of hirelings, ſervants and ſouldiers, finds his far worſe then theirs, they have reſt in the night, at leaſt ſome nights they reſt, but he had none. Obſerve here the law of nature, Night is the time of reſt.

Sleep is the parentheſis of our troubles: it puts a ſtop to our ſorrows, and gives intermiſſion to our labours. Obſerve,

Secondly, That the troubles of every night, and how many troubleſom nights any one ſhall have, are determined by God himſelf.

I have wearisom nights (ſaith Job) but they come not by accident, they are appointed and exactly numbred to me. It is matter of great comfort, to remember that God is thus accurate about our ſorrows: He gives his people a cup of ſorrow, and he appointeth how many drops ſhall be in their cup, all the world cannot put in one drop beyond his meaſure: He appointeth out our trouble for the kind, and for the degree, and for the time and continuance of it; how many weariſom nights, how long every night ſhall be, are all calculated and ſet down in the Kalender of his heavenly counſels.

I ſhall add but a word of the next verſe, which is only the deſcription of a weariſom night: Job having ſaid, that weariſom nights were appointed or numbred out to him: now reſolves us what he means by a weariſom night, or when he accounts a night weariſom.

Verſ. 4. When I lie down, I ſay when ſhall I ariſe, and the night be gone? And I am full of toſſings too and fro, unto the dawning of the day.

This is a weariſom night, and it is a moſt exact deſcription of a weariſom night; when a man as ſoon as he goes to bed, deſires to riſe; as ſoon as it is night enquires for day; this man hath a weary time of it.

When ſhall I ariſe, and the night be gone?] Maſter Broughton tranſlates, the duskie time be gone? The word ſignifies evening, and the verb, to mingle or mix; becauſe the evening is a time wherein there is a mixture (as it were) of light and darkneſs. Evening, is light and darkneſs mingled, hence we call it twilight: And though all the night be (in this ſence) mixed, becauſe in nature there is no pure darkneſs, yet in the evening this mixture is more diſcernable; therefore it is rather appliable to the former part of the night, becauſe afterward the light is more fully overcome and conquered.

When ſhall the night be gone?] The Hebrew is, When ſhall the night be meaſured out? There is an elegancy in that; it ſignifies to meaſure a thing, as we meaſure cloth by a yard, or as ground is meaſured by a rod or pole; it ſignifies likewiſe to meaſure time, to tell, count and obſerve the hours: As if Job had ſaid of himſelf (as many times ſick men do) I lie a bed all the night and tell the clock. The clock is the meaſure of the night: now, ſaith he, when ſhall the night be meaſured out? As if he had (with ſorrow) counted the tedious hours, oh when will this time be meaſured out! What a long night is this! As come to a ſick man in a morning, and you ſhall have him ſay, What a long tedious night was this? As long as two or three nights.

He adds yet another part of the deſcription, I am full of toſſings too and fro unto the dawning of the day. He lay meaſuring the night, and was unquiet all the while, full of toſſings too and fro. The word ſignifies to be filled with meat and drink; I have my fill of troubles, my fill of torture, I have unquietneſs enough, as much as I can hold of ſorrow.

נדדים à radice נדד motus, remotus, elongatus. Celerem agitationem denotat. Saturatus ſum vagis cogitationibus. Rab. Lev.

Toſſings too and fro.] The word is underſtood by ſome of inward toſſings. I am full of toſſings too and fro, that is, I have great agitations in my heart, my thoughts are very unſetled. One of the Rabins to that ſence, I am full of wandring thoughts; thoughts will toſs up and down, forward and backward; a mans thoughts will toſs him from one end of the world unto the other, while he is a priſoner in his bed: They toſs him from buſineſs to buſineſs, while he is unfit for any buſineſs. A ſick man is full of inward toſſings, of wandring thoughts, his thoughts run faſteſt, when himſelf is bed-rid, or confin'd to his bed; all the night is ſpent in the travel of his mind, while his body cannot ſtir a foot.

Ægrotantes mutationibus ut remediis utuntur. Sen.

But rather underſtand it of corporal toſſings. A ſick man full of pain removes from one ſide of his bed to another, from one corner to another, ſometimes from the head of the bed to the foot. The Moraliſt expreſſes it excellently, Sick men uſe changes as if they were medicines, they hope by changing their place to looſe their pain by the way, I am full of toſſings too and fro.

Till the dawning of the day.] Till the day break, that is, the whole night through. Some underſtand this for the evening, the word ſignifies both the evening and the morning. And theſe interpret this latter part of the verſe for his troubles in the day, having complained before that weariſom nights were appointed to him, When I lie down, I ſay, when will the night be gone? There is an end of the night; but when the night is gone, have I any eaſe in the day? No, I am full of toſſings too and fro until the evening; and ſo it is an amplification of his troubles in regard of both parts of the natural day, light and darkneſs. But we may more properly keep it to the deſcription of a weariſom night, and that word which may note the evening is here to be appropriated to the dawning of the day, when darkneſs begins to depart, and give way to the prevailing light.

This was a great aggravation of the afflictions of this holy man, he had no reſt, no eaſe, in any part of the night, he could not ſo much as get a nap towards morning.

Malorum Domitrices.

The night is the time of our truce with troubles, though a man be in conflicts with buſineſs all day long, yet there is a ceſſation at night, all is laid by till morning. Hence the night and ſleep are well called The Conquerors of evil, and Victors over ſorrow; becauſe in the night a man gets rid of them. Chriſt ſaith, Math. 6. ult. Sufficient for the day is the evil thereof: if there be evil enough in the day, who is able to ſtand before the evils of day and night too? When our very ſleep becomes our fight, what can fleſh and blood do any more? Sleep is a medicine for all diſeaſes, and Phyſitians often give a ſleepy potion for a medicine, that the body may have a little refreſhing, after it hath been worn and tired out with a wakeful ſickneſs.

Obſerve from the Text, as it is the deſcription of a ſick man.

That a man in pain looks upon every time as better to him then the preſent time.

When I lie down, I ſay, when ſhall I ariſe? I hope it will be better with me anon, I hope the day will be better to me then the night: and when the day comes, then he wiſheth for night, hoping the night will be better then the day. An afflicted troubleſom time is ſo deſcribed, Deut. 28. 67. In the morning thou ſhalt ſay, would God it were even; and at even thou ſhalt ſay, would God it were Morning: They ſhall think any thing, or time to come better to them then the preſent; therefore when they had night, they call'd for day; and when they had day, they ſent a meſſenger for the night; ever thinking the next change of time would be-friend them with a change in their condition. Obſerve, Secondly, Change of place giveth no eaſe of pain.

Cœlum non animam mutat, qui trans mare currit.

I am full of toſſings too and fro to the dawning of the day; he had changed, and changed, and changed, but could not change his pain for eaſe, that continued ſtill. Some travel to other Countries to mend their eſtates. Some go from Kingdom to Kingdom to eaſe their minds, and ſome to better their manners; but as he that runs to another country changes his air, but not his heart, alters place, but not his manners, the ſame is the ſame ſtill: So it brings no health to the ſick, no eaſe to the pained to change place.

As a man ſin-ſick, before he comes to reſt and healing in Chriſt, toſſes from place to place, from this duty to that duty, from this means to that means, to get a little eaſe for his wounded ſpirit and aking conſcience; he hopeth this will do him good, and that will do him good, but all in vain. And as worldly men hope their pleaſures and their riches will do them good, and ſo they toſs from one pleaſure to another, from creature to creature; but all failes, there is no ſettlement, no compoſedneſs, no peace, no redreſs till the ſoul fixes upon Chriſt. So in bodily pains, there is no eaſe, no refreſhing but in God: it is not this or that place of the bed, it is not the bed or the couch, it is not the Countrey or the City, a ſharp or a temperate air can do it, God can alone, and he can command any creature to do it.

You that have moneths of comfort, and to whom refreſhing nights are appointed, bleſs God; it is not your bed that gives you reſt, but his bleſſing.

Remember this deſcription of a ſick man; preſent the conditions of a ſick man to your thoughts, think what a weariſome thing it is to lie all night telling the clock, calling for the day, and toſſing to and fro, praiſe God for quiet nights, and pity thoſe to whom weariſome nights are appointed.

VERS. 5, 6, 7, 8.

My fleſh is cloathed with worms and clods of duſt, my skin is broken, and become loathſome.

My dayes are ſwifter than a weavers ſhuttle, and are ſpent without hope.

O remember that my life is wind, mine eye ſhall no more ſée good.

The eye of him that hath ſéen me, ſhall ſée me no more; thine eyes are upon me, and I am not.

WE have ſeen Job in this Chapter confirming his former deſires of death.

First, From the general condition of mankind, v. 1.

Secondly, From the condition of ſome particular men, v. 2.

And Thirdly, From his own preſent condition, which he draws forth in verſ. 3, 4, 5, 6.

The third and fourth verſes have been already opened.

In this fifth, he gives us a farther deſcription of himſelf, and ſuch a one, as might well aſſure us, that his reſtleſs nights were not without reaſon; My fleſh is cloathed, &c. As if he had ſaid, if you think I am thus unquiet without cauſe, then behold my body, look upon me, and ſee what a pitiful ſpectacle I am, My fleſh is cloathed with worms, my skin is broken and become loathſome.

Theſe words give us Job's picture; here is his delineation and pourtraicture as he was under the hand of God. They who would take Job's picture, as in the day of his afflictions, muſt draw him thus, A man cloathed with worms and clods of duſt; there's his garment; his skin ſcabby and diſcoloured, full of chaps and running ſores, angry biles and enflamed ulcers, his poſture, lying on the ground, ſcraping himſelf with a potſherd.

My fleſh is cloathed with worms.

My fleſh.] That is, my Body, by a Synechdoche; and the word which we tranſlate fleſh, ſprings from a root, or hath near relation to it, which ſignifies to bring and publiſh good tidings or welcome news; and therefore the Goſpel is expreſt by it (Evangelium) is the ſame in Latin, or, (εὐαγγέλιον) in Greek with this in the Hebrew; and ſome Criticks give the reaſon why fleſh is expreſt by this word, which ſignifies to publiſh or bring good tidings, becauſe there ſhould be a taking of fleſh, or making of fleſh, namely the Incarnation of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, which ſhould be the beſt tidings, and the moſt joyful news that ever the world heard of.

Is cloathed with worms.] In the firſt Chapter of this Book, at ver. 21. Job deſcribes himſelf thus, Naked came I out of my mother's womb, and naked ſhall I return; but now it ſeems Job had got cloathing, and being ready to lie down in the grave, he had a veſture put upon him; now (it ſeems) Job ſhould not go naked out of the world. for he ſaith, My fleſh is cloathed; but what is this cloathing? My fleſh is cloathed with worms and clods of duſt, that is a ſuit of cloaths very fit and ſuitable for the grave, bur it is uſually put on in the grave. Job is in his grave-cloaths before he dies; or he ſpeaks this to ſhew that he accounted himſelf dead while he lived, or as Heman mourns (Pſal. 88.) Free among the dead; a member of that Corporation, a brother of that Society already. For he was now in that Habit or Livery; A Gown of worms, ſet or embroider'ed with clods of duſt.

Quavis re veſtiri dicimur, cujus acceſſione vel dedecoramur, vel ornamur.

My fleſh is cloathed with worms.] It is frequent in Scripture, when the holy Ghoſt would heighten the ſence of what we are and enjoy, or would note the abundance of a thing, or how man is adorned, or defiled with it all over, then to expreſs it under the notion of cloathing; God himſelf is expreſt cloathed with Majeſty, becauſe he is Majeſty all over, and there is nothing but glory upon him: God is alſo deſcribed cloathed with judgment and with juſtice; why? Becauſe theſe are his honour and his ornament, he is juſtice and judgment all over; we find Job in the twenty ninth of this Book, at verſe 14. ſpeaking thus of himſelf in his ſtate of Magiſtracy. I put on righteouſneſs, and it cloathed me, my judgment was as a Robe and a Diadem; that is, I was full of righteouſneſs, I was altogether righteous in diſpenſing rewards and puniſhments, in exerciſing my power among the people. To be cloathed with humility, to be cloathed with the Spirit, to be cloathed with Chriſt, are phraſes of the ſame importance. So on the other hand, to be cloathed with pride, with ſhame, with diſhonour; Let mine enemies (ſaith David) be cloathed with ſhame, Pſal. 109. 29. Let them be cloathed with diſhonour, Pſal. 35. 26. that is, let them be aſhamed and diſhonoured all over, or, exceedingly aſhamed or diſhonoured, And ſo a great deſolation is called a cloathing with deſolation, Ezech. 7. 27. That which ſtrips a man naked is in this ſence called his cloathing, cloathed with deſolation.

Thus we are to underſtand Job, when he ſaith, That his fleſh was cloathed with worms; his meaning is, he had many worms crawling upon his fleſh; or lying within his fleſh, and ſo were as a lining to his upper garment of nature. Theſe worms ſpread themſelves all over him, as a filthy and loathſome garment covering his whole body.

And beſides this figure, Job ſpake properly, while he was thus full of ſores and botches and biles, to ſay, he was cloathed with worms; worms are proper to ſores; many ſores breed worms, and worms are a diſeaſe in the fleſh, as well as within the bowels, and ſuch diſeaſes are accounted the fouleſt and filthieſt diſeaſes of all other: Such was Job's, his ſores and biles corrupted and bred worms, which made him an abhorring to himſelf. Putrefaction is the ſoil out of which worms grow. Rotten fleſh breeds worms, and a rotten Conſcience breeds a worm, Iſa. 66. 24. Their worm ſhall not die. Why doth the holy Ghoſt ſay of thoſe men who were never waſhed, nor healed of their ſin-ſores, of their ſoul-ſickneſſes and pollutions, that when they die, they have a worm that dieth not? It is in alluſion to this, becauſe as a corrupt body, or corrupt putrid fleſh, breeds noiſome worms, ſo a corrupt Conſcience, a ſoul full of filthineſs and uncleanneſs, which was never waſhed or healed in the fountain of the blood of Chriſt, this Soul, this Conſcience breeds worms, even that gnawing worm which ſhall live with it, feed upon it, and cloath it for ever. Both the natural and the ſpiritull worm ariſe from rottenneſs, and derive their pedigree from ſores, ſickneſſes and putrefaction.

And clods of duſt.] Worms and clods of duſt. Here are ſtrange materials, courſe ſtuff for Job's cloathing, clods of duſt. Some conceive that Job ſate in the duſt, and ſo the duſt gathered about him as a garment. Others, that theſe clods of duſt were the ſcrapings of his ſores; for the word ſignifies the filings of any metal, or the ſcrapings of an unclean thing. It is ſaid expreſly in the ſecond Chapter, that he took a potſherd to ſcrape himſelf; thoſe clods of filthy duſt, or ſcales ſcaped from his putrifying ſores, theſe with the crawling worms bred in them, covered his whole body like a garment. and therefore he complains, I am cloathed with worms and clods of duſt.

You ſee what his garment was (to carry on the alluſion) his skin, upon which this garment was put: My skin (ſaith he) is broken, and become loathſome. The skin is the immediate garment of the fleſh, his ſickneſs had worn out his skin, he had many holes and rents in that garment, which needed mending, and it was all over ſo filthy, that it needed waſhing: My fleſh is broken and become loathſome. Sores break the skin; and defile the skin; Job's skin was ſo broken and chapt, ſo defiled and filthy, that he was loathſom to all beholders, and to himſelf.

We may hence learn what our own bodies are. The Apoſtle (Phil. 3. 21.) calls the body a vile body; not that the work of God was vile: The work of God was noble and honourable in all he wrought, eſpecially in that Maſter-piece of it, the fabrick of mans body; but as the body is come out of the hands of ſin, ſo it is a vile body, that is, it is a body ſubject to corruption, and will quickly corrupt, be vile and loathſome, 1 Cor. 15. 53. This corruptible muſt put on incorruption. The body of man is but one remove from worms and corruption, chap. 17. 4. I have ſaid to corruption, thou art my Father, and to the worm, thou art my Mother. We ſhall quickly bear the image of our parents, worms and corruption.

Then be not proud of your bodies, nor of your beauties; they who are now the faireſt and goodlieſt to look upon, may quickly have a broken and a loathſome skin; a diſeaſe, one fit of ſickneſs will ſpoil all thy beauty, deface and blemiſh thy excellent feature; and if a diſeaſe doth not, old age will: time will draw furrows in thy face, and make wrinkles in thy brow. Strength and beauty of body are no matches for time. All things were made in time, and time will mar all things, So long as generation continues, corruption muſt.

Again, Take heed of pride in cloathing. The two externals, of which man is moſt ſubject to be proud, are beauty and apparel. Cloaths are a flag of vanity, and pride ſits upon the skirts. But remember how fine ſoever your cloathing is this day and hour, God can put you on another ſuit before to morrow, We ſee what change of apparel Job had, a godly man, an humble man. That which God did to try the grace of one, he can quickly do to puniſh and chaſtiſe the ſin of another; he can quickly put you on ſuch cloathing, as you ſhall have little cauſe to be proud of. He can make you wear cloaths of worms and clods of duſt.

And if we conſider it, we have little reaſon to be proud of our cloaths; for if we follow the beſt of them to their original, they will be found to be but a cloathing of worms, and clods of duſt: what are ſilks, ſattins and velvets, but the iſſue of worms? And what is your gold and ſilver, what your pearls and precious ſtones? are they any thing (if you will reſolve them into their principles) but clods of duſt? They are indeed better concocted by the heat of the Sun, refined and poliſhed by the art of man, but if you ſearch their pedigree, they alſo are but clods of duſt. In your moſt glorious array, you are but cloathed with duſt and worms, and if you be proud of ſuch cloathing, God can cloath you with worms and clods, not only of unrefined and unpoliſhed, but of putrified and filthy duſt.

Thus we ſee the firſt thing, the picture or deſcription of Job's body; his friends at firſt ſight, might be convinced, that a body in ſuch a caſe, could take little reſt day or night. He carries on his complaint a degree further at the ſixth verſe.

Verſe 6. My dayes are ſwifter then a weavers ſhuttle, and are ſpent without hope.

Ὁ δὲ βίος μου ἐστιν ἐλαφρότερος λαλιᾶς.

My dayes are ſwifter.] She Seventy render it thus, My dayes are ſwifter or nimbler then a word or ſpeech. Nothing moves faſter, or paſſeth away more lightly then a word; a word is gone, and it is gone ſuddenly: Hence the ſimilitude is uſed proverbially, Pſal. 90. 9. We ſpend our dayes as a tale that is told, or, as a meditation (ſo ſome tranſlate) ſuddenly or ſwiftly; a diſcourſe is quickly over, whether it be a diſcourſe from the mouth, or in the mind; and of the two, the latter is far the more ſwift and nimble of foot, a diſcourſe in our thoughts outruns the Sun, as much as the Sun out-runs a ſnail; the thoughts of a man will travel the world over in a moment; he that now ſits in this place, may be at the worlds end in his thoughts, before I can ſpeak another word, So that the tranſlation or gloſs, by ſpeech or meditation, aggravates the ſence, and extends it to the higheſt.

But the word properly ſignifies (as we tranſlate) a weavers ſhuttle, which is an inſtrument of a very ſwift and ſudden motion. And the word which we render [Swifter] ſignifies that which is fitted for the ſwifteſt motion, any light thing, becauſe thoſe things which are light, move ſwifteſt; and we call a good runner a man light of foot, Hab. 1. 8. The horſes of the Chaldeans are thus deſcribed, Their horſes are ſwifter (or lighter of foot) then the Leopards; ſo, ſwifter or lighter then the weavers ſhuttle, which paſſeth the loom or web with ſuch ſpeed, that it is grown to a proverb, for all things which are quick and tranſient. The Latines expreſs it by that word which ſignifies a ray of the Sun, which is darted in a moment from one end of the heavens to another.

Radius textoris, dictum proverbiale, radio velocius.

But a queſtion riſes; Job in the third Chapter, and ſo in the fifth, complains that his life was ſo prolonged, and ſlow-paced, that it was very tedious to him; and in this verſe, by a repeated requeſt, he ſpurs and haſtens his life to his journeys end; he thought (it ſeems) his time not winged, but ſlow-footed; how is it then that in this place he complaineth of the ſwiftneſs of his dayes? My dayes are ſwifter then a weavers ſhuttle.

I anſwer in a word; By his dayes here, we are to underſtand his good dayes, his dayes of comfort and proſperity; the dayes of my peace and plenty are ſlipped away and gone, even as a weavers ſhuttle. But when he complains that his life is ſlow-footed, and requeſts that his dayes might move faſter, he means the dayes of ſorrow and trouble which had overtaken him in his journey; the former were too ſwift, and the latter too ſlow: It is as if he had ſaid, Alas, all my fair dayes of proſperity are gone, they are ſlipt away as a weavers ſhuttle, they are as a tale that is told, nothing remains of them but the remembrance, which is an addition to my ſorrow; but now I have dayes that ſeem long, very long, they hang upon my hands, I cannot get them off, my ſorrows clog my time, and make every hour ſeem a year. Hezekiah in his complaint upon his ſick bed, uſeth this alluſion, Mine age is departed and removed from me as a ſhepherds tent, I have cut off like a weaver my life, Iſa. 38. 12. As the weaver cuts of the thred when the web is finiſhed, ſo it is with me; I have cut off as a weaver, my life; not that Hezekiah was active in his own death, we are not to underſtand it ſo, for he prayed that God would ſpare him, and he ſpake this upon the promiſe of God to lengthen out his life, and to tie the thred of his dayes again, according to which the web was woven on for fifteen years more: but this ſpeech of Hezekiah, As a weaver I have cut off my life, is like that of the Apoſtle, I have finiſhed my courſe. He compares the paſſing of his life to a ſhuttle, and the concluſion of it to the cutting off of the thred; nights and dayes paſs this ſhuttle forward and backward, too and again; the night caſts it to the day, and the day to the night; between theſe two time quickly wears off the thred of life. The Heathen Poets had a fiction anſwering this alluſion of the Holy Ghoſt; they tell us a ſtory or a fiction rather, of three Siſters, whereof, the one held the wheel or the diſtaffe; the ſecond drew out the thred, and a third cut it off: In this they ſhadow the ſtate of mans life; our ordinary phraſe for living long, is ſpinning a long thred; and for dying, the cutting off the thred of life.

Tres Parcæ Clotho, Lacheſis, Atropos.

And they are ſpent without hope.] Some tranſlate, They are ſpent ſo, as that there is no hope left. The word which here we engliſh ſpent, ſignifies both conſumption and conſummation; or ſometimes in a good ſence, the end or perfecting of a thing; and ſometime in an ill ſence, the end or conſuming of a thing, Gen. 2. 1. So the heavens and the earth were finiſhed; it is this word, they were ended; God ended his work by way of perfection and conſummation, he made his work compleat. But here, and often in Scripture, it notes ending by way of conſumption, or as we tranſlate the ſpending of a thing, Jer. 14. 12. I will conſume (or, make an end of) them by the ſword: And, Exod. 33. 3. God commands Moſes, to go with the people into the wilderneſs, for (ſaith he) I will not go up in the midſt of them, leſt I conſume them in the way.

And to ſhew how deep an expence and conſumption of time was upon him, Job rells us, it had devoured and eaten up all his hope. It is worſe to have our hope ſpent, then to have our dayes ſpent; now (ſaith he) my dayes are ſpent; and that is not all, my hope is ſpent. Some tranſlate ſo, My dayes are ſpent, and I have want and penury of hope; as I have ſpent my dayes, ſo I have ſpent my hope. And his hopeleſneſs may refer two wayes; I have no hope, or, my hope is ſpent; firſt, in regard of long life; I ſee I am ſo afflicted with this diſeaſe, that there is no hope I ſhould hold out under it. Secondly, without hope, that is, without hope of being in a better condition, that is, of having my eſtate reſtored unto me again, if I ſhould have health reſtored, and a longer life continued. In both theſe ſences, as he ſaw the thred of his dayes cut off, ſo he ſaw the thred of his hope cut off; he was near death, and his hope was dead. My dayes are ſpent without hope, or, there is no hope remaining. This alſo is a negative to both parts of Eliphaz his promiſe, either of longer life, or of a better.

We may obſerve hence, firſt, a common truth (which I ſhall not inſiſt upon) about that precious commodity, a commodity more precious then the gold of Ophir, Time.

> All time is ſhort, and we have a very ſhort eſtate in time. Man is not maſter of one day, and a ſervant but of few dayes.

The holy Ghoſt gives us very many remembrances of this, which is an argument that we are very apt to forget it. Man is ſlow to take notice of the ſwiftneſs of time, and very dull in apprehending the ſpeed of his dayes. It is a wonder that ſuch a plain common doctrine ſhould be handled ſo often, and that the ho[illegible] Ghoſt ſhould, as it were, labour for ſimilitudes, and fetch in all things that are more then ordinarily tranſitory in nature, to teach us the tranſitorineſs of our condition: We meet with many in this book, all hinting at the ſudden inviſible motion of time: This is a point eaſie to be known, but very hard to be believed; every man aſſents to it, but few believe it. And ſurely the holy Ghoſt would not ſpend ſo many words about it, nor gather up ſo many illuſtrations of it from ſence, if it were not of much importance to our faith. We uſually ſlight the hearing of common principles, and a Sermon preacht upon this ſubject, the ſhortneſs of our lives, and the ſpeed of time, is judged a needleſs ſhortning of time; and the hour ſeems very long which runs out upon the ſpeed of time: we think it an eaſie doctrine, and a theme for Boyes: But the truth is, if the heart did well digeſt how few our dayes are, we ſhould have better dayes; and men would live holier, if they knew indeed their lives were no longer. Therefore though I only touch this ſubject, yet do ye dwell upon it, and ſtay long in your thoughts upon the ſhortneſs of your lives. Common truth neglected, cauſe a neglect of every truth. Had we more ſerious thoughts of heaven and hell, that theſe are, and what theſe are; that there is a God, and who he is; that there will be a judgment, and what it will be, we ſhould more profitably improve and trade our time and talents.

> Secondly note, Time paſſeth irrecoverably.

When the weavers ſhuttle is once out of his hand, 'tis gone preſently; there is no hope time paſt ſhould be recalled, or time in motion ſtopt: To conſider time under that notion, ſhould make us very good husbands of our time; or (as the Apoſtle adviſes) to redeem the time. Redemptions are made by purchaſe; to redeem a thing, is to buy it with a price; the price we redeem time with, is our labour and faithful travel. It is matter of mourning to conſider that ſo little care is taken in ſpending that, which when it is gone, we have no hope it can be reſtored to us again.

Thirdly, In that Job complained before that his life was ſo long, and now complaineth of the ſhortneſs or ſwiftneſs of his life, we may note,

> That, Man thinks good dayes end too ſoon, and that evil dayes ſtay too long, and will never have an end.

We love the company of good dayes, and are therefore ſorry when they depart. When the Diſciples were upon the Mount, and had ſuch a good day of it, how deſirous were they to have continued there, and ſorry they were the day was at an end? Maſter (ſaith Peter) it is good for us to be here. The ſudden paſſing of our comforts is our trouble. Time is alwayes of the ſame pace; no creature keeps his pace more evenly then time doth, it alwayes moves at the ſame rate, neither faſter nor ſlower; but man thinks this time ſhort, and that time long; this time ſpeedy, and that time ſlow, according to the ſeveral objects he meets with, and to the conditious wherein he is.

> Fourthly obſerve, That, Hope is the laſt refuge of the ſoul.

My dayes are ſpent without hope, my hope is ſpent too; if I had hope left, I had ſomewhat left, but my hope is gone. It is ſo in natural things, it is ſo in ſpiritual things. The Apoſtle, Heb. 6. tells us, that hope is the anchor of the ſoul, ſure and ſtedfaſt; while hope holds, comfort holds; and when hope is gone, all is gone.

> Laſtly obſerve, That, Sometime a godly mans hope may lie proſtrate.

My dayes (ſaith he) are cut off without hope: Job thought (as I have noted from ſome paſſages before) that his caſe was deſperate, his hope lay in the duſt, as well as his body or his honour. Every godly man is not an Abraham, of whom it is ſaid, Rom. 4. 18. That againſt hope he believed in hope: Nay Abraham is not alwayes Abraham; he that hath ſuch a ſtrong hope, hath it not alwayes, even his hope may ſometimes poſſibly be hopeleſs. There are weakneſſes in the ſtrongeſt, and imperfections may come upon thoſe who are moſt perfect, ebbings after the greateſt flowings, and declinings after the greateſt heights of graces and gracious actings. My dayes are ſpent without hope.

Job having thus complained of his condition, and aſſerted his own deſires of death, now turns from his friends, with whom he had diſcourſed all this while, and betakes himſelf to God, to ſpeak a while with him: The next words are generally underſtood, as an Apoſtrophe to God.

Verſe 7. O remember that my life is wind, mine eye ſhall no more ſee good.

O remember that my life is wind.] To remember, is not here taken ſtrictly, for to God all things are preſent. Remembrance is the calling of that to mind which is paſt; when the act of remembrance is applied to God in Scripture, it hath one of theſe three ſences.

Firſt, It notes a reſolution or ſetled purpoſe in God, to act his juſtice, or inflict puniſhment upon his enemies, Pſal. 137. 7. Remember, O Lord, the children of Edom: that is, Lord, bring forth that decree of thine, for the ruine and deſtruction of theſe bloody Edomites, who have been cruel againſt thy people.

Secondly, It ſignifies an affection in God, ready to help and relieve his own people, Pſal. 74. 2. Remember thy Congregation which thou didſt purchaſe of old, that is, do good to thy Congregation, bleſs thy Congregation.

Thirdly, To remember, imports an act of preſent conſideration; to remember, is fully to weigh, obſerve and take notice of the eſtate of things or perſons, Pſal. 78. 39. He remembred that they were but fleſh, a wind that paſſeth away, and cometh not again; that is, he conſidered and weighed the eſtate of man: So in that place, O remember that my life is wind, that is, conſider and weigh it well; Lord, put my condition into the ballance, obſerve what a weak creature I am, how ſhort my life is; therefore deal with me as with a weak ſhort-liv'd creature: thou needeſt not lay any great ſtreſs upon me, thou needeſt not trouble thy ſelf much to make an end of me, my life is but wind, it is but a puff, which quickly paſſes away.

O remember that my life is wind. This is a proverbial ſpeech like that before of a weavers ſhuttle. The word tranſlated wind, ſignifies the Holy Ghoſt, the third perſon in the bleſſed Trinity; as alſo a Spirit in general. And becauſe the wind is of a ſpiritual nature, inviſible, ſwift, powerful, therefore it is applied to that celeſtial or elementary Spirit; and the operation of the holy Ghoſt is ſhadowed by wind or breath, Chriſt breathed upon his Diſciples, ſaying, receive the holy Ghoſt, John 20. 22. And the holy Ghoſt came as a mighty ruſhing wind, Acts 2. 2.

Quaſi ventus Targum.

When Job ſaith, remember that my life is wind, he means, my life is like the wind: It is a ſimilitude, not an aſſertion The life of man is like the wind in two things. Firſt, The wind paſſeth away ſpeedily, ſo doth mans life. Secondly, The wind when it is paſt, returns no more; as you cannot ſtop the wind, or change its courſe, ſo all the power in the world is not powerful enough to recall or divert the wind, which way the wind goes, it will go, and when it goes, it is gone, Pſal. 78. 34. He remembred that they were but fleſh, wind that paſſeth away; in this ſence Job calleth his life a wind,it paſſeth away,and ſhall not return by any law or conſtitution of nature, or by any efficacy of natural cauſes.

Yet here obſerve, Job ſaith not, his ſoul was a wind, but his life was a wind. Some have Philoſophiz'd the ſoul into a wind, a blaſt or a breath; and tell us, that it goes as the ſoul of a beaſt, that life and ſoul are but the ſame thing; when the life is gone out of the body, the ſoul is gone from its being: They acknowledge a reſtoring of it again with the body at the reſurrectiion, but deny it any exiſtence when ſeparate from the body. How diſhonourable this is to the noble conſtitution of man, and how diſſonant to Scripture, is proved in mentioning it; we acknowledge, that life which is the union of ſoul and body, is a wind, and paſſeth away. In all the learned Languages, Hebrew, Greek, Latine, the word which ſignifies ſpirit or life, hath its original from reſpiring; and when we ſay, my wind was gone, or my wind was almoſt beaten out of my body, our meaning is, my life was almoſt gone, in the Creation (Gen. 2.7.) God breathed into man the breath of life, or of lives, implying the many faculties and operations of life. And in as much as the body of man was firſt formed, and this life brought in after, to act and move it, this is an abundant proof that the ſoul of man is not any temperament of the body, the body being compleated (as a body) before it, and yet no life reſulting. Whereas beaſts (to whom that beaſtly opinion compares man in his Creation) had living bodies as ſoon as bodies, their total form being but an extract from the matter.

Solomon, Eccleſ. 3. 19, 20, 21. brings in the Atheiſt drawing this concluſion from thoſe confuſed oppreſſions which he obſerved in the world; men carried themſelves ſo like beaſts, preying upon and devouring one another, that he (who had nothing but carnal reaſon to judge by) preſently reſolves, That which befalleth the ſons of men, befalleth beaſts; even one thing befalleth them; as the one dieth, ſo dieth the other, yea they have all one breath; ſo that a man hath no preheminence above a beaſt, for all are vanity, all go to one place, all are of the duſt, and all turn to the duſt again. And whereas the Atheiſt heard ſome ſpeak of the aſcent of mans ſpirit after this life, he puts it off as but talk and gueſſing, ver. 21. Who knoweth the ſpirit of man, that goeth upward, and the ſpirit of a beaſt, that goeth downward to the earth? That is, who can tell that there is ſuch a difference between the ſpirit of a man and of a beaſt? who ever ſaw the one aſcending, or the other deſcending? or from what Anatomy was this learned? Thus the Atheiſt derides the doctrine of the ſoul,and will therefore laugh and be merry with his body while it laſts, that's his portion; for who ſhall bring him to ſee what ſhall be after him? ver. 22. Is it not ſtrange,that any who are called ſober Chriſtians,ſhould plant their opinions in this ſoyl of Atheiſm, and make that a proof of their faith, which Solomon brings only as a proof of ſome mens infidelity? The Preacher in this Book perſonated thoſe whom he abhorred, and ſometimes ſpeaks the practices of other men, not his own opinion. There is no more reaſon to ground this Tenet of the ſouls mortality upon thoſe Texts, then there is encouragement to intemperancy in that, chap. 11. 9. Rejoyce, O young man, in thy youth, and let thy heart chear thee in the dayes of thy youth, and walk in the wayes of thine own heart: Or in that of the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. 15. 32. Let us eat and drink, for to morrow we die. If any would learn Solomon's own ſence about this point, let him read it as plain as words can make it (Eccleſ. 12.7.) Then (namely, when man dies) ſhall the duſt return to the earth as it was, and the ſpirit ſhall return unto God, who gave it.

So then (to the text before us) the ſoul is not a wind, but the life; and all thoſe Scriptures where life is compared to wind and dying, to the paſſing of it withont returning, deny the regreſs or returning of the ſoul to a natural, not to an eternal life: and imply the ſhort ſtay of the ſoul in the body, and certain departure from a not-being, when it parts. Theſe two muſt part, and ſo part, never to return to that eſtate again. Thus Job expounds himſelf in the words following.

Hujuſmodi ſententiæ regreſſum animorum in corpora minime negant, ſed neceſſitatem moriendi confirmant & celeritatem.

Mine eye ſhall no more ſee good.] Or as the Hebrew, I ſhall not return to ſee good, (anſwerable to the Metaphor of a wind,) it paſſeth away, and returns no more.

Videre bonum pro frui nota locutio eſt.

To ſee,] In this place, as often elſewhere, is to enioy, I ſhall not enjoy good, Pſal. 4. 6. Who will ſhew, or who will cauſe us to ſee any good? It was not the bare ſight of good, which they deſired, but the enjoyment of it. So, Jer. 17. 6. The man whoſe heart departeth from God, is threatned, that he ſhall not ſee when good cometh, that is, he ſhall not enjoy good when it comes; for, though to ſee good, be a mercy, yet to ſee it, and not taſte it, is a curſe. Therefore at the laſt day, they who thought themſelves high in Gods favour, but were indeed under his wrath, are told, that they ſhall ſee Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob in the Kingdom of God, and themſelves ſhut out; they ſhall ſee what they cannot enjoy, and that ſight ſhall add to their ſorrow. The Prophet cries out, Lam. 3. 1. I am the man that hath ſeen affliction, that is, I am the man that hath felt and had experience of afflictions. And, Pſal. 16. 10. The great promiſe of Chriſt is, that though he took a corruptible body upon him, yet he ſhould not ſee corruption, that is, partake of corruption; corruption ſhould have no communion with, much leſs power over him: And we have the ſame uſe of the word in this Book, chap. 20. 17. Where Zophar tells the hypocrite, that God will deprive and ſtrip him of every good thing: He ſhall not ſee the rivers, the floods, the brooks of honey and butter. It is a Rhetorical expreſſion, comparing the affluence of outward things to floods, and rivers and brooks, which ſend fo[illegible]their ſtreams plentifully; as if he had ſaid, though there be great ſtore of honey and butter (thoſe two are ſpecified for the reſt) though there be rivers, brooks and ſtreams of theſe commodities, yet he ſhall ſee none of them, that is, he ſhall not enjoy or taſte a drop of them. That unbelieving Lord is told by Eliſha, that he ſhould ſee plenty in Samaria the next day, but ſhould not eat thereof, 2 Kings 7. 2. Not to ſee, is not to eat; and he that ſees, but eats not, is not relieved, but troubled at the ſight.

Luk.13.28.

Mine eye ſhall not ſee [good.] What good? When a man dies, ſhall he ſee no more good? We ſee but little good while we live, and the greateſt good is to be ſeen when we die; or rather, while we live, what do we ſee but evil? and when the Saints die, what have they to ſee but good? How is it then, that Job ſaith, when I die, mine eye ſhall not ſee good? What miſerable creatures were we if there were no good to be ſeen beyond the line of this life? our richeſt ſtock of comfort lies in the good we ſhall ſee hereafter, which is therefore called the bleſſed-making viſion; and Job knew well enough that his eyes ſhould ſee good after death; for he ſaith (chap. 19. 27.) with theſe eyes ſhall I ſee God; he knew alſo his ſoul had an eye to ſee good (and a better good then ever he ſaw in the world) while his body lay in the grave. Then his meaning of Mine eye ſhall no more ſee good, is, no more worldly good, none of theſe good things which I have ſeen; I ſhall be above the ſmart of earthly ſorrows, and above the ſence of earthly joyes. Good is either natural, or civil, or ſpiritual. When God created the world, he looked upon all that he had made, and he ſaw that all was very good: Civil good is the order, peace and proſperity of the world, death ſtops the ſight of all this good. As for eternal or ſpiritual good, death cannot cloſe or dim the eye againſt thoſe objects.

טוב Sicut Græci καλὸν, & Latini bonum, aliquando pro pulchro, commodo & utili uſurpât, Ita ſubinde Hebræi vocabulum, Tob. Fagius, in Gen. 2. 18.

Then here is no plea for Atheiſts againſt the reſurrection, nor any againſt the ſouls Being, or being alive, till the reſurrection. Job ſpeaks only about the ſphear and courſe of nature; when man dies naturally, and is in the ſtate of the dead, he enjoyes nothing, he acts nothing according to the ſtate of the living *, Pſal. 115. 17. The dead praiſe thee not, &c. There is no work, device or buſineſs at all in the grave, Eccl. 9. 10. The hand works not, the tongue ſpeaks not, The eye ſhall no more ſee this good.

Job expreſſes himſelf by an act of the eye, which carries the greateſt ſtrength for refreſhing to the whole man. All the joy and pleaſure we ſhall have in heaven, comes in by ſight, we ſhall ſee him as he is. The beholding of God in Chriſt, is the beatifical viſion, much of the good of which we have in this world, comes in by the ſence of ſeeing; and all the good of the next is placed in ſeeing; therefore he doth not ſay, I ſhall no more taſte good, or no more feel good, but no more ſee good; becauſe the chiefeſt good, eternal good, conſiſts in viſion, therefore proportionably our preſent good doth ſo likewiſe.

Sick Hezekiah ſpeaks in the language of ſick Job; I ſaid, I ſhall not ſee the Lord, even the Lord in the land of the living; I ſhall behold man no more, with the inhabitants of the world, Iſa. 38. v. 11. When Hezekiah thought he ſhould die, he deſcribes the ſtate of the dead by a deprivation of all thoſe comforts which are taken in by the ſight of the eye. But you will ſay, how ſaith he, I ſhall not ſee the Lord? He doth not ſay abſolutely, I ſhall not ſee the Lord; but with a modification, thus, I ſhall not ſee the Lord, even the Lord in the land of the living. But did Hezekiah ſee the Lord in the land of the living, or while he lived? Yes, as Moſes ſaw him that was inviſible, ſo did Hezekiah: God makes himſelf viſible to the Saints in this life. Though God cannot be ſeen in his eſſence in Heaven, much leſs on earth; yet he is ſeen in his works, in the acts of his providence, and in his ordinances; we may ſee the goings of God in the Sanctuary, and behold the beauty of the Lord, while we enquire in his Temple, Pſal. 27. 4. So that when Hezekia ſaith, I ſhall not ſee the Lord in the land of the living; his meaning is, I ſhall not behold God in his great works and in the ordinances of his holy worſhip, and in the Congregations of his holy people. In all theſe God is viſible, and moſt in the laſt; and therefore he ſaith, I ſhall behold man no more, with the inhabitants of the world; God is viſible in all creatures, but moſt in man, and among men; moſt in his Saints, and among his Saints; moſt when they meet in the comely order of his houſe and worſhip; the ignorant and unlearned coming into ſuch a ſacred throng, ſees ſo much of God, that he is convinced and goes away reporting, that God is in them of a truth. In Chriſt is ſeen the brightneſs of his Fathers glory, and in the Saints much of the beauty of it is ſeen. Chriſt is the expreſs image of his perſon, and in the Saints ſo meeting, much of his image is expreſſed.

Firſt, In that Job betakes himſelf to God, O remember that my life is wind, &c. Obſerve,

> That, In our diſtreſſes it is better to cry to God, then to complain to creatures.

God is uſually the laſt, but he is alwayes the beſt refuge, when we have told over the ſtory of our ſorrows and ſad condition, and powr'd our wants into the boſoms of our moſt faithful friends; yet this Apoſtrophe is ſweeteſt to the ſoul, when we can turn unto God, O remember me. It is ſaid of Hezekiah in his ſickneſs, that he turned himſelf unto the wall and prayed; he turned from the people, from thoſe that were about his bed, unto the wall; why what was the wall to him? Or what could the wall do for him? ſurely nothing. As good turn to an Idol for help or eaſe, as to a wall, yea ſuch a turn to the wall, turns the wall into an Idol; Good Hezekiah had no thought of the wall, nor had he any meſſage to any Image hanging there. But as 'tis probable, many of his loving Subjects and ſervants were weeping about the bed of their ſick King, and he had been diſcourſing of his diſeaſe, and telling them of his ſickneſs, but at laſt he turns to the wall; that is, he leaves ſpeaking to the company, and turns away from them, that he might have communion with God; and his firſt word of prayer, is the ſame with Job's, Remember now O Lord, &c. Iſa. 38. 2. Creatures are but creatures, and when they have done their beſt for us, it may be they can do no good for us; when they have tryed all their skill, and all their ſtrength, and ſtirred the utmoſt of their abilities, to give us counſel and eaſe, we muſt ſay to them all, ſtand by, and come to Job's Turn, O Lord remember. That man is moſt to be bemoaned, who can make his moan to man only. He who knows not how to complain to God, or to ſpeak out his ſorrows, and his griefs in the ear of Chriſt, ſhall gain little (though he receive much) by complaining to the creature. But ſo long as we have a God to turn to, and ſpread our caſe before, though men turn from us, yea, though they turn againſt us, and forget us, yet it is enough that we have ſaid, O Lord remember.

Secondly, From the matter which Job puts God in mind of, namely his natural frailty and fleeting condition, that he was a paſſing wind. Obſerve,

> It is an argument moving the Lord to compaſſion, to mind him of the frailty of our condition.

There is no argument from our ſelves ſo effectual, to draw out the bowels of Gods compaſſions toward us, either in regard of our ſpiritual or temporal eſtate, as this, to tell him how frail we are; the Pſalmiſt ſhews this the motive of mercy often to that ancient people the Jews, Pſal. 78. 38. He being full of compaſſion forgave their iniquity, and deſtroyed them not, yea many a time turned he his anger away, and did not ſtir up all his wrath: But what moved the Lord to deal thus with his people? What was it out of himſelf? We know the inward moving cauſe was his own free-grace, but what did he look upon abroad in the creature? He remembred that they were but fleſh, a wind that paſſeth away, and cometh not again. Job's argument to a letter. He conſidered how eaſily and quickly they might be deſtroyed, and therefore he deſtroyed them not, Pſalm 103. 4. Like as a father pittieth his children, ſo doth the Lord, &c. Why, what ſtirs up this pitty? For he knoweth our frame, and he remembreth that we are but duſt; Now, that which God himſelf makes the argument, all the argument in us of his turning to us in mercy, that we ſhould mannage, eſpecially as our argument when we turn to him in prayer. Should we plead before God our perfections, and ſay, Lord remember our holineſs, our zeal, our prayers, our tears, our faſtings and humiliations; could any of this move God, or be any attractive of his compaſſions toward us? If we will plead our perfections, God will deſpiſe our prayer. Our ſtrongeſt argument is to ſay, we are weak, and to tell God we are ſinful, prevails more then to tell him we are righteous: We ſhall gain moſt by ſaying, we are unprofitable ſervants.

But did not Hezekiah, entreat the Lord to remember that he had walked before him in truth, and with a perfect heart, and done that which was good in his ſight? Iſa. 38. 3. And doth not Nehemiah uſe the like plea, Chap. 13. 14, 22.

I anſwer, Firſt, that theſe were the beſt, the moſt ſpiritual and powerful pleadings with God is not proved, becauſe uſed by good men. Grace doth not act alwayes at the height, nor bring out it's choiſeſt treaſures at all times.

Secondly, They move the Lord to remember what good they had done, but they do not move the Lord by that remembrance to do them good. Hezekiah was ſo far from rejoycing in his own righteouſneſs, that the Text ſaith, He wept ſore. And Nehemiah with the ſame breath, deſires the Lord to remember what he had done, and to ſpare him, according to the greatneſs or multitude of mercy. He, that when he hath done beſt, begs a multitude of mercies to ſpare him, is far enough from challenging juſtice to reward him.

Men that are but ingenuous, will be moved moſt with a ſight or report of anothers weakneſs. The begger ſpeaks moſt effectually by his rags and ſores. The woman, 2 Sam. 24. 14. who was hired to move David for the bringing back of Abſolom, uſeth this argument, For we muſt needs die, and are as water ſpilt upon the ground, which cannot be gathered up again: As if ſhe had ſaid, Sir, will you contend with your ſon, thus, alas, his life is but water, and he will die, for this is the common condition of mankind; therefore be compaſſionate and pittiful to him, fetch home your baniſhed. This motive takes much upon the heart of God, as in regard of particular perſons, ſo of a people in general, Deut. 32. 36. The Lord ſhall repent himſelf for his ſervants. But when will he repent himſelf? When he ſeeth that their power is gone, and there is none ſhut up or left. When they have no power or ſtrength, and there is none ſhut up, that is, when they have no fort, no ſtrong places to defend themſelves in, but even lie open to the rage and malice of the adverſary, and are ready to ſinck utterly; then the Lord takes this, both as an argument and ſeaſon for him, to repent of the affliction of his people; that is, to change the way of his adminiſtrations towards them. This promiſe was in part made good to Iſrael in the dayes of Jeroboam, ſon of Joaſh, 2 King. 14. 26. The Lord ſaw the affliction of Iſrael, that it was very bitter, for there was not any ſhut up, nor any left, nor any helper in Iſrael.

Thirdly, Speaking of the world, he ſaith, Mine eye ſhall no more ſee good. Obſerve then,

That worldly things are good things.

In their ſphear and proportion, they are good. Abraham minds the rich man, Luke 16. Son remember, that thou in thy life time receivedſt thy good things. Therefore we are to uſe the world, and all the creatures in it, as the good things of God, and the goodneſs we ſee in creatures ſhould raiſe us up to admire the goodneſs of the Creator; if goodneſs be ſtamped upon preſent and temporary things, how good are things eternal?

Fourthly, Mine eye ſhall no more ſee good. Obſerve,

After this life there is no more uſe, or enjoyment of wordly things.

The things of the world are but for the world; Mine eye ſhall no more ſee, I ſhall no more enjoy or uſe theſe good things. Conſider what it is you lay up, when you lay up the things of this life, you lay up thoſe things which after a while your eyes ſhall ſee no more; you lay up thoſe things, which after a few dayes, you ſhall have no more uſe of; you ſhall have no uſe at all of your gold, no uſe at all of your ſilver, no uſe at all of your apparel, no uſe at all of your goodly houſes, no uſe at all of your rich furniture, no uſe at all of your lands, you ſhall have no uſe of all theſe good hings Conſider then what it is you lay up: a time is coming, when you ſhall ſay of them all, I ſhall no more ſee, I ſhall no more uſe and enjoy any of theſe good things. Therefore be ſo wiſe as to improve this time, which paſſes like a Weavers ſhuttle and a blaſt of wind, to lay up ſuch good things as your eyes ſhall ſee, when you are laid down in the grave: lay up ſpiritual good things, lay up your portion in Chriſt, make him yours, and then when you die, and lie down in the grave, you may ſay, we have good things yet to ſee; our beſt ſight is to come, even ſuch a ſight as eye hath not ſeen. Such a ſight as to which the glory of all the Princes of the world is a meer Pageantry. And ſo much of Job's Apoſtrophe to God.

The next verſe is a further deſcription of the ſtate of the dead.

Verſ. 8. The eye of him that hath ſeen me, ſhall ſee me no more; thine eyes are upon me, and I am not.

In the former verſe, Job had ſaid his own eyes ſhould ſee no more good, now he ſaith, that the eyes of others ſhall ſee him no more; The eye of him that hath ſeen me ſhall ſee me no more. It is a great part of the glory and comfort which men take in the world to be ſeen of men. As we take in our comfort by ſeeing, ſo by being ſeen. No man would put himſelf into goodly cloathing, were it not that he goes abroad in company to be ſeen, and knows others will be looking upon him. Now as Job ſets forth the vanity of the creature and of this life, becauſe he ſhould ſee none of it when he died, ſo becauſe when he died, others ſhould ſee him no more: all his beauty, riches and good things muſt be buried with him. There is an elegancy in putting theſe two together, to ſee and to be ſeen. Death ſtops both, it takes us from ſeeing, and it takes us from being ſeen. As all the good we have will be hid from our eyes, ſo all our glory and excellency will be obſcured from the eyes of others in the dark chambers of the grave.

Ponit hic duo, ut ſignificet quod non revertetur ad converſationem humanam, quæ maximè conſiſtit in videre & videri. Viſus cum ſit ſubtilior ſenſuũ principatum tenet in vita ſenſibili. Aquin. Me quærent quem aſpiciant; humanitus dictum.

Thine eyes are upon me, and I am not.

Job ſpeaks of a three-fold eye; Firſt, Of his own eye, Mine eye ſhall ſee no more good, verſ. 7.

Secondly, Of the eye of Men, The eye of him that hath ſeen mee ſhall ſee me no more.

Thirdly, Of the eye of God, Thine eyes are upon me, and I am not. He doth not ſay, Thine eyes are upon me, and thou ſhalt not ſee me. Gods eye looks into the grave, and can ſee there; when we are out of the eyes of men, we are in the eye of God; therefore he ſaith, Thine eyes are upon me, and I am not; as if he had ſaid, Lord, if thou ſhalt defer a little to help me, and then ſhouldeſt come to look for thy Job, I ſhall be dead, I ſhall be laid in the grave, I ſhall not be capable of remedy, if my remedy be deferr'd: it is too late to give a man a cordial when he is dead: Thou ſhalt not have a Job to help, if thou doeſt not help him quickly. Some underſtand it in a ſpiritual ſence, Thine eyes are upon me; as if he ſhould ſay, Lord thine eyes are upon me, to ſearch me, and try out my wayes, and alas I am not, I am not able to ſtand before thy juſtice, before thy pure eyes, which can behold none iniquity. But rather take it as an appeal to God, whether or no he were not near death. Thou Lord ſeeſt I am as a dead man; as a man not to be numbred among the living. Therefore if thou wilt deliver me, let thy loving kindneſs ſpeedily prevent me, for I am brought very low. As a ſick man in ſome acute diſeaſe, haſtens his Phyſitian, ſir, give me ſomewhat preſently, or I am gone, you cannot but ſee I am a borderer upon death. Thine eyes are upon me, and Tuorum beneficiorum, ſi fortè cupias (humanitus loquitur, cũ occulto queſtu neglectus fui) non ero capax. Coc.

I am not.] That is, I am not alive, I am not among the children of men. Not to be, doth not import a not being, but a not appearing. I am not as I was, nor can I long be at all. Rachel wept for her children, becauſe they were not; Joſeph's brethren ſaid to their Father, Joſeph is not; and Job himſelf in this Chap. v. 21. explains this to be his ſence, Thou ſhalt ſeek me in the morning, and I ſhall not be; Death is a great devourer, it ſweeps all that appears of man into the grave. The world ſhall no more enjoy him, nor he the world; this is mans not being when he dies, as the two following verſes further explain by an elegant ſimilitude.

Verſ. 9. As the cloud is conſumed and vaniſheth away; ſo he that goeth down to the grave ſhall come up no more,

10. He ſhall return no more to his houſe, neither ſhall his place know him any more.

Job having moved the Lord to take notice of, and compaſſionate his tranſitory condition, his life being but like the haſtening wind, gives us another compariſon to the ſame ſence and purpoſe: there his life was but a wind, and here it is but a cloud, As the cloud is conſumed and vaniſheth away, ſo he that goeth down to the grave, ſhall come up no more, &c.

The Cloud] in a natural notion, is a thick and moyſt vapour, drawn up from the earth, by the heat of the Sun to the middle region of the Air, and by the coldneſs of that heavenly Country (where Snow and Hail, &c. are made and ſtor'd up) is further condens'd, congeal'd and thickn'd, and ſo hangs or moves partly from natural cauſes, the Sun and Wind, but eſpecially by ſupernatural, the mighty power and appointment of God, like an huge mountain in the Air. To this cloud Job compares the vaniſhing eſtate of this life.

As the cloud (ſuch a cloud as you ſee hanging in the Air) is conſumed, or ſpent: The ſame word is uſed at verſ. 6. My life is ſpent without hope. A cloud comes to it's height, and then 'tis quickly diſperſt and vaniſheth away; the letter of the Hebrew is, It goeth or walketh away. The walk of the clouds is according to the walk of the winds, we call it the Rock of the clouds. When the Heavens are (as it were) all masked with clouds, and a black vail or curtain drawn between us and the Sun, the Winds in a little time diſſipate and ſcatter them.

Ambulavit, ivit, & per metalepſin de rebus evaneſcentibus, intereuntibus, &c.

It is uſual in Scripture to compare thoſe things which are vaniſhing and ſuddenly conſumed to clouds; In which ſence (Iſa. 44. 22.) the ſins of the Saints are compared to a cloud, and the pardoning of their ſins to this conſuming and ſcattering of the cloud, I have blotted out as a thick cloud thy tranſgreſſions, and as a cloud thy ſins. A cloud is but a kind of a blot in the pure parchment roll of the skies; I am ſure a cloud of ſin is a foul blot in the roll of our lives. Blot a fair writing, and you cannot read it, but blot out the blots, and then 'tis legible again: yet, the blotting out of ſin, intimates it fair written, as an evidence or a record againſt us, till a pardon blots it out. In which ſence Chriſt is ſaid to have blotted out the hand-writing of Ordinances that was againſt us, Col. 2. 14. Thy ſins (O Iſrael, ſo the Lord ſeems to ſpeak in the Prophet) are as a cloud to hinder the ſhining of the light of my countenance upon thee: like blots they hinder thee, from reading the evidences of my favour, or they ſtand like evidences of guilt againſt thee. But I have blotted out this cloud, that is, I have pardon'd thy ſins, and by the breath of my favour and free-grace, ſcatter'd thy tranſgreſſions, with all the evils and ſequels which they naturally bring forth. So that now the light ſhines fair and warm upon thee; the evidences which were againſt thee cannot be read, and thou mayeſt read the evidences of my love and mercy towards thee. The ſins of the Saints are but vaniſhing clouds, whereas ſin in it ſelf, and the ſins of all thoſe who are out of Chriſt, are an abiding cloud; they are a cloud firm and immoveable, like a mountain of braſs or a rock of ſtone. Sins make ſuch a cloud, as no power in Heaven or Earth is able to conſume, but the power of mercy, and a gale of love, breathing through the covenant of Grace.

And as the life of man is compared by Job to a cloud, ſo to that which is the matter of the cloud, by the Apoſtle James, Chap. 4. verſ. 14. where he puts the queſtion, what's the life of man? Is it not (ſaith he) even a vapour that appeareth for a little time, and then vaniſheth away? A vapour is exhaled from the Earth by the heat of the Sun, and is the matter out of which the cloud is made. Mans life is not only like a cloud, which is more condenſe and ſtrong, but like thoſe thin vapours ſometimes obſerved ariſing from mooriſh grounds, which are the original of clouds, and more vaniſhing then clouds. Even theſe are but vaniſhing enough, to ſhadow the vaniſhing, decaying, quickly diſappearing life of man. As the cloud conſumes and vaniſhes (the next words ſpeak out the mind of the compariſon.)

So he that goeth down to the grave, ſhall come up no more.

The grave is a deſcent; and the word which is here uſed for the grave is Sheol, about which many diſputes are raiſed among the learned: The root of it ſignifies to deſire, or to crave with earneſtneſs, and the reaſon given is, becauſe the grave is alwayes craving and asking; though the grave hath devoured the bodies of millions of men, yet it is as hungry as it was the firſt morſel, ſtill it is asking and craving: The grave is numbred among thoſe things which are not ſatisfied, Prov. 30. 16. In the Greek of the New Teſtament, it is tranſlated Hades, which by change of letters, ſome form out of the Hebrew Adam, and Adamah the Earth, unto which God condemned faln man to return, Gen. 2. 19. We find this word Sheol, taken five wayes in Scripture.

Firſt, Strictly and properly for the place of the damned, Prov. 15. 11. Hell and deſtruction are before the Lord, how much more then all the hearts of the children of men. God looks through the darkneſs of hell, which is outer darkneſs.

Tã infernus quam ſepulchrũ ᾅδης. Sept.

Status mortuorum vel ſepulchrum, nam ut anima de corpore, ᾅδης de ſepulchro uſurpatur, Pſ. 16. Druſ.

Secondly, It is put Metaphorically, for great and extream dangers, or miſeries which ſeem irrecoverable and remedileſs; theſe are figuratively called Hell, becauſe Hell properly taken, is a place from whence there is no recovery; there's no releaſe from the chains of darkneſs; all changes are on Earth, Heaven and Hell know none: When David praiſes the Lord (Pſal. 86. 13.) for delivering his ſoul from the loweſt Hell; he meaneth an eſtate on earth, of the loweſt and deepeſt dangers imaginable; Mercy helpt him at the worſt. To be as low as Hell, is to be at the loweſt.

Thirdly, The word ſignifies the lower parts of the earth, without relation to puniſhment. Pſal. 139. 8. If I go down into Hell thou art there. He had ſaid before, If I aſcend up into Heaven thou art there; by Heaven he means the upper region of the world, without any reſpect to the eſtate of bleſſedneſs; and Hell is the moſt oppoſite and remote in diſtance, without reſpect to miſery. As if he had ſaid, let me go whether I will, thy preſence finds me out.

Fourthly, It is taken for the ſtate of the dead, whether thoſe dead are in the grave or no, Pſal. 30. 3. Iſa. 38. 18, 19. Gen. 37. 53. In all which places, to go out of the world, is to go to Sheol. Jacob in the Text alledged, Gen. 37. 35. ſaid, He would go down into the grave to his ſon, mourning; yet Jacob thought his ſon was devoured by a wild beaſt, he could not go down into the grave to his ſon, for the bowels of a wild beaſt was his ſuppoſed grave; but he meaneth only this, I will even die as he is dead. So Num. 16. 33. where that dreadful judgment of God upon Korah, Dathan and Abiram is ſtoried, it is ſaid, that they, their Sheep and their Oxen, and their Tents, and all went down into Sheol, that is, they were all devoured and ſwallowed up. But,

Fifthly, Sheol ſignifies the place where the body is laid after death, namely, the grave, Prov. 30. 16. Man hath a dimenſion of Earth, fitted to the dimenſion of his body; this portion or allotment is his Sheol. Yet it ſignifies the grave only in general, as it is natural to man-kind, not that grave which is artificial and proper to any particular man, this the Hebrew expreſſes by another word: He that goeth down to the grave, goes to his long home, to a houſe out of which he is never able to ſee or make his way, and therefore it follows;

Ainſw. in Gen. 37.

He ſhall come up no more.] No? that's ſad news indeed to go down into the grave and come up no more. Are all the hopes of man ſhut up in the grave? And is there an utter end of him when his life ends? Shall he come up no more.

Many of the Greek writers tax Job, as not acquainted with the doctrine of the Reſurrection, as if he either knew not that myſtery, or doubted at this time of it: And ſome of the Rabbins ſay plainly, he denied it: But he is ſo clear in Chap. 19. that we need not think him ſo much as cloudy here: And if we look a little farther, himſelf will give us the comment of this Text: When he ſaith, he ſhall come up no more; it is not a denial of a dying mans Reſurrection to life, but of his reſtitution to the ſame life, or to ſuch a life as he parted with at the graves mouth: They who die a natural death, ſhall not live a natural life again; therefore he addeth in the next verſe, Hic abnegat Job reſuſcitationem mortuorum. Rab. Sol.

Non negatur reſurrectio ad vitam, ſed ad ſimilē vitã. Pined.

Verſe 10. He ſhall return no more to his houſe.

He doth not ſay abſolutely, he ſhall return no more, but he ſhall return no more to his houſe; he ſhall have no more to do with this world, with worldly buſineſſes or contentments, with the labours or comforts of the creature, or of his family; He ſhall return no more to his houſe.

But ſome may ſay, how doth this anſwer the compariſon, That as the cloud is conſumed and vaniſheth away, ſo he that goeth down to the grave, ſhall come up no more; for we find another deſcription of clouds, Eccleſ. 12. 2. where the Text ſaith, that, the clouds return after rain; So that it ſeems though clouds vaniſh and are conſumed, yet they return and come again. The clouds are like bottles full of rain, or ſpunges full of water; God cruſhes theſe ſpunges, or unſtops theſe bottles, and they are emptied, and in emptying vaniſh away: but yet Solomon affirms, the clouds return after rain; how then doth Job ſay, that as the cloud vaniſheth, ſo man goeth down to the grave and returns no more?

In that place of Eccleſiaſtes, Solomon is only giving us a deſcription of old age, and the ſad condition of man in it; he calleth it the evil day, and wiſheth men would be wiſe to conſider their latter end, remembring their Creator, and laying up a good foundation, before thoſe evil dayes overtake them, before the light of the Sun and Moon and Stars be darkned, and the clouds return after the rain; In old age, the clouds return after the rain, thus: as in ſome very wet time, when we think it hath rained ſo much, as might have ſpent and quite exhauſted the clouds, or drawn thoſe bottles dry, yet you ſhall ſee them return again; it will rain day after day, as faſt as ever; ſo in old age, when Rheums diſtill ſo freely, that you would think an old man had emptied himſelf of all, yet the clouds will return again, and floods of watery humors overflow. Thus the clouds of old age return; and in this ſence the clouds of the air return, after they are conſumed and ſpent into rain: But how doth a cloud return? not the ſame cloud numerically, that cloud which was diſſolved doth not return; the ſame Sun goes down, and vaniſheth out of our ſight in the evening, and returneth again the ſame individual and numerical Sun in the morning; but that numerical cloud which vaniſhed comes not again: Thus man vaniſheth, and returns as the clouds return after the rain, that is, after one generation of men are dead, they return again in their children, another generation ſprings up: other return to life there is none, till all ſhall return at the general judgment of quick and dead. As now we are, who never were, ſo ſhall all return, who were, but are not. It was a witty anſwer of a Learned Jew, diſputing with a Heathen Philoſopher, who oppoſed the Reſurrection: If that (ſaith he) which never was in the world, now is; is it ſtrange, that, that which now is ſhould be again, after it is not in the world? If this be a wonder, the other is much more wonderful.

Neither ſhall his place know him any more.

His place.] May be taken three wayes. Firſt, For the calling and condition of a man in this life, that's the place of a man, a mans calling is his place. Or ſecondly, Locally for his houſe or inheritance where he dwelt; he ſhall come to that place no more. Or thirdly, Place is taken for dignity, Magiſtracy, for the eminency of a mans callings; therefore we ſay of a Magiſtrate or a man in honour, he hath a great place, or he is a man of place and rank, in all theſe ſences, his place ſhall know him no more.

His place ſhall not know him.] That is an elegancy of the holy language. Places are without life and without ſenſe, much more without knowledge; knowing is an act of reaſon, how is it then ſaid, his place ſhall know him no more? Did it ever know him? There is a double figure in it: ſome underſtand it by an Hypallage, or tranſmutation of the words, his place ſhall know him no more, that is, he ſhall know his place no more. So that is expounded (Pſal. 103.16.) The place thereof ſhall know it no more, ſpeaking of man paſſing away like a wind. So Pſal. 37.10. Thou ſhalt diligently conſider his place, and it ſhall not be; his place ſhall not be; places continue while the world continues: Then his place ſhall not be, is, he ſhall not be in his place. Or ſecondly, Underſtand it by a Proſopopeia (frequent in Scripture) which is the imitation of life, by things without life: when a place takes upon it the perſon of a man, or when a place acts or imitates the ſpeech of a man: ſence and reaſon are often aſcribed to things without life, and ſo the meaning of his place ſhall know him no more, may be conceived thus: When a man lives and comes home to his houſe, his houſe (as it were) welcoms him home, and his place is glad to entertain him; as in the Pſalm, the little hills are ſaid to rejoyce at the ſhowers, ſo when a man comes home, his houſe and all he hath, have as it were, a Tongue to bid him welcom, and open Arms to receive and embrace him; but when he dies he ſhall return no more, and then his place ſhall know him (that is, receive him) no more.

Quaſi diceret, ipſæ res inanimæ quæ ſerviunt & parent ad nutum mortalibus, mortuis tamen nulli uſui ſunt. Illos non agnoſcunt dominos. Ea enim eſt vis verbi cognoſcendi & non cognoſcendi.

Obſerve from this briefly (becauſe it is a ſimilitude of the ſame importance with that opened in the former words)

> Firſt, That death is the concluſion of all worldly comforts and relations.

As the cloud vaniſheth and returneth not, ſo (in that ſence) there is an utter concluſion of man, he is gone and there is no returning; God by his Almighty power hath fetched back ſome, and the vaniſhing clouds have been brought again: ſo Lazarus (and others at the death of Chriſt) was raiſed from the grave; but in a natural way, death ſeizeth all faſt for ever: your places, your relations, your credits, your friends ſhall know you no more, or give you farther entertainment. Obſerve,

> Secondly, That God hath given us not only the book of Scripture, but the book of the creature, therein to learn and read our own frailty and mortality.

The creatures preach what man is, and that is a reaſon why the Holy Ghoſt ſpends ſo much time, and is ſo frequent in giving us the meaſure of our ſelves by creatures; theſe are every hour in our eye, we meet with, and ſee, and handle, and feel them continually: The wind, the vapors, the clouds, ſet forth what we are, When I conſider (ſaid David, Pſal. 8.3,4.) the Heavens, the work of thy fingers, the Moon and the Stars which thou haſt ordained, what is man that thou art mindful of him? To conſider the greatneſs of the works of God ſhould abaſe man; it ſhould amaze us, to remember that God hath made ſuch things for our uſe, who are our ſelves ſo uſeleſs (in compariſon of what we ought) to God. And when man conſiders the Heavens and the Earth, and weighs how many things there are in them, which ſet forth his frailty, he hath reaſon to cry out, O Lord what is man? Man is but a wind, a cloud, a vapor, even ſuch a thing as I ſee moſt periſhing and vaniſhing in the whole compaſs of the Creation. Pſal. 19.1. The Heavens declare the glory of God, and the Firmament ſheweth his handy work: The Heavens are excellent creatures, and full of glorious wonders, they ſpeak the power and wiſdom of God, they ſhew forth his handy work; they can be the work of none but of God only: The clouds alſo ſhew forth the handy work and power of God, Pſal. 147.8. Who covereth the Heavens with clouds: The hand of God draws thoſe curtains, and puts that mask upon the face of Heaven.

But as the Heavens declare the glory of God, ſo they publiſh and declare the weakneſs of man, the vapors and the winds ſhew forth how frail he is: As the inviſible things of God, to wit, his eternal power and Godhead are ſeen in the things which are made; God is (as it were) viſible in the creatures: ſo likewiſe the frailty and mutability, the weakneſs and inconſtancy of man is viſible in the things which are created; we may read a lecture of our own tranſitorineſs, in the moſt tranſitory Texts of nature: And that is an admirable contrivance and complication of things, that out of the very ſame Text of the creature, where the infinite wiſdom and power of God may be learned, man alſo may learn his own frailty: He that ſtudies the creature much, ſhall find much of God and of himſelf. Some conceive when Iſaac (Gen. 24.63.) went forth into the field to meditate, that he ſtudied the book of the creatures, probably the holy man did ſo, but we are ſure he might. How will it ſhame thoſe men at laſt, who know not God nor themſelves, when they have or might have had (without coſt or travel) ſo many tutors and inſtructors.

VERS. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16.

Therefore I will not refrain my mouth, I will ſpeak in the anguiſh of my ſpirit, I will complain in the bitterneſs of my ſoul.

Am I a Sea or a Whale, that thou ſetteſt a watch over me?

When I ſay my bed ſhall comfort me, my couch ſhall eaſe my complaint.

Then thou ſcareſt me with dreams, and terrifieſt me through viſions.

So that my ſoul chuſeth ſtrangling, and death rather then life.

I loath it, I would not live alwayes, let me alone, for my dayes are vanity.

IN the context of theſe ſix verſes, we may take notice of four things.

Firſt, Job's violent reſolution to complain, verſ. 11.

Secondly, His vehement complaint, verſ. 12.

Thirdly, An amplification of his ſorrows, verſ. 13, 14.

Fourthly, A renovation of his often repeated deſires to die, and the tedioufneſs of his life, verſ. 15, 16.

Therefore.] Job having in an apoſtrophe to God, ſhewed his weak condition, takes up a freſh reſolution of complaining to God; Therefore I will not refrain my mouth, &c. as if he had ſaid, The conſideration of theſe things, is ſo far from putting me to ſilence, that it doth rather enlarge my heart, and open my mouth to ſpeak and complain once more; ſeeing death is by Gods appointment, the certain end of all outward troubles, and perceiving my ſelf upon the very borders or brink of death, my body paſt cure, my eſtate irrecoverable and remedileſs, therefore I will complain yet again, I will yet farther lay open my miſery before the Lord, and preſs him to haſten me through the confines of this land of ſorrow, that I may accompliſh my dayes, and ſee an end of theſe troubles, for my ſoul is in great bitterneſs.

I will not refrain my mouth.] The word ſignifies to ſtop, inhibit or prohibit: Thoſe Writs which ſtay the proceſs of inferiour Courts, are called Prohibitions, and then no man may open his mouth more in that buſineſs, until the Prohibition be diſſolved or taken off: I (ſaith Job) will not give my ſelf a prohibition, I will not ſilence or ſuppreſs my ſorrows: I will give my heart full liberty to meditate, and my tongue to ſpeak out my ſufferings: Being emptied of all my comforts, I will ſurely take my fill of complainings. It will be ſome eaſe to me, to make known how I am pained. I will not refrain my mouth. That word is uſed (Iſa. 38.1.) Cry aloud ſpare not; when the Prophet is commanded to tell the people of their ſins, the Lord ſets his tongue at liberty, ſpare not, thou art not ſilenced or limited, therefore cry aloud; theirs were crying ſins, and crying ing ſins muſt have crying reproofs, loud ſinners muſt not be whiſpered to, therefore, Cry aloud, ſpare not. I will not ſpare my mouth (ſaith Job) or refrain, as we tranſlate.

בצר i.e. in anguſtiis ſpiritus mei; coarctat me ſpiritus pectore incluſus, patefaciam liberum illi aditum: אשיחה à radice שוח Propriè meditari, vel ex meditatione interius animo concepta aliquid exterius agere loqui, orare, conqueri. Vocem edam querulam, muſſitando & meditando. Merc.

But I will ſpeak in the anguiſh of my ſpirit.] Or in the ſtraightneſs of my ſpirit; I am in a ſtraight, I am pent in my ſpirit, and unleſs I let my ſpirit out, my heart will break; I muſt give it vent and Air. I will ſpeak in the anguiſh of my ſpirit.

I will complain in the bitterneſs of my ſoul.] The word render'd complain, ſignifies to meditate, and ſo to ſpeak upon meditation, or to ſpeak deliberately. It implies, firſt, a forming and faſhioning of what we would ſay in our thoughts; Thoughts are the moulds of our words. Job intends not raſh ſpeaking: what he intends to ſpeak, ſhould be moulded, ſhap'd and wrought in his heart, before brought forth by his tongue. Prayer is expreſt by this word, becauſe prayer ought firſt to be formed in the heart: Prayer is the manifeſtation of our deſires to God; If the tongue ſpeaks before the heart, before the heart makes up our requeſts, we take Gods name in vain. Hannah takes up this word (1 Sam. 1. 16.) Count not thine handmaid for a daughter of Belial, for out of the abundance of my complaint (or meditation, ſo the word is rendred) and grief, have I ſpoken. Hannah was praying, her voice was not heard, only her lips moved, which cauſed Eli to ſuſpect and cenſure her for drunk or diſtracted; but ſhe anſwers in words of truth and ſoberneſs, O my Lord, count not thine handmaid a daughter of Belial, for though my voice hath not been heard, yet I have been ſpeaking out of the aboundance of my complaint, that is, out of the aboundance of my meditation; my complaints are not the work of my tongue, but of my heart, and my lips moved not, until my heart moved, my complaint is my meditation. Hence likewiſe that phraſe of pouring out prayer, Pſal. 142. 2. I poured out my complaint before him; He that pours out, muſt have ſomewhat, yea much within, where there is a conſtant ſtream, there alſo is a fountain, I poured out my complaint, or my complaining prayer; it is the ſame word here, I have gathered the bitter waters of ſorrow into my own heart, and now I pour them forth in complainings.

Amarū non ſolum dulci opponitur, ſed etiam jucundo. Amariorem me fecit ſenectus, i. e. aſperiorem. Plaut.

I will complain in the bitterneſs of my ſoul. What the bitterneſs of the ſoul is, hath been expounded already in Chap. 3. therefore I ſhall not ſtay upon it: It notes only the height or extremity of affliction. Bitter is oppoſed to unpleaſant, as well as to ſweet: In the bitterneſs of my ſoul: The affliction appeared moſt upon his body, but it afflicted him moſt in his ſoul. He ſpeaks little of the pain of his body, in compariſon of the trouble upon his ſpirit, he inſiſts principally upon that, I will ſpeak in the anguiſh of my ſpirit, I will complain in the bitterneſs of my ſoul; not in the pain of my fleſh, or ſufferings of my body; and yet that form of ſpeaking, excludes not his ſence and ſenſibleneſs of bodily pains, for a man may well ſay, his ſoul is in bitterneſs by reaſon of the pains of his body.

Being in this condition, we ſee what his remedy was, he falls a crying and a complaining before God, telling how it was with him.

Job's complaints have been ſpoken of in former paſſages of the Book, and why he complains hath been ſhewed. An afflicted ſoul finds ſome eaſe in complaining of affliction; To complain out of impatience, diſtruſt and hard thoughts of God is very ſinful; in that ſence we muſt be ſilent, as David, Pſal. 39. 9. when the hand of God was heavy upon him, I was dumb, I opened not my mouth, becauſe thou didſt it; in reference to the dealing of God with him, David had not a word to ſay; Our Lord Chriſt (the great pattern of ſuffering) was as a ſheep before the ſhearer, dumb, and opened not his mouth, no impatient ſpeech came from him. Though the grief of Job was very great, and ſo it might ſomewhat (as hath formerly been cleared) excuſe the greatneſs of his complaint, yet in this Job ſhewed himſelf a man ſubject to like paſſions as we are. Man thinks to get cure by complaining, but uſually he gets a wound: What poor ſhifts are we poor creatures often put to? How often do we entangle our ſelves, becauſe we are ſtraightned? Though Job's heart kept cloſe to God in the main, though his ſpirit was preſerved untoucht of blaſpheming, yet we find him touching too often, and too loud upon this ſtring of complaining. He cannot be excuſed from ſome motions of impatience, while we hear him ſetling upon theſe reſolutions to take his fill of, or to let looſe the reins of his paſſion to complain; I will complain in the bitterneſs of my ſoul. Anguiſh is a very ill guide of the tongue. It muſt needs be troubled matter, which paſſion dictates. Obſerve further,

Docemur quantæ ſint hominis vires, ſibi à Deo derelicti. Merc.

That when ſorrow continues and hangs long upon us, it grows boyſterous and reſolute.

We have three wills in the Text, as if Job had turned all his reaſon into will, and his will into paſſion, I will not refrain, I will ſpeak in the anguiſh of my ſpirit, I will complain in the bitterneſs of my ſoul; He was grown to a kind of reſolvedneſs in his ſorrow. It is as unſafe for man (in this ſence) to will what he doth, as to do what he will; we ought to will the will of God, but we muſt ſubmit our own. We ſhould not mourn over our afflictions, nor rejoyce over our comforts, but as God wills. Yet in this the will of Job was rather ſtrong then pertinacious. He was not a man of that rough make, to oppoſe his will againſt the will and good pleaſure of God, though that were a pain to him.

Nec tamen is fuit Job, qui quod ſibi liceri non putaret protervè ac procaciter vellet aggredi. Merl.

Having thus reſolved to complain, he complains in this very high languege.

Verſ. 12. Am I a Sea, or a Whale, that thou ſetteſt a watch over me?

Theſe are his firſt words, words full of deep complaint like the Sea, which whether he was or no, he would be anſwered. Am I a Sea? Tell me. His queſtion is of like like importance with that, at Chap. 6. verſ. 12. Is my ſtrength the ſtrength of ſtones, or is my fleſh braſs? He expoſtulates with God, why haſt thou laid ſuch trouble upon me? Am I ſtone or braſs that I ſhould be able to bear it? And here (like a Sea ſwoln with bitter waters) in the bitterneſs of his ſoul, he begins to break the bounds again, Am I a Sea or a Whale, that thou ſetteſt a watch over me?

A Sea, or a Whale.] The Sea and the Whale are often joyned in Scripture, Pſal. 104. 25, 26. O Lord how manifold are thy works, &c. the Earth is full of thy riches, ſo is the great and the wide Sea; there go the Ships, there is that Leviathan, whom thou haſt made to play therein. Again, Pſalm 74. 13, 14. Thou diddeſt divide the Sea by thy ſtrength, thou breakeſt the heads of the Dragons in the waters, thou brakeſt the head of Leviathan in pieces.

But why doth Job ſpeak this language? In brief, the meaning is this, The Sea, you know, is a mighty boiſterous and unruly creature, and the Whale is the ſtrongeſt, mightieſt and moſt dreadful creature in the Sea; the greateſt of the creatures whether upon Sea or Land. The Sea is the moſt boiſterous of all the inanimate creatures, and the Whale is the moſt boiſterous of all living creatures: So that here Job gives inſtance in two creatures, which are the moſt head-ſtrong, violent and out-ragious in the whole creation, The Whale and the Sea. And he ſets forth his own weakneſs, by the Antitheſis of theſe two creatures, ſurpaſſing all in ſtrength, with which God only is able to grapple and encounter. And in asking, Am I Sea or a Whale? he may be conceived to ſpeak thus, Lord thou ſeemeſt to deal with me in a way beyond all thy dealings with the children of men; thou carrieſt thy ſelf towards me, as if I were more proud, heady, hard to be reclaimed, then any man in the world; thou ſeemeſt to take ſuch a courſe with me, as with the unruly Sea, and with the boiſterous Whale, to keep me in compaſs. He ſpeaks as if God laid too heavy an affliction upon him, and took too ſtrong a courſe to tame him, or as if he might be more gently dealt with, and that God needed not prepare ſuch bonds and fetters for him, or lay ſuch law upon him, as upon the mighty Sea, and the monſtrous Whale.

But for the words in particular.

Mare barbarum & indomitum elementū eſt.

Am I a Sea? There are three things in the Sea, ſpecially conſiderable, at which Job might have an aim here.

Firſt, The turbulency of the Sea; the Sea is ſtormy and turbulent, ſo ſtormy and turbulent, that it threatneth to over-whelm all; to over-whelm the Ships ſailing upon it, to over-whelm the dry Land encompaſſing it, and it would do both, if God did not bound it, if he had not ſaid,

Hitherto

Viſus eſt Deus conjeciſſe mare in carcerem, atq; illi pedes ac manus conſtrinxiſſe propter quā exquiſitam Dei providentiam dicitur, Pſal. 95.4.

Hitherto ſhalt thou come, but no further, and here ſhall thy proud waves be ſtaid; did not God put an everlaſting law upon it, it would be lawleſs, Gen. 1. 10. the Text ſaith, That the gathering together of waters, God called Seas; God gathered them together, thruſt them together into one place, and there ſet a watch upon them, put them in priſon, bound them in chains, for he ſaw what an unruly element it was, and how ſoon it would diſturb all, if left to its own guidance. So, Job 38. 10. He hath ſet bounds to it, bars and doors to keep it in. He locks and bolts it in by his mighty power. And then Job's meaning may be this. Am I an over-whelming Tyrant or Oppreſſor, a ſwallower up of the poor, &c. that thou doſt thus impriſon and reſtrain me?

Secondly, There is a wonderful capaciouſneſs in the Sea: the Sea is ſo big and broad, ſo extenſive and vaſt, that it takes in all the waters that come of the Land into its boſom, and yet feels no acceſs. And then his meaning may be thus conceived, Am I able to drink in all theſe flouds of ſorrow, and rivers of affliction, which are let out and unburthen themſelves upon me?

Thirdly, The Sea is of mighty ſtrength, though we ſay, weak as water; water is a weak element in one ſence, yet in another water is a ſtrong Element, ſo ſtrong that it bears all dowh before it, and bears all the ſtorms that rage upon it. And ſo his meaning is, am I able to bear continual tempeſts perpetual toſſings and agitations. Wilt thou ever let looſe the winds and guſts of trouble to blow thus furiouſly upon me?

תנים Vaſta ſive ſtupenda quævis animantia ſignificat, ſive terreſtria, ſive aquatilia, ſive aëria. Quidam Thinnorum nomen hinc deducunt.

Or (am I) a Whale?] The word ſignifies any great and terrible creature, any monſter whether of Sea or Land, but frequently the Whale; ſo Gen. 1. 21. God created great Whales; and Lam. 4. 3. The Sea monſters draw out their breaſts; which ſome interpret the Sea calf. It is taken alſo for the Dragon, which lives partly upon the Earth and partly in the Water (Deut. 32. 3.) Their Wine is the poyſon of Dragons; and ſo Jer. 51. 37. But place it either at Land or Sea, it notes the moſt fierce, devouring and cruel of all living creatures. Our Tranſlators underſtand it of that huge ſtupendious Sea-monſter, the Whale or Leviathan, Am I a Sea, or a Whale.

That thou ſetteſt a watch (or guard) over me?

משמר: à radice שמר Cuſtodire, ſervare, ſignificat; cuſtodiam undiq; circumcluſam unde nullum patet effugium.

The word ſignifies to watch a thing ſo narrowly, that it can neither eſcape nor do hurt: for upon theſe two reaſons, watches and guards are ſet; we are afraid ſome will run from us, that others will hurt us, therefore we ſet a guard upon them. In this laſt ſence, Job ſpecially meaneth it, Thou ſetteſt a watch over me, as thou doſt over the Sea and the Whale. Why doth God ſet a watch over theſe? It is that the Sea ſhould not hurt the Earth, that Whales and Sea-monſters ſhould not hurt man, ſayling upon the Sea, or deſtroy the leſſer fiſhes ſwimming there.

In Pſalm 39. 2. the word is uſed for ſetting a watch upon the tongue, I have ſet a watch (ſaith David) upon my lips, &c. A man ſets a watch upon his lips, leſt he ſhould ſpeak amiſs, or leſt he ſhould do hurt or wrong in ſpeaking, ſo (Pſal. 141. 3.) the Pſalmiſt deſireth God to ſet a watch before his mouth, aud keep the door of his lips. The Tongue is a hurtful inſtrument, as the Apoſtle James deſcribes it, a little member which hath a world of iniquity in it: Therefore the Tongue being ſo hurtful, it is a great part of grace to keep a watch over it, and a great part of our duty to beg of God to ſet a watch upon it that it may do no hurt, that it may not as a Sea or a Whale, ſwallow up our neighbours good name. Nehemiah (Chap. 4. 23.) made his prayer (a ſweet conjunction) and ſet a guard or a watch; why was it? To keep off his wicked enemies from hurting him, and hindring the good work he had in hand.

Circum dediſti me carcere. Vul. Sicut carcer latinis à coercendo, ſic Hebræis à cuſtodiendo.

Some tranſlate it thus, Am I a Sea or a Whale, that thou ſhouldeſt incloſe me in priſon? It comes to the ſame ſence, and the word ſignifies a priſon in divers Texts of Scripture: priſons are places of watch and guard, from whence there is no eſcape or getting looſe. Job thought himſelf a man kept in priſon, as offenders are. The Sea is a priſoner ſhut within banks and walls: as a man in priſon cannot go where he will, ſo neither can the Sea. And the Whale of whom it is ſaid, He takes his paſtime in the Sea, is yet Gods priſoner there. And the truth is, all creatures are in the priſon of providence, the limits whereof they can no more go beyond, then a man that is bound (as Petet) with two chains, and all the doors lock't upon him. Eſpecially afflictions are impriſonments, ſickneſs is an impriſonment. A diſeaſe is ſent like a Sergeant to attach a man: that ſhuts a man within his houſe, confines him to his chamber, and then binds him upon his bed, not to ſtir till God give a releaſe: ſorrow is often called a Cord, Pſal. 18. 4. The ſorrows of death (the cords of death, as the Hebrew is) compaſſed me about; and Pſal. 116. 3. The ſorrows of Hell (or the cords of Hell) were about me. And in that ſence Job ſpeaks of himſelf, why doſt thou arreſt and caſt me into priſon, binding me with the cords of theſe ſorrows and ſickneſſes. So he complains, Chap. 13. 27. Thou putteſt my feet alſo in the ſtocks, and lookeſt narrowly to all my paths, thou ſetteſt a print upon the heels of my feet. It is ſaid of the woman (Luk. 13. 16.) that Satan had bound her eighteen years; ſhe was bound with the cords of that infirmity, and kept as a poor priſoner thoſe many years. From all we may collect the ſence formerly hinted, that Job expoſtulates with God for uſing him after the manner of a Whale or a Sea, as if he were a man ſo unruly, that nothing could tame and quiet him, but ſuch a ſevere courſe as is uſed with beaſts, or as if he were a vexer and a devourer of his brethren, a very enemy to man-kind. Obſerve from hence,

First, In that Job ſaith, Am I a Sea or a Whale, that thou ſetteſt a watch over me?

The providence of God watches over all his creatures.

All theit motions are by his permiſſion or commiſſion, they ſtir not but by his leave: The providence of God is his watch, and therefore it is called the eye of providence; and providence hath ſuch an eye as never ſleeps nor ſlumbers; and therein lieth our ſecurity, that we have a providential eye open for us, when ours are ſhut and we aſleep. Obſerve,

Secondly, God expreſſes moſt care to keep thoſe creatures from hurting man, which are moſt apt to hurt man.

We ſee Job inſtances in theſe two by name, the Sea and the Whale, and tells us, that God puts a guard upon them; he watches the leaſt creatures; but it ſpeaks moſt ſecurity to man, to hear that theſe are under a watch. The Lord watches over all wicked men that they ſhould not hurt his people; but ſuch of them as are moſt harmful, who are very Seas and Whales, men who would ſwallow and drown his people with a deluge of rage and malice, over theſe the Lord watches in a ſpecial manner. His eye of jealouſie (which is alwayes awake) is ſurely wakeful upon theſe. As the Lord hath a ſpecial eye upon the Saints to do them good, ſo he hath a ſpecial eye upon the wicked, that they do no hurt, or no more then ſhall turn to good. Hence the Pſalmiſt admoniſhes all, and it may have a particular application to wicked men, Pſal. 32. 9. Be ye not as the Horſe, or as the Mule which have no underſtanding: whoſe mouth muſt be held in with bit and bridle, leſt they come near unto thee. If the Lord ſees men ſo brutiſh, that they will not be ruled by reaſon, he will rule them by rigor, He hath a whip for the Horſe, a bridle for the Aſs, and a rod for the fools back (Prov. 26. 3.) A rocky ſhore for the Sea, and a priſon for the Whale, rather then they ſhall come near to hurt his beloved people. Note, Secondly, That, man in the paſſion, and diſtempered ſinfulneſs of his nature, is like the Sea or the Whale.

A cruel man is as hurtful, as the moſt hurtful creature. In the place before noted, while man is warned, Not to be as the Horſe, or as the Mule, which have no underſtanding, it is intimated that many men are; and it is a truth, that all men left to themſelves would be like unto a Horſe or a Mule, yea like unto a Sea or a Whale in doing miſchief. The Prophet (Iſ. 57. 20.) compares wicked men unto the troubled Sea that cannot reſt. There is not in the whole compaſs of nature, a clearer ſhadow of mans nature, then the Sea.

First, The Sea is very vaſt, and would (if let alone) be boundleſs. Man is naturally vaſt and boundleſs in his deſires, he is never ſatiſfied.

Secondly, The Sea is unſtable, alwayes fleeting and moving, Geneſ. 49. 3. Dying Jacob characters Reuben thus, unſtable as water: The heart of man is a moveable thing, ebbing and flowing forward and backward, tumbling up and down, as the vaſt Ocean.

Thirdly, The Sea is often provoked with ſtorms and tempeſts, it is the great ſtage where the winds act their parts, and ſtrive as it is expreſt in the Revelation. There are many winds ſtriving upon the Sea of mans heart continually, and therefore he is ſo boiſterous and ſo ſtormy; he hath winds within him, and winds from without him: The winds in his own bowels make the greateſt commotions. The Apoſtle James queſtions (Chap. 4. 1.) Whence come contention, and wars, and fightings among you? Come they not hence, even of your luſts, that war in your members? Luſts are as boiſterous winds in the ſoul, which make it unquiet and unruly: ſtrong luſts and deſires like ſtrong winds, and contrary luſts and deſires, like contrary winds, contend upon this Sea. Moſt men are (Tit. 3. 3.) ſerving divers luſts and pleaſures; not only many, but divers, or divers not only in number but in nature, one luſt as a contrary wind ſtriving with another, and ſo making a ſtorm in the heart. And this ſtormineſs is cauſed alſo by an outward blaſt; Satan blows upon the heart, and the world blows; ſo that, till the Holy Ghoſt breaths heavenly gales to overcome and blow down thoſe ſtorms raiſed by the blaſt of ſtrong luſts and temptations, the ſoul will be ever like a Sea tumbled up and down, or as the Apoſtle Jude ſpeaks (verſ. 13.) like a raging wave of the Sea, foming out it's own ſhame.

And this is further conſiderable, that as the Sea is moſt turbulent and tempeſtuous, moſt loud and roaring about the banks, where it is reſtrained; ſo man is moſt boyſterous, where he is kept in and ſtopt, if God do but ſet bounds to him by afflictions, he begins to rage at thoſe bounds. It is that which Job (in a degree) complain'd of, he thought God would bind and bound him in by afflictions, and he began to be ſomewhat unquiet in his ſhackles. But when God ſets bounds to wicked men by afflictions, and hedges up their way with thorns, they are angry indeed and their corruptions break forth the more, by how much the ſtronger banks are made againſt them. The great bank and bound, which God hath ſet to keep the luſts of men from over-flowing all, is his Word and Will, his Laws and Ordinances, by which he ſpeaks to man as to the Sea, Hitherto ſhalt thou come, but no farther; Againſt theſe banks, the hearts of men naturally rage moſt. How do their luſts roar and riſe up againſt the holy and righteous will of God, there the fome of their corruptions is moſt wrought and caſt up. As Paul himſelf acknowledged of his natural condition, Rom. 7. 8. Sin (ſaith he) taking occaſion by the Law, wrought in me all manner of concupiſcence; my luſts and corruptions were more mad, becauſe they were more reſtrained, I was like the Sea, which makes moſt noiſe at, and moſt aſſaults the banks which ſtay it. So v. 13. Sin that it might appear ſin, wrought death in me by that which is good; there was a good, a holy, and a righteous Law ſet before me, but the baſeneſs of my heart was ſuch, that I was the worſe, for that which taught me what was good, and ſhould have made me better.

Further, Man is as a Sea in this, he ever caſts up mire and dirt: when he is moved, corruption moves, every ſtirring ſtirs up the puddle of his heart. As he is a Sea for largeneſs, ſo he is a very ſink for filthineſs, Iſa. 57. 20. The wicked are like the troubled Sea, whoſe waters caſt up mire and dirt.

Laſtly, Covetous oppreſſors have a near reſemblance to the Sea in three things. They (as the Sea) ſuck in all the rivers and ſtreams of profit, which flow in to them from any part of the world, and yet are not filled.

Secondly, They (as the Sea) wrack [illegible] over-whelm thouſands, and are not at all moved with their out-cryes.

Thirdly, They (as the Sea) have huge treaſures in their houſes, yet all ſatisfies not their deſires, they are as greedy as if they were not worth a groat.

Look upon man, in the other compariſon, He is a Whale, a devourer. In the worſt of bruits, you may ſee the picture of mans nature. They who have power to do what they will, and will do (when their advantage is in it) to the utmoſt of their power: Theſe are your Leviathans upon dry Land. Senacherib was a mighty Whale, gaping to ſwallow up the people of God, and therefore the Lord expreſſes his dealing with him in a word very ſutable to this ſence (2 King. 19. 28.) Becauſe thy rage againſt me, and thy tumult is come up into mine ears, therefore I will put my hook in thy noſe, and my bridle in thy lips, &c. See how God uſes him, Senacherib came raging and threatning to ſwallow all up; God uſes him like an unruly beaſt of the Earth, or like a devouring fiſh of the Sea, He puts a hook in his noſe. It is ſaid of Leviathan, that he ſcorns the hook and the angle, Job 41. Canſt thou draw out Leviathan with an hook? implying that no hook, no tackle is ſtrong enough to hold this Sea-monſter, but God hath a hook can hold him. Some men are like this Sea-monſter, no takling of mans making will hold them, no power under Heaven can ſtop them; then the Lord prepares his engines and inſtruments, he can make a hook will catch Senacherib, the great Whale, as if he were but a ſprat, I will put my hook into his noſe, and turn him about, or pull him up.

What devouring enemies have alwayes come out againſt the Church, threaning to ſwallow, or as the Moabites ſaid of the Children of Iſrael (Numb. 22. 4.) To lick up all that were round about, as the Ox licketh up the graſs of the field. Yea, they thought (as it is ſaid of Leviathan) That they could draw up Jordan into their mouths, that is, remove the greateſt difficulties, and overcome all oppoſition. But how often hath God put a bridle into the lips of the Horſe, and a hook into the noſe of theſe Whales?

Further, If we conſider the words, as Job's queſtion, in application unto himſelf, Am I a Whale? Am I a Sea?

Obſerve, Man is apt to have good thoughts of himſelf.

Job would not be the Whale, or the Sea. Note,

Secondly, Man is apt to judge that God layes more upon him then there is need.

Am I a Whale, or a Sea? As if Job had ſaid, Lord thou needeſt not deal thus ſtrictly and ſeverely with me, or beſtow ſo much care to watch me. I would have come in at a call, thou needeſt not have bounded me with theſe afflictions, and put ſuch a hook in my noſe, a nod, or a beck would have fetched me in: Wiſe men ſute their preparations to their occaſion; we carry not out a piece of Ordinance to ſhoot at a flye, which we can kill with a phillup; ſo ſaith Job, Lord I need not all this, a little admonition, a little chaſtning, or a check ſhould have reduced me; ſuch are mans thoughts. But the moſt wiſe God, never layes more upon man then he hath need of: when God ſtreightens us with ſuch afflictions, he ſeeth there is ſomewhat of the Sea in us, he muſt bound us; ſomewhat of the Whale in us, he muſt watch and bring us under. If we ſee God beſtow more rods and blows upon us, we muſt conclude we could not be without them; ſome apprehend that ſuch is Job's meaning in verſ. 16. What is man that thou ſhouldeſt magnifie him? As if he had ſaid, it is too great an honour for man to be afflicted by thy hand. If we ſee a King make great proviſions of war, to go out againſt an enemy, we ſay he magnifies the enemy. It is an argument they have great ſtrength, againſt whom we prepare great ſtrength. So Job, Lord thou magnifieſt me, thou makeſt me to be look'd at, as ſome powerful creature, a Sea, a Whale, againſt whom thou acteſt ſo much of thy power.

Job having, as he reſolved, begun to complain of his ſorrows, now amplifies them.

Verſ. 13. When I ſay my bed ſhall comfort me, my couch ſhall eaſe my complaint, 14. Then thou ſkareſt me, &c.

He amplifies his ſorrows upon this general ground, becauſe they were ſuch as he could not find any eaſe or abatement of, no not at any time, no not by any means; As if he had ſaid, my grief and my pain is ſo remedileſs, that neither artificial nor natural means give me any eaſe; thoſe things which have the greateſt probability of refreſhing, yield me none. He inſtances in thoſe ordinary wayes, which give ſick and diſtempered bodies ſome abatement or intermiſſion of their pains; Lying down upon their bed or couch; When I ſay, my bed ſhall comfort me, my couch ſhall eaſe my complaint; As if he had ſaid, while I was wraſtling all day, and conflicting with my ſorrows, I yet had ſome hope to find comfort at night, and that I ſhould meet with reſt in my bed, but my hope fails me ever; or while in the day time my thoughts are overburthened, and my ſpirit overwhelmed within me, I think ſometimes to deceive my pains a little, by taking a nap or a ſlumber upon my couch; but alas, my pains will not be deceived; when I ſay, my bed ſhall comfort me, and my couch ſhall eaſe my complaint (I find in ſtead of eaſe, further trouble, and in ſtead of comfort, terrors; For then) thou ſcareſt me with dreams.

When I ſay my bed ſhall comfort me.

The word ſignifies to mourn and repent, as well as to comfort; becauſe comfort uſually follows holy mourning and repenting. Godly ſorrow is the mother of ſpiritual joy.

In the words, we have either that ordinary figure Proſopopeia, the fiction of a perſon, when acts of life and reaſon are aſcribed to things without life; and ſo Job brings in his bed, as his friend ſpeaking to him, when I ſay my bed ſhall comfort me, my bed and I will confer together, I am perſwaded that will afford me a word of comfort: Or, we may rather undeſtand it by a Metonymie of the effect, when I ſay my bed ſhall comfort me: Comfort is the common and uſual effect or benefit of lying down upon the bed: The bed is ſaid to comfort, becauſe ordinarily we find comfort in reſting upon the bed; that being a means or inſtrumental cauſe of comfort, is called a comforter.

My couch ſhall eaſe my complaint.

The words are indifferently tranſlated in Scripture, either for a bed, or for a couch; but if we take them diſtinctly, then the bed is the place, where we reſt in the night, and the couch by day: When Job ſaith, נשא Levavit, evexit, ſuſtulit.

My couch ſhall eaſe [my complaint]; it notes his complaint or ſorrow lay as a heavy burden or weight upon him; for the word ſignifies to eaſe, or to lift up, or to eaſe by lifting up; if a man have a burden upon him, the way to eaſe him, is to lift it off from him; ſo Job here, I lie down upon my couch, with a burden of heavy ſorrows upon me, God knows, hoping my couch will be a means to take off that burden a while, that I may have a little breathing, but (to my grief) I find it doth not. The uſe of ſleep is to unburden the ſpirit, and take off the load of cares: The word is uſed in that ſence, Gen. 4.13. about the ſin of Cain, which lay upon him as a heavy burden, My ſin (ſaith he) is greater then can be forgiven (ſo ſome tranſlations) or greater then I can bear; word for word thus, my ſin is greater then can be taken off. Forgiveneſs is the taking ſin off from us; it is the word here uſed for eaſing: my ſin is greater then I can be eaſed of; as if Cain thought his ſin a burden which the arm of mercy could not lift from his ſhoulders: Pardon is the eaſing of the conſcience, ſin the burdening of it; ſin is a burdeu, and ſo is ſorrow. My couch (ſaith he) ſhall eaſe my complaint, by taking off, or at leaſt, intermitting the troubles which cauſe me to complain; or, my couch ſhall eaſe me in my complaint, when I am meditating, revolving, and rowling my troubles up and down in my thoughts, then my couch and I am diſcourſing together, and reaſoning out the matter, but no eaſe comes. We may obſerve from hence,

Magnum eſt peccatum meum præ tollendo, vel majus quam ut tolli poſſit, Sept. τοῦ ἀφεθῆναι με, quā ut remittatur mihi, quam ut ſuſtinere poſſim. Jun. בשיחי In retractione ſive meditatione miſeriæ apud animū. Loquens mecum.

First, That, A man in pain, expects eaſe from every change.

My bed (ſaith Job ſhall comfort me, my couch ſhall eaſe my complaint) every thing he ſees, raiſes his hope; every man that comes to him, he looks upon him as a meſſenger of good news, I ſaid, this ſhall help me, and that ſhall help me; ſurely if I had ſuch a thing (ſaith a ſick man) it would do me good; if I had ſuch meat, I could eat; if I had ſuch drink, my palat would reliſh it; if I were in ſuch an air, it would reſtore my health, and I ſhould get up again. As a Bee goes from flower to flower, to ſuck out ſomewhat, ſo man from inſtrument to inſtrument, from means to means, from bed to couch, ſtill hoping to find relief or mitigation, at leaſt, for his troubled mind, or pained body.

Secondly obſerve, That The moſt probable or proper means are unable of themſelves to give us any eaſe or comfort.

What is fitter to give a man reſt then a bed? What is more proper to give one refreſhing then a couch? But Job goes to his bed in vain, and goes to his couch in vain, nor this, nor that, nor t'other adminiſtred him any help. Creatures are not able of themſelves to give out the comfort committed to them: Their common nature muſt be aſſiſted with a ſpecial word of bleſſing, or elſe they do us no good. If God will command a bed to comfort us, it ſhall comfort us; if he will ſay to a couch, eaſe ſuch a mans complaint, it ſhall eaſe his complaint; Job ſaith it, and his ſaying could not effect it: Nay, if God will ſay to a hard ſtone, give ſuch a man reſt, he ſhall reſt and ſleep ſweetly upon it, when another ſhall not get a wink of ſleep upon a down-pillow; if God ſay to a priſon, give ſuch a man reſt, he ſhall find reſt there; if God ſpeaks to bonds and fetters, give ſuch a man content and pleaſure, he ſhall find not only contentment, but pleaſure in bonds and fetters; if God ſay to flames of fire, refreſh ſuch as are caſt into your arms, the fire will obey him, and refreſh them. The moſt probable means cannot help us of themſelves, and a word from God will make the moſt improbable means helpful to us, yea, that which is deſtructive, ſhall ſave us. For as God can create that good for us which is abſent, ſo he can (as it were) uncreate the evil that is preſent. Providence can take away or ſuſpend that hurting and deſtroying power which creation gave; no creature is able to help or to hurt if God forbid and lay his reſtraint upon it. Bread cannot nouriſh, or cloaths warm us, if he ſay they ſhall not; poyſon ſhall not kill, or fire burn us, if he ſay, they ſhall not. Mans ſaying is but ſaying, Gods ſaying is doing. Man may ſay to his bed, comfort me; to his riches and honours, content me; to his wife and children, pleaſe me; to wine and muſick, make me merry; he may lay his command, or ſend his deſires to all creatures, and yet remain comfortleſs, contentleſs, mirthleſs. Pleaſure it ſelf will not pleaſe him, nor having of his will, ſatisfie his mind at his own ſaying or bidding.

Fourthly obſerve, That, Reſt and ſleep are from the eſpecial bleſſing of God.

When I ſaid to my bed, do it, the bed could not; ſleep is not from a ſoft bed, or from an eaſie couch, Pſal. 127.2. For ſo he giveth his beloved ſleep, that is, ſleep with quietneſs, or extraordinary quiet refreſhing ſleep; which ſome have noted in the Grammar of the Text; the Hebrew word Shena, for ſleep, being with (Aleph) a quiet or reſting letter, otherwiſe then is uſual in that language. He giveth ſleep to his Jedidiahs, as the word is there alluding to one of the names of Solomon. The Lord gives ſleep ſometimes as a love-token to his beloved. The connection is ſomewhat obſcure, the words before run thus, It is in vain for you to riſe up early, to ſit up late, to eat the bread of ſorrow, for ſo he giveth his beloved ſleep: How is ſleep a conſequent of fruitleſs labour, and eating the bread of ſorrow? Theſe rather hinder ſleep. Some refer it to the words of the firſt verſe, Except the Lord build the houſe, they labour in vain that build it; except the Lord keep the City, the watchman waketh but in vain, for ſo he giveth his beloved ſleep; the Lord watches and takes a care of a City and family, and thus gives his people reſt and quiet ſleep; they are not awakened with alarms or ſurprizes of the enemy. Others read it thus, for ſurely he will give his, &c. that is, notwithſtanding the ungodly are eaten up with cares to provide bread for themſelves and families to eat; yet without fail, the Lord of his meer mercy, will give food convenient to his people by their labours, and quiet ſleep (which includes all inward contentments) with it. So, Prov. 3.24. Thou ſhalt lie down, and thy ſleep ſhall be ſweet. And, Pſal. 41.3. There is a ſpecial promiſe made to the ſick man, or to him, who hath been a comforter of the ſick, The Lord will make all his bed in his ſickneſs, that is, God will make his bed eaſie and comfortable in his ſickneſs. When we cannot ſleep, we uſe to complain of our ſervants, and ſay, ſure this bed was not made to night, or it was ill made; no man complains his bed was ill made when he hath ſlept well. That his people in ſuch a caſe, may be ſure of reſt, the Lord condeſcends to that low office, the making of their beds. Therefore we are to receive ſleep as a matter of ſpecial bleſſing, coming from the hand of God; he makes the bed in ſickneſs and in health too: then bleſs God for reſt, and not your beds. Though we know ſleep is the portion of mankind, kind, and many times the worſt of men have quiet and refreſhing ſleep, yet no wicked man ever ſlept upon the pillow of this promiſe, nor will God make the bed of the greateſt Prince in the world, as ſuch, which yet he is ready to do for his meaneſt ſervant; common comforts are to ſome ſpecial mercies. As ſome enjoy riches and honour by common providence, while others enjoy them by virtue of a ſpecial promiſe, ſo it is with ſleep; He giveth his beloved ſleep.

But what found Job upon his bed? In ſtead of ſleep and reſt, he found ſkaring dreams and terrifying viſions; as it follows.

Verſe 14. Thou ſkareſt me with dreams, and terrifieſt me with viſions.

As if he had ſaid, I find my ſelf altogether diſappointed and deceived, in ſtead of being comforted, I am ſkared; in ſtead of being eaſed, I am terrified, my bed is to me as a very rack, and my couch my torment, or a little-eaſe.

Thou ſkareſt me.] The word ſignifies to be caſt down proſtrate to the ground with fear, or to be ground to powder with fear; and it is often rendred by that word contrite, which notes breaking of the heart by godly ſorrow; ſuch a breaking is upon me through the dreams which fall upon me in, and break my ſleep: If I have any ſleep, it is terrifying, and not refreſhing ſleep.

Thou ſkareſt me [with dreams.] That word ſprings from a root ſignifying thick vapours; becauſe ſleep is cauſed by thick vapours aſcending from the ſtomach to the brain, and cloſing up the ſenſes; dreams uſually come in that ſleep, and the ſtronger and thicker the vapour is procuring ſleep, the more we are ſubject to dream.

And terrifieſt through viſions.] In the fourth Chapter I had occaſion to ſpeak at large concerning viſions, therefore I ſhall not here inſiſt upon that point, but refer the Reader thither; I ſhall only ſay thus much, that theſe were not viſions as thoſe before treated of, for the revelation of any divine ſecrets, to enlighten the mind of man, but only viſions of helliſh horror, to darken and vex the mind of man. The Hebrew word ſignifies to ſee, whence the ancient Prophets were called (Chozim) * Seers. Our Engliſh word Gaze, hath near affinity with it. And we call Star-prophets (who pretend skill in predictions from the viſions of the Heavens) Star-gazers.

חלם Spiſſus, craſſus, per Metalepſin, ſomniavit quia ex vaporibus craſſis provenit ſomnus, quē ſomnia conſequuntur. Viſiones iſtæ quibus percellebatur Job erant terriculamenta, lemures, ſpecies, umbræ, ſpectra, manes, ſimulachra, & alia hujuſmodi à dæmone procurata, quamvis ipſe Job ſibi à Deo inferri aſſerit. Caſſia Col. 7. cap. 32. * מחזי ונות à radice חזה. Hinc Prophetæ Chozim videntes dicti.

Job had both dreams and viſions; for in every dream there is ſomewhat of a viſion: There are many viſions without a dream, but there cannot be a dream without a viſion. An image or ſimilitude is alwayes repreſented to, or formed in the fancy, or elſe there can be no dream. Jacob dreamed (Gen. 28. 12.) and behold a ladder ſet upon the earth, and the top of it reaching to heaven. The viſion here ſpoken of, was (I conceive) the viſion of his dream, though ſome underſtand it of day or waking viſion.

There is a twofold cauſe of dreams; there is an inward cauſe, and an outward cauſe. And,

The inward cauſe of dreams is twofold.

Firſt, The accidental motions of the fancy, of which a man can give no reaſon from any precedent agitation of mind or body.

Secondly, The ſetled natural temperament and conſtitution of the body.

The external or outward cauſes are uſually according to the objects with which or about which we are converſant in the day-time, the impreſſions of theſe kept in the fancy, are formed into dreams at night; ſuch as the deſires or diſtempers of the mind are, ſuch often are our dreams.

Or take it thus, Dreams have a five-fold cauſe.

Firſt, The natural temper of the body, and ſo from the variety of conſtitutions, variety of dreams are ſhaped; Cholerick, or Melancholy, or Flegmatick, or Sanguine, produce their ſpecial dreams.

Secondly, Dreams are cauſed by the diſtempers of the body, either from intemperate drinking or eating any kind of meat, or from the very eating (though moderately) of ſome meats, or from the diſeaſes and ſickneſſes of the body; from this latter Job's dreams were much encreaſed, and Satan took the advantage to raiſe fumes, and ſtir the pudled humors of his body up into his brain, out of which his fancy formed terrible repreſentations to his mind. As Melancholy is ſaid to be the Devils Bath, ſo are other diſeaſed ſickly humors; in them he ſports himſelf, and vexes man.

Thirdly, There is a moral cauſe of dreams, ſuch as the ſtudies and buſineſſes, labours and employments, cares and diſquietments of a man are in the day, ſuch often are his dreamings. As he works in the day, his fancy works in the night, Quæcunque mentis agitat infeſtus vigor ea per quietem ſacer & arcanus refert veloxq; ſenſus, Sen. in Oct.

Fourthly, Dreams have a divine cauſe, and are immediately from God. The Scripture is full of inſtances, I need not ſtay upon them: Jacob had ſuch a dream, Gen. 28. 16. And Joſeph had many dreams from God; hence his brethren called him in ſcorn, The Dreamer, or a Captain-Dreamer, Gen. 27. 19. And not only have godly men dreams from God, but heathens alſo, Pharaoh and Nebuchadnezzar, men of the earth, received from heaven things of high concernment, revealing the counſels of God, concerning their own Kingdoms, and the latter about the ſtate of all Kingdoms and Monarchies, till all the Kingdoms of the earth ſhall become the Kingdom of that One, Sole, Supream Monarch, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

Fifthly, There are diabolical dreams, dreams which are from the Devil: Not that the Devil of himſelf is able to cauſe a dream, he cannot ſtir the fancy in the night, or tempt in the day, but as he hath a power given him; but permitted, he cauſes ſometimes ſinful and filthy dreams; as Auguſtine bewailes in the tenth book of his Confeſſion; ſometimes terrible and troubleſome dreams, ſometimes treacherous and deluding dreams. It is by ſome conceived, that the dream of Pilates wife, Mat. 27. 19. was from the Devil; ſhe came to Pilate, and deſires him to have nothing to do with that Juſt man; for (ſaith ſhe) I have ſuffered many things this night in a dream becauſe of him. The reaſon why ſome conceive that dream was from the Devil, is this, becauſe thereby Satan would have hindred the work of mans redemption, if Chriſt had not died; and ſo by ſaving him, would have deſtroyed us all. I will not aſſert this; but it is clear to the point in hand, that there are dreams from the temptations, motions and ſuggeſtions of the Devil, who hath a power over us, as God lengthens out his chain both day and night.

Aug. Conf. l. 10. c. 30.

But when it is ſaid, Thou ſkareſt me with dreams; what dreams were theſe, Divine or Diabolical? Job ſpeaks unto God, Thou ſkareſt me with dreams: doubtleſs divine dreams had an influence upon his ſpirit, and left terrifying impreſſions there. But Satan having power to afflict Job which way he pleaſed, was inſtrumental here; and yet Job ſaith to God, Thou ſkareſt me. As before, when Satan by his inſtruments took away all from him, he ſaid, The Lord hath taken; ſo here, when Satan vexed him with viſions, repreſenting horrid and fearful ſpectacles, yet he ſaith, Thou ſkareſt me with dreams, and terrifieſt me with viſions; as pointing ſtill unto the power and providence of God, who hath all ſecond cauſes, Satan and all, at his own diſpoſe. Hence obſerve,

First, That, Even our dreams are ordered by God.

Though Satan be the inſtrument, yet we may ſay, Thou ſkareſt me with dreams, and terrifieſt me with viſions. Job was not ignorant that ſecond cauſes had a great power upon the body, to produce dreams and nightly fancies; he was not ignorant, that the ſtrength of a diſeaſe might do very much in this, and that Satan, his former enemy was buſie to improve the diſtempers of his body for the trouble of his mind; yet he overlooks all theſe (as he did before) and ſaith, Lord, thou ſkareſt me with dreams, and terrifieſt me with viſions. Dreams are in the hand of God; as our waking times are in the hand of God, ſo are our ſleeping-times; when we are ſleeping, we are in the arms of an ever-waking Father; Satan hath no power to touch us ſleeping or waking, without leave.

Secondly, God can make our ſleep an affliction.

Job's were ſkaring and terrifying dreams: Some dreams are for warning and admonition; The Lord warned Joſeph in a dream: Some are for counſel and inſtruction; he revealed great things in dreams: Others are for comfort and conſolation. Many a ſoul hath taſted more of heaven in a night-dream, then in many dayes attendance upon holy Ordinances. As the luſts of wicked men have dreams attending them, ſo alſo have the graces of the Saints. Job's dreams were for terror and afflictions.

Secondly obſerve, Satans deſire of troubling poor ſouls, is reſtleſs.

It is reſtleſs indeed, for he will not give them leave to reſt, they ſhall not ſleep in quiet, their very dreams ſhall be diſtractions, and their nightly repreſentations a vexation to them. Note further,

That (If God permit) Satan can make dreams very terrible to us.

He can ſhew himſelf in a dream, and offer ugly ſights, extreamly perplexing to the Spirit. He is able to caſt himſelf into a thouſand ill-favoured ſhapes, into horrid and dreadful ſhapes, he can cloath himſelf with what habit he pleaſes, if God give him a general commiſſion. And hence the Devil terrifies, not only by temptations to the mind, but by apparitions to the eye, and is ſeen, at leaſt, conceived to be ſeen (eſpecially by ſuch as labour under ſtrong diſeaſes) like a Lion, a Bear, a Dog, gaping, grinning, ſtaring; whence we ſay of any terrifying ſight, it looks like a Devil. We depend upon God, as for ſleep, ſo for the comfort of ſleep. Many lie down to ſleep, and their ſleep is their terror. As that evil Spirit (in the Goſpel) went about ſeeking reſt, but found none; ſo he hinders ſome, (and would more) from finding reſt when they ſeek it. Therefore bleſs God for any refreſhing you have by ſleep: Bleſs God when your dreams are not your ſcares, nor your beds your rack. See the effect, what deep impreſſions dreadful dreams made in Job's ſpirit; he was ſo affrighted with them, that he profeſſes with his next breath, Verſe 15. My ſoul chuſeth ſtrangling, and death rather then life; I loath it, I would not live alwayes.

So that my ſoul chuſeth ſtrangling.] He renews his former often repeated motion, but with a greater ardency; he not only preſers death before his troubled condition, but a violent death (and in the opinion of ſome) the worſt of violent deaths, ſtrangling; which, though it be not the moſt painful of violent deaths, yet it is looked upon as the moſt ignominious of violent deaths.

Some refer theſe words to the terror which Job had in his dreams and viſions, as if they were ſo violeut upon him, that they almoſt diſtracted him, and made him mad, that they even put him upon deſperate thoughts of deſtroying himſelf; My ſoul chuſeth ſtrangling, that is, I am often tempted, and almoſt prevailed with to make my ſelf away, The learned Phyſitians tell us, that their Patients have often attempted to deſtroy themſelves through the terrors of dreams and viſions.

Ab hujuſmodi ſpectris multos ſe jam ſtrangulaſſe, & proſiliiſſe in puteos aſſerit. Hipp.

Yet we may underſtand the word [ſtrangling] only of natural and ordinary death. Every death is a kind of ſtrangling, and ſome diſeaſes ſtop and choak a man, even as ſtrangling doth; ſo that my ſoul chuſeth ſtrangling, may be taken in general, My ſoul chuſeth death rather then life.

My ſoul chuſeth.] He puts the ſoul (as it is often in Scripture) for the whole man; and the ſence of all is, as if he had ſaid, If I might be my own chuſer, if I might have my election, I would even take the worſt of deaths rather then the life which now I live. My ſoul chuſeth ſtrangling,

And death rather then life.] If we take ſtrangling for a ſpecial death, then here death is put in general; as thus, if ſtrangling be too eaſie a death, let me die any kind of death, Death rather then life.

מעצמותי עצם Os à robore dictum, nihil in ipſo tam forte & firmū, quod vis doloris non debilitarat & confregerat. Aquin.

The Hebrew in the Letter is, And death rather then my bones, which ſome render thus, And death rather then to be with my bones; To be with our bones, is to live. Others make this chuſing an act of his bones; My ſoul chuſeth ſtrangling, and my bones death, that is, every part of me chuſeth death, all vote for the grave; I have not a diſſenting member, no, nor a diſſenting bone; when David prayes, Pſal. 6. 2. Heal me, O Lord, for my bones are vexed; His meaning is, I am vexed quite through. And when he promiſeth (Pſal. 35. 10.) All my bones ſhall ſay, who is like unto the Lord? &c. His meaning is, that he will praiſe God quite through, ſoul and body. Again (Lam. 1. 13.) From above hath he ſent fire into my bones, and it prevaileth againſt me; that is, he hath utterly conſumed me. So here, the whole man is expreſſed by parts, ſoul and bones, or body and ſoul, that is, whether I conſider the anguiſh of my ſoul, or the pains of my body, I deſire to die.

Thirdly [Death rather then my bones] becauſe he had ſuch ſore, putrified and afflicted bones, painful bones; for when Satan deſired a Commiſſion to afflict him, he words it thus, Touch his fleſh and his bone, and he will curſe thee to thy face: Doubtleſs Satan had gone as deep as his commiſſion; he had liberty to touch his fleſh and his bone, and he did it: He vexed his very bones (as we ſay) my bones are even rotted and conſumed, the ſores and the putrefaction is ſunk down into my marrow, I had rather have death then my bones, that is, then a body thus conſumed and putrified even to the very bones.

Magis optarem mori, quam talia oſſa & mēbra putrida, & ulceribus diffluentia. Merc.

Yet further, ſome of the Hebrews give it thus, [Death rather then my bones] becauſe Job had nothing left him but bones, he could not ſay, my fleſh, for his fleſh was conſumed; as we ſay, ſuch a man is nothing but skin and bones, a meer Skeliton: I am nothing but bones, and I had rather die, then live ſuch an Anatomy.

Oſſium meminit quod dolor ad intima uſque oſſa penetravit. Jobo vix aliud quam oſſa ſupereſſet.

Verſe 16. I loath it, I would not live alway; let me alone, for my dayes are vanity.

He cloſeth up his complaint, as he had often done before, with the tedium that was upon him, and the nauſeouſneſs of his life; I loath it, I am nothing but skin and bone, nothing but ſores and biles, my life is a burden to me, I would not live alway.

I loath it.] The word ſignifies the greateſt averſation poſſible. God expreſſeth his greateſt diſplicency of that, wherein the Jews were commanded to take their greateſt pleaſure under this notion, Amos 5. 21. I deſpiſe your feaſts; you think you keep ſolemn feaſts, wherein I delight as much as your ſelves, but I loath them, my ſtomach turns at every diſh. The ſtomach cloſes with wholeſom meat, and turns to it; that which is unwholeſom, the ſtomach turns againſt, the ſight of it cauſes loathing. Their feaſts were of Gods own appointment, and he uſed (in a ſence) to feaſt with them, but their hypocriſie ſpoil'd the banquet. Job ſpeaks of his own life, what the Lord ſpake of their feaſts, I loath it, even as that meat which is moſt burdenſome to the ſtomach. So, Pſal. 53. 5. Thou haſt put them to ſhame, becauſe God loathed them, or, becauſe God deſpiſed them. They who are loathſome to God, cannot long be honourable or acceptable among men.

לאלעלם

I would not live alway.] The word is, I would not live to eternity, or, I would not live for ever. Why, who can, if he would? Why ſhould Job deprecate that which was not attainable? I would not live alway; he needed not trouble himſelf about that (for he ſpeaks of a natural life) it being impoſſible that he ſhould. There is no fear of living alwayes in this world, nor is there any hope of avoiding it in the next. Why then doth Job ſay, I would not live alway? To live alway or for ever, is often uſed in Scripture for a long time. The Ceremonies and Inſtitutions of the Jews were ſaid to be for ever, becauſe they were long-liv'd, yet we know they are vaniſhed and gone: That which continues as long as it ſhould, continues alwayes. So here, I would not live alway, that is, I would not live long, or I would not live out my full time, I had rather be cut off in the midſt of my dayes, or in the midſt of my years, then live to the end of them.

Let me alone, for my dayes are vanity.

Let me alone.] Or ceaſe from me; which is taken two wayes, either, leave off to prolong and protract my dayes, ceaſe from me ſo, do not ſtand by me with thine aſſiſting power to keep my life whole within me; I am ready to die, give me no ſtrong-water or cordial, rather pull away my pillow, let me go: Or, Ceaſe from me, that is, ceaſe afflicting me, take off thine afflicting hand from me, do not any longer hold me in this woful and ſad condition; Ceaſe from me, The world and time, while they continue, are alwayes ceaſing, and therefore have their denomination from this word, which ſignifies to ceaſe.

For my dayes are vanity,] That's the ground of his prayer, why he requeſts God to ceaſe from him, My dayes are vanity; why ſhouldeſt thou ſtay me longer in a vain ſhadow? If we take, Ceaſe from me, or, let me alone, for the ending of his affliction, it is, as if he had ſaid, my life is vanity, there is trouble enough in it; if thou giveſt me the greateſt eaſe that ordinarily a life can have, yet it is but a vain life, I need not have this ſuper-addition or accumulation of ſorrows upon me: Or, let me alone, my life is vanity; why ſhould I converſe further any longer with vanity?

My dayes are vanity.] He ſaith not, My dayes are vain, but they are vanity. My dayes are Hebel, which ſignifieth a vain, light thing, a bubble on the water, or a breath of the mouth; my dayes are but a breath or a puff. The root imports vaniſhing or diſappearing, the ſtill, almoſt unperceivable breath of a little infant, which will ſcarce move a feather. Alas! my dayes are fleeting and vaniſhing, vain, yea, vanity; they have no conſiſtency in them, O then ceaſe from me, and let me do what vanity muſt, vaniſh out of ſight. Hence obſerve,

Firſt, That which a man loatheth, he longs to be rid of.

I loath it, I would not live alway. When a man loaths his ſin, then he ſaith, I would not ſin alway, I would be eaſed of this burden of corruption; O wretched man that I am, who ſhall deliver me from this body of death? When a man delights in ſin, he would ſin alway, he thinks he can never have enough of ſinning; it is ſo in any other inſtance: where once affection is alienated, we would be eſtranged and taken off from converſation: We care not to be with that from which our hearts are departed. Aſſoon as ever Amnon had defiled, he loaths his ſiſter; and as ſoon as he loathed her, he turned her out of doors; And Amnon ſaid unto her, ariſe and be gone, 2 Sam. 13. 15. He that loaths his life, is glad when a door opens for its departure.

I loath it, I would not live alway.

Secondly obſerve, Trouble makes a little time ſeem long.

He had ſaid before, that his life was ſwifter then a Weavers ſhuttle; now, I would not live alway. O how long is my life, how tedious! He looks upon it, as if it were a kind of eternity, as if his life would never have an end, never be done, I would not live alway. Pain makes every hour a day, and every day a moneth, and every moneth a year, yea, an age. He thinks his life will never end, whoſe affliction doth not; he thinks he ſhall never die, becauſe his troubles live. Every man is ready to ſay, he lives too long, when he lives not as he would. The ſouls under the Altar, cried out (Rev. 6. 10.) How long, Lord, how long, Lord, wilt thou ceaſe to avenge? &c. Of our good dayes we complain, How ſhort, Lord, how ſhort? And of our evil dayes, we cry out, How long, Lord, how long? This is a long day, and this a long night indeed; this is a long fit, this a laſting affliction. As the eternity which we ſhall have in heaven, is the longeſt, ſo it is the ſhorteſt; Eternity is longeſt in regard of duration, but it is ſhorteſt in regard of apprehenſion. The eternity of heaven ſhall be no more tedious then a minute or a moment. Eternity is ſo full of pleaſure and ſatisfaction, that it breeds no fulneſs of it ſelf; living at the well-head of comfort, in immediate communion with God by Jeſus Chriſt, our comforts renew as much as they continue; whence freſhneſs of appetite, and fulneſs of ſatisfaction are perpetually interchangeable. The joyes of that eſtate are ſo many, that the years ſeem but few. Eternal joy makes eternity but as a moment, as eternal pain will make every moment an eternity.

Thirdly obſerve, Foraſmnch as Job ſaith, I would not live alwayes; he intimates, that there is ſuch a deſire in ſome men; for he ſpeaks of a life in this world.

There is a principle in man drawing out his heart in deſires to live alway in the world.

I (ſaith Job) would not live alway; let others make that their choice if they will, I will not. Moſt are very greedy of that commodity, and would not part with it upon any terms; and no wonder, for (as the Pſalmiſt deſcribes them) they have their portion in this life: He that hath his portion in this life, would ever have this life; he that hath nothing beyond this world, would never go beyond the world. Such muſt needs be all for life, all for the world, becauſe theſe are their all. You ſhall never come to a worldly man, and find him in a mind to die. Let others take heaven, he is contented with his earth; let others make their beſt of the next life, the preſent ſhall ſerve his turn.

From the reaſon of this requeſt, My dayes are vanity; obſerve,

The life of man is a vain life.

Vanity hath two things in it, whereof the one may ſeem quite contrary to the other; it hath emptineſs in it, and it hath fulneſs in it; it hath emptineſs of comfort, and fulneſs of vexation; that's the right vanity, Vanity with vexation of ſpirit; My dayes are vanity, they are empty of good, and full of evil.

Four wayes the vanity of mans dayes may be demonſtrated.

Firſt, They are vain comparatively; ſo our dayes are more then vain, or leſs then vanity, for they are nothing, Pſal. 39. 5. My age is nothing before thee. As in compariſon of God (Iſa. 40. 15, 17.) The Nations are as the drop of a bucket, &c. they are vanity, yea, they are nothing, yea, they are counted to him leſs then nothing: So our dayes are vain, they are nothing but vanity, they are leſs then vanity, or nothing; Nothingneſs is the ſubſtance of vanity, and all troubleſomneſs is the accident of it. We cannot form up an apprehenſion of our life, ſo little as it is, we cannot reach ſo low in our thoughts as the bottom of mans vanity, in either notion. As we are not able to raiſe our hearts ſo high as the excellency of that eſtate which we have by Chriſt; no mans thoughts are big enough, or can be, to comprehend or take in that: So we cannot little our thoughts enough to conſider the eſtate ſin hath brought us into; therefore it is ſaid to be as nothing, and leſs then nothing, and how little that is, which is leſs then nothing, no man can proportion.

Secondly, Our dayes are vanity, becauſe they are ſo unconſtant and changeable, ſo ſubject to motion and alteration. That's a vain thing which is ever upon its change. That which ſets the glory of God higheſt in oppoſition to the vanity of the creature, is, That with him there is no variableneſs nor ſhadow of turning, Jam. 1. 17. or, ſhadow by turning; ſome tranſlate it ſo, no ſhadow by turning, becauſe the Tropick or turning of the Sun makes the ſhadow; while the Sun is in the Zenith, that is, directly over our heads in the higheſt point of the heavens, we caſt no ſhadows. Now the Lord never turneth, he is ever fixed at a point, and ſo makes no ſhadow; or thus, as we render it, no ſhadow of turning; that is, not only is there no turning in God, but there is not ſo much as a ſhadow of it, not ſo much as the leaſt imagination of a ſhadow. This ſets up the glory of God higheſt; and in oppoſition to this point of higheſt perfection in God, lies the loweſt point of the creatures vanity, that in them there is nothing but turning, in them there is nothing but variableneſs, and the ſubſtance of turning. The faſhion of the world paſſeth away, it is ever paſſing, never ſtanding at a ſtay. It is more then paſſing, it is poſting from ſtage to ſtage, night and day. As the nature of man contains the ſeeds and principles of all things in the world (and is therefore called a little world.) So his nature contains the ſeeds and principles of all the changes in the world. Therefore his dayes are vain.

Sicut homo omnes in ſeipſo res velut mundus quidam, ita omnium mutationum ſemina continet.

Thirdly, The vanity of theſe dayes appears in this, becauſe they are unſatisfying dayes. That's a vain thing, which doth not ſatisfie; for vanity is emptineſs, and emptineſs can never fill; our dayes are but as a dream. And what is ſpoken in Iſaiah (chap. 29. 8.) concerning the dreamer, is verified of a meer natural life. It is, ſaith the Prophet, As when a hungry man dreameth, and behold he eateth; but he awaketh, and his ſoul is empty: or, as when a thirſty man dreameth, and behold he drinketh; but he awaketh, and behold he is faint: neither hunger nor thirſt can be appeaſed by dreams; ſatisfaction comes not in at the door of imagination. Our dayes of themſelves can give us no more ſatisfaction, no better a breakfaſt, then a dream of meat and drink doth to a hungry or a thirſty man. All creatures are not able to fill us. Theres a ſatisfaction which comes to us through the creature, but the creature doth not ſatisfie;

God can make any thing ſatisfie, the leaſt of all his creatures ſhall fill the greateſt. He can give us as much as we expect from them, that is, look what ſatisfaction a man would have from a creature, that God can give when he pleaſeth; but the dayes of man are vanity in this, becauſe we cannot take this ſatisfaction our ſelves from the creature, neither is any creature able to give it us. When creatures have done their beſt, we are hungry and reſtleſs ſtill, empty and unſatisfied ſtill. There is no reſt till we return to God, or till God turn his face to us.

Fourthly, The vanity of our dayes appears in this, that they are deceivable dayes; that's very vain to us, which deceives us. And in this the great vanity of the creature conſiſts; it promiſeth much, and performeth nothing. Great promiſes are made, and hopes are raiſed very high; riches will tell us what they will do for us; and honours will tell us what they will do for us, and how happy they will make us; and the wine will tell us, O that will refreſh us; and the ſweet and fat will tell us how they will fatten us. All theſe make golden promiſes, but leaden performances. They cannot make good what they promiſe, unleſs they can with evil. As Satan ſaid to Chriſt, when he had not ſo much as a ſhooe-latchet to diſpoſe of, All this will I give thee; ſo the creature joyning with our hearts, makes wonderful promiſes of high content, and then leaves us moſt diſcontented; This is vanity and vexation of mans ſpirit. If the creature were not ſo free to enter bond and give us ſecurity for the payment of that great good, it would not be ſo ill with us. If the creature would ſay directly to us, It is not in me, as Job brings in the creatures diſclaiming wiſdom (chap. 28.) The ſea ſaith, it is not in me; and the earth ſaith, it is not in me: So if creatures would ſpeak plainly, comfort is not in us, help is not in us, ſatisfaction is not in us, and ſo tell us how vain they are, their vanity were leſs to us, though the ſame in it ſelf. It is worſe to be deceived of good, then to want it.

Quaſi nihil habeat humana vita verum & ſolidum, ſed apparens umbratile, imaginarium.

Surely (ſaith David of this life) every man walketh in a vain ſhew, Pſal. 39. 6. There is a ſhew of this, and that, and the other thing, a promiſe of it, but it is a vain ſhew; it is but like a Pageant, which feeds the eye, and delights the fancy, or pleaſes the ear, but paſſeth away, and leaveth you as empty as before. In the fifth verſe of that Pſalm, the inventory of mans temporal eſtate is ſummed up, and the total amounts but to this, Every man at his beſt eſtate is altogether vanity; and leſt any ſhould think he had miſcounted, an affirmation is prefixt; ſurely every man at his beſt eſtate is altogether vanity: Every man is vanity, and every man is vanity at his beſt eſtate; not only in his afflictions and in his loſſes, in his troubles and in his ſorrows, ſuch as Job now was in; but take a man in the height and perfection, and accompliſhment of all creature-comforts and accrewments; take the cream, the pith, the marrow, the ſweetneſs of all, extract a quinteſſence of all that can be had in creatures, all is vanity. Man at his beſt eſtate is vanity, yea, altogether vanity.

Abel vivétium omniū typus & repreſentatio. Pined.

When Cain was born, there was much ado about his birth; I have got a man-child from God, ſaith his Mother; ſhe looked upon him as a great poſſeſſion, and therefore called his name Cain, which ſignifies a poſſeſſion; but the ſecond man that was born into the world, bare the title of the world, vanity; his name was Abel, which is the word here uſed: They called his name Abel, that is, vanity; a premonition was given in the name of the ſecond man, what would or ſhould be the condition of all men, Pſal. 144. 4. There is an alluſion unto thoſe two names; we tranſlate it, Man is like to vanity; the Hebrew is, Adam is as Abel; Adam (you know) was the name of the firſt man, the name of Abel's father; but as Adam was the proper name of the firſt, ſo it is an appellative, or common to all men; now Adam, that is, man, or all men, are Abel, vain, and walking in a vain ſhadow.

Χρόνος τοῦ αἰῶνος εἴδωλον. Pined.

And this word is by ſome tranſlated nothing; his dayes are nothing; Idols are nothing; time is but the Idol of eternity, and things temporal but the Idol of things eternal. This word ſignifies in the Hebrew, an Idol, and a vain thing, Deut. 32. 31. Jer. 2. 5. The word Abel is tranſlated Idol; and the Apoſtle (1 Cor. 8. 4.) tells us, that an Idol is nothing in the world, that is, an Idol is the vaineſt thing in the world, or the greateſt vanity; ſo that upon the matter, our eſtate and our dayes here, are but an Idol, that is, the repreſentation of a thing which is not; ſo much vanity and folly, ſo much trouble and ſorrow, ſo much affliction is mixed with the dayes and life we now lead, as a nothing is all it can juſtly be called, or an Idol, a ſhew of what is not.

התעיף עינך

And therefore we may well make it an argument (as Job here) to take us off from the world, and to chide worldlings with, as David did (Pſal. 4.) O ye ſons of men, how long will ye love vanity! or as Solomon, about that adored Idol of the world, riches (Prov. 23. 5.) Wilt thou ſet thine eyes (or as the original) wilt thou cauſe thine eyes to flie upon that which is not. An Eagle will not catch flies (that's no game for her) much leſs will ſhe make a flight at nothing, when there is no game ſprung at all. And wilt thou make a flight with thy heart (for the eye, which Solomon chiefly intends, is the eye of the ſoul) when nothing ſprings before thee, but that which is not?

To cloſe this point, if the creature be ſo vain, and the dayes of man be vanity, let us ſet our eyes and hearts upon that which is ſomethiug, upon that which is all, upon that which is laſting, upon that which is everlaſting, upon that which is true, upon that which is truth, upon that which will not deceive, upon that which cannot deceive, upon that which will be more in fruition then ever it was in expectation.

The excellency of that eſtate we have in ſpirituals, conſiſts in this, that as it promiſeth much, ſo it performeth much, and rather more then it promiſeth; a believer finds himſelf ſatiſfied in Chriſt beyond expectation; the ſoul did not expect ſo much as it finds: As the Queen of Sheba coming to Solomon, had ſatisfaction beyond report and promiſe, ſo ſhall all who come to Chriſt; he makes us large promiſes and if we believe, we ſhall find larger performances: We ſhall at laſt ſay, that the half of thoſe good things which we now enjoy, were not told us in the promiſes. God hath laid up all good in his word, but our thoughts are not able to take out the extent of thoſe good things: Hence it is ſaid, that when Chriſt appears, He ſhall come to be admired in his Saints; things ſhall be ſo far beyond their apprehenſion, that they ſhall be all in admiration.

VERS. 17, 18, 19.

What is man, that thou ſhouldſt magnifie him? and that thou ſhouldeſt ſet thine heart upon him?

And that thou ſhouldeſt viſit him every morning, and try him every moment?

How long wilt thou not depart from me, nor let me alone, till I may ſwallow down my ſpittle?

These three verſes contain a farther argument, whereby Job ſtrengthens his complaint. The ſum of the argument is taken from a compariſon of the Power, Majeſty, and greatneſs of God, with the meanneſs and miſery, with the lowneſs and poverty of man; What is man that thou ſhouldeſt magnifie him, and that thou ſhouldſt ſet thine heart upon him? Why ſhould the great, the wiſe, the powerful, the glorious God contend or have to do with weak, miſerable, vain man? How unequal is this match?

What is man?] The word is, What is miſerable man? Enoſh, man encompaſt about with ſorrows? What is this ſorrowful, miſerable man? Job concluded in the former verſe, man is vanity. And yet here he queſtions, What is man?

The queſtion reliſheth of contempt, rather then of ignorance; and carries with it a low eſtimation of man, let him be what he will; not a want of information what man is: What is man? As we uſe to ſay to, or of thoſe we ſlight, Who are you? or, What is he? It imports the vanity and deficiency of the creature. Or the words are a diminutive admiration; he admires the ſmalneſs, the littleneſs, the meanneſs, the nothingneſs of man. Queſtions in Scripture often abate the ſence, Zech. 4. 7. Who art thou, O great mountain? thou lookeſt very big and very great, but who art thou? tell me who thou art, or I will tell thee, thou art now but a mole-hil, thou ſhalt be a nothing ſhortly, Before Zerubbabel thou ſhalt become a plain; it is a contemptuous undervaluing queſtion againſt the proud oppoſers of the Church. Who am I, O Lord, and what is my houſe (ſaith David, 2 Sam. 7. 18.) His queſtion extenuates. On the other ſide, queſtions often encreaſe the ſence, and raiſe it to the higheſt, Ex. 15. 11. Who is a God like unto thee? where is there ſuch a God as thou art? So, Mic. 7. 18, Who is a God like unto thee, pardoning iniquity, tranſgreſſion and ſin? The queſtion puts the brighteſt glory upon God, in pardoning ſin. Hence man is abaſed in a queſtion, what is man? How low, how poor a creature is he?

Or take the queſtion, barely for a deſire of reſolution; as if this were a piece of a Catechiſm about mans frailty, what is man? He had told us in the words immediately foregoing the Text; that man is vanity, why then doth he enquire in theſe words, what is man? It is not to learn what man is, but to teach us the wonder, that man being ſuch ſhould be thus regarded: As if he had ſaid, Foraſmuch as man is vanity, what is vanity that thou ſhouldeſt magnifie it? Will any one eſteem vanity, and prize a thing of nought? Man is vanity; that's the anſwer to the queſtion.

The Scripture gives many anſwers to this queſtion: Ask the Prophet Iſaiah, what is man? And he anſwers (Chap. 40.6.) Man is graſs, All fleſh is graß, and the goodlineß thereof as the flower of the field. Ask David, what is man? He anſwers (Pſal. 62.9.) Man is a lie, not a lyar only, or a deceiver, but a lye and a deceit. All the anſwers the Holy Ghoſt gives concerning man, are to humble man: man is ready to flatter himſelf, and one man to flatter another; but God tells us plainly what we are.

That thou ſhouldeſt magnifie him?] Or make him great? There is a three-fold ſence of that word [magnifie] uſed in Scripture.

Firſt, It implies only a manifeſtation or declaration of anothers greatneſs, or an opening of his intrinſical worth and dignity; in which ſence, man is often ſaid to magnifie God, he declares and publiſhes the infinite, internal worth and dignity of God, Luke 1.46. the Virgin beginneth her Song thus, My ſoul doth magnifie the Lord. It is impoſſible we ſhould give the leaſt addition to the greatneſs of God: Then magnifying of God, is only a declaring that God is great: So Pſalm 34.3. O magnifie the Lord with me, that is, let us joyn our hearts and our tongues in this great work, to lift up the honour and Name of our God.

Secondly, To magnifie, is to eſteem or prize greatly: So the Apoſtle ſpeaking of his office, ſhews how highly he priz'd it, by breaking forth into this holy boaſt, Rom. 11.13. I magnifie mine office. I eſteem this as my greateſt priviledge and honour, that God hath called me to be an Apoſtle: And Act. 5.19. when the Phariſees were ſo angry with the Apoſtles, and many were afraid to joyn with them, the Text ſaith, the people magnified them, that is, the people had high thoughts of them, and eſteemed them greatly.

But thirdly, (which is chiefly intended in this place) to magnifie, is to make great, or to give ſome real addition of worth and reſpect. Thus the Lord magnifies man, he magnifies him, by adding ſomewhat to him, by giving glory aud luſtre to man, who in himſelf is vile, and mean, and contemptible. And thus God magnifies man four wayes.

Firſt, He magnifies man in the work of creation; of that we read, Pſal. 8.4. where this queſtion is put, What is man that thou ſhouldeſt be mindful of him, or the ſon of man that thou viſiteſt him; The third verſe ſhewes us, what it was which raiſed the Pſalmiſt to this admiration of the goodneſs of God to man; When I behold the Heavens, the work of thy fingers, the Moon and the Stars which thou haſt made? Lord what is man? God in the work of creation, made all theſe things ſerviceable and inſtrumental for the good of man. What is man, that he ſhould have a Sun, a Moon and Stars planted in the Firmament for him; What creature is this? When great preparations are made in any place, much proviſions layed in, and the houſe adorned with richeſt furnitures; We ſay, What is this man that comes to ſuch a houſe? When ſuch a goodly fabrick was raiſed up, the goodly houſe of the world adorned and furniſhed, we have reaſon, admiring to ſay; what is this man that muſt be the tenant or inhabitant of this houſe? There is yet a higher exaltation of man in the creation, man was magnified with the ſtamp of Gods Image; one part whereof the Pſalmiſt deſcribes at verſ. 5. Thou haſt given him to have dominion over the works of thy hands; Thou haſt put all things under his feet, all Sheep and Oxen, yea, and the beaſts of the field, the fowl of the Air, and the fiſh of the Sea, &c. Thus man was magnified in creation. What was man that he ſhould have the rule of the world given him? That he ſhould bc Lord over the fiſh of the Sea, and over the beaſts of the Field, and over the fowls of the Air. Again, man was magnified in creation, in that God ſet him in the next degree to the Angels; Thou haſt made him a lit le lower then the Angels; there is the firſt part of the anſwer to this queſtion, man was magnified in being made ſo excellent a creature, and in having ſo many excellent creatures made for him. All which may be underſtood of man, as created in Gods Image, and Lord of the world; but ſince the tranſgreſſion, it is peculiar to Chriſt, as the Apoſtle applies it (Heb. 2.6.) and to thoſe who have their blood and dignity reſtored by the work of redemption, which is the next part of mans exaltation.

Secondly, Man is magnified or made great by the work of redemption. That exalts man indeed. Man was laid low, and his honour in the duſt, notwithſtanding all that greatneſs which he received in creation: Though Sun, and Moon, and Stars, the Fiſh of the Sea, and the Fowles of the Air, &c. were made his ſervants, and himſelf a companion of Angels; yet by ſin he fell below all theſe priviledges, and was made a companion for Devi's, a Citizen of Hell: Therefore the ſecond magnifying of man, was by the work of redemption. And, what was man that thou ſhouldeſt redeem him, when he was a captive? raiſe him when he was down, build and repair him when he was ruined, when he was loſt ſeek him, and when he was bankrupt and undone, give him a better ſtock and ſet him up again? What was man that thou ſhouldeſt do all this for him? How did the mercy of God magnifie his ſervants, when he gave his Son to pay their debt to his own juſtice? If man was magnified when the Sun, and Moon, and Heavens were made for him; how was he magnified, when God was made man for him? How was he exalted, when the Son of God was humbled for him?

Thirdly, Man is magnified or made great in the work of regeneration, wherein God re-ſtamps his Image upon him, in thoſe ſhining characters of holineſs and knowledge; The firſt creation being ſpoiled, occaſioned redemption, and redemption purchaſed a ſecond creation. Every one that is in Chriſt is a new creature, 2 Cor. 5. 17. Our dignity is far greater in being new creatures then in being creatures.

Laſtly, Man is magnified by thoſe ſeveral acts of favour and grace, which God caſts upon him every day: ſmiling upon him, embracing him in his arms, admitting him to near communion with himſelf, watching over him, tending him, guarding him with Angels, directing him, counſelling him, comforting him, upholding him by his Spirit, till he bring him unto glory, which is the higheſt ſtep of preferment that mans nature is capable of. What is man that thou ſhouldeſt magnifie him in all theſe things? Obſerve hence,

First, That, All the worth and dignity of man is out of himſelf.

What is man? As if he had ſaid, man hath nothing of his own, to commend him to or to ingratiate himſelf with God: God hath put ſomething upon him, he hath magnified man, and given him a real worth, becauſe he would. Free-grace exalts man. Hence (Pſal. 90.20.) the Pſalmiſt prayes, Let the Heathen know themſelves to be but men: As if he had ſaid; man who is high in his own eſteem, conceits himſelf to be ſomewhat above man, he judges of himſelf beyond his own ſphear and border: Therefore Lord bring their thoughts within the compaſs of their own condition, Let them know that they are but men; A man that is acquainted with himſelf, will be humble enough; A mear man is but mear earth: The Prophet tells him ſo thrice over with one breath (Jer. 22.29.) O Earth, Earth, Earth, hear the word of the Lord. Man is Earth, in the conſtitution of his body, that was framed out of the Earth: he is earthly in the corruption of his mind, that muds in the Earth: The Apoſtles ſtile is, earthly minded men: And he will be Earth in his diſſolution; when he dies he returns to his Earth. A natural man is earth all over; Earth in his making, earthly in his mind, his ſpirit is earthly, Earth gets into his Heaven, his upper regions: and the body, his lower region, ſhall moulder to Earth again: Then, what is man? Hence (I ſay) it is, that when man at any time would exalt and lift himſelf up, he thinks himſelf above man, he hath ſome notion or apprehenſion of an excellency, beyond the line of a creature: He conceits he hath or is a piece of a deity. The firſt ground of hope upon which man raiſed himſelf againſt God, was, that he might be a god; hs was not ſatisfied in being made like unto God, he would be (which was the higheſt robbery) Gods equal, and ſtand by himſelf: this thought was his fall. There is ſuch a principle of pride in the hearts of all men by nature. They are not contented in the ſphear of a creature, they would be ſomewhat beyond that. The truth is, all the true worth and dignity of man, is in what he hath beyond himſelf, his excellency is in Chriſt, and his glory, in being made a partaker of the divine nature. It abaſed man, when he aſpired to take a divine nature to himſelf, but it exalts man, when God inſpires him with a participation of the divine nature. What is man that thou doeſt thus magnifie him? Chriſt makes us very great and glorious, by the dignity which he puts upon us: as he tells the Church (Ezek. 16.14.) Thy beauty was perfect, through my comlineſs which I had put upon thee; thou hadſt no comlineſs, no beauty of thine own, but thorough my comlineſs thou art very beautiful. The worth of man is out of himſelf; the Church ſhines by thoſe rayes, by that luſtre, which Chriſt caſts upon her.

Secondly, Obſerve from this queſtion, What is man? &c.

Man hath laid himſelf ſo low, that he is not worthy of one thought from God.

What is man that thou ſhouldeſt magnifie him, and ſet thy heart upon him? It is a wonder that God ſhould vouchſafe a gracious look upon ſuch a creature as man; it is wonderful conſidering the diſtance between God and man, as man is a creature, and God the Creator; What is man, that God ſhould take notice of him? is he not a clod of Earth, a piece of clay? But conſider him as a ſinful and an unclean creature, and we may wonder to amazement; what is an unclean creature, that God ſhould magnifie him? Will the Lord indeed put value upon filthineſs, and fix his approving eye upon an impure thing? One ſtep further, what is rebellious man, man an enemy to God, that God ſhould magnifie him! What admiration can anſwer this queſtion? Will God prefer his enemies, and magnifie thoſe who would caſt him down? Will a Prince exalt a Traytor, or give him honour, who attempts to take away his life? The ſinful nature of man, is an enemy to the nature of God, and would pull God out of Heaven; yet God even at that time, is raiſing man to Heaven; Sin would leſſen the great God, and yet God greatens ſinful man. Obſerve, Thirdly, Though man be low in himſelf, yet God beſtows many thoughts and cares upon him.

Though there be no reaſon at all in man, why God ſhould magnifie him, yet God doth and will. Free-grace overlooks all the diſtance that is between God and us, as we are creatures, and it overlooks that greater and vaſter diſtance which is between God and us, as we are ſinful creatures. Many a man is ready to think himſelf ſo good and ſo great, that his brother is not worthy one of his thoughts, or a caſt of his eye; he thinks it too much to look towards a man, that is of the ſame make with himſelf, becauſe he is a little lower ſtatur'd in eſtate or degree. A great rich man thinks he doth a poor man a very great favour, if he turns about and ſpeaks to him: We may well cry out with admiration, O the pride of man to man! and O the love of God to man! one man hath ſcarce humility enough to ſpeak to another, who in nature is equal to him, and yet God (who is infinitely above us) hath love enough to magnifie and ſet his heart upon him.

The language of the Holy Ghoſt is very gradual about this point.

Firſt, What is man that thou art mindful of him? Or the Son of man that thou viſiteſt him? Phil. 8. 4. To be mindful of a man is not ſo much as to viſit him, we may be mindful of thoſe whom we go not to ſee, or to whom we ſend no help.

Secondly, What is man that thou takeſt any knowledge of him? Or the Son of man that thou makeſt an account of him? Pſal. 144.3. It is much that God will take knowledge of a man, or caſt an eye upon him; but it is a great deal more, that God will make account of him. But the third and higheſt ſtep of favour, is this of the Text, that the Lord will magnifie man, and ſet his heart upon him, as if he could not be without him? Obſerve, Fourthly, The true apprehenſion of the greatneſs of Gods mercy and goodneſs to us, makes us little in our own eyes.

I ground it thus, when Job had conſidered how the Lord exalts and greatens man, he then abaſes and diminiſhes man; What is man that thou ſhouldeſt magnifie him? Nothing ſhould draw man ſo low in himſelf, as to think how high God doth, and how much higher, yet God intends to raiſe him. In the 1 Chron. 17. 16. When David enquired of God by Nathan, whether he ſhould build him an houſe, God anſwered no, he ſhould not, but his ſon after him ſhould; But though the Lord would not have David build him an houſe, yet the meſſenger, who was to carry this report, muſt tell David, That the Lord would build him an houſe, and eſtabliſh his ſons upon the Throne after him, verſ. 10, 11. Aſſoon as David had this anſwer brought him of Gods wonderful goodneſs toward him, and of thoſe large promiſes to his family, he breaks out into this diminutive admiration, Who am I, O Lord God, and what is mine houſe, that thou haſt brought me hitherto? And yet this is a ſmall thing in thine eyes, O God: for thou haſt alſo ſpoke of thy ſervants houſe for a great while to come, and haſt regarded me according to the eſtate of a man of high degree, O Lord God. We hear not of ſuch an humble ſpeech falling from David's lips, till God ſent him that meſſage of advancement. And ſo (2 Sam. 9. 8.) when David out of that abundant love he bare to Jonathan, enquired, Is there any that is left of the houſe of Saul, that I may ſhew him kindneſs for Jonathan's ſake? Mephiboſheth was found; and when David told him, I will take care for thee, Thou ſhalt eat bread at my table continually; This favour aſtoniſheth Mephiboſheth, what is thy ſervant, that thou ſhouldeſt look upon ſuch a dead dog as I am? He ſpake of himſelf below man, when he heard David ſpeak ſo highly of him. A living Dog is better then a dead Lion; but what is worſe then a dead Dog? The like impreſſion David's exceſſive kindneſs made upon the ſpirit of Abigail (1 Sam. 25.41.) when he ſent meſſengers to her, after the death of her husband Nabal, to aſſure her that he would be her husband. This honour (that David anointed King over Iſrael ſhould deſire her to be his Wife) abaſes Abigail in her own eyes, Let me (ſaith ſhe) be a ſervant to waſh the feet of the ſervants of my Lord. David's wife! (ſaid ſhe) it is too much preferment for me, to be David's ſervant; I ſhall be honoured enough to be his ſervants ſervant, and that in the loweſt ſervice, to waſh their feet. As ingenuous ſpirits, when they hear meſſages of great favours tender'd them, fall low in their own thoughts: So much more will gracious ſpirits. Thoſe magnifying offers of Chriſt, and pardon of ſin by him, of a crown of life, and an exceeding weight of glory purchas'd by him; theſe magnifying promiſes (I ſay) bring the ſoul upon the knee, upon the meditation and acknowledgment of it's own meanneſs and vileneſs; What am I that the Lord ſhould reſpect me, that the Lord ſhould redeem me, that he ſhould regenerate me, that he ſhould ſet his love upon me, prepare Heaven and glory, a Crown and a Kingdom for me? What am I? There is nothing doth more empty us of ſelf-conceit and high thoughts, then duly to conſider what high thoughts God hath of us.

Note one thing further from theſe words, What is man that thou ſhouldeſt magnifie him?

If God magnifie man, one man ſhould not vilifie and debaſe another; one man ſhould not contemn and ſlight another.

Who art thou that contemneſt thy brother? Thou canſt not (really) magnifie thy brother, and wilt thou debaſe him? It is a moſt dangerous attempt to abaſe thoſe whom God magnifies, to deſpiſe thoſe whom God honours. That, on whom God ſets his heart againſt him, man ſhould ſet his heart, or tongue, or pen. God ſeeks occaſion to magnifie us, though we give him advantages every day to caſt diſhonour upon us. Let man take heed how he diſhonours thoſe whom the great God now doth, and intends to honour more. When Pharoah magnified Joſeph, he cauſed the people to cry Abrech, that is, bow the knee before him, Geneſ. 41. 43. And when Ahaſuerus intended to advance Mordecai, he commanded him to be arrayed in Royal apparel, &c. and proclamation to be made Thus ſhall it be done to the man whom the King delighteth to honour, Eſther 6. 11. Princes expect that all ſhould favour and honour thoſe whom they honour and make their favourites. Surely then the great God will not bear it, that they ſhould be deſpiſed, whom he delights in, and caſts honour upon.

But here a Queſtion ariſes, How this is appliable unto Job? Why doth Job, who lay upon a dung-hill, and was caſt into ſo low a condition, ſpeak of magnifying? Was Job magnified? Doth Job wonder at his preferment and exaltation, when he was brought down to the duſt? Poor Job! Thou waſt almoſt nullified, and made no body, and doſt thou ſpeak, as if thy honour were too big for thee, What is man that thou ſhouldſt magnifie him? We may anſwer.

Firſt, By connecting this word [magnifie] with the words that follow; What is man that thou ſhouldeſt magnifie him, and that thou ſhouldeſt ſet thine heart upon him? As if he had ſaid, What is man that thou ſhouldeſt magnifie him, by ſetting thine heart upon him? And ſo ſetting the heart upon man, is an explication of what is meant by magnifying man. And that is a clear truth; when God ſets his heart upon a man, he magnifies him ſure enough; that act of God is the exaltation of the creature: Man needs no greater honour then this, that God ſets his heart upon him; he that knows that, knows himſelf high enough. Whatſoever man ſet his heart upon, he (as man can) exalts and magnifies it. If a man ſets his heart upon another man, he magnifies that man. Yea if a man ſets his heart upon a beaſt or a ſtone (he in a ſence) deifies that beaſt, that ſtone. If he ſets his heart upon any creature, he makes that creature a god to him: for nothing ſhould have the heart but God alone. And the reaſon is, becauſe ſetting the heart upon any thing is the higheſt exaltation we can give it. Therefore nothing ought to have the heart ſet upon it, but God, for he is Lord over all. And the Lord calls us to ſet our hearts upon him, becauſe that is the higheſt honour creatures can give him. Now as our ſetting our hearts on God magnifies him, ſo the ſetting of his heart on us doth wonderfully magnifie us. And he therefore ſets his heart upon us, that we might at once ſee and admire how much he honours us. If a King ſet his heart upon a man, that man is greatly magnified; he is magnified in the opinion of others, and not only in the bare opinion of others, but there is a real dignity put upon that man, on whom a King puts his heart. How much more if God ſets his heart upon a man, is man really magnified. That God ſets his eye upon a man is a magnifying of him. It was the priviledge of Solomon's Temple, that the Lord promiſed his eye would be upon that place: and it was a high honour to the Temple, that God would look upon it continually, 1 King. 8. 29. If it be a condeſcenſion in God to eye the creature, He humbleth himſelf to behold the things that are in Heaven and in the Earth, Pſal. 113. 6. How great is his condeſcention in ſetting his heart upon the creature. So there is a truth in this ſence, and we may make a comfortable improvement of it, What is man that thou ſhouldeſt magnifie him, by ſetting thine heart upon him?

Secondly, Job may have reſpect to his former greatneſs, when God magnified him, and made him the greateſt man in the Eaſt; and is now bemoaning his own change, in the changeableneſs of mans condition; who when he is lifted up to the higheſt, fairly built and adorned, yet in a moment may be caſt down and ruined. Therefore Job comes with his wonder, Lord, what is man! What is the ordinary ſtate of man, that thou ſhouldeſt take care to make him great! As if he had ſaid, why didſt thou magnifie me, to make me the greateſt man in the Eaſt? Why didſt thou ſet thine heart upon me to bleſs my family, and provide for me, as if thou hadſt none elſe to provide for? Thou ſeeſt mans beauty is blaſted in the twinckling of an eye, and then all thy work is loſt. It is not worth the while to do that which may be undone ſo ſoon. Would any one be at coſt to build a houſe, to beſtow a great deal of charge and pains upon it, and it may be ſpend ſome years about the adorning and furniſhing of it; and when all is done, it is ſuch a houſe, that the next breath of wind may level with the ground. What is ſuch a houſe that a man ſhould build it? When man is raiſed up and built, a puff of wind, a blaſt of affliction blows him down, and brings him to the duſt; what is this man that he ſhould be magnified? This is a good ſence of the words; that Job reflecting upon his former greatneſs, and honour, now defaced and overthrown, breaks out into this expoſtulation; what is man? Why ſhould God in his providence lay out ſo much to magnifie and ſet a man up, who may be ſo quickly down, as you ſee I am at this day.

Quorſum in me locupletando tuam operam poſuiſti, tuam providentiã oſtendiſti, quare me ad eum ſtatum evexiſti in qua perſiſtere non poteram.

But thirdly, rather take it thus, What is man that thou ſhouldeſt magnifie him? Namely by dealing with him thus in chaſtnings and afflictions by diſciplining and tutoring him with the rods of thy correction.

But you will ſay, Is it a magnifying of a man to afflict a man?

Yes, It is a magnifying of man; man is magnified two wayes by affliction.

Firſt, In that God who is ſo great will deſcend to chaſtiſe and correct, or to order the chaſtiſments and corrections of man. Man is magnified, when God deals or contends with him. That God wraſtles and ſtrives with man, is an honour to man. David (1 Sam. 24. 14.) ſeems to look upon it as too great an honour (though it were a burthenſom one) that Saul, a King, one ſo much above him, would follow and purſue him; Againſt whom is the King of Iſrael come out? Againſt a dead Dog, or againſt a Flea? Alas, I am no match for thee, thou putteſt too much weight upon me, in that thou contendeſt with me. To make great preparations, and to ſend out a great Army and skilful Commanders againſt an enemy, magnifies that enemy, that is, it begets an opinion, that ſurely he is ſome great and potent enemy againſt whom ſuch great preparations are made. In this ſence you may underſtand it, that affliction is a magnifying of a man, becauſe the great God comes forth to battel againſt him, who is but duſt and aſhes, but as a dead Dog, or a Flea The Heathens had ſuch a notion, they looked upon it as no ſmall priviledge for a man to be ſlain by ſome famous great Commander; Comfort thy ſelf in this miſerable death (ſaid one) thou falleſt by the hand of great Æneas, thou art magnified enough in this, that thou haſt ſuch a man as Æneas to fight with thee. And another, To die by the arm of Hercules, a mighty favour and alwayes to be remembred. Some kind of trouble is an honour, as well as a trouble: The magnifying of man, as well as an afflicting of him. Man is ſo far from deſerving any favour from God, that as a creature, he is not worthy a blow, though as a ſinner, he is moſt worthy of death from God.

Indignus ſũ quem vel percutias, contemptior ſum quam ut adverſus me manum extindas.

Hoc tamen infœlix miſeram ſolabere mortē. Ænei. magni dextrâ cadis, Virg. l. 10. Occumbens, Is nunc Herculis armis. Donum ingens ſemperque tuis memorabile factis. Valer. Flac. l. 3. Argon.

But ſecondly, we may anſwer it, that man is (not only thus notionally, but) really magnified by afflictions, and that two wayes.

Firſt, In this life, the very humbling of the Saints are their exaltations: their afflictions are their glory. There was never any ſo famous for greatneſs, for riches, for honours, as ſome have been for ſufferings. Who is there upon Record throughout the whole book of God? Who is there in any Hiſtory of the world ſo famous for greatneſs and riches and high atchievements, as Job a ſufferer? All the victories of Alexander or Caſar, yea of Joſhua and David, have not rendred them ſo famous to poſterity, as the conflicts of Job. His afflictions have magnified him more, then all his other greatneſs, or then the greatneſs of other men hath magnified them. If Job had only been the richeſt man in the Eaſt, I believe we ſhould never have had a word of any of his acts, or ſo much as mention of his name in Scripture. That which gave him the honour to have a whole book written of him alone by the pen of the Holy Ghoſt, beſides the often mention of his precious name in other books, is this, that he endured ſo much. That man is magnified really, who is thus afflicted, and comes off holily.

Secondly, Afflictions have an influence upon the life to come. The Apoſtle is expreſs in that, 2 Cor. 4. 17. where he exhorts, not to be troubled with our preſent afflictions, for they work for us a far more exceeding weight of glory. That which works for us an exceeding weight of glory, magnifies us. It is not ſaid any where in Scripture, that a mans honours, or his riches, or his greatneſs in the world, work for him a far more exceeding weight of glory: There is no ſuch thing aſcribed or attributed to outward comforts and priviledges; but our afflictions work for us a far more exceeding weight of glory. Not (as Papiſts abuſe that Scripture) as if afflictions did merit glory; but as the way and courſe wherein God ſets men, and through which he will exalt and lift them up to greateſt glory. Glory is the purchaſe of Chriſt, and all the heavieſt ſufferings of the creature are not able to purchaſe one grain of glory, not the leaſt imaginable weight of glory, much leſs an exceeding weight of glory; but God brings his people to glory, and makes them (as he did the Lord Chriſt) in their degree perfect through ſufferings. Hence obſerve, Duntaxat ſignificatur, quo itinere ad gloriam pervenitur.

That, Afflictions are (if rightly improved) the exaltations and magnifyings of the Saints.

The rod of Diſcipline in Gods hand, becomes a Scepter of honour in ours. This croſſes the common thoughts of the world. The truth is, there is ſcarce a ſoul in the world under affliction, but he thinks himſelf abaſed by it, and ſaith, that God hath laid him low. Yet the right uſe and improvement of affliction is the beſt preferment. The Apoſtle, James 1. is expreſs, Let the brother of low degree rejoyce in that he is exalted. The low have an exaltation; yea, their lowneſs is their exaltation; yet, we are ready to have undervaluing thoughts of our ſelves, when the hand of God is upon us; when God takes away that for which men ſet a price upon themſelves, they ſcarce think themſelves worth any thing. But this eſpecially reaches that ſinful contempt of others, a man afflicted is eſteemed by moſt as a man abaſed. They who have prized a man, and had great thoughts of him, when he had a great eſtate, &c. let him once fall in temporals, though he continue the ſame in ſpirituals, yea though he encreaſes in them, and his Grace ſhines as much or more then ever, yet he is diſeſteemed and laid low in their thoughts. So much for thoſe words, what it is to magnifie, and likewiſe how they may have a ſutableneſs with Job's condition, he being ſo afflicted and emptied when he ſpake them.

And that thou ſhouldeſt ſet thine heart upon him.

To ſet the heart, notes four things in Scripture.

Firſt, Great care and intention of ſpirit, Prov. 27. 23. Be thou diligent to know the ſtate of thy flocks, and look well to thy herds; the Hebrew is, ſet thy heart upon thy herds: The heart is ſet upon the herds in providing and taking care of them, in looking to the welfare of the herds and of the flocks, Samuel uſes that language to Saul (1 Sam. 9. 20.) when he came ſeeking his fathers Aſſes; As for the Aſſes (ſaith he) ſet not thine heart upon them, that is, take no care for them, never trouble thy ſelf more about that buſineſs, that care is over, they are found. In this ſence God ſets his heart upon man; What is man that thou ſhouldeſt ſet thine heart upon him? that is, that thou ſhouldeſt take ſo much care of him, and watch over him: As the Lord ſpeaks of his Vineyard (Iſa. 27. 3.) I the Lord will keep it, leſt any hurt it; I will keep it night and day: He ſet his heart upon the vineyard to watch it, leſt any ſhould, touching, hurt it. God in this ſence takes ſo much care for man, that he ſeemeth (as it were) careleſs of all other creatures, 1 Cor. 9. 9. Doth God take care for Oxen? God doth take care for Oxen: The Apoſtle having ſhewed the goodneſs of God to beaſts, providing by a Law, that they ſhould not be muzled, preſently he queſtions, Doth God take care for Oxen? As if he had ſaid, ſurely there is ſomewhat more in it; or ſaith he it altogether for our ſakes? Not altogether, doubtleſs God had regard to Oxen; But for our ſakes no doubt it was written, that is, chiefly for our ſakes, That he which ploweth, ſhould plow in hope, and he that threſheth in hope, ſhould be partaker of his hope. So when Chriſt ſpeaketh of the Lilies, Mat. 6. If God ſo cloath the Lilies of the field, how much more will he cloath you? You ſhall have the ſtrength of his care to provide for you, to feed and cloath you. Thus God ſets his heart upon man, he looks to his people as to his houſhold, to his charge; he will ſee they ſhall have all things needful for them. And ſo not laying to heart (which is the contrary) ſignifies careleſneſs, Iſa. 47. 7. It is reported of Babylon, Thou ſaidſt I ſhall be a Lady for ever, ſo that thou didſt not lay theſe things to thy heart, that is, thou didſt not regard theſe things, to take care about them. And, Ezek. 40. 4. The expreſſion is very full, where God calls the Prophet to attention, and he calleth him all over; Behold (ſaith he) with thine eyes, and hear with thine ears, and ſet thine heart on all that I ſhall ſhew thee: He awakens the whole man; ſee, and ſee with thine eyes; hear, and hear with thine ears, and ſet thine heart upon it; the ſum of all is, be thou very intentive and diligent about this buſineſs to the utmoſt.

Secondly, To ſet the heart, notes an act of the affections and deſires. A man ſets his love upon what he ſets his heart; that is the meaning of Pſal. 62. 10. If riches encreaſe, ſet not your heart upon them, that is, let not your love, your affections, your deſires cloſe with theſe things: when riches abound, let not your deſires abound too. It is an admirable frame of heart to have narrow, ſcant affections in a large plentiful eſtate. He is the true rich man, who loves his riches poorly. Set your affections on things that are above, Col. 3. 2.

Thirdly, To ſet the heart, notes high eſteem and account, this is more then bare love and affection, 2 Sam. 18. 3. When a Council of war was held by David's Commanders, about going out to battel againſt Abſalom, they all vote againſt David's perſonal undertaking, upon this ground, They will not care for us, they will not ſet their hearts upon us, or value us, their hearts are ſet upon thee, thou art the prize they look for, and therefore the heat of the battel will be againſt thee. Again, 1 Sam. 4. 20. When the wife of Phineas was delivered of a ſon (a ſon is the womans joy and glory, yet) the text ſaith, when the women that ſtood by, told her that a ſon was born, ſhe anſwered not, neither did ſhe regard it, ſhe did not ſet her heart upon it, becauſe the glory was departed from Iſrael.

In either of theſe ſences, the Lord ſets his heart upon man, he greatly loves man; the love of God to man, is the ſpring of mercy to man; yea, love is the ſpring of love, love acted, ſprings from a decree of love; (Deut. 7. 7.) The Lord thy God did not ſet his love upon you, &c, becauſe ye were more in number then any other people, but becauſe the Lord loved you. Love alſo led in that higheſt work of mercy, the giving of Chriſt: So God loved the world, that he gave hi[illegible]ly begotten Son, John 3. 16. As love is the ſpring and root of all the real duty which man performs to God, and is therefore called the fulfilling of the Law, our love fulfilleth the will of God; ſo the love of God is the root of all that good we receive; his love fulfilleth our will, that is, whatſoever we will or ask according to the will of God, the love of God fulfils it for us. Our love fulfils the law of Gods command, and Gods love fulfils the law of our wants and lawful deſires. His heart is ſet upon us, and then his hand is open to us.

Further, God doth not only love man, but his love is great, and his eſteem of man very high; and he realizes the greateſt love by beſtowing the greateſt mercy: How did God ſet his heart upon us, when he gave his Son, who lay in his boſom, for us? He ſet his boſom upon us when he gave us his ſon, who came out of his boſom.

Hence let us ſee our duty. Should not we ſet our hearts upon God, when God ſets his heart upon us? The Soveraignty of God calls for our hearts; he, as Lord, may uſe all that we have or are: And there is more then a law of Soveraignty why we ſhould give God our hearts; God hath given us his heart firſt: he who calleth for our hearts, hath firſt given us his. What are our hearts to his heart? The love of God infinitely exceeds the love and affection of the creature. What were it to God if he had none of our hearts? But wo to us, if we had not the heart of God. This phraſe ſhews us the reaſon why God calls for our hearts; he gives us his own; it is but equal among men, to love where we are loved, to give a heart, where we have received one; how much more ſhould we love God, and give him our hearts, when we hear he loves us and ſets his heart upon us, whoſe love and heart alone is infinitely better then all the loves and hearts of all men and Angels?

There is yet a fourth conſideration about this expreſſion, the ſetting of the heart. Setting the heart is applied to the anger and diſpleaſure of God; ſo the phraſe is uſed (Job 34. 14.) If he ſet his heart upon man, all fleſh ſhall periſh together; that is, if God be reſoved to chaſtiſe man, to bring judzjudgments upon him, all fleſh ſhall periſh together; none ſhall be able to oppoſe it. As it is the higheſt favour to have God ſet his heart upon us in mercy and love, ſo it is the higheſt judgment to have God ſet his heart upon a man in anger and in wrath, to ſet his heart to afflict and puniſh. The Lord anſwers his own people, Jer. 15. 1, 2, 3. that notwithſtanding all the prayers and motions of his beloved favourites in their behalf, his heart could not be towards them. Then his heart was ſtrongly ſet againſt them, or upon them in extream anger; therefore he concludes, they that are for the ſword, to the ſword, and they that are for deſtruction, to deſtruction, &c. If God ſet his heart to afflict; he will afflict, and he can do it. And there may be ſuch a ſence of the text here. What is man that thou ſhouldeſt ſet thine heart upon him? that thou ſhouldſt come ſo reſolved to conteſt and contend with man who is but duſt and aſhes? The words following (though I adhere rather to the former interpetation) carry ſomewhat toward it.

Verſe 18. That thou ſhouldeſt viſit him every morning, and try him every moment?

Here are two acts more about which the queſtion is put. What is man that thou ſhouldeſt viſit him every morning? And, what is man that thou ſhouldſt try him every moment?

That thou ſhouldeſt viſit him every morning?

פקד Viſitavit in bonum & in malum.

To Viſit, is taken three wayes, and they may all be applied to this text.

To viſit, is firſt, to afflict, to chaſten, yea, to puniſh; the higheſt judgments in Scripture come under the notion of viſitations, Exod. 34. 7. Viſiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, that is, puniſhing them. And in the Prophets, Jer. 5. 9. Shall not I viſit for this? ſhall not my ſoul be avenged on ſuch a Nation as this? Jer. 48. 44. When God came againſt Moab with thoſe terrible judgments, it is called the year of their viſitation: I will bring upon it, even upon Moab, the year of their viſitation. And it is a common ſpeech with us, when a houſe hath the Plague, which is one of the higheſt ſtroaks of temporal affliction, we uſe to ſay, Such a houſe is viſited. Hence obſerve, Afflictions are Viſitations.

They are called ſo, becauſe then God comes to ſearch our hearts and lives; Afflictions are Gods ſearchers and examiners. Jeruſalem is threatned to be ſearcht with candles, and that was the time of Jeruſalems viſitation. To ſearch with a candle, notes the moſt accurate ſearching; as the woman when ſhe had loſt her groat, lighted a candle, and ſought diligently till ſhe found it; ſhe viſited every hole to find it out. When you ſee the Lord afflicting, then he is viſiting; he lights a candle to ſearch every corner of your lives.

And if afflictions be Gods viſitations, it is time for man to viſit himſelf when he is afflicted. We ſhould viſit our ſouls when God viſits our bodies, our eſtates, our families, or the Kingdom where we live. Wo to thoſe who do not viſit themſelves when God viſits them. The Prophet calls to this duty in a time of ſaddeſt viſitation, Let us ſearch and try our wayes, Lam. 3.

Yet further, if God in affliction viſit us, let us viſit God; let us anſwer his viſitation of us with our viſitation of him. Lord, in trouble have they viſited thee, they powred out a prayer when thy chaſtening was upon them, Iſa. 26. 16. Would you know what the viſiting of God is? It is praying unto him; They viſited thee, they powred out a prayer when thy chaſtening was upon them. We viſit heaven in our afflictions, when we pray much in our afflictions. When God viſiteth us, let us viſit him, and never give over viſiting him, till he remove his viſitation from us, or ſanctifie it to us. That's the firſt ſenſe.

Secondly, To viſit, in a good ſence, ſignifies to ſhew mercy, and to refreſh, to deliver, and to bleſs, Ruth. 1. 6. Naomi heard how the Lord had viſited his people, and given them bread. Gen. 21. 2. The Lord viſited Sarah, and ſhe conceived, &c. Exod. 3. 16. The Lord hath ſurely viſited his people, when they were upon dawnings of deliverance out of Egypt: That greateſt mercy and deliverance that ever the children of men had, is thus expreſſed, Luke 1. 68. The Lord hath viſited and redeemed his people. Mercies are viſitations, when God comes in kindneſs and love to do us good, he viſiteth us. And theſe mercies are called viſitations in two reſpects.

Firſt, Becauſe God comes near to us when he doth us good: Mercy is a drawing near to a ſoul, a drawing near to a place. As when God ſends a judgment, or afflicts, he is ſaid to depart and go away from that place; ſo when he doth us good, he comes near, and as it were applies himſelf in favour to our perſons and habitations.

Secondly, They are called a viſitation becauſe of the freeneſs of them. A viſit is one of the freeſt things in the world. There is no obligation but that of love, to make a viſit; becauſe ſuch a man is my friend, and I love him, therefore I viſit him. Hence, I ſay, that greateſt act of free grace in redeeming the world, is called a viſitation, becauſe it was as freely done as ever any friend made a viſit to ſee his friend, and with infinite more freedom; there was no obligation on mans ſide at all, many unkindneſſes and neglects there were. God in love came to redeem man.

Idiotiſmus eſt elegans apud Hebræos pro eo quod eſt diligentiſſimè & exactiſſimè rem inveſtigare. Bold.

Thirdly, To viſit, imports an act of care and inſpection, of tutorage and direction. The Paſtors office over the flock, is expreſſed by this act, Zech. 10. 3. Acts 15. 36. And the care we ought to have of the fatherleſs and widows, is expreſt by viſiting of them. Pure Religion (ſaith the Apoſtle James) is this, to viſit the fatherleſs and widows in their affliction Jam. 1. 27. & Mat. 25. 34. Chriſt pronounceth the bleſſing on them who, when he was in priſon, viſited him; which was not a bare ſeeing, or asking how do you; but it was care of Chriſt in his impriſonment, and helpfulneſs and proviſion for him in his afflicted members. That ſence alſo agrees well with this place, What is man that thou ſhouldeſt viſit him? that is, that thou ſhouldſt take care, have ſuch an inſpection over him, look ſo narrowly to, and provide for him? That thou ſhouldſt viſit him every morning?

Reliquum diei tempus, quaſi ob majorem lucis intenſionem vocant. עצם היום Ghetſem, Hajom, i. e. corpus, robur diei. Bold.

Every morning.] The Hebrew is, in the mornings. And the word here uſed for morning is conſiderable: There is a twofold morning, which the Jews diſtinguiſhed exactly by their watch. One morning was that which they accounted from an hour before Sun-riſing, from the very firſt breaking of the day, till the ſun appeared above the Horizon, which is about the ſpace of an hour. And the word which they uſe for it is Shachar, which ſignifies to be darkiſh or blackiſh, becauſe that firſt morning is ſomewhat dark; and ſo the Latine word (diluculum) which is for the firſt morning, is by the Criticks called a little of the day; but their other morning was the ſpace of an hour after Sun-riſing, and the root of that word ſignifies to ſeek or enquire, to enquire diligently. And the reaſon why they expreſs the ſecond morning ſo, is, becauſe when the Sun is up, we may ſeek and ſearch about our buſineſs, or go on in our callings and affairs. The height of the day they call the body or ſtrength, we, the heat of the day; either morning may be here meant, though the word bears the latter properly: Thou doſt viſit him every morning, that is, as ſoon as the Sun is up, yea, as ſoon as day breaks, or there is any light, thou art viſiting. Mans viſits are uſually in the afternoon; it is an extraordinary thing to viſit one in the forenoon, more extraordinary to viſit in a morning, and moſt, early in the morning. Gods viſits are extraordinary viſits. they are viſitings in the morning, and viſitings every morning, as often as the morning returns, ſo often doth God come to viſit; not a morning that we miſs him.

To do a thing every morning, notes, firſt, the doing of it alwayes; or ſecondly, the certain doing of it; Thou doſt viſit every morning, that is, as ſurely and as certain as the Sun riſeth, and the morning cometh, ſo certainly doth God viſit man. Or thirdly, it notes the ſpeed the haſte that God makes to viſit; he viſits in the morning, that is, betimes, God delayes not until noon, much leſs ſtayes till it be night; but he cometh in the morning, Pſal, 46. 5. God ſhall hear her, and that right early; the Hebrew is, God ſhall hear her in the morning, betimes, ſpeedily. The late coming in to work in the vineyard, is expreſt by coming at the eleventh hour, they came ſpeedily, who came in the morning, at the firſt hour. And to ſhew that we ought not to continue in wrath, and keep up our anger, it is ſaid, let not the ſun go down upon your wrath, that is, do not continue all day angry, let your anger go down ſpeedily, even before the Sun.

Hoc ad conſervationem & generalē providentiā pertinet. Metaphora à paſtoribus ſingulis matutinis oves ſuas recenſentibus. Coc.

In this ſence, Job ſaith, that God viſits man every morning, as a ſhepherd his flock, leſt any ſhould be hurt or ſtraid, we may apply it, as before in the ſeveral ſences of viſitation, either to Gods viſiting of us in afflictions, or in mercies, he afflicts (if he pleaſes) continually, ſpeedily, certainly. And as ſure as the Sun riſeth, and the morning cometh, ſo ſure God viſiteth his with mercies; therefore his mercies are ſaid to be renewed every morning, Lam. 3. 23. or freſh every morning. Unleſs God bring new mercies every day, the old would not ſerve: we cannot bring the mercies of one day over to another. The mercies of a former day will not ſupport us the next, therefore they muſt come every morning; ſufficient for the day, is the evil thereof, Matth. 6. and, but ſufficient for the day, is the good thereof. As we are therefore commanded to pray every day for our dayly bread: the bread you had the laſt day, will not ſerve this day, you muſt pray for the bread of this day, and for a bleſſing upon it, that God would viſit your bread, and your ſtore in mercy. So if need require, God afflicts every day: And the hearts of ſome men want as much the rod every day, as bread every day; they could not be without affliction every day, to keep them in order, and God will be as careful to correct his children, as to feed them. If a man be watchful over his own wayes, and the dealings of God with him, there is ſeldom a day, but he may find ſome rod of affliction upon him: But, as through want of care and watchfulneſs, we loſe the ſight of many mercies, ſo we do of many afflictions. Though God doth not every day bring a man to his bed, and break his bones, yet we ſeldom, if at all, paſs a day without ſome rebuke and chaſtning, Pſal. 73. 14. I have been chaſtned every morning, ſaith the Pſalmiſt: Our lives are full of afflictions; and it is as great a part of a Chriſtians skill to know afflictions, as to know mercies; to know when God ſmites, as to know when he girds us; and it is our ſin to overlook afflictions, as well as to overlook mercies.

Secondly, Take the word as it imports care and inſpection: Then Obſerve,

The care of God is renewed every morning.

The eye of God is alway upon us: He viſiteth ſo as he telleth all our ſteps, he tells our very wandrings: he viſiteth us ſo, that we can turn no way but he is with us; his eye of inſpection, as a Tutor, as a guide, is ever upon us; he looks to his people as a ſhepherd to his flock, who knows their wandrings.

And try him every Moment.

בחן Periculum fecit, expertus eſt, tentavit. αὐτὸν κρινεῖς. Sept.

It is of the ſame ſence with the former. [Try him.] The word ſignifies an exact and thorough trial: Some take it to be an alluſion to the practiſe of thoſe who ſet the watch in Armies or Gariſon Towns; who leſt their Centinels or Watchmen ſhould ſleep, uſe to come ſuddenly upon them (poſſibly) divers times in a night, to try whether they are faithful and wakeful; The Prophet Iſaiah hints at ſuch a cuſtom (Chap. 21.) The watchman is ſet, v. 6. Go ſet a watchman, let him declare what he ſeeth: The watchman is tryed, v. 11. He calleth to me out of Seir, watchman what of the night? Watchman what of the night? And it is obſerved in Forraign parts, that their watchmen in Frontier Towns are tryed every hour of the night, the token being, their giving ſo many tolls with the Bell hanging in their Watch-tower, as the great City-clock ſtrikes. This is a good ſence of the place, the Lord viſits us every morning, and tryes us every moment, that is, very, very often, as often as may be, to ſee whether we keep our watches, and ſtand duly upon our guard.

But ſecondly, It may note a trial, as a Schollar is tried, by examination: We call it Probation day, when the proficiency of Schollars is examined; God cometh to examine and make probation of mens proficiency; what have you gotten? How have you improved ſuch times, ſuch opportunities for the gaining of ſpiritual knowledge? What have you learned, what know you more of your ſelves? What more of God and Jeſus Chriſt, whom to know is eternal life?

1. κρίμα.
2. παιδεία.
3. πείρασμος.

Thirdly, It may note tryal by affliction: There are three words which ſignifie the troubles which God brings upon man: They are, Firſt, ſtrictly, Judgments which he ſends in wrath upon enemies: Secondly, Chaſtiſements, and corrections: Thirdly, Temptations or tryals: theſe are proper to his children. Hence Obſerve, Afflictions are tryals.

The Lord proves what grace there is in the heart, and he tries what corruption there is in the heart by affliction. There are many graces in the heart of man untried, and there are ſome that cannot be tried, till God bring him to an hour of trouble. There are many corruptions in the heart of man which he takes no notice of, nor can till he is afflicted; many a good ſoul would not believe that he had ſuch an unbelieving heart, ſuch a proud heart, till God tried him and then corruption diſcovered it ſelf. The reaſon why God brought his people ſuch away about in the wilderneſs, was (Deut. 8. 2.) to prove them, to try them, to know what was in their heart. God knows what is in the heart of man intuitively, and he needs not go about; he can go the neereſt way into every mans heart; he proves it only to make it known to others, and to make a man know himſelf. They could not think their hearts were ſo rebellious, ſo full of murmuring and unbelief, if God had not taken them about to prove and try them thoſe forty years.

Proſperity and comforts are trials too: whatſoever God doth with a man, he ſome way or other tries him. Look not only upon your afflictions as trials, your mercies alſo are trials: God gives you them to ſee what you will do with them; he gives riches, and honour, and credit, to ſee how men will uſe and improve them: as by afflictions, ſo by outward comforts he tries both what grace and what corruption is in our hearts. He gives comforts, to ſee how we can live upon God in Chriſt, when we have the creature: and that we may ſhew how much we make of him, without whom we cannot live, when we have all things beſides him. Proſperity tries corruption, then pride and creature-confidence break forth, which before were undiſcerned: We ſay, Magiſtracy ſhews a man, nature when it is exalted ſhews it ſelf, as much as when it is vext.

He trieth every moment.] A moment is the leaſt part and diviſion of time: To try every moment, is to try not only frequently, but continually: Hence Obſerve,

The temper and ſtate of mans heart is ſo various, that there needs new experiments of him every moment.

Why doth God try us every moment? Becauſe we are one moment in one temper, and the next moment in another: The acting frame of a mans heart this hour, cannot be collected, from the frame it was in an hour before; therefore there is a continual trial. Some things if they be tried once, they are tried for ever; if we try gold, it will ever be as good as we found it, unleſs we alter it: as we try it to be, ſo it continues to be. But try the heart of man this day, and come again the next and you may find it in a different condition; to day believing, to morrow unbelieving; to day humble, to morrow proud; to day meek, to morrow paſſionate; to day lively and enlarged, to morrow dead and ſtraightned; pure gold to day, and to morrow exceeding droſſy. As it is with the pulſe of a ſick man, it varieth every quarter of an hour, therefore the Phyſitian tries his pulſe every time he comes, becauſe his diſeaſe alters the ſtate of his body: ſo it is with the diſtempered condition of mans ſpirit, God having tried our pulſe, the ſtate of our ſpirit, by croſſes or by mercies this day, next day he tries us too, and the third day he tries us again, and ſo keeps us in continual trials, becauſe we are in continual variations: That ſickneſs, and diſeaſe within us, alters the ſtate and condition of the ſoul every moment. Our comfort is, that God hath a time wherein he will ſet our ſouls up in ſuch a frame, as he ſhall need to try us, but that once. Having ſet us up in a frame of glory, he ſhall not need to try our hearts for us, or to put us to the trial of our ſelves any more, we ſhall ſtand as he ſets us up to all eternity.

I muſt yet come down from the thoughts of this bleſſed eternity, and ſhew you Job tired out with his time, and earneſtly calling, but for a minutes reſpite from his pains and ſorrows, in the voice of verſ. 19.

Verſ. 19. How long wilt thou not depart from me, nor let me alone, till I may ſwallow down my ſpittle.

In this verſe Job makes application of the two former to himſelf; as if he had ſaid, ſeeing man is a creature ſo weak and unworthy in himſelf, and I am ſuch among the reſt, why doeſt thou viſit me, and try me every moment? How long ſhall it be ere thou depart from me? or, how long wilt thou not look away from me?

The word under another conſtruction, ſignifies to look upon a man with reſpect and complacency. So Geneſ. 4. 5. The Lord had reſpect unto, or he looked graciouſly upon, Abel and his offering. But here to look away, and ſo Iſa. 22. 4. Look away from me, I will weep bitterly. And becauſe they who with-draw their eyes from us, are ready alſo to with-draw their preſence from us, therefore it ſignifies to depart. How long wilt thou not depart from me, &c.

But is this the voice of Job? Is he burthened with the preſence of God? Or doth he think the time long, till God be gone from him? The wicked ſay unto God depart from us, (Chap. 21. 14.) And the Lord threatens this as the soreſt judgment againſt his own people, Jerem. 6. 8. Be inſtructed O Jeruſalem, leſt my ſoul depart from thee; And by the Prophet Hoſea (Chap. 9. 12.) Wo alſo unto them, when I depart from them. The promiſe of ſtrongeſt conſolation to the Saints, is this, I will never leave thee, nor forſake thee, Heb. 13. 5. And the very offer of a departure, did ſo afflict Moſes, that he was ready to throw up all. Lord, if thy preſence go not along with us, carry us no further (Exod. 23. 15.) How earneſtly do the ſervants of God deprecate the hiding of his face, how bitterly have they complained upon thoſe hidings: how importunately have they prayed, that he would return, look on them, behold them, cauſe his face to ſhine, and lift up the light of his countenance upon them? And is Job ſo weary of Gods company, that he begs of him to depart? Is this the voice of Job? Will a man that is in darkneſs, bid the Sun go from him? Or will a man that is thirſty, ſay to a fountain, turn away from me?

I anſwer, the Lords preſence may be conſidered two wayes.

Firſt, As his pleaſed comforting preſence.

Secondly, As his angry afflicting preſence. When Job ſaith, How long, wilt thou not depart from me? His meaning is, How long, wilt thou not with-draw thine afflicting hand from me? We may expound it by that of David, Pſal. 39. 10. Remove thy ſtroke away from me, I am conſumed by the blow of thine hand. Hence ſome tranſlate, How long doeſt thou not ſpare me? And another gloſſes, Turn thine anger away from me. Or as himſelf ſpeaks of a third perſon (Chap. 14. 6.) Turn from him, that he may reſt, till he ſhall accompliſh, as a hireling his dayes. This ſence is given us fully in the next clauſe of the verſe.

Uſquequò non parcis mihi. Vulg. Iram aliò converte. Jun.

Nor let me alone, till I may ſwallow down my ſpittle.

Accipienda ſunt hæc de Deo affligente non providente, & curante.

This is not a refuſal of ſupport from God in the way of his providence, by which he upholds every creature: For the truth is, if God ſhould ſo let us alone, we of our ſelves are not able to ſwallow down our ſpittle. We are inſufficient barely of our ſelves, not only for ſpiritual acts, but alſo for natural. We can, not only not pray, and hear, and believe, and repent without the ſtrength of Chriſt, but we cannot go, nor walk, nor eat, nor drink, nor ſpit, nor ſwallow down our ſpittle without an aſſiſtance (ſutable to thoſe acts) from him, for in him we live, and move, and have our being. This letting alone, is like the departing before ſpoken, in the firſt clauſe of the verſe. As we uſe to ſay to a man aſſaulting or ſmiting us, Pray let me alone; Such is Job's meaning, pray give over theſe bitter chaſtenings, leave off to wound or ſmite me any more.

The word ſignifies to looſen or unty that which is bound or ſtraightned, and ſo to deal more gently and tenderly then before. The word is uſed ſometimes in a good ſence, to note, that the Lord keeps cloſe and ſtraight to his people, as being knit and bound to them by the tie and knot of his own love and free-grace (Joſh. 1. 5.) I will never leave thee, or let thee looſe from me. And as it is applied in the negative to the cloſe-keeping of God to us in love; ſo in the affirmative, to our departure from God by unbelief, Prov. 24. 10. If thou fainteſt in the day of adverſity, or art looſned from God, by fear and want of faith, thy ſtrength is ſmall. If thou fainteſt thus in the time of ſtraights and poverty, it argues thou haſt a very ſtraight, narrow, poor ſpirit. That's the elegancy of the original.

Si remiſſus fuiſti in die anguſtiæ, anguſta fortitudo tua. Mont.

When Job deſires to be let alone or looſened, his meaning is, looſen the bonds of my affliction, take me off from the rack of theſe tortures and troubles. As we are girded with ſtrength, ſo alſo we are girded with weakneſs. Job ſpeaks of God in this word (Chap. 12. 21.) He weakneth the ſtrength of the mighty; The Hebrew is, he looſeth the girdle of the ſtrong. The ſame God, who looſeth the girdle of our ſtrength, looſeth the bands of our infirmity: and therefore Job prays, O depart from me, looſen me, let me alone, let me go. Hence Obſerve,

In his preſence there is fulneſs of joy, and at his right hand there are pleaſures for evermore (Pſal. 16.) Yet he can make his preſence to be the fulneſs of ſorrow, and give us pains with his right hand. As he can be to his people like a Sun to warm and comfort them, ſo like a fire to conſume and burn them; as like a ſhield to defend, ſo like a ſword to wound them. The Lord is a Sun and a ſhield (Pſal. 84. 11.) yea, and he is ſometime as a fire, and a ſword, even to thoſe who walk uprightly. The ſinners in Sion are afraid, fearfulneſs hath ſurprized the hypocrites. Who among us ſhall dwell with devouring fire; who among us ſhall dwell with everlaſting burnings: That is, who ſhall be able to bear the diſpleaſed preſence of God, which makes him to ſinners as a devouring fire, Iſa. 33. 14. And thus the Saints in Sion are ſometimes afraid, and fearfulneſs ſurprizes the upright in heart: Even they cry out, how ſhall we dwell with this devouring fire, with this everlaſting burning? They eſpecially who have ſlighted the preſence of God, may quickly feel the burden of it. Not only do they ſo, who ſay formally and in plain terms, depart from us; but they alſo do it in a great meaſure, who do not prize the preſence of God, who do not welcom and entertain him in all his approaches to them. If a friend come to your houſe, and you will not look upon him, or ſpeak to him, you bid him be gone, and your ſilence interprets his non-acceptance with you. Then take heed of neglecting the comfortable and ſanctifying preſence of God, leaſt you fall ſpeedily into his afflicting preſence. The angry preſence of God is never ſo terrible to us, as it is after our undervaluings of his gracious preſence. Note, Secondly, If the preſence of God chaſtening, be ſo grievous, what will his preſence be puniſhing and tormenting.

If afflictions which are but for trial, and are all ſteeped in love, be ſo grievous; what will thoſe terrors be, which are all ſteep'd in pure everlaſting wrath? If his chaſtnings be ſo intollerable to ſome of his deareſt friends, what will his revenges be to all his profeſſed enemies? Wicked men are now burdened with the preſence of God becauſe he is ſo holy; they ſay depart, for we deſire not the knowledge of thy law; but hereafter they ſhall find the preſence of God burdenſom to them, becauſe he is ſo juſt; O how will they cry out, How long, ſhall not thy wrath depart from us! How long wilt thou be angry for ever, and ſhall thy jealouſie burn like fire for evermore? Yes, that it ſhall, They who have ſo often ſaid in their hearts to God, depart from us, ſhall hear his voice ſaying unto them, Depart from me ye curſed, &c. Ye who have not loved my preſence, ſhall be baniſhed from it for ever. Obſerve, Thirdly, Troubleſom times are very tedious times to us.

How long? The Pſalmiſt under ſome hidings and ecclipſes of divine favour, thought himſelf in an everlaſting night, Hath the Lord forgotten to be gracious, &c. Will the Lord caſt off for ever? Pſal. 77, 8. Obſerve from the latter branch, Fourthly, That afflictions are bonds.

Firſt, They ſhould bind and hold us faſt from ſin, and to our good behaviour. It is better to be bound faſt with the cords of affliction, then to be looſe and at liberty in the wayes of ſin.

Secondly, They will bind us from taking in our worldly comforts; and ſometimes they do (which they ought not) bind us from taking in ſpiritual comforts. Obſerve, Fifthly, That man cannot reſcue himſelf out of the bands of affliction, till God pleaſe to looſen him.

If he bind none can unty; if he impriſon, none can ſet free; we cannot break his bands, nor caſt away the cords of his afflictions from us. He opens and no man ſhuts, he ſhuts and no man opens, Revel. 3. 7. Be ye not mockers, ſaith the Prophet, leſt your bands be made ſtrong (Iſa. 28. 22.) that is, ſtronger then they were. So I may ſay, be ye not ſtrivers or ſtruglers with God, for your bands are made ſtrong. It is ſaid, Exod. 4. 25, 26. That the Lord met Moſes in the Inn, and ſought to kill him. The Lord is never to ſeek to do what he pleaſes; but thus he ſpeaks after the manner of men, who offer or aſſay at any buſineſs, They ſeek to do it. But Zipporah having circumciſed her ſon, He let Moſes go. It is this word, He ſlacked or looſened, having before as it were arreſted and attached him, or clapt him in priſon for making that great default, the neglect of circumciſion.

Sometimes we find the Lord himſelf ſpeaking, as if he were at the mercy or under the power of man, and therefore calling (in this word) to be looſened or let alone, Deut. 9. 14. Let me alone that I may deſtroy them. The prayer of faith is as a band upon Gods hand, holding him ſo faſt, that he ſeems as one that cannot ſtrike or deſtroy, till a Moſes will give him leave by ceaſing to pray unto him. To be ſure we are at Gods mercy, and under his power ſo, that nothing but the prayer of faith can looſen us. And therefore Job doth not attempt to break the cords, or cut them aſunder, nor ſeeks he to unty their knots, but deſires God himſelf to do it, let me alone, looſen me: I will be a priſoner, till thou openeſt the door for my deliverance.

As Jephtah's daughter ſaid to him (Judg. 11. 37.) when he had bound himſelf and her in the bands of a raſh vow, Let me alone for two months, or looſen me from the engagement of my vow for two moneths, as if ſhe had ſaid, I will not looſen my ſelf by a wilful refuſal, but do thou give me a willing diſpenſation. So a godly man beſpeaks the Lord in his ſtreights, Looſen me Lord. Unleſs God be pleaſed to looſen him, he will be contented, and (when in a good frame of heart, and freeneſs of ſpirit) well-pleaſed with his bands. In ſome ſence he ſpeaks, as Paul and Silas, when they were in priſon (Act. 16. 37.) Let the Lord himſelf come and fetch us out. That is, let us ſee ſuch means of our enlargement and freedom from trouble, as may aſſure us that the Lord hath looſened and enlarged us. A godly man had a thouſand times rather be put into a priſon by God, then put himſelf into a paradiſe. He had rather be bound by Gods hand, then looſened by his own. That place touch'd before, may reach this ſence (Prov. 24. 10.) if thou fainteſt (ſo we) or looſneſt thy ſelf in the day of adverſity, Thy ſtrength is ſmall; that is, the ſtrength of thy faith and patience is ſmall. There is nothing diſcovers our weakneſs more then ſtriving to break the cords of our afflictions. The ſtronger we are in faith, in love, in humility, the more quietly we lie bound. Faith ſeeks eaſe and releaſe only in God: to ſay Lord looſen me is a duty, to looſen our ſelves is both our ſin and our puniſhment.

Till I may ſwallow down my ſpittle.

Some conceive, that from this Hebrew word (Rak) which we tranſlate ſpittle, Raca is derived (Matth. 5. 22.) as if to call a man Raca, were as much as to ſay, he is worthy to be ſpit upon, or that one ſhould ſpit in his face: though others ſpring that word from Rik, which ſignifies empty, as if it were as much to call a man an empty fellow, without wit or brains, or within one degree of a fool, which is the next word in Matthew.

רק Saliva, undè quidã deducunt Raca, Mat. 5. 22. quod κατάπτυσον interpretantur, i. e. conſpuendũ vel dignum qui conſpuatur. Alii à ריק vacuus quaſi cerebro vacuus & judicio carens. Druſ.

But what is Job's intendment, in deſiring God to let him alone, Till he might ſwallow down his ſpittle.

Firſt, Some refer it to a bodily diſtemper, as if Job were troubled with a * ſquinſie or ſore throat, which hindered the ſwallowing of his ſpittle.

Another takes it in a Philoſophical notion; as if Job had ſaid, Lord let me have ſome eaſe, that I may at leaſt taſte once more, what it is to live or how ſweet life is. For that ſence of taſte works by the ſalival humor or ſpittle in the mouth, which mixing with the juyce or ſap that is in meats, affects and delights the pallate.

Dimittet me, ut guſtum aliquem hujus vitæ capiam. Alber.

Thirdly, Theſe words are taken as the deſcription of a man ready to die, who is diſabl'd either to ſwallow his ſpittle or to void it. As if he had ſaid, I am now even at the point of death, let me alone a little; David's Prayer comes near this ſence, Pſal. 39. 13. O ſpare me that I may recover ſtrength, before I go hence and be no more.

Fourthly, It may be taken proverbially, and that two wayes.

Firſt, To note the ſhorteſt time, even ſo much as may ſerve a man to ſpit. As if he had ſaid, O let me have a little intermiſſion, a little reſpite; ſuch is the ſence of that phraſe, Chap. 9. 18. He will not ſuffer me to take my breath. And the like are thoſe uſed in ſome Countries, I have not leiſure or time to ſcratch my ear, or to pare my nails, My ſorrows know no interim: my feaver is one continued fit, I have no well dayes, no nor a good hour; therefore let me at leaſt have ſo much time of eaſe, as I may ſwallow my ſpittle, let me have the ſhorteſt time, that I may once more know (though but for a moment) what it is to be without pain. To which interpretation that alſo ſubſcribes, which makes theſe words to be a circumlocution for ſilence. For while a man is ſwallowing his ſpittle, his ſpeech ſtops: he cannot bring up his words, and let down his ſpittle at the ſame time; ſo his meaning is, I am forced to complain continually, I would be ſilent and forbear ſpeaking, but my grief will not ſuffer me.

Sermo proverbialis talis eſt, neq; ad ſculpendas aures mihi otium eſt.

Ne tantillũ quidem temporis eſt quo non tenter à te. Con.

The ſecond Proverbial underſtanding of the words, is that they import a very ſtrict watch held upon another in all his motions: ſo that he cannot ſtir a finger, or move his tongue (ſilently) in his mouth un-obſerved. If I do but ſtir my tongue, to ſwallow my ſpittle (which is one of the moſt unperceivable acts of man) thou takeſt notice. O do not hold ſo ſtrict a hand, and ſo curious an eye upon me. Let me have a little liberty, do not examine every failing, do not queſtion me upon the leaſt infirmity.

Elegans proverbialis loquutio ad denotandum diligentem in alium intuitum quo minimas in alio diſcernet actiones. Saliva fere imperceptibiliter abſorbetur.

From the former Proverbial expoſition. Obſerve,

Firſt, Afflictions are continued upon ſome without any intermiſſion.

Job had not ſo much whole skin, as one might ſet a pin on, nor ſo much whole time, as a man might ſpit in. Every hour brought a wound with it, and the renewing of every moment, renewed his affliction. Obſerve, Secondly, A ſhort refreſhing may be a great mercy.

Dives in Hell deſires not a large draught, but a drop of water, which alas! could not have eaſed him ſo long, as a man is ſwallowing down his ſpittle. The eternity of pain in Hell ſhall not find ſo much abatement, as that either in time or in degree. Every affliction in this life, by how much it is with leſs intermiſſion, by ſo much the more like it is to Hell; and every comfort by how much the more it is unbroken, and without ſtops, by ſo much it is the more like to Heaven. Conſider then your mercies, who have un-interrupted mercies, dayes and years of eaſe, and not pained ſo long as a man is ſwallowing down his ſpittle: your mercies are like the glory and the joy of Heaven.

From the latter Proverbial expoſition. Note,

That God obſerves the leaſt, the moſt ſecret motions of man.

He tels our ſteps our wandrings; and thoſe not only corporal, but moral and ſpiritual. He knows how many ſteps our hearts fetch every day, and how far they travel, Thou haſt ſearched and known me (ſaith David, Pſal. 139. 1, 2.) and this ſearch is not made in the out-rooms only, but in the inner parlor and cloſeſt cloſets, Thou underſtandeſt my thoughts, and thoſe (not only preſent, or produced, but to come and unborn) thou knoweſt them a far off. What can ſcape that eye, which a thought cannot? And he that ſees man ſwallowing down his ſpittle, how ſhall not he both hear and ſee him, coughing up and ſpitting out the rottenneſs and corruption, the filth and flegme of his ſinful heart?

VERS.

* Inter cætera mala Synanchen habuiſſe ſe perhibet. Hieron.

VERS. 20, 21.

I have ſinned, what ſhall I do unto thee, O thou preſerver of men! why haſt thou ſet me as a mark againſt thee, ſo that I am a burden to my ſelf?

And why doſt thou not pardon my tranſgreſſion, and take away mine iniquity? for now ſhall I ſleep in the duſt, and thou ſhalt ſeek me in the morning, but I ſhall not be.

JOB, having in the former part of this Chapter conteſted with his friends, and expoſtulated the matter with God; now turns himſelf into another poſture, even to humble his ſoul, and make confeſſion of his ſin, He had juſtified himſelf againſt the accuſations of men, but now he accuſes and judges himſelf in the preſence of God; He will a while forget his ſorrows, and bethink himſelf of his ſins, I have ſinned, what ſhall I do unto thee, O thou preſerver of men!

The words may be taken two wayes.

1. As a Confeſſion or a Prayer.
2. As a Conceſſion or a Grant.

I ſhall firſt open them under the notion of a repenting prayer and confeſſion of ſin.

I have ſinned.] As if he had ſaid, Lord, if thou holdeſt me thus long upon the rack of this affliction, to gain a confeſſion of me, to make me confeſs, here I am ready to do it, I do it; I have ſinned.

The word ſignifies to miſs the mark we aim at, or the way wherein we would walk. And ſo it is put ſtrictly for ſins of infirmity, when the purpoſe of a mans heart is (like the Archers, when he draws his Bow) to hit the white, or (like the honeſt travellers in his journey) to keep the right way, and yet he miſcarries, and is drawn aſide.

I have ſinned.] But is this a ſufficient confeſſion? What! to ſay only in general, I have ſinned. Did not hard-hearted Pharaoh (Exod. 9. 25.) falſe-hearted Saul (1 Sam. 15. 24.) and traitor-Judas (Mat. 27. 4.) make as good a confeſſion as this. Every one of theſe ſaid I have ſinned; and what doth Job ſay more? It is ſurely no great coſt nor pain to ſinful natnre, to bring up ſuch a confeſſion as this.

I anſwer, Firſt, A general confeſſion may be a ſound confeſſion: It is one thing not to expreſs particular ſins with the circumſtances of thoſe ſins, and another thing purpoſely to conceal them. I grant, Implicit confeſſion may be as dangerous as implicit faith. And to dig in the earth, and hide our ſins in the Napkin of our excuſes, is worſe then to hide our talents in the Napkin of our idleneſs: And as it is moſt dangerous knowingly to conceal ſin from God, ſo it is very dangerous to do it through ignorance and inadvertency; ſome confeſs ſin in general terms only, becauſe they know not what their ſins are, or have quite forgot them; as Nebuchadnezzar called the Aſtrologers, and Sorcerers, and Chaldeans, and told them he had dreamed a dream, but he could not tell what it was; for the thing was gone from him, Dan. 2. 5. Some ſuch there are, who can or will only ſay, they have ſinned, they have ſinned; but what, they cannot tell, or they do not remember, Thoſe things are gone from them. That which is written of the learned Bellarmine, a great Cardinal, and a champion for auricular, particular confeſſion of ſin to man, ſeems very ſtrange, that when he lay upon his death-bed, and the Prieſt, after the Popiſh manner, came to abſolve him, he had nothing to confeſs; at laſt he thought of ſome ſlight extravagancies of his youth, which was all he had to ſay of his own miſcarriages: We ſee a man may be a Scholar in all the knowledge of the world, of nature, and of Scripture, and yet not know his own heart, nor be ſtudied or read himſelf. He that is ſo in a ſpiritual notion, can never want particular matter in his moſt innocent dayes to confeſs before the Lord, and to ſhame himſelf for. What though he hath eſcaped the pollutions of the world, and is cleanſed from the filthineſs of the fleſh? yet he knows that ſtill in his fleſh there dwells no good thing, and that in his ſpirit, there are, at the leaſt, touches of many ſpiritual filthineſſes, as pride, unbelief, &c. beſides his great deficiencies in every duty, and in his love to Jeſus Chriſt, which is the ground of all. So then, in any of theſe ſences, to confeſs ſin only in general, is a ſinful confeſſion. And yet Job made a holy confeſſion here, and ſo did the Publican (Luke 18.) when he ſmote his breaſt, and ſaid only thus, God be merciful to me a ſinner.

For ſecondly, Though to ſpeak a general confeſſion, be an eaſie matter, and every mans work, yet to make a general confeſſion is a hard matter, a work beyond man. As no man (in a ſpiritual ſence) can ſay, Jeſus is the Lord, but by the holy Ghoſt (1 Cor. 12. 3) ſo no man can ſay (in a holy manner) I have ſinned, but by the holy Ghoſt; good and bad, believers and unbelievers, ſpeak often the ſame good words, but they cannot ſpeak the ſame things, nor from the ſame principles; Nature ſpeaks in the one, in the other Grace. The one may ſay, very paſſionately, he hath ſinned, and ſometimes almoſt drown his words in tears; but the other ſaith repentingly, I have ſinned, and floods his heart with godly ſorrows.

Thirdly, To clear it yet more, the general confeſſions of the Saints have theſe four things in them.

Firſt, Beſides the fact, they acknowledge the blot, that there is much defilement and blackneſs in every ſin; that it is the only pollution and abaſement of the creature.

Secondly, They confeſs the fault, that they have done very ill in what they have done, and very fooliſhly, even like a beaſt that hath no underſtanding.

Thirdly, They confeſs a guilt contracted by what they have done, that their perſons might be laid liable to the ſentence of the Law for every ſuch act, if Chriſt had not taken away the curſe and condemning power of it. Confeſſion of ſin (in the ſtrict nature of it) puts us into the hand of juſtice; though through the grace of the new covenant, it puts us into the hand of mercy.

Fourthly, Hence the Saints confeſs all the puniſhments threatned in the Book of God to be due to ſin; and are ready to acquit God, whatſoever he hath awarded againſt ſinners: O Lord; righteouſneſs belongeth unto thee, but unto us confuſion of face, as at this day, to the men of Judah, and to the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, Dan. 9. 7.

And as in this confeſſion, for the matter, they acknowledge the blot, the fault, the guilt, the puniſhment of ſin; ſo for the manner (which ſets the difference yet wider between the general confeſſion of wicked and godly men) they confeſs, Firſt, freely; Acknowledgments of ſin are not extorted by the pain and trouble which ſeizeth on them, as in Pharaoh, Saul and Judas. But when God gives them beſt dayes, they are ready to ſpeak worſt of themſelves; and when they receive moſt mercies from God, then God receives moſt and deepeſt acknowledgments of ſin from them. They are never ſo humbled in the ſight of ſin, as when they are moſt exalted in ſeeing the ſalvations of the Lord. The goodneſs of God leads them to this repentance, they are not driven to it by wrath and thunder.

Secondly, They confeſs feelingly; when they ſay they have ſinned, they know what they ſay. They taſte the bitterneſs of ſin, and groan under the burdenſomeneſs of it, as it paſſes out in confeſſion. A natural mans confeſſions run through him as water through a pipe, which leaves no impreſſion or ſcent there; nor do they (upon the matter) any more taſte what ſin is, then the pipe doth of what reliſh water is. Or if a natural man feels any thing in confeſſion, it is the evil of puniſhment feared, not the evil of his ſin committed.

Thirdly, They confeſs ſincerely; they mean what they ſay, and are in earneſt both with God and their own ſouls, Bleſſed is the man in whoſe ſpirit there is no guile, Pſal. 32. 2. The natural man caſts out his ſin by condition, as Seamen caſt their goods over-board in a ſtorm, which in the calm they wiſh for again. They ſo caſt out the evil ſpirit, that they are content to receive him again when he returns, though it be with ſeven worſe then himſelf. Even while they confeſs ſin with their lips, they keep it, like a ſweet bit, under their tongues, and wiſh it well enough, while they ſpeak it very ill.

Fourthly, They confeſs believingly; while they have an eye of ſorrow upon ſin, they have an eye of faith upon Chriſt: Judas ſaid he had ſinned in betraying innocent blood (Mat. 27. 4.) but in ſtead of waſhing in that blood, he defiles himſelf with his own, he goes away and hangs himſelf. No wicked man in the world (continuing in that ſtate) did ever mix faith with his ſorrows, or believing ing with confeſſing he had ſinned. So much for the clearing of the words, and the ſence of this general confeſſion.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, While a godly man maintains his innocency, and juſtifies himſelf before man, he willingly acknowledges his infirmity, and judges himſelf before God.

Job had ſpent much time in wiping off the aſperſions caſt upon him by his friends, but he charges himſelf with his failings in the ſight of God.

Secondly obſerve, God ſpeaks better of his ſervants then they do of themſelves.

When God ſpeaks of Job, we find not one blot in all his character, all is commendation, nothing of reproof. He ſaith (c. 1.21.) In all this Job ſinned not; but for all that, Job ſaith, I have ſinned: A hypocrite hath good thoughts of himſelf, and ſpeaks himſelf fair; He flatters himſelf in his own eyes, until his iniquity be found to be hateful, Pſal. 36. 2. A godly man thinks and ſpeaks low of himſelf, he accuſes himſelf in his own eyes, though his integrity be found very acceptable with the Lord.

Thirdly obſerve, The holieſt man on earth hath cauſe to confeſs that he hath ſinned.

Confeſſion is the duty of the beſt Chriſtians. Firſt, The higheſt form of believers in this life, is not above the actings of ſin; though the loweſt of believers is not under the power of it. And if the line of ſinning be as long as the line of living, then the line of confeſſing muſt be of the ſame length with both. While the ſhip leaks, the pump muſt not ſtand ſtill. And ſo long as we gather ill humors, there will be need of vomits and purgings.

Secondly, Confeſſion is a ſoul-humbling duty, and the beſt have need of that, for they are in moſt danger of being lifted up above meaſure. To preſerve us from thoſe ſelf-exaltations, the Lord ſometimes ſends the meſſenger of Satan to buffet us by temptations, and commands us to buffet our ſelves often by confeſſion.

Thirdly, Confeſſion affects the heart with ſin, and engages the heart againſt it. Every confeſſion of the evil we do, is a new obligation not to do it any more. The beſt in their worſt part, have ſo much freedom to ſin, that they have need enough to be bound from it in variety of bonds.

Fourthly, Confeſſion of ſin ſhews us more clearly our need of mercy, and endears it more to us. How good and ſweet is mercy to a ſoul that hath taſted how evil and how bitter a thing it is to ſin againſt the Lord? How welcome, how beautiful is a pardon, when we have been viewing the uglineſs of our own guilt?

Fifthly, Confeſſion of ſin advances Chriſt in our hearts. How doth it declare the riches of Chriſt, when we are not afraid to tell him what infinite ſums of debt we are in, which he only, and he eaſily can diſcharge? How doth it commend the healing virtue of his blood, when we open to him ſuch mortal wounds and ſickneſſes, which he only, and he eaſily can cure? Wo be to thoſe who commit ſin abundantly that grace may abound; but it is our duty to confeſs ſin abundantly, that grace may abound.

Laſtly, Though we need not confeſs ſin at all to inform God: he knows our ſins, though we will not make them known; and hath an eye to ſee, though we ſhould not have a tongue to confeſs. Though (I ſay) we confeſs not to inform God what we are, or what we have done, yet we muſt confeſs to glorifie God. While we ſhame our ſelves, we honour him. My ſon (ſaith Joſhua to Achan, c. 7. v. 19.) give I pray thee, glory to the Lord God of Iſrael, and make confeſſion unto him. Every attribute of God receives this gift of glory by mans confeſſion. Juſtice is glorified, and mercy is glorified, patience is glorified, and holineſs is glorified. Holineſs is glorified in oppoſing ſin, and patience in ſparing the ſinner; mercy is glorified in pardoning ſin, and juſtice in receiving ſatisfaction at the hand of Chriſt for the pardon of it.

Job begins the next verſe with a vehement prayer for pardon. And why doſt thou not pardon my tranſgreſſion, and take away mine iniquity? Sin concealed and kept cloſe, grows upon us: And it grows three wayes. Firſt, In the ſtrength of it. Secondly, In the guilt of it. Thirdly, In the terror and vexation of it, Pſal. 32. 3, 4. When I kept ſilence, my bones waxed old, through my roaring all the day long. Confeſſion is a means to obtain the abatement of ſin in all three. The ſtrength of it is weakned, the guilt removed, and the terrour overcome. Then hear the counſel of the Prophet (Iſa. 43.26.) declare that thou maiſt be juſtified.

Thus far of the words as they are a confeſſion of ſin. I ſhall now handle them as they are a conceſſion or a grant that he had ſinned; and ſo the ſence may be given thus; I have ſinned, what ſhall I do unto thee? As if he had ſaid, Let it be granted, or ſuppoſe that I have ſinned, and ſinned as deeply as my friends have charged me; ſuppoſe I have been as wicked as they imagine, what then? if this were my caſe, what ſhall I do unto thee, O thou preſerver of men?

The latter words plainly import a queſtion, What ſhall I do unto thee? But the ſence of the queſtion is not ſo plain: The queſtion may be taken two wayes; either affirmatively, or negatively. Take it affirmatively, and ſo the ſence is, What ſhall I do? that is, Lord direct me, counſel me, order me, teach me what becomes me to do in ſuch a caſe, in ſuch a ſinful condition as I either confeſs my ſelf to be in, or am ſuppoſed to be in. That's the affirmative ſence.

What ſhall I do?] The word which we tranſlate [do] ſignifies working or doing, under a twofold qualification.

אפעל A radice Pagnal, reſpondet Græco, ἐργάζομαι, eſt agere cum energia & effectu. Piſc.

Firſt, Working with great willingneſs and readineſs of mind; and hence it is applied to the workings of ſin in natural men, who work with the greateſt freedom that can be. Man ſins naturally, and therefore freely; he is carried on with a full ſwing, with tide and wind; he ſins, nothing in himſelf contradicting or giving a contrary vote; he is a true worker of iniquity, Pſal. 5. 5.

Secondly, Working with energie and ſucceſs, and the doing of a thing not only effectually, but willingly, Num. 23.23. What hath God wrought? When God works, he works throughly, he doth not his buſineſs to halves. So, Iſa. 26. 12. Thou haſt wrought all our works in us, that is, thou haſt brought them to paſs, they have ſucceeded through thy help, and the influences of thy bleſſing.

The word being taken in this height of ſence, and the queſtion for an affirmation, what ſhall I do? that is, ſhew me, direct me what to do; we may obſerve from it, Firſt, That, What to do in caſe of ſin, is a point of the higheſt conſideration.

I have ſinned, what ſhall I do? If ever we have need to go and ask counſel, to ſit down and debate the matter with our ſelves or others, it is, when we have ſinned. Such is the nature of ſin, and ſuch the conſequences, that it calls us to higheſt conſideration what to do about it. Matters of great conſequence are matters of great conſultation: Sin hath an influence upon an eternity. If any thing be more worthy your thoughts then that, let it have them.

Secondly, Look upon the queſtion as following Job's confeſſion: Whence obſerve,

That, Sincere confeſſion of ſin, makes the ſoul very active and inquiſitive about the remedies of ſin.

I have ſinned; The very next word is, What ſhall I do? Many make confeſſion of ſin, who are never troubled about the cure and redreſs of ſin; Lord, what ſhall I do? is not the next queſtion to Lord, I have ſinned. Nay, it may be, the next action is to ſin over the ſame ſin they have confeſt. As ſoon as thoſe Jews heard of the foulneſs of their ſin in crucifying Chriſt, and of the ſadneſs of their condition their queſtion is like this of Job, What ſhall we do? What ſhall we do that we may be ſaved? As Chriſt ſpeaks to the woman of Samaria (John 4. 10.) when he offered her the water of life, If thou didſt know the gift of God, and who it is that ſpeaks unto thee, thou wouldeſt have asked, &c. That is, if thou wert ſenſible of the excellency and virtue of this water, and thy need of it, thou wouldeſt be very inquiſitive how to get it, how to have a taſte of it. As in regard of Chriſt, and the benefits we have by him, ſo of ſin and the evils which come by it: When a man hath confeſt and acknowledged his ſin, we may ſay to him, if thou didſt but know what thou haſt confeſt, if thou didſt but know what thou haſt acknowledged, thou wouldeſt preſently be asking, how ſhall I get free? how ſhall I get clear of theſe ſins which are ſo deadly, poyſonous, deſtroying and condemning? He that is but ſenſible what the wound of ſin is, will never be at reſt, never give over enquiring, till he hath found a plaiſter or a medicine for it. He that knows what he ſaith, when he ſaith I have ſinned, will reſolve as David in another caſe, that his eyes ſhall not have a wink of ſleep till he ſees where to have help againſt it.

Thirdly, In that he ſaith, what ſhall I do? obſerve,

> That, A ſoul truly ſenſible of ſin, is ready to ſubmit to any terms which God ſhall put upon him.

What ſhall I do unto thee, O thou preſerver of men? Put what terms thou wilt upon me, I am ready to accept them. That was the ſence of their queſtion (Acts 2. 32.) What ſhall we do? ſhew us the way, let it be what it will, we will not ſtand making of conditions, we will not pick and chuſe, this we will do, and that we will not do; this we will ſubmit unto, and that we will refuſe; no, let the Lord write what Articles he pleaſes, we intend not to debate, but yield and ſubſcribe unto them. When the Jaylor found himſelf in the bonds of his iniquity, he was ready to enter into any bonds of duty, Acts 16. 30. Sirs, what muſt I do to be ſaved?

Laſtly, From the queſtion in the affirmative, obſerve,

> That, God is to be conſulted and enquired after in all doubtful caſes, eſpecially in our ſin-caſes.

I have ſinned, what ſhall I do unto thee, O thou preſerver of men? He calls upon God to know what he ſhould do, and to learn what courſe he ſhould take. Though, when we have opportunity to ſpeak to men, that's good and a duty; yet we muſt not reſt in the counſels of men, what to do in ſin-caſes: God muſt be conſulted. After the people had committed Idolatry in making the Calf, you have ſinned (ſaith Moſes) and now I will go up unto the Lord, that I may make an atonement for you: I will go up to the Lord, that I may underſtand from him what courſe to take for the removing of this ſin. Though we have not ſuch a Mount to go up unto as Moſes then had, to ſpeak to God; yet there are wayes for the ſoul in all ſin-caſes, to make addreſſes unto God: A ſinner may ſay, I will go to the Lord, and make my atonement; whatſoever advice and direction we receive from men, we muſt enquire whether it be an advice and counſel eſtabliſhed in heaven. And the reaſon is clear, God is the perſon offended in every ſin, and therefore he muſt be conſulted about the remedy of ſin. Again, God only can reſolve us what will pleaſe him; we may pitch upon a wrong courſe, and take a wrong way; we, in ſtead of pacifying God, may provoke him; in ſtead of ſatisfying, further diſpleaſe him: therefore we muſt ſay, when we have ſinned, Lord, what wilt thou have us to do? His advice will lead us to Chriſt for eaſe and peace.

So far for the queſtion taken in the affirmative ſence, What ſhall I do unto thee? ſhew me what I ſhall do, and I will readily ſubmit unto it.

Secondly, Take the queſtion negatively, What ſhall I do unto thee? And ſo I find two ſences of it.

Quid tibi nocui, aut quid te læſi? Olymp.

Firſt, Some render it thus, What have I done againſt thee? And then the meaning is this, I have done nothing againſt thee, or I have not hurt thee by ſinning: What have I done againſt thee? Wherein have I injured thee, that thou layeſt thy hand thus ſeverely upon me in theſe grievous afflictions, both upon my ſoul and body? I am hurt, what have I hurt thee? There is a truth in this, though I take it not for the truth of this place. A man when he ſaith he hath ſinned, what hurt have I done unto God? and yet all the hurt and wrong which God receives, he receives by ſin. Our ſins are no hurt unto God, by abating any thing of his happineſs or fulneſs, or intrinſecal eſſential honour; take it thus, and our ſins cannot hurt God: All the darts of our ſins fall infinitely ſhort of God, they cannot reach him, ſo as to annoy him. And we have that language expreſly in Job 35. 6. If thou doſt ſin, what doſt thou againſt him? (that is, thou doſt nothing againſt God, as a real dammage to him) or if thy tranſgreſſions be multiplied, what doſt thou unto him? Sin as many ſins as you can, you cannot impair the happineſs of God, or diminiſh his greatneſs; he is out of the reach of the creature in that ſence. As on the other ſide, if a man be never ſo holy and good, or do never ſo many acts of righteouſneſs, yet God hath no good or gain by it; we cannot advantage God by our holineſs, and that is the language of this Scripture too, Job 35. 7. If thou be righteous, what giveſt thou him, or what receiveth he of thine hand? We make no addition to the happineſs of God by all our holineſs, Job 22. 3. Is it any pleaſure to the Almighty that thou art righteous? or any gain unto him that thou makeſt thy wayes perfect? That which is infinite cannot encreaſe, neither can it be encreaſed. God is above all gain and loſs, above all acceſſes of pleaſure and pain. When the Scripture ſaith, he is delighted in the ſervices of his Saints, and takes pleaſure in his people, we muſt underſtand them in the ſame ſence as thoſe Scriptures, which deſcribe him diſpleaſed with the ſins of men, angry and grieved, becauſe of their provocations. All the motions of Gods delight or grief, pleaſedneſs or diſpleaſure, are only expreſſions towards the creature, not any impreſſions upon himſelf. But I ſhall let that ſence paſs.

Peccata noſtra beatam illam naturam labefactare non poſſunt.

'Ει ἐγω ἥμαρτον τὶ δυνήσομαι πράξαι. Sept.

Secondly, In the negative, take the queſtion thus, what ſhall I do unto thee? Or, as the Septuagint reads it, what can I do unto thee? That is, I can do nothing to thee. Lord, I have ſinned, and if thou ſeekeſt for ſatisfaction at my hands, I am able to make none. And ſo he ſpeaks like a poor, undone, broken man to his rich Creditor arreſting him for a debt which he is unable to pay. The poor man falls down at his feet, and ſaith, Sir I confeſs I owe you a great Sum, you have my Bonds, I confeſs my Hand and Seal, but what ſhall I do unto you? I cannot pay you a penny, I have nothing, I have loſt all, I am not worth a groat, what will you have of me? This ſounds ſuch a kind of melting pitiful language, I have ſinned, what ſhall I do unto thee, O thou preſerver of men? Lord, when I look into my ſtock, into my treaſure and revenues, I ſee I have nothing to ſatisfie this debt of ſin I have run in and ſtand engaged to thy Majeſty for; what can I pay thee? and ſo the word [do] ſignifies a retribution or recompence; ſo it is uſed in the ſecond verſe of this Chapter, where he ſpeaks of the hireling, waiting for his work, that is, for the reward or recompence of his work, the payment of his wages. What ſhall I do? is as much as, what ſhall I pay, or, what ſhall I render? This is a due debt, but I have nothing to pay, no way of making ſatisfaction for all the dammage I have put thy holy Majeſty to by my ſins.

Or thus, there may be a threefold negation in the Queſtion, What ſhall I do unto thee?

Firſt, I can do nothing to eſcape thy power. I cannot get away from thee, I cannot reſcue my ſelf from under thy hand.

Secondly, I can do nothing to ſatisfie thy Juſtice.

Thirdly, I can do nothing to pacifie thine anger. I cannot only not pay the debt, but I cannot appeaſe thee, or turn away thy diſpleaſure in the leaſt degree.

From the Queſtion taken in this ſence, we may obſerve,

> Firſt, That, The holieſt man on the earth by all his ſufferings and doings, cannot ſatisfie the juſtice of God for one ſin. I have ſinned, what ſhall I do unto thee?

When the Angels had ſinned, what could they do unto God in this reſpect? Theſe three negations lay upon them, and do lie to this day, and ſhall to all eternity. They ſinned but once, yet could they not eſcape out of the hand of God. Though Spirits and Powers, yet they could not maintain their ſtate againſt the power of God, and are therefore caſt into priſon, and reſerved in chains of darkneſs to the judgment of the great day. They could not pacifie the wrath of God towards them, God is as highly diſpleaſed, and his wrath burns as hot againſt them as ever. Now if ſinning Angels could do nothing to God, what can ſinful man do? The Queſtion is put, Micah 6. 6. Wherewith ſhall I come before the Lord? and bow my ſelf before the high God? Shall I come before him with burnt offerings, with calves of a year old? will the Lord be pleaſed with thouſands of rams, or with ten thouſand rivers of oyl? Shall I give my firſt-born for my tranſgreſſion, the fruit of my body for the ſin of my ſoul? Theſe Queſtions are denials; come not before God with any of theſe. Then what is it that God doth require? He hath ſhewed thee what is good, to do judgment and righteouſneſs, to walk humbly with thy God. But why theſe things? What though I cannot make a price for my ſin with calves and rams, and rivers of oil, though my children will not be accepted as a ranſom for my tranſgreſſions, yet can I make a price for them out of juſtice and righteouſneſs and humble walking? No, not out of theſe neither. The The Lord doth not require theſe for the payments of our debt, as we are ſinners, but for the payment of duty, as we are creatures. There is a double debt to God; a debt to the juſtice of God for ſins committed, and a debt to the Law of God for duties enjoyned. The former no man is able to pay but with eternal ſufferings. The latter, the Saints (through grace) do pay by their daily holy actings.

There is a threefold deficiency in all that man can do, to ſatisfie the juſtice of God.

Firſt, All is imperfect and defiled, our ſervices ſmell of the veſſel through which they paſs, and taſte of the cask into which they are put. There is a ſtamp of our ſinfulneſs even upon our holy things. And can that which is ſinful ſatisfie for ſin?

Secondly, Whatſoever we do is a debt before we do it. All our duties are owing before we perform them. And can we pay the debt of ſin by thoſe duties which were due though ſin had never been committed.

Thirdly, The greateſt deficiency is this, our works want the ſtamp of Gods appointment for that purpoſe. God hath no where ſet up mans righteouſneſs, as ſatisfaction for mans unrighteouſneſs. Hence, if it ſhould be ſuppoſed, we had performed perfect righteouſneſs according to the whole will of God commanded, yet we could not ſatisfie the juſtice of God offended, unleſs God had ſaid, that he would accept that way of ſatisfaction; it is the appointment and inſtitution of God which renders what we do acceptable unto himſelf. Surely all that Jeſus Chriſt did or ſuffered for us in the fleſh, had not ſatisfied the juſtice of God, if God had not appointed that Chriſt ſhould do and ſuffer thoſe things for the ſatisfying of his iuſtice. It was the compact between Chriſt and his Father, which made him a Sacrifice, Sacrifice and offering thou didſt not deſire. Sacrifices were refuſed by God, it being impoſſible that they ſhould purge ſin (Heb. 10.4.) Then the ear of Chriſt was opened or bored, as a ſervant, according to the Law in that caſe, Exod. 21.6. to receive and do the will of his Father, Or, as the Seventy interpret, which the Apoſtle follows, God prepared him a body. Then Chriſt undertakes the work; And ſaid, Lo I come to do thy will, O God. Why? In the Volume of the Book it is written of me. That is, thou haſt decreed and ordained from everlaſting; the record is clear for it, that I am he whom thou haſt ordained to do thy will. Hence the Apoſtle concludes at ver. 10. That we are ſanctified (that is, ſaved) by that will through the offering of the body of Jeſus once for all; as inferring, that the very offering of the body of Jeſus Chriſt could not ſave us, but by the will and ordination of God. His hanging and dying on the Croſs had not delivered us from death, unleſs it had been written in the volume of the Book. There is nothing ſatisfactory but what the Law, or the will of the Lawgiver makes or agrees to accept as ſatisfactory. In the volume of the Book there is nothing written which appoints man ſuch a work, and therefore he cannot do it.

There is ſomewhat to be done by way of thankfulneſs, but nothing can be done by way of payment. That queſtion (Pſal. 116.12.) affirms as much, What ſhall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits? We muſt render unto the Lord for his benefits; but we cannot render to the Lord for our ſins. We ought to take up the cup of thankſgiving; but Chriſt hath, and he alone was able, and he alone was ordained to take and drink the cup of ſatisfying.

Secondly, Obſerve (which depends upon the former.)

That, Pardon and forgiveneſs of ſin come in at the door of free-grace.

Free grace doth all. What can I do? I can do nothing, O thou preſerver of men; I can only (nor that without thy help) acknowledge my ſin: it muſt be thine infinite goodneſs to pardon it. When a man hath travelled through all duties and doings, he muſt at laſt ſit down in Gods love, and reſt in this, that God is merciful to poor ſinners, Iſa. 55.1. Come unto me, O all ye that are thirſty, come without money or without price. There is nothing in the creature that God requires as a price of his favour; his milk and his honey, his bread and his water, are all gifts and bounties unto his people. He calls us to buy theſe, becauſe we ſhall have them as willingly from God, as any things from man for our money; and he calls it a buying without money, becauſe no value can be ſet upon it high enough, nor any heart receive it freely enough. To offer money, that is, to think to obtain any of that favour by what we do, is the moſt dangerous offer in the world. We read how dreadful the iſſue was to Simon Magus, when he offered money for the gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, and yet thoſe gifts were ſuch, as a man man may have, and go to hell with them; for they were but gifts of miracles and of healing, and the like: But this gift of the favour and love of God in the pardon of ſin, is ſuch a gift, as whoſoever hath it, is ſure and ſafe for ever; and therefore (the gift being much more precious then that of Simon Magus) take heed of offering this kind of money for it, your works and doings. To do ſo, is the worſt Simonie in the world. Better offer literal money for thoſe gifts of the holy Ghoſt, then this figurative money for the favour of God in the pardon of ſin. What Peter threatned Simon Magus, may be affirmed of them, Their money muſt periſh with them, that is, their prayers and tears, their ſorrows and their humblings, their almes and good deeds, foraſmuch as they have thought that this gift of pardon may be obtained by ſuch money, they have neither part nor lot in that mercy, for their hearts are not right in the ſight of God. A good work truſted to, is as mortal as a ſin unrepented of.

Again, There is ſomewhat to be done when we have ſinned, but nothing to be paid. That's Goſpel-language, when a man hath ſinned, to ſay, What ſhall I do? Thoſe Converts in the Acts, who enquired, What ſhall we do? were told by the Apoſtles of ſomewhat to be done; Repent and be baptized, believe and thou ſhalt be ſaved. Theſe are wayes wherein ſalvation is tendered, not works for which it is beſtowed. It is as dangerous an errour ſo to lift up the grace of God, as to deny the induſtry of man through Grace: and becauſe he can do nothing by way of ſatisfaction, that therefore he muſt do nothing. The Apoſtles gave Goſpel-counſel, yet when men asked them, What ſhall we do to be ſaved? They ſaid not, ye muſt do nothing, God will ſave you by his free Grace; no, they called them to repent and believe, &c. Take heed, when ye have ſinned, to ſay we need not mourn for ſin, we need not be humbled, we need not repent; for, Lord, what can we do unto thee, O thou Saviour of men? Theſe are the inferences of our own ſpirits, not of the Spirit of Chriſt. They who lift up the grace of Chriſt, to leſſen the neceſſity of gracious actings in themſelves, ſhew they know not the meaning of his Grace, and have not indeed taſted how gracious the Lord is. To deny our own righteouſneſs, and to be very active in the wayes of righteouſneſs, is the due Goſpel-temper. The Apoſtle. Phil. 3.8. counts all things but loſs and dung; all duties and humblings, all legal righteouſneſs and obedience; not that he refuſed righteouſneſs, or neglected duties, but he would not mingle them with Chriſt, or bring them in as contributions to the purchaſe of bleſſedneſs. Our righteouſneſs and holy duties are dung and droſs in juſtification, but they are Gold and precious things in ſanctification; without theſe we cannot walk worthy of our holy calling, or as it becomes the Goſpel of Chriſt.

So much for theſe words, What ſhall I do unto thee?

O thou preſerver of men!

Here is the compellation, or the title under which Job beſpeaks the Lord (and it is a royal one) The Preſerver of men. The word ſignifies both to preſerve and to obſerve; and hence it is applied to our keeping the Law of God, Pſal. 119.22. I have kept thy teſtimonies, I have kept them by obſervation, that is, I have obeyed thy Commandments. The word is often applied to God, in reference to mans protection and preſervation, Deut. 32.10. Moſes deſcribes the care of God over his people Iſrael, He found them in the wilderneſs (as a people wandring and going aſtray) and he kept them as the apple of his eye, that is, he looked to them, and had a continual tender care over them. So, Pſal. 17.8. Keep me as the apple of thine eye.

ὁ ἐπιςάμενος τὸν νοῦν τῶν ἀνθρώπων, qui perſpectam habes mentē hominum. Sept.

The Septuagint render it, O thou obſerver of men; What ſhall I do unto thee, O thou who art the obſerver and looker into the very hearts of men? Lord, ſaith he, what wilt thou have me to do? Thou lookeſt quite through me, and ſeeſt all that is in me, I need not declare my ſelf unto thee, thou knoweſt me altogether, Thou who art the ſearcher of the heart, and the trier of the reins; Thou who art a moſt vigilant watcher over all my wayes, what have I done or ſpoken, but thou knoweſt and canſt eaſily obſerve. Thus Job ſpeaks at Chap. 14. verſ. 16. Thou numbereſt my ſteps: A man obſerves another curiouſly, when he tells how many ſteps he treads, it is an expreſſion, noting the exacteſt obſervation. Salomon joyns the Act of keeping with obſerving, Prov. 24. 12. If thou ſayeſt, Behold, he knoweth it not (this is the refutation of an Athieſt) Doth not he that pondereth the heart, conſider it, and he that keepeth thy Soul, doth not he know? He that preſerveth us in our wayes, muſt needs ſee us in all our wayes.

Again, Preſerving or keeping may be underſtood two wayes.

Firſt, There is a preſerving or keeping of Man, that he ſhall not eſcape. And,

Cuſtos hominum, ſc. qui hominem talibus malis quaſi quadā cuſtodia includis, ut non ſit effugium.

Secondly, A preſerving or keeping of Man, that he ſhall not take hurt. Some underſtand it in the firſt ſence, O thou preſerver of men! that is, O thou, who art ſo ſtrict a keeper and watcher over men, that they cannot eſcape thine hand. A man is ſaid to be in ſafe cuſtody, when he is a priſoner, and ſo the ſence is thus given, Lord, thou haſt me faſt enough, I cannot break away from thee, I am lockt up within iron-gates and bars, what wouldſt thou have me to do unto thee? Thou mayeſt put what conditions thou pleaſeſt upon me, I muſt ſubmit. Such language we have (Lam. 3. 5, 7.) which may illuſtrate this. He hath builded againſt me, and compaſſed me with gall and travel, he hath hedged me about, that I cannot get out, he hath made my chain heavy. You ſee he ſpeaks of God (as we may ſpeak with reverence) as of the Maſter of a Priſon, who ſaith to his under Officers, there is ſuch a one, look to him well, make his chain heavy, that he may not get away, put him in a place where there is a ſtrong wall, leaſt he break priſon. This ſence of the word makes Job ſpeaking like Jeremy, He hath builded againſt me, he hath compaſſed me about, he hath made my chain heavy upon me.

But the ſecond ſence, according to the letter of our Tranſlation, is moſt clear and apt, O thou preſerver of men! Thou who keepeſt man, leaſt he take hurt or fall into danger; As if Job had beſpoke God thus, Thou art the Saviour and Protector of men, thou haſt not only given man a being, but thou provideſt for his well being: thou art a preſerver of our outward eſtates, and a preſerver of our ſpiritual eſtates. A God in whom we live, move, and have our being, as well as we receive being, life and motion from thee; and therefore ſeeing ſuch is thy nature, and this thy office, to be a preſerver of men, what wouldſt thou have me to do unto thee? Why doſt thou thus deſtroy me, and break me to pieces? Why doſt thou follow me with affliction upon affliction, till I am utterly ruin'd and undone? Thus Jacob (Gen. 28. 15.) If thou wilt keep me in the way that I ſhall go; he makes a vow to God, and indents or articles with God to be kept and preſerved by him. The word there is Shomer, but that and this are uſed promiſcuouſly, as Pſalm 121. 4. The keeper of Iſrael. In the word of the Text, and Pſalm 31. 23. The Lord preſerveth the faithful; he preſerveth them from the reach of dangers and troubles, incompaſſing them on every ſide.

So then in this title, we have the work and office of God held forth, the ſecond act of his power. The firſt is the act of Creation, the ſecond is this act of Preſervation or providence. Preſervation or providence is a continued Creation. Obſerve from this title,

First, Man wants a preſerver.

If God having made man, and ſet him in the world, had left him to his own keeping, what would become of him? When God truſted man to go a little alone, and did not hold a ſpecial hand of preſervation over him, to keep him from, or in temptation, how quickly did he fall and loſe himſelf? Man like a little child (which if the mother or the nurſe leaveth alone unwatched or uneyed) runs into dangers and deaths every moment. Man is a weak creature, therefore he needs a preſerver. Again, man (as fallen eſpecially) is a fooliſh creature, he hath no underſtanding to guide himſelf, he is as ignorant as a child (if God leave him) how to diſpoſe of his own wayes, and order his goings; The way of man is not in himſelf, neither is it in him that goeth to direct his own ſteps.

Laſtly, Man walks in the midſt of enemies. He is beſet with dangers, therefore he needs a Protector; what would become of a man, living in a throng of adverſaries, were it not that he hath a God, whoſe Name is, the Preſerver of men?

It is good for us to know God by this Name in every letter of it, in the full extent of it.

Mirus ſane Dei amor in populū ſuū, mira providentia Sanct. in Zech. 2.

Firſt, Immediately, his own hand and out-ſtretched arm is our ſafety, Zech. 2. 5. I will be unto Jeruſalem a wall of fire round about; If you want a wall, I will be your wall, my immediate providence ſhall be your defence, rather then you ſhall not be defended. Is my ſtrength the ſtrength of ſtones, or is my fleſh braſs? Was Job's queſtion, Chap. 6. 12. We may reſolve it, the ſtrength of God is more then the ſtrength of ſtones, and he, The Spirit is more firm then braſs. The Romans in their Wars uſed to call out the Tutelar gods of thoſe Cities they beſieged, &c. as believing them a ſtronger defence to thoſe places, then walls or forts. And yet our God is more then a wall of ſtone and braſs, he promiſed to be a wall of fire. Now who can batter down a fire, that is it's own fewel, or who can ſet up ladders to ſcale the flames?

And as the Lord is a wall of fire, ſo a wall of water for the ſafety of his people, Iſa. 33. 21. There will I be a place of broad rivers, and of ſtreams; that is, I will be their preſervation; the broad rivers preſerves a place from the invaſion of enemies: Waters are ſtronger then Bulwarks of ſtone. And leaſt any ſhould object, though broad rivers keep off Foot or Horſe, yet they give advantage to Ships: therefore it is added, I will be ſuch a river to thee, as wherein ſhall go no Galley with Oars, neither ſhall gallant Ship paſs thereby. But if any ſhall venture their Navies upon theſe ſtreams to thy annoiance, then know (as verſ. 23. intimates) Their tacklings ſhall be looſed, they ſhall not well ſtrengthen their maſts, they ſhall not ſpread their ſails; They ſhall be ſo ruffled and entangled, that the lame ſhall take the prey, that is, the weakeſt reſiſtance ſhall ſubdue them and make prize of their whole Fleet, even of their Invincible Armado's. I love the Lord my ſtrength, my rock, my tower, my fortreſs, my buckler, the horn of my ſalvation; Pſal. 18. 1, 2. all theſe titles meet in this one, The preſerver of men.

Secondly, God is a preſerver of men mediately by inſtruments: he preſerves man by man, and man ſometimes by the beaſts of the Earth, and fowls of the Air, but chiefly he preſerveth men by Angels; Are they not miniſtring ſpirits, ſent out for the good of thoſe that ſhall be heirs of ſalvation? (Pſal. 91.) He ſhall give his Angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy wayes; they ſhall bear thee up in thy wayes, leſt thou daſh thy foot againſt a ſtone. A promiſe ſo full of ſweetneſs for faith to feed on, that the Devil hath no way to elude it, but by tempting us (as he did Chriſt) to over act it, and ſurfet faith into a preſumption, by a wilful needleſs throwing our ſelves into danger.

And there is a neceſſity that God himſelf ſhould thus take upon him the preſervation of men: This neceſſity is three-fold.

Firſt, None are ſtrong enough to preſerve us without him, our enemies would break through all ſtrength below God: ſo that, if he were not our preſerver, none could: In vain is ſalvation hoped for from hills, and from the multitude of mountains; truly in the Lord our God is the ſalvation of Iſrael, Jer. 2.

Secondly, None are wiſe enough to preſerve us, except the Lord. As evil ſpirits are powers, for ſtrength; ſo likewiſe Serpents, for policy and craft; this craft of Hell cannot be diſcovered, much leſs diſappointed, without wiſdom from Heaven.

Thirdly, None but God are patient enough to be the preſervers of men, I believe if the Angels left to their natural temper, were ſet to be keepers of men, they had all given over this charge long before this time; as it is ſuppoſed, they who fell refuſed to undertake, or take it up at firſt: Angels have not the patience to keep ſuch a froward piece as man. It is a wonder God doth not give over that care, and in ſtead of preſerving, daſh him in pieces. When the Lord told Moſes, he would ſend an Angel before him, and drive out the Canaanite (Exod. 34. 2.) For I will not go up in the midſt of thee, for thou art a ſtiff necked people leſt I conſume thee in the way. The Text ſaith, when the people heard this evil tidings, they mourned, and no man did put upon him his Ornaments. Why what was it that troubled them? Was it that the Angel is ſent now to conduct them to Canaan? That was told them (*Chap.*23.20.) and they well ſatisfied with it, Behold, I ſend an Angel before to keep thee in the way, and to bring thee into the place which I have prepared. I anſwer, the Angel in Chap. 23. is by all (that I meet with) agreed to be the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the great Angel of the Covenant; but the Angel, Chap. 33. appears to be a created Angel, and rather threatned them then promiſed them. And though the Lord is pleaſed to ſignifie a reaſon of ſending this Angel in favour to them, namely, leſt He himſelf conſume them in the way for their ſtubbornneſs. Yet the people are not ſatisfied with this tidings; ſurely they thought if the Lord was not able to bear their provocations, much leſs could an Angel; and therefore if he ſhould ſend an Angel, and withdraw his own preſence from them, they muſt periſh; A mere Angel could not have bore their manners as the Lord did; receiving provocations from them, and continuing preſervations over them this fourty years.

It is yet further obſervable, that the Hebrew is not only ſingular, but a particular: The preſerver of Adam, or of that man, which hath ſome ſpeciality in it: We tranſlate in general, the preſerver of men, but the preſerver of man, or of that man, is more emphatical. God preſerveth all, but he hath a ſpecial eye of preſervation upon ſome, Thou preſerveſt Man and Beaſt, ſaith the Pſalmiſt; the beaſts of the earth are preſerved,but man is preſerved more: And among men, ſome are more preſerved. It is a truth, the great God preſerveth his greateſt enemies: a wicked man were not able to liſt up a hand or a tongue againſt him, if God did not uphold him: but God is the ſpecial preſerver of that man, that is, the preſerver of a godly Man, or of godly Men. As Chriſt is the Saviour of all Men, but eſpecially of thoſe that believe; ſo the Preſerver of all Men, but eſpecially of thoſe that believe; he hath a care of them, beyond the care he hath of the world. The care which God hath of the reſt of the world, compared with that towards his own, is but careleſneſs, and he as it were neglects the whole world to look to his own People. As it was ſaid of Conſtantine, that for the love he bare to Conſtantinople, he undreſſed and unadorned all the other Cities of the Empire, to beautifie and adorn that: God ſeems to take off from all men in the world to lay it on upon his people; the very gleanings of thoſe mercies which his people have, are better then the whole vintage of the world: And the Lord is therefore a ſpecial Saviour to his people, becauſe, Firſt, They are more precious then the reſt of the world: and that calls for moſt care, which hath moſt worth. A man takes more care of his jewels, then of the lumber in his houſe; Theſe are my Jewels, ſaith God (Mal. 3.) A man carries his jewels about him, or keeps them in a ſafe cabinet.

Secondly, Nearneſs of relation calls for that care; will not a man preſerve his Wife, his Spouſe? The Church is the Spouſe of Chriſt. Will not a man preſerve his Children? If his houſe be on fire, bring my Children out ſaith he: The heart of God is towards his Children, he muſt provide them a portion. Yea they are his portion, he makes a revenew of them (*Deut.*32.9.) A man will preſerve his revenew, that wherein his eſtate lies: All that God hath on earth (though he hath ſuch a fulneſs in himſelf, that he needs nothing from his Church,yet,all that he hath) he is pleaſed to ſay, he hath it from his Church: and therefore God is ſaid to be great in Zion; he is the ſame great God all the world over,but it appears not ſo,what he is to the men of the world, as to the Saints in Zion it doth: yea he is little in the eye of the world, in compariſon of what he is in Zion, therefore he takes great care to preſerve his Zion. Obſerve, > Laſtly, The preſerving care of God over man, eſpecially over that man, over his own people, is a perpetual care.

Preſervation is a continued act, if God ſhould leave us one moment, and ſtop providence, Creation would be diſſolved: This continuance of his care, is eminent towards his Church; Iſa. 27. 3. Leſt any hurt it, I will keep it night and day. Night and day divide all time between them: to do a thing night and day, is to do it continually, *Pſal.*121. 4. He that keepeth Iſrael, neither ſlumbereth nor ſleepeth: A ſlumber is leſs then ſleep; but God will not ſo much as ſlumber in his thoughts towards as, all his are waking thoughts. Further, his love is without intermiſſion, that knows no ſtops nor breaches, therefore his care is ſo too. His peoples dangers are without intermiſſion, therefore his preſevation is ſo too. Enemies oppoſe his people without intermiſſion, therefore he protects them ſo too. The Devil goeth about like a roaring lion,he is ever in motion,he goeth about as an Abaddon or Appollyon, the deſtroyer and devourer of men: The care of Chriſt prompts him to a like vigilancy, He goeth about preſerving; his act of preſervation runs parallel with that of the enemies oppoſition: God watches that his people may have ſome quiet reſt and ſleep. As the ſtory reports of Alexander the Great, that he told his Souldiers, I watch more then any of you all, that you may ſometimes have quiet ſleep: his care diſpenſed with ſome of their careleſneſs. It is moſt true of God, he wakes for ever, and he watches for ever, to preſerve us that we may ſleep in quietneſs and confidence. Solomon reproves ſome ſecure ones, who are as they, who ſleep on the top of the maſt (Prov.23.) But the Saints may ſleep (in regard of fear, though not of indeavour) on the top of the maſt, while they remember that both the helm and the winds are in Gods hands. As our ſpiritual eſtates, ſo our temporal are kept (as with a garriſon in their degree) by the power of God through faith unto ſalvation. So much for the Title, O thou preſerver of men.

Certo ſcio me plus vigilare quam vos, ut ipſi ſomnos quietos capere poſſitis. Arian. l.8.

Why haſt thou ſet me as a mark againſt thee, ſo that I am a burden to my ſelf?

Why haſt thou ſet me as a mark againſt thee?] The word ſignifies to meet one, to come the oppoſite way; Hence ſome tranſlate this, why haſt thou ſet me contrary to thy ſelf? Becauſe he that meets another, comes the contrary way, the way oppoſite to him: why haſt thou put me as an object againſt thee? or, as an enemy to thee? the object ſtands directly before us, and we deſire to have an enemy right before us. And the word may be taken ſimply for an enemy, or adverſary, who ſtands oppoſite to us, both in his actions and deſigns, and againſt whom we direct both ours. We render, wherefore haſt thou ſet me as a mark? And that ſuits the ſence of the word fully, becauſe a mark at which a man aims, is ſet in direct oppoſition to him; we level our arrows or bullets at the mark right before us: Job thought himſelf thus placed, why haſt thou ſet me as a mark to meet with, or intercept thy ſhot, thy arrows, thy bullets, thy blows upon my breaſt? Wilt thou make the boſom of thy ſervants, like the breaſt of an enemy, a Butt to receive all thy arrows? A mark is as a ſtanding enemy; and an enemy is a moving mark to ſhoot at: a mark is a liveleſs enemy, and an enemy is a living mark: his meaning then is, Thou haſt ſet me againſt thee, as if I were an enemy, as if I were one againſt whom thou reſolveſt to direct all thine arrows, and aim every ſtroak: ſo the word is uſed, Judg. 8. 21, where Zeba and Zalmunna, two Kings taken captive by Gideon, ſaid to him, riſe thou and fall upon us; it is this word, ſet us before thee as a mark for thy victorious ſword: So the Prophet (Amos 5. 19.) tells us that a man in hopes to eſcape the hand of God, ſhall be as if a man did flee from a Lion, and a Bear met him, ſuch a man is but a mark for a Bear, who thinks to out-run this Lion. That expreſſion (1 King. 5. 4.) is very clear to this ſence, where the peace-fulneſs of Solomons reign is deſcribed, thus, there was neither adverſary nor evil occurrent; the word we tranſlate, evil occurrent, it is that in the Text, no evil met or befell them. So then the ſum of all is, That Job expoſtulates or complains before God, that he was as it were the man choſen out amongſt all the men in the world, to be as the mark and butt againſt which God ſhot his afflictions, and level'd all his arrows: As if he had ſaid, There are many more about me, and thou doeſt not ſo much as touch one of the hairs of their head, there are men that receive not ſo much as one ſhot from thee, but I am made thy ſtanding mark, why is it thus Lord? So he expreſſeth himſelf in other words, but to this very ſence, *Chap.*19 11. &. 13.24. Wherefore holdeſt thou me for thine enemy? Or (according to the Letter of the Hebrew) among thoſe who ſtraighten thee, as an enemy ſtraightens a City, in the time of a ſiege; and this he doth to move God to pity and compaſſion; Lord, ſaith he, I am ſet as a mark againſt thee. You would be much moved (a tender heart would) to ſee a man bound faſt to a poſt, and another ſtanding off with his bow bent, and his arrow on the ſtring, with his gun or piſtol cock'd, aiming at his breaſt: Job preſents himſelf in ſuch a poſture, as if the Lord had bound him faſt to a poſt or to a tree, and were pouring vollies of ſhot, and ſending ſhowers of arrows upon him continually.

Obſerve, Firſt, The manner of the language, which is by way of a vehement queſtion, or expoſtulation, Why haſt thou ſet me as a mark againſt thee?

Man is very inquiſitive to know the reaſons of Gods dealings with him.

That's one thing. And ſecondly, which is near the ſame'

It is ſome ſatisfaction and eaſe to the mind ſmitten by the hand of God, to know the reaſon why he wounds, why he ſmites.

Why haſt thou ſet me as a mark? As if he had ſaid, if I could but learn this, and ſee the reaſon of it, ſurely I ſhould receive thy wounds as kiſſes, and take thy ſtroaks as embraces. When Gideon ſaw ſo many evils and troubles upon Iſrael; *Judg.*6. and the Angel told him, the Lord was with him, Then why is it thus (ſaith he) Can you give me a reaſon, why God being with us, it is thus with us? To know the reaſon of our pain, is a great eaſe, and almoſt the cure of it. If the people of God did but know what infinite reaſon he hath (reaſon of the higheſt temperament of wiſdom and goodneſs) why he layes affliction upon them, and makes them as his marks, they would be abundantly ſatisfied with it. What is the reaſon why the Saints coming out of great affliction, are willing to confeſs, It is good for us that we were afflicted, and bleſſed be God that we were chaſtned. It is, becauſe then they ſee more clearly the reaſon why God afflicted them, and they then begin to taſte the fruit of thoſe afflictions. If while the affliction is upon us, we knew what good God meaneth us, what honour he intendeth us, we ſhould bear it not only with courage and with patience, but with joy. If Job had been fully acquainted with this, that God therefore ſet him up as a mark to ſhoot at, that he might be to all the world a mirror of patience: that God intended him this honour, that his name ſhould be upon record in his Book ſo long as there was a Church; ſurely he would have born all with more patience and eaſe then he did: But he was groping in the dark, and therefore enquires, Wherefore haſt thou ſet me as a mark againſt thee? The words are not only, or not ſo much, an expoſtulation, becauſe he was ſet as a mark, as an Inquiſition, why he was ſet as a mark. Note, Thirdly, God ſometimes ſeems an enemy to his faithful ſervants.

For one to be before God as a Butt continually ſhot at, what other interpretation can ſence make of it but this, that God looks upon him as an enemy? Jacob ſaith of Joſeph (Gen. 49.23.) the Archers have ſorely grieved him, and ſhot at him. Joſeph was as the common mark of his brethrens envy. But in this caſe, as it is ſaid of Joſeph (Gen. 42.) when his brethren came to him, He made himſelf ſtrange to them. (Joſeph ſtrained himſelf, and uſed his Art, to overcome his nature, He made himſelf ſtrange: Joſeph was of a meek and loving diſpoſition, and therefore like a Player upon a ſtage, he only acted the part of a rigid maſter or governor.) Thus many times the Lord takes upon him the poſture of an enemy, and forces a frown upon a poor creature, whom he loves and delights in with all his heart; he makes him as his mark to ſhoot at, whom he layes next his own heart. Thus the Church ſpeaks, Lam. 3.12. He hath bent his bow, and ſet me as a mark for his arrows; And (Job 16.13.) that you may ſee how his language agrees with our Scriptures: His archers compaſs me round about, he cleaveth my reins aſunder, and doth not ſpare. He poureth out my gall upon the ground. How exactly he ſpeaks! A man ſhoots at a hairs breadth that ſhoots thus: when God ſends his archers, their bows ſhoot ſo true, that they cleave the reins aſunder: the reins are in the midſt of a man, and to cleave the reins is to ſhoot level: as pouring out the gall, or unbowelling, imports to ſhoot dead.

Fourthly, Obſerve this, Why haſt thou ſet me as a mark?

God takes the moſt eminent and choiceſt of his ſervants, for the choiceſt and moſt eminent afflictions.

He makes a Job the white. Why haſt thou choſen me? There was great reaſon, God ſhould chooſe him, he was the moſt eminent in holineſs and grace of all about him: he was the moſt remarkable man for grace and goodneſs, therefore he muſt be the mark. They who have received moſt grace from God, are able to bear moſt affliction from God. God doth this in infinite wiſdom: as the Apoſtle, Rom. 14. 11. gives an excellent advice in reference to weak brethren, ſuch as are weak receive, but not to doubtful diſputations, take heed how you ingage your weak Brethren in doubtful diſputes, you may looſe them ſo; take thoſe that are ſtrong and able, ſuch as are well ballaſted for a ſtorm, take theſe men if you will to doubtful diſputations, but do not take weak brethren. If God will not have us take a weak Chriſtian to a doubtful diſputation; ſurely then he calls ſuch to ſufferings, of whoſe ſtrength he is well aſſured: A man under great affliction, is brought to a very doubtful diſputation; therefore the Lord will not bring a weak one, one low in grace to it, but he takes out the ſtrong: As the General of an Army chuſes out the valianteſt and moſt experienced veterane Souldiers, to put them upon hard adventures, it is not wiſdom to venture a freſh-water Souldier upon difficult ſervices. God will not put new Wine into old bottles: as it is in acting duties, ſo in ſufferings. And as Chriſt orders the word in ſuch wiſdom, that he will not have counſel given to any ſoul, who is unprepared to receive it, or unable to bear it. John 16.12. I have many things yet to ſay unto you, but you cannot bear them now; therefore I will defer until you have got more ſtrength: So God ſaith of a young Chriſtian, one that is newly come in; thou haſt great afflictions to undergo before thou dieſt, but thou art not fit to bear them yet, I will defer thy trial till thou art grown more hardy, through more communion with me, to fit thee for that encounter. As our Lord Chriſt told Peter (Joh. 21. 18.) When thou waſt young, thou girdeſt thy ſelf, and walkedſt whether thou wouldeſt; but when thou ſhalt be old, thou ſhalt ſtretch forth thy hands, and another ſhall gird thee, and carry thee whether thou wouldſt not. That is, when thou waſt young and unexperienced, thou enjoyedſt thy liberty; but when thou ſhalt be grown older in years, and ſtronger in grace, thou ſhalt willingly ſtretch forth thy hands, and quietly ſuffer thy ſelf to be bound to the Croſs (Peter was not nailed as Chriſt, but tied to the Croſs) and there die in witneſs of my truth; For this Chriſt ſpake, ſignifying by what death he ſhould die, and glorifie God, ver. 19.

Fifthly, In that he ſaith, Why haſt thou ſet me as a mark againſt thee? Why doſt thou run thus againſt me? Obſerve, Man in ſinning, runneth contrary to God; and God in afflicting, ſeemeth to run contrary to Man.

Every act of ſin is a direct oppoſition unto God: we ſet God as a mark, and ſhoot arrows of diſobedience againſt him; ſin is a miſſing the mark of duty, but it aims to hit the Lord as a mark, who charges us with that duty. In affliction God runneth upon us, and makes the tranſgreſſor his mark. Moſes (Levit.26.41.) ſpeaks both wayes; If your uncircumciſed hearts be humbled, and ye acknowledge that ye have walked contrary unto me, and that I have walked contrary unto you; that I have made you a mark, and ſhot at you by my judgments, and that you have made me a mark, ſhooting at me by your ſins; then I will remember, &c. So that our ſinning is a walking contrary unto God, and Gods corrections are his walking contrary to us: There is an excellent expreſſion, noting how ſin ſtrikes, and (as it were) ſhoots at God (Job 15.25,26.) He ſtretcheth out his hand againſt God (ſpeaking of a wicked man) and ſtrengthneth himſelf againſt the Almighty: (here this word is uſed) he runneth upon him, even on his neck, upon the thick boſs of his bucklers. See how he deſcribes a wicked man in his natural courſe; what doth he? He runs upon God, he runneth upon him, even upon his neck as a man that encounters an enemy, runs upon him, and ſets his feet upon his neck; he runneth upon the thick boſſes of his bucklers: a warrior hath boſſes upon his arms, both for beauty and defence. The enemy runs upon the very boſſes, and fears nothing; ſuch is a wicked man. He runs againſt God; and will not God run upon him? He will certainly be upon the boſſes of their bucklers, and upon their necks too one time or other, till they ſhall be forced to cry out, that as they have been burdens unto God, ſo now they are burdens to themſelves. Thus Job concludes in his own caſe.

So that I am a burden to my ſelf.

נשׂא à משׂא Tulit onus à tollendo ac ferendo dictum. Sum ſuper te onus. φόρτιον. alii vertunt φορτικὸς. oneroſus, moleſtus, quo alluditur ad importunos peccatores, qui auribus ludicrum perſtrepunt. עליך tibi quod Scribæ mutarunt in עלי mihi, quod indignum divina majeſtate arbitrarentur, ut homuncio ei oneri eſſet. Ab. Ez, Druſ.

The former words are the cauſe, and theſe are the effect: Thou haſt ſet me as a mark: what follows? O I am a burden to my ſelf! The Septuagint read thus, ſo that I am a burden unto thee; or, ſo that I am burdenſome to thee. And then his meaning may be conceived thus; Lord, thou ſetteſt me as a mark, ſo that I become burdenſome unto thee; I have ſuch a weight of afflictions upon me, that I am forced to complainings and expoſtulations, wherein I am afraid I am burdenſome to thee; as poor ſuiters, when they cry long in the ears of a Judge or Magiſtrate, he ſaith, forbear, you are very troubleſom, very burdenſom to me.

The Rabbins obſerve, that this was the ancient reading of the Text, I am a burden unto thee, and that the Scribes, who wrote out the Bibles in Hebrew, made this alteration, a burden to my ſelf; becauſe they conceived it was unbecoming the Majeſty of God, that Job ſhould ſay, he was a burden to him. There is a general truth in that Tranſlation, a burden unto thee: The ſins of man are burdenſome to God, the frowardneſs and impatience of men are burdenſome unto God; But I conceive our tranſlation carries the ſence fairer, in a reflection upon his own tired ſpirits, So that I am made a burden to my ſelf, that is, thou doſt even throw me upon my ſelf, whereas heretofore thou waſt wont to bear me, and take my burden upon thy ſelf. Alas, I faint, I cannot ſtand under my ſelf, I am weary of my life, becauſe I am left alone to bear it, I know not what to do with my ſelf, I am ſo burdenſome to my ſelf. Hence obſerve, > Firſt, Outward afflictions, poverty, ſickneſs, want, &c. are burdens, and they make a man burdenſome to himſelf.

It is a great burden to have our comforts taken away from us. The removing of comforts lies like a heavy weight upon the ſpirit; the removing of health from the body is a weight upon the ſoul; fear is a burden, care is a burden, and ſo is pain. Therefore God calls us to caſt all thoſe burdens upon him, Pſal. 55. 22.

Man is much born down by weight of natural corruption. Hence the Apoſtle calls it a weight, and the ſin which doth ſo eaſily beſet us (Heb. 12. 1.) or dangle about our heels to burden us, as long garments do a man that runneth. Our ordinary callings and affairs, left upon our own backs, preſs us to the earth, much more do our extraordinary troubles and afflictions. And therefore he adviſeth, Caſt thy burden upon the Lord (he aſſures in the next words) and he ſhall ſuſtain thee. As implying, that man cannot ſuſtain or bear his own weight. And though it ſhould ſeem we have ſtrength to ſpare for others, and are therefore commanded to bear one anothers burdens (Gal. 6.) yet no man of himſelf, no not the holieſt Atlas, nor the ſpiritualleſt Porter on earth, is able to bear his own ſelf, unleſs Chriſt be his ſupporter, who is alſo therefore ſaid to uphold all things by the word of his power, Heb. 1. 3. Becauſe no creature in a natural, or man in a ſpiritual capacity, can bear his own weight.

Thirdly, From the connexion between theſe two phraſes, Thou haſt ſet me as a mark againſt thee, ſo that I am a burden to my ſelf, what is it that makes my life to be ſo burdenſome to me? It is this, becauſe I am ſet as a mark before thee, that is, becauſe thou ſeemeſt to be an enemy to me: And ſo the Note from the connection is this,

> That which preſſes and burdens the ſoul above all, is the apprehenſion that God is againſt us.

Job in many things looked unto God under theſe temptations with ſad thoughts, as if he were his enemy; ſo he expreſt himſelf in the ſixth Chapter, The poyſon of his arrows drinks up my ſpirits, he ſetteth himſelf in battel array againſt me. In theſe temptations and deſertions, this was the burden of his ſpirit, that God appeared as an adverſary; Why doſt thou ſet me as a mark againſt thee? Let the Sabeans and the Chaldeans ſhoot at me as much as they will, let fire and winds contend with me, and make me the mark of their utmoſt fury, I can bear all theſe. Job was light-hearted enough when he thought he contended only with creatures, and that creatures only contended with him, but in the progreſs of the trial, he finds God againſt him, withdrawing comforts from, and ſhooting terrors at him; now he is a burden to himſelf, he can bear this no longer. As Cæſar ſaid in the Senate, when he had many wounds given him, yet this wounded him moſt, that he was wounded by the hand of his ſon; What thou my ſon? So when a Believer looks this way and that way, and ſees many enemies, Satan and the creatures all in arms againſt him, he can bear all their charges and aſſaults; but if he apprehend God oppoſing and wounding him, he weeps out this mournful complaint, What thou my Father? what thou my God? Thou who haſt ſo often ſhined upon me, doſt thou darken thy face towards me, and appear mine enemy? Theſe apprehenſions of God, will make the ſtrongeſt Saint on earth a burden too heavy for himſelf to bear. That which cauſeth the moſt burdenſome thought in the Saints, is the inevidence of their pardon. Sin unpardoned is in it ſelf a burden, and our not knowing ſin to be pardoned, is a greater burden; but our jealouſies and fears that it is not pardoned, is the greateſt burden of all, and that which adds weight, yea an intolerableneſs to all other burdens. Hence Job in the next verſe, and with the laſt breath of his anſwer, points directly at that which pincht him.

Verſe 11, And why doſt thou not pardon my tranſgreſſion, and take away mine iniquity? for now ſhall I ſleep in the duſt, and thou ſhalt ſeek me in the morning, but I ſhall not be.

In the former verſe, we found Job humbly confeſſing his ſin, and earneſtly enquiring of the Lord a reaſon of his ſorrows, why he had ſhot him ſo full of arrows, that now he was not ſo much wounded as loaded, and become a burden to himſelf.

In this verſe he ſues for the pardon of thoſe ſins, and ſo for the removal of thoſe ſorrows; that the bow might ſpeedily be unbended, and not a ſhot more made at his bleeding breaſt. In the anſwer of which ſuit, he deſires ſpeed and expedition, leſt help being retarded, come too late; for he profeſſeth that he cannot hold out this ſiege long, he muſt needs make his bed in the grave, and then being ſought for, he ſhall not be found.

And why doſt thou not pardon my tranſgreſſions?

We may conſider the words two wayes.

In the { 1. Form / 2. Matter } of them.

In the form they are a vehement expoſtulation; Job's ſpirit hath been heated all along with the fire of his ſufferings, and here he ſpeaks in the heat of his ſpirit, and with fiery deſires after mercy: He keeps up his heart to the ſame height and tenour ſtill. There it was, Why haſt thou ſet me as a mark againſt thee? Here's another why, and why doſt thou not pardon my tranſgreſſion? As before he was grieved to be ſet up as a mark for afflictions to aim at; ſo now he deſires to be made a mark for mercy to aim at.

I ſhall note one thing from hence, before I come to open the words; They who are ſenſible of the evil of ſin, will pray heartily for the pardon of ſin, Expoſtulation is earneſt prayer; expoſtulation is a vehement poſtulation, a vehement enquiring after, or deſiring of a thing; Why doſt thou not pardon my ſin? may be reſolved into this, O that thou wouldſt pardon my ſin! Or, wilt thou not pardon my ſin?

The matter of this Prayer requires ſuch a form, ſuch a vehemency of ſpirit in him that prayes. If there be any petition in the world, about which the ſpirit ſhould be fired, it is in this, when we pray for pardon of ſin.

Will not a man whoſe body is defiled by falling into the mire, call haſtily for ſome to cleanſe and waſh him? will he not ſay, if it come not ſpeedily, why do you not bring away the water there? ſin is the defiling and bemiring of the ſoul, and pardon is the cleanſing of it.

If a man be deeply and deadly wounded, will he have only ſome few feeble deſires, or make cold requeſts for a Chirurgeon? will he not call and call aloud? call and call again for help and healing? Sins are the wounds of the ſoul, and pardon is the only cure of it.

If a man hath broken his bones, will he not be very very earneſt to have them ſet again? Sin is the breaking of the bones, and pardon is their ſetting. How doth David cry to the Lord (Pſal. 51. 8.) That the bones which he had broken might rejoyce: Sin had broken his bones firſt, and the hiding of Gods favour from him, was a ſecond breaking.

If a mans peace, or the peace of a Nation be diſturbed, is there not earneſt crying (as at this day) to have it repaired and re-eſtabliſted? Sin troubles our peace, the peace of the ſoul, and the peace of Kingdoms; Sin is the great make-bate, and pardon is the returning of our peace, and quieteth all again, and therefore no marvel if we cry out, Why doſt thou not pardon our ſins?

He that is greatly in debt, and fears every hour to be arreſted and caſt in priſon, is trying all friends to get ſecurity and protection. Sinning is a running in debt with God, and it brings us under the danger of his arreſt every moment; forgiveneſs cancels the bond: when the ſin is pardoned, the debt is paid, and the ſoul diſcharged; and therefore no wonder if in this caſe, we hear or make ſtrong cries, Why doſt thou not pardon our ſins? My ſon (ſaith Solomon, Prov. 6. 4. ſpeaking about ſuretiſhip) if thou be ſurety for thy friend (if thou haſt engaged thy ſelf for another) give not ſleep to thine eyes, nor ſlumber to thine eye-lids, deliver thy ſelf as a Roe from the hand of the hunter, and as a bird from the hand of the fowler. Not to give reſt to the eye, nor ſlumber to the eye-lids, notes the hotteſt purſuit and greateſt intention of ſpirit about a buſineſs: Thus buſie Solomon adviſes a man to be who becometh ſurety for another. Then what ſhould we do, who have contracted huge debts our ſelves? How ſhould we in this ſence, give our eyes no reſt, and our eye-lids no ſlumber, till our ſouls be delivered, as a Roe from the hand of the hunter, and as a bird from the hand of the fowler, that is, from all the power and challenge which the Law without us, Conſcience within us, Satan purſuiug us, and the Juſtice of God threatning us, can any way make or have againſt the peace of our ſouls. That's the firſt thing, from the manner of form in which Job ſues for the pardon of ſin, his ſpirit doth not fall, he grows not flat upon this point, but is as high and earneſt here for the pardon of ſin, as in any of his requeſts for the eaſe of his pained body, or the diſſolution of it.

Why doſt thou not pardon my ſin, and take away mine iniquity? I ſhall firſt ſhew what is meant by pardoning and taking away; and then, what by tranſgreſſion and iniquity, and ſo put the ſence of all together.

Why doſt thou not pardon my tranſgreſſion?

The Septuagint reads it, Why doſt thou not forget my tranſgreſſion? or bury it in the grave of oblivion, and the word may ſignifie to forget, as well as to take away. But generally it imports the lifting up, or taking away of that which lies heavy upon us, either in a moral, or in a natural notion, Hoſ. 11. 4. I was to them as they that take off the yoke; and becauſe pardon is the taking away, or lifting off of ſin, therefore it is often put for the act of pardoning.

Διὰ τί οὐκ ἐποιήσω λήθην τῆς ἀνομίας μου, accipiunt נשא tanquam à נשה oblitus fuit. נשא Tollere, levare, per Metaphorā donare eò quod munera & donaria in altum elevari ſolerent, ſicut ſacrificia cū Deo offerebantur.

Hence alſo it is applied to that geſture of the Prieſts, when they received gifts and ſacrifices, becauſe they were wont to elevate and lift them up. Hence Chriſt, the ſubſtance of all the Sacrifices, is ſaid to be lifted up; himſelf ſaith, As Moſes lifted up the Serpent in the wilderneſs, ſo muſt the Son of man be lifted up (John 3. 14.) We may ſay, as Aaron lifted up the Sacrifices at the Altar, ſo the Son of man was lifted up. This lifting up noted alſo the acceptance of thoſe Sacrifices, and the favour of God to thoſe who brought them. When Pharaoh beſtowed a great favour upon the chief Butler, Gen. 40. 30. according to his dream, he lifted up his head: Joſeph expounded it ſo, After three dayes, Pharaoh ſhall lift up thine head, that is, he ſhall freely pardon thy offence, and beſtow ſome great honour, gift or reward upon thee. And in this ſence it is proper to the Text, when ſin is pardoned, a mans head is lifted up, himſelf is advanced indeed.

The Lord proclaims his name in this tenour (Exod. 34. 7.) The Lord, the Lord, forgiving (or lifting up) iniquity. And, Pſal. 32. 1. Bleſſed is the man whoſe tranſgreſſions are forgiven, or lifted up.

Further, this word ſignifies, not only to take or lift off a burden from another, and lay it down; but ſo to lift it off from another, as for a man to take it upon himſelf, and bear it in his ſtead, from whoſe ſhoulders it was taken. And in this ſtrict ſence we are eſpecially to underſtand it in the point of pardon; for pardon is not the taking away of ſin from a man, and laying it none knows where; but ſin being taken off from a man, ſome other ſhoulders are prepared to bear it, even the ſhoulders of our Lord Chriſt, on him our ſin is laid; All we like ſheep have gone aſtray, we have turned every one to his own way, and the Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all, Iſa. 53. 6. When the burden of debt was taken off from us, it was charged on Chriſt. He did not take or lift the burden of ſin from us, and throw it by, but he bare it himſelf; nothing but this could compleat the work of pardon; therefore it was alſo propheſied, Iſa. 53. 4. Surely he hath born our griefs, and carried our ſorrows. And (1 Pet. 2. 22.) Who his own ſelf bare our ſins in his own body on the tree, that is, in his humanity or humane nature, while he dwelt with us in the body. Body is not here oppoſed to ſoul, but includes it; as ſometime the whole work is laid upon the ſoul of Chriſt, not excluding his body, Iſa. 53. 10. When thou ſhalt make his ſoul an offering for ſin. By the whole man this offering was made, and the whole man bare our ſins on the tree. That paſſage, Mat. 8. 17. (where the firſt Propheſie of Iſaiah is quoted, is very emphatical) when Chriſt had healed many of their outward diſtempers, this reaſon is added, That it might be fulfilled which is written (ſc. Iſa. 53. 9.) himſelf took our infirmities, and bare our ſickneſſes. Now Chriſt took our infirmities, and bare our ſickneſſes, when he took and bare our ſins; when he took ſin, he took that which was the neceſſary fruit of ſin, our ſickneſſes and our ſorrows; for as in Scripture Chriſt is ſaid to be made ſin for us, that is, with the ſin he bare thoſe afflictions and ſorrows which are the conſequents of ſin; ſo here, when it is ſaid, he bare our ſorrows and our ſickneſſes, it takes in the bearing of thoſe ſins, which procured and produced thoſe ſorrows.

The Greek words uſed by the Evangeliſt, are full with this ſence, He took them to him, he received them upon himſelf; he (as it were) tranſlated them from poor ſinful man, to his own body.

Τὰς ἀσθενείας ἔλαβε καὶ τὰς νόσους ἐβάστασεν. Aſſumpſit ſecum, atque recepit quaſi ad ſe tranſtulit.

The word alſo imports his taking our ſins and ſickneſſes upon him, as a veſture or garment, and ſo wrapping himſelf in them. We know our ſins by nature cloath us as a garment, ours is not only a burden, but a cloathing of ſin and filthineſs, Take away his filthy garments (ſaith the Lord concerning Joſhua the High-Prieſt) then follows, And unto him I ſaid, I have cauſed thine iniquity to paſs from thee, and I will cloath thee with change of raiment. Man ſaw not his own nakedneſs till he was cloathed with ſin, Gen. 2. Chriſt to anſwer that, cloaths and wraps himſelf with our ſins, as we our ſelves were wrapped about and cloathed with them; he cloaths himſelf with our ſorrows, as we our ſelves were cloathed with ſorrow. In which ſence (among others) Chriſt may be called a man of ſorrows; as we may call a man cloathed with rags, a man of rags; and a man cloathed with ſilk, a man of ſilks.

The ſecond word of the Evangeliſt, Mat. 18. 17. ſignifies to bear as a Porter bears a great burden; Chriſt took up that burden under which all the Angels in heaven would have ſunk; he took it up like a mighty Samſon, and carried it out for us. The Scape-Goat was a type of this, Levit. 6. 22. And the Goat ſhall bear upon him all their iniquities into a Land not inhabited; or a Land cut off and ſeparated from other Lands and people, figuring hereby the total aboliſhing of our ſins, which being carried into a Land, where no man dwels, ſhall be as loſt and gone for ever, not to be found when they ſhall be ſought for; who can find that, which is where no man ever was? Pardon'd ſin is carried and (as it were) hid out of the ſight both of God and man, for it is not; and that which is not, is not (according to man) to be ſeen. In alluſion to all which, Chriſt (Joh. 1. 29.) is pointed at by the Baptiſt, with, Behold the lamb of God that takes away the ſins of the world; he takes ſin off from the world, upon himſelf, and carries it away no man knows whither. That for the firſt word, pardon, Why doſt thou not pardon my ſin?

Eſt, 1. Simpliciter præterire. 2. Interire, perire, evaneſcere, mori.

The ſecond word is rendred by our Tranſlators, Take away, Why doeſt thou not take away mine iniquity? Others thus, Why doeſt thou not cauſe mine iniquity to paſs away? Or, Why doeſt thou not put away mine iniquity? So we tranſlate, 2 Sam. 12. 13. where aſſoon as David confeſt his ſin, ſaying, I have ſinned, Nathan anſwers, and the Lord hath put away thy ſin; he hath made it to paſs away.

The word ſignifies, firſt ſimply, to paſs away or to paſs by.

Secondly, To die, periſh or vaniſh away, that which paſſes by us is vaniſhed, as to us: So the word is taken, Pſal. 37. 36. where David ſpeaking of the flouriſhing eſtate of wicked men, ſaith, I have ſeen the wicked in great proſperity, flouriſhing as a green bay tree, yet he paſt away, and loe he was not: A man unpardoned, ſees, or ſhould ſee, his ſins growing up as a mighty tree: ſin unpardoned, flouriſhes like a green bay-tree, it roots in the ſoul, and guilt nouriſhes it; but when pardon comes, ſin paſſes away, and it is not, becauſe that which gave it ſap is not.

Quando dicitur de mandato, pacto, juramento ſignificat tranſgredi, violare, peccare.

Further, this word (which is very conſiderable) is applied to the committing of ſin, as well as to the pardoning of ſin: For when it is joyned with thoſe words, The Commandments of God, the Statutes of God, the Word of God, or the like; it ſignifies to violate, to break the bounds, to tranſgreſs: for in ſinning a man paſſes by the word and commandment of God, the precepts which God hath given, and the charge God hath laid upon him, he goeth away from all; when man ſins, he paſſeth by the Commandment of God, and when God pardons, he paſſeth by the ſin of man, or he cauſeth his ſins to paſs away.

Tranſire facis, i.e. impunitum relinquis, condonas.

So that this word, Take away, put away, or cauſe to paſs, notes the removing of ſin, both in the guilt and puniſhment; When ſin is paſt by, all the puniſhments due to ſin are paſſed by, the ſinner ſhall never be toucht, or feel the weight of Gods little finger in judgement; when God comes with his revenges, he paſſeth ſuch by, as in that Plague of Egypt, of the ſlaying of the firſt born, which was therefore called the Lords paſſover, in memorial whereof that great Ordinance was appointed the Jews, of keeping the paſſover, and eating the Paſcal Lamb, Exod. 12. 13, 14. In this ſence the word is uſed, Amos 7. 8. when God was reſolved to puniſh and charge the ſins of that people upon them, he ſaith, Behold, I will ſet a plumb-line in the midſt of my people Iſrael, and what follows? I will not again paſs by them any more. God came before, once and again, armed to deſtroy them, but when he came, he paſt by them, he put up his ſword, he unbent his bow, he ſtopped up the vials of his wrath; when a cloud of blood and judgements hung over their heads, he ſent a breath of mercy, and cauſed it to paſs over them; but now (ſaith he) I will not again paſs by them any more; that is, I will ſurely puniſh them, ſo the next words interpret, the high places of Iſaac ſhall be deſolate, and the ſanctuaries of Iſrael ſhall be laid waſt.

Verbum Ebraicum העביר quoties in ſcripturis ſanctis ex perſona Dei ponitur, pro pœna accipiendum eſt, ut nequaquam apud eos maneat ſed pertranſeat, Hierō. in Amos.

Some tranſlate that in Amos, I will not any more diſſemble your wickedneſs or your ſin; and that carries a fair ſence, for when a man pardons or will not puniſh an offence, he ſeems to take no notice of it, for that (properly) is to diſſemble a thing (as ſimulation is to pretend that which is not, ſo diſſimulation is to take no notice, or not to hold forth that which is;) God paſſeth by and diſſembles the ſins of men in a gracious way, when he will not obſerve or look upon them to queſtion or puniſh them.

παρελθέτω. Non ultra diſſimulabo ei ſcelera ſua Pagan. Mer.

The Greek word (Matth. 26. 39.) anſwereth this Hebrew, where our Lord Chriſt prayeth earneſtly about the removal of the cup, Father (ſaith he) if it be poſſible, let this cup paſs away from me; In the ſame ſence that ſin is ſaid to paſs away, the cup of Gods diſpleaſure and wrath paſſes alſo away, when ſin is pardoned: therefore Chriſt prayed thrice, that the cup might paſs away from him, that he might not be dealt with as a ſinner, but that there might be a courſe found out to ſpare him, and ſave the glory of his Fathers juſtice: Yet (he ſubmits) not my will, but thy will be done, if it muſt not paſs away, I am contented it ſhould not paſs. Thus far we have ſeen, what is meant by pardoning and taking away.

A word upon thoſe two terms, Tranſgreſſion and Iniquity (which are the objects on which pardoning mercy works) Why doeſt thou not pardon my tranſgreſſion, and put away mine iniquity? Tranſgreſſion and Iniquity, are words of great ſignificancy: for in them all manner of ſins, eſpecially ſins of a greater ſtature are comprehended.

Propriè rebellio, peccatum ex ſuperbia. Non ſimplex & qualiſcunq; ſed malitioſa & temeraria tranſgreſſio.

The former, Tranſgreſſion, notes a violation of the commands of God with a high hand, or a rebellion of the mind, when pride of ſpirit ſhews it ſelf very much. There is a ſpice of pride in every ſin: Becauſe of pride (ſaith Solomon) cometh contention; all the contentions we maintain againſt the word and will of God, riſe from the pride of our own hearts, becauſe we cannot ſubmit to the will of God; but in ſome ſins, pride holds up her head more proudly. Such ſins, this word notes, it is not (ſimply) any ſin, but ſin very proudly and rebellioùſly committed.

Incurvationem declinationem à recta via, & ad animum tranſlata ſignificat perverſitatē & malitiā. Curvi mores.

Peccata denotat quæ fiunt ex προαιρέσεως & deſtinata malitia ſeu propoſito, cū ſc. mens videt quod æquum eſt, & tamen indulgens cupiditatibus ſequitur deteriora. Moller. in Pſal. 106. 6.

The latter word Iniquity, imports the crookedneſs and inequality of a thing; when it turns this way or that way, and extends not in a ſtrait and right line. Hence it is applied to the vitioſity and perverſneſs, to the crookedneſs and inequality of mans nature. Our nature is a crooked piece, and that makes all the crookedneſs in our lives. The Latines ſpeak ſo, in a moral ſence they call ill manners, and ill manner'd men, crooked men, and crooked manners. David, Pſal. 51. 5. bewailed his birth ſin under this notion, I was born in iniquity: And he that was firſt born in the world, applied this word to himſelf, ſaying, my iniquity (the perverſneſs, the crookedneſs of my wayes) is greater then can be forgiven, or made ſtraight, Gen. 4. 13. So that this word alſo (take it ſtrictly) implies more then a bare act of ſin, ariſing from infirmity, weakneſs or inanimadvertency; it rather notes thoſe ſins which are committed from a crooked purpoſe, from an ill or falſe bent of the heart: when the mind ſees that which is right and good, juſt and ſtraight, and yet turns to crooked paths, and follows that which is perverſe and worſe.

Take one thing further, This word in Scripture, ſignifies not only the act of ſuch ſins; but ſecondly, the puniſhment of them, Pſal. 31. 10. Gen. 19. 15. And thirdly, it is put for the means of expiation or pardon, Hoſ. 4 8. They eat up the ſin of my people, and they ſet their hearts on their iniquity. But how did the Prieſts eat up the ſin, and ſet their hearts on the iniquity of the people? Sin can make us but a hungry banquet. The Text bears variety of interpretations. But to the point in hand, ſin is here put for the ſacrifices offered up for ſin, out of divers of which the Prieſts had a portion for themſelves to eat; ſo that the Prophet here deſcribes the horrible prophaneneſs of thoſe degenerate Prieſts, who ſet their hearts upon the ſacrifices, becauſe themſelves were fed by them; not becauſe the people came to ſeek the favour of God, and make their peace by them when they had ſinned. As Phyſitians may be ſaid to eat the diſeaſes of the people, and ſet their hearts upon their ſickneſſes, when they (becauſe their own gain is in it) are pleaſed to hear of ſpreading ſickneſſes, &c. Or as Lawyers, eat the contentions and quarrels of the people, when they are glad to hear of Suits, &c. becauſe they grow rich by it. So thoſe baſe-ſpirited Prieſts were ſaid to eat the ſins of the people, and ſet their hearts on their iniquities, becauſe they were glad to hear of a multitude of ſacrifices, their proviſions being enlarged by them. So that then iniquity is the ſacrifice for iniquity, in which ſence alſo Chriſt is ſaid to be made ſin for us, namely a ſacrifice for ſin, 1 Cor. 5. 21.

From the words thus opened, we may Obſerve,

Firſt, To whom Job addreſſeth himſelf for pardon, is it not unto God? And why doeſt not thou pardon my tranſgreſſion?

God only can pardon ſin.

Pardon is his act, his proper and peculiar act, he can do it, and none can but he. We read it among his Royal titles (Exod. 34. 7.) the Name of God is proclaimed in this ſtile. The Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, long ſuffering, and abundant in goodneſs and in truth, keeping mercy for thouſands, forgiving iniquity, tranſgreſſion and ſin. Pardoning ſin, is put the laſt of thoſe ſeven Attributes in which the Lord manifeſted himſelf to Moſes, as being that wherein all the former are ſumm'd up, and into which they conveigh their ſeveral bleſſings, to make man compleatly bleſſed; or to ſhew that none can be a pardoner of ſin, but he who is veſted with all thoſe fore-going glorious titles, and therefore none but God alone. Hence the Prophet Micah (Chap. 7. 18.) puts the queſtion, and challenges all the world; Who is a God like unto thee, pardoning iniquity? Shew me one if you can, there is no ſin-pardoning God beſides thee. Who is a God like unto thee? Pardoning; As if the Prophet had ſaid, ſome will be or have been offering at this work, but they all have been or will be found mear bunglers at this work. None can pardon as thou doeſt. None can pardon, 1. So freely. 2. None ſo fully. 3. None ſo continually. 4. None ſo eternally. 5. None ſo indifferently, whether in reſpect of ſinners or ſins as thou doeſt. It is all one to thee what the ſins are, and all one to thee whoſe the ſins are, ſo they come to ask thy pardon. And that which is a diſadvantage to ask pardon of man, is an encouragement to ask it of God, the greatneſs of our ſins. The Pſalmiſt did, and any man may make that his plea, Lord pardon my ſin, for it is great. Dare any be a competitor with God in this work? The Phariſees put the queſtion right, if they had not miſtook the perſon to whom they put it, Mark 2. 7. Who is this that forgiveth ſins? none can forgive ſin but God alone. Again, ſin (in one ſence) is committed only againſt God, and for that reaſon alſo God only is the pardoner of it, Pſal. 51. Againſt thee only have I ſinned. Only the creditor can remit the debt, and he the offence to whom we have done the wrong. God is wrong'd in all ſins chiefly, and the wrong is ſo much his, that it may well be called only his, therefore without him no pardon.

But man is charged to forgive his brother, Luke 17. 4. Forgive thy brother ſeven times; and Chriſt hath taught us to pray for the forgiveneſs of our treſpaſſes, as we forgive thoſe that treſpaſs againſt us, Matth. 6. 12.

I anſwer, there are two things in all Second-table ſins; Firſt, Diſobedience againſt God; Secondly, Injury to man; That which man can, or is required to forgive and be a pardoner of, is only the injury done unto himſelf, ſo as not to revenge it; he cannot take off the ſin againſt God, or ſtay him from taking vengeance.

But other Scriptures ſpeak of a power committed to man, to remit and forgive ſin, Joh. 20. 23. Whoſe ſins ye remit are remitted, and whoſoever ſins ye retain, they are retained.

I anſwer, This power is not authoritative and magiſterial, but miniſterial and declarative: God hath ſet up ſuch an inſtitution, that man ſhould pardon man, becauſe many men, yea moſt men are not competent judges of their own eſtates, whether they be fit for pardon or no: Many wicked men would remit and looſen themſelves when as their ſins are to be retained; they ſee not their ſins, as another man may and doth ſee them: The Apoſtle Peter could ſay to Simon Magus, Acts 8. 23. I perceive that thou art in the gall of bitterneſs, and in the bond of iniquity; Simon Magus did not perceive it, he did not know his own condition, he flatter'd himſelf, and thought all well, becauſe lately ſprinckled with the water of Baptiſm; therefore ſome muſt declare theſe men bound, and hold them ſtill under ſin.

Again, there are others whoſe hearts are upright and ſincere, ſuch as are indeed reconciled to God, and all whoſe ſins are pardoned; but they are not able to make it out, and they cannot clear up this thing from the word to their own hearts: therefore they need a helper, to declare them pardoned, for they cannot ſpeak or declare it to their own ſouls: in ſuch caſes both for the conviction of preſuming ſinners, and the help of upright hearted, yet weak and doubting Chriſtians, God hath left this power with his Miniſters; Whoſe ſins ye remit they are remitted, and whoſe ſins ye retain they are retained. As in the caſe of Leproſie, Lev. 15. The Leper was brought to the Prieſt, and ſet before him as a Judge in that point; many were not competent Judges of their own diſeaſes, they could not reſolve it whether they had the Leproſie or no; ſome perceiving a ſcab or a ſore riſing upon them, thought (preſently) it was the Leproſie, when indeed it was not, and ſo wronged themſelves; Others who were indeed infected, would not be perſwaded that they were, therefore the Prieſts office was to determine theſe caſes, to bind and reſtrain, to looſen and let them go as he ſaw cauſe: In which ceremonial practice, we have the ſhadow of this Goſpel practice, in the power of remitting or retaining, of binding or of looſing ſin, according to the various conditions of men. Yet all this while God keepeth the great work in his own hand, he is the pardoner, and therefore Job (as the whole tenor of the Scripture rules it) made his addreſs to him, Why doeſt not thou pardon my tranſgreſſion, and take away mine iniquity?

Secondly, From theſe expreſſions about the pardon of ſin, we may learn what the pardon of ſin is; Pardon of ſin, is the removing or the lifting off, the paſſing away of ſin from the ſinner; that properly is pardon of ſin. Scripture language is very various and copious about this thing, and yet all runs into this general; I ſhall inſtance ſome of them.

First, Pardon is often expreſſed by a metaphor from paying of a debt, 1 Joh. 2. 12. I write unto you little children, becauſe your ſins are forgiven you; the word notes your ſins are paid, your debts are ſatisfied; the ſame word the Apoſtle uſeth, Rom. 8. 32. in reference to the ſufferings of Chriſt, God ſpared not his Son; He did not ſpare him the debt, that is, he neither forgave the whole, nor compounded with him to take half, or a part, and remit the reſt; no, he made him pay all fully down. So to be pardoned, notes the ſparing of the debt, letting the debt paſs, without calling us to account about it.

Secondly, Pardon of ſin is the removing it out of ſight, (Iſa. 38. 17.) Thou haſt caſt all my ſins behind thy back, ſaith Hezekiah, that is, thou haſt put them out of thy ſight. As when man is ſaid, to caſt the word of God behind him; Pſal. 50. 17. or behind his back, Nehem. 9. 26. The meaning is, he regards it not at all to obey it; ſo when God caſts the ſin of man behind his back, the meaning is, he will not regard or ſee it at all to puniſh it. That phraſe uſed by the Prophet Micah, is of the ſame importance, though of a deeper ſence, Chap. 7. 19. Thou wilt caſt all their ſins into the depths of the Sea. Who can dive thither to fetch them up? But may they not riſe up or ſwim out of themſelves? Surely no; our ſins are not cork or wood, but they are iron or lead, they are like ſtone, or like a mil-ſtone. To ſhew how irrecoverably the Egyptians were deſtroyed in the Red-ſea, it is ſaid, they ſank like lead in thoſe mighty waters (Exod. 15. 10.) and to ſhew how irrecoverably Babylon ſhall be deſtroyed, the Holy Ghoſt ſaith, that Babylon ſhall be like a great Mil-ſtone caſt into the Sea by a mighty Angel (Rev. 18. 21.) The caſting of a ſtone, iron or lead into the Sea, was anciently the Emblem of everlaſting forgetfulneſs, or of a reſolution never to recal that which was reſolved. * A learned Hebrician obſerves, that it was a cuſtom among the Jews, to take thoſe things which they abominated as filthy and unclean, and caſt them into the Sea; which act noted either the purging of them, or the overwhelming them out of ſight for ever: And a like uſage, is noted by † a reporter of the manner of the Americans, that thoſe barbarous people either deſciphering ſome wicked thing upon a ſtone, or making a ſymbole or ſign of it, uſed to throw it into a River which ſhould carry it down into the Sea, never to be remembred.

Thirdly, Pardon of ſin is noted by waſhing and purging, to ſhew that the filthineſs of it, is removed from us, Pſal. 51. 2.

Fourthly, By covering, Pſal. 32. 1. and by not imputing, ver. 2.

Fifthly, By blotting out, Iſa. 43. 25. and bloting out as a thick cloud, Iſa. 44. 22. All theſe notions of pardon concur in this one, that ſin paſſes away, is lifted up and taken off from the conſcience of the ſinner when it is pardoned: The ſum of all which is read in that one Text, Jer. 50. 20. In thoſe dayes, and in that time, ſaith the Lord, the iniquity of Iſrael ſhall be ſought for, and there ſhall be none, &c. (why?) For I will pardon them, whom I reſerve. So that pardoned ſin in Gods account is no ſin, and the pardoned ſinner, is as if he had never ſinned: Forgiveneſs deſtroyes ſin, as forgiving a debt deſtroyes the debt, and cancelling a Bond, deſtroyes the Bond. Obſerve, Thirdly, When ſin is pardoned, the puniſhment of ſin is alſo pardoned.

Both words ſignifie both the puniſhment and the ſin; and Job having complain'd that he was ſet up as a mark, and wounded by ſharp afflictions, now ſeeks eaſe in the ſureſt and ſpeedieſt way, the pardon of ſin, Why doeſt not thou pardon my tranſgreſſion, &c.

There are three things in ſin; The inward matter, the foul evil, the ſtock, the root of ſin, which is natural corruption dwelling in us, and flowing out by actions. Secondly, The defilement and pollution of ſin: Thirdly, The guilt; when we ſay ſin is pardoned or taken away, it is not in the former (though in pardoned perſons corruption is mortified, and the actings of it abated) but in the latter, the guilt is taken away which is the obligation to puniſhment, and ſo the puniſhment is taken away too: nothing vindictive or ſatisfactory to the juſtice of God, ſhall ever be laid upon that ſoul whoſe ſin is pardoned: Hence Iſa. 33. 24. the Prophet fore-ſhewing, how happy a pardoned people ſhall be, aſſures them, The Inhabitant ſhall not ſay, I am ſick, the people that dwell therein, ſhall be forgiven their iniquity; When iniquity is forgiven, our infirmity is cured: When the ſoul is healed, the body ſhall be recovered, both the body natural, and the body politick. Plague, and ſword, and famine, and death, all theſe evils go away, when ſin goes; Judgments are nothing elſe but unpardoned ſins; ſin unpardoned is the root which giveth ſap and life to all the troubles which are upon man or Nation: And as ſin committed, is every judgment radically, that is, there is a fitneſs in ſin to produce and bring forth any evil upon man; ſo pardon of ſin is every mercy radically; when you have pardon, from thence every other particular mercy ſprings; you may cut out any bleſſing, any comfort out of the pardon of ſin, particular mercies are but pardon of ſin ſpecificated or individuated, brought into this or that particular mercy; of all bleſſings you may ſay, This is pardon of ſin, that's pardon of ſin, and t'other is pardon of ſin. Forgiveneſs deſtroyeth that wherein the ſtrength of ſin lies, it deſtroyeth our guilt, and to us aboliſheth the condemning power of the Law: in theſe the ſtrength of ſin lies. Hence when the people of Iſrael had committed that great ſin in making the golden Calf, the firſt thing Moſes did, was to pray for the pardon of ſin, and he did it with a ſtrange kind of Rhetorick, Exod. 32. 32. Oh, this people have ſinned a great ſin, and have made them gods of gold. And now if thou wilt forgive their ſin; what then Moſes? There's no more ſaid; Moſes is ſilent in the reſt, it is an imperfect ſpeech: a pauſe made by holy paſſion, not the fulneſs of the ſentence. Such are often uſed in Scripture, as Luk. 13. 9. And if it bear fruit, what then? Our own thoughts are left to ſupply the event: our Tranſlators add, well. The Greek Tranſlators ſupply that in Exodus, thus, If thou wilt forgive them the ſin, forgive them: We may ſupply it with the word in Luke, If thou wilt forgive them, well. As if Moſes had ſaid, Lord forgive them, and then though they have done very ill, yet, I know it will be very well with them; God cannot withhold any mercy, where he hath granted pardon, for that with the antecedents and requiſites of it, is every mercy. Moſes knew what would follow well enough if they were pardoned, and what if they were not: therefore he adds, And if not, blot me I pray thee out of thy book which thou haſt written; If their ſins muſt ſtand upon record, Moſes would not; he knew if they were an unpardoned people, they were an undone people, all miſeries would quickly break in upon, yea overwhelm them, and he deſired not to out-live the proſperity of that people. If Iſrael muſt bear their ſins, they muſt alſo bear the wrath of God, and if their ſins be but taken off, then his love is ſetled on them: God gives Quailes ſometime, but he never gives pardons in anger. Obſerve, Fourthly, The greateſt ſins fall within the compaſs of Gods pardoning mercy.

The words in the Text are of the higheſt ſignification; Job ſpeaks not in a diminutive language, he is willing to lay load upon himſelf; they whoſe hearts are upright will not ſtand mincing the matter, and ſay they have ſins, but theirs are ſmall ones, ſins not grown to the ſtature of other mens. As the ſins of a godly man may be very great ſins, ſo (when they are) he acknowledges that they are. I know not where to ſet the bounds in regard of the nature or quantity of ſin; what ſin is there which a wicked man commits, but a godly man (poſſibly) may commit it, excepting that againſt the Holy Ghoſt? Theſe Job did, and the Saints may put to God in confeſſion: and as he did not, ſo they need not be diſcouraged to ask pardon for them, becauſe they are great. The grace of the Goſpel is as large as any evil of ſin the Law can charge us with. The grace of the Goſpel is as large as the curſe of the Law; whatſoever the Law can call or ſhew to be a ſin, the Goſpel can ſhew a pardon for it; what ever the Law can bind us with, the Goſpel can unlooſe. The Mercy-ſeat covered the whole Ark; The Mercy-ſeat noted the forgiveneſs of ſin; and if you read the deſcription of it (Exod. 25.) you ſhall find that it was exactly, to a hairs breadth, of the ſame dimenſions with the Ark, wherein the Law was put; intimating that there was mercy and pardon for ſin, let it come out of any part of the Law, laid up in that Ark. As the leaſt ſins muſt of neceſſity have a pardon, ſo the greateſt ſins are in a poſſibility of pardon: And the truth is, there is no ſin, as it is an Anomy, a tranſgreſſion of the Law, without the compaſs of pardon. It is not the malignity of the ſin, but the malignity of the ſinner, that makes it incurable; the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt is not unpardonable, becauſe there wants mercy large enough to pardon it, but becauſe it refuſeth the mercy which ſhould pardon it, and the medicine that ſhould heal it.

Fifthly, Obſerve who it is that here preſſeth thus for pardon; it is Job, and was Job never pardoned till now? Or was this (think you) the firſt time that ever Job prayed for pardon? Had not Job thought of this buſineſs before? Without queſtion he had; he was one of whom God gave this teſtimony, that he was a juſt and an upright man, one that feared God and eſchewed evil; He that did all this, and was all this, muſt firſt be in favour with God, and yet Job crieth out, Why doſt thou not pardon my tranſgreſſion? Whence Obſerve,

They whoſe ſins are pardoned, muſt yet pray for the pardon of ſin.

Yea, they who upon good grounds, have aſſurance, that their ſins are pardoned, muſt yet pray for the pardon of their ſins, 2 Sam. 12. 13. When Nathan told David, God hath put away thy ſin; he aſſured him that he was pardoned, and doubtleſs the heart of David opened by faith to let in that gracious meſſage; he was not faithleſs, but believing. Yet David in his penitential Pſalm penned afterward, prayes (O how earneſtly!) for pardon, again and again? That which a man is aſſured he hath, he may pray to have and injoy; make it ſo high, which ſome make the grand objection againſt this point. Why ſhould we pray (ſay they) for that which we have already? I ſay, a man may pray for that which he hath already, and is aſſured he hath. Chriſt himſelf was aſſured of the love of his Father, and that his Father would ſtick to him for ever, and he knew God was near unto him, yet he cries (Matth. 27. 46.) My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? Which Queſtion may be reſolved into this petition, My God, my God, do not forſake me. When David had received a meſſage by the Prophet concerning a great temporal mercy, the eſtabliſhing of his houſe, that God would ſettle him and his poſterity in the Throne for ever, the Text ſaith (2 Sam. 7. 15.) he preſently went in, and ſate before the Lord, and there makes a moſt earneſt prayer; and what is it about? He prayeth that God would ſettle and eſtabliſh his Kingdom, verſ. 25, 26. And now O Lord God, the thing which thou haſt ſpoken concerning thy ſervant, and concerning his houſe, eſtabliſh it for ever, and do as thou haſt ſaid, &c. And let the houſe of thy ſervant David be eſtabliſhed before thee.

Might not the Lord anſwer (according to this Objection) why doeſt thou trouble me about this? Did not I ſend thee a meſſage even now, that I would eſtabliſh thy Kingdom? Doſt thou think I have forgotten my promiſe, or will be unfaithful to it? We find not David thus chidden for praying thus. Nay at verſ. 27. you ſhall ſee how David vid makes this the very ground of his prayer, Lord (ſaith he) thou haſt revealed to thy ſervant, ſaying, I will build thee an houſe, therefore hath thy ſervant found in his heart to pray this prayer unto thee, &c. Even becauſe thou haſt revealed this unto me, that thou wilt build me an houſe, therefore upon this very ground I make this prayer, that thou wouldeſt build it. And to ſhew that he was full of faith the thing ſhould be done, before he prayed it might be done, he adds, ver. 28. Thou art that God, and thy words be true; and thou haſt promiſed this goodneſs unto thy ſervant. Now therefore let it pleaſe thee to bleſs the houſe of thy ſervant. No man could be fuller of aſſurance, or fuller of prayer then David was. Likewiſe Chriſt knew and was aſſured, that his ſheep, his elect people ſhould continue for ever, and that none ſhould be able to take them out of his hand, yet how abundantly doth he poure forth his ſpirit in prayer about theſe things? John 17. Again, Chriſt was aſſured he ſhould be delivered and upheld in death, yet in the dayes of his fleſh he offered up prayers and ſupplications with ſtrong cries and tears to him that was able to ſave him from death, and he was heard in what he feared, Heb. 5. 7. He was not afraid of the event, whether he ſhould hold out and prevail or no, whether he ſhould conquer and obtain the victory or no, he doubted not the ſucceſs of this war, though it were with principalities and powers; his fear was only a natural paſſion, which he took upon him, when he took our nature upon him. He was certain of the iſſue, and knew he ſhould carry the work through againſt all the armies of hell, he would never have undertaken it elſe; yet he prayeth with ſtrong cries that he might be ſtrengthened. So then it is no argument, becauſe a Believer knoweth his ſin is pardoned, that therefore he ſhould not pray for pardon; for many things of which there was clear and certain evidence that they were or ſhould be, have been prayed about; it is our duty, for it hath been the practice both of Chriſt and of his people to pray in ſuch a ſtate.

Further we may anſwer, matters of faith are of two ſorts. Firſt, Such as as are fully accompliſhed, acted and compleated in all the parts and circumſtances of them; for, and about ſuch things we are not to pray. No man is to pray for the redemption of the world; for that is a thing paſt, and yet it is a matter of faith; but the pardon of ſin though it be compleat in it ſelf, and a matter of faith too, yet it is compleating and perfecting every day more & more. Pardon given us, yet we feel not all which pardon gives: It is a ſetled act on Gods part, yet it is in motion on ours, that is, in a perfective motion; therefore, though we are aſſured that our ſins are pardoned, and ſhall ſtand pardoned for ever, yet we may pray about the pardon of them.

Thirdly, Suppoſe a man know his ſins are pardoned, yet he may pray to know it more, and that his evidences may be known yet clearer to him; for though ſin cannot be more pardoned in reſpect of God at one time then another; yet in regard of man, it may. He apprehends the pardon of his ſin more now then before, and may hereafter apprehend it more then now: And it is worth the while to beſtow pains in prayer for pardon, to have the pardon a little more enlightned: The degrees of any grace or favour, as well as the matter and ſubſtance of them, are worthy all our ſeekings and moſt ſerious enquiries at the Throne of Grace.

Fourthly, He that hath aſſurance of the pardon of ſin, is to pray for the pardon of ſin, becauſe he continueth ſtill to ſin: And though it be a truth that ſin uncommitted is pardoned in the decree and purpoſe of God, yet we muſt not walk by the decrees of God, but by his commandments and rules. His decree pardons ſin from all eternity; but his rule is, that we ſhould pray for pardon every day, as we pray for the bread we eat every day, Mat. 6. 11, 12. We muſt not ſay, God hath pardoned all ſin at once, therefore no matter to ask it again; or I have once had the ſight of pardon. and therefore the ſight of ſin ſhall never trouble me; ſeeing we are directed to ſearch our hearts for ſin, and to ſeek to God for pardon continually. So long as we ſin, it becomes us to be ſuitors for the pardon of ſin. He that hath ceaſed to ſin, may ceaſe to ask the forgiveneſs of ſin, till then, I know neither rule nor promiſe that gives a diſpenſation for this duty.

To cloſe this point, there are two caſes wherein Believers are eſpecially to renew their ſuits about the pardon of ſin.

Firſt (which though it be lamentable, yet it is poſſible) in the caſe of falling into ſcandalous and groſs ſins: Theſe not only weaken aſſurance, and benight the ſoul, but exceedingly diſhonour God, and grieve the holy Ghoſt. This cauſed David to pray and cry for the pardon and purging of his ſin as freſhly and as ſtrongly, as if he had never received a pardon, or any evidence of Gods love (of which yet he had great ſtore) before that day, Pſal. 51.

Secondly, In times of great troubles and trials, whether perſonal or national, the Saints re-inforce prayer about pardon. This was Job's caſe, his perſonal afflictions occaſioned to beg the remiſſion of ſins; and not only remiſſion for ſins then committed, but for all the ſins he had committed either before or after converſion. Even our formerly pardoned ſins need pardon; when we loſe the ſight of pardon, and when the ſoul hath no viſions, but viſions of terrour, it muſt ſeek viſions of peace in the free grace of God, renewing and ſealing pardon in the blood of Jeſus Chriſt.

Job having thus breathed his ſpirit in arguings, complaints and prayers, moves the Lord for a ſpeedy end and gracious anſwer; otherwiſe he ſees no way but he muſt breath back his ſpirit into the hands of the Lord who gave it, and lay his body in the duſt from whence it was taken.

For now ſhall I ſleep in the duſt, and thou ſhalt ſeek me in the morning, but I ſhall not be.

Now ſhall I ſleep in the duſt.] What he means by this ſleep hath been handled (chap. 3. 13.) where it was ſhewed that death is called a ſleep, why and in what manner death is a ſleep. The word here tranſlated to ſleep, ſignifies properly to lie down; but the ſence is the ſame, becauſe men lie down when they compoſe and fit themſelves to ſleep. And the dead are called down-liers as well as ſleepers in the Hebrew. The Septuagint reads it, Now ſhall I go to the earth. David ſpeaks near this language, Pſal. 22. 15, Thou haſt brought me to the duſt of death.

לעפר אשכב Propriè eſt cubare, hinc mortui שכבים vocantur, ut etiam ישנים Νυνὶ δὲ εἰς γῆν ἀπελεύσομαι.

Obſerve hence whither we are travelling, and where we muſt take up a lodging for our bodies ere long. They whoſe heads are higheſt, they who lie in beds of Ivory, muſt lie down in a bed of earth, and reſt their heads upon a pillow of duſt. Moſt ſleep in the duſt while they live, but all muſt ſleep in the duſt when they die: Earthly men have earthly minds, and they cannot reſt but in earth, for it is their center. Only he who hath laid up his heart in heaven, can comfortably think of laying down his head in the duſt.

Further it is remarkable in how pleaſing a notion Job ſpeaks of death when his life was moſt unpleaſant to him. He complained of reſtleſs nights in verſ. 3, 4, 13, 14. of this Chapter; yet he could think of a time when he ſhould lie quietly in his bed, and not have ſo much as a waking moment, or a diſtracting dream. And when he was once gone to this bed, the curtains of darkneſs being cloſe drawn about him, he ſhould open his eyes no more till the eyelids of that eternity-morning opened; therefore he concludes,

Thou ſhalt ſeek me in the morning (ſc. of time) but I ſhall not be.

In the Hebrew, Thou ſhalt ſeek me in the morning is but one word; and ſome cut out a Latine word fit to ſerve it. We may Engliſh it ſtrictly to the Letter, If thou morning me, that is, if thou comeſt to ſeek me (as the force of this word hath been formerly given) with never ſo much diligence and care, I ſhall not be found, thou wilt not have Job alive upon the earth to beſtow thy mercies upon:

שחרתני Si diluculaveris me, ficto verbo.

For, I ſhall not be.] The Hebrew is, And not I, that is, I ſhall not be alive, I ſhall not be to be had, he means a non-exiſtence, not, a non-eſſence; a being he ſhould have, but he ſhould not appear. It is as if he had ſaid, Lord, I ſhall not be a ſubject capable of outward deliverances, and bodily comforts unleſs they come ſpeedily; Lord, if thou wilt give me any help, give it, for death haſtens upon me, as if it hoped to be too nimble for, or to out-run thy ſuccours.

ואינני Non ego, ſubaudi ſum, vel ero.

Mr. Broughton's tranſlation ſeems to intend another ſence, which other of the learned Hebricians favour too. He renders the latter part of the verſe thus, Whereas I lie now in the duſt (referring it to his preſent condition; I am now lying in the duſt, to be pitied of the keeper of men, ſo he himſelf expounds, Lord, I lie in the duſt, a pitiful object, then) why doſt thou not quickly ſeek me out, that I ſhould no more be? which he he interprets, I would by a quick death be rid from theſe pains, As if in theſe words Job had again renewed his former deſire of death; concerning which, many things have been ſpoken from preceding paſſages of his reply, I will not double upon them here.

But I take the former reading and meaning of the words, as moſt proper to the coherence and concluſion of Job's diſcourſe; and ſo they are but a repetition or re-inforcement of what he ſpake at verſ. 7, 8. There he ſaid, O remember that my life is wind, mine eye ſhall no more ſee good, the eye of him that hath ſeen me, ſhall ſee me no more. Thine eyes are upon me, and I am not. Here he ſpeaks the ſame thing in ſome variety of words, Thou ſhalt ſeek me in the morning, and I ſhall not be. The ſeverity of my ſickneſs threatens to prevent thy earlieſt preparations for my relief.

Thus (through the ſtrength of Chriſt) ſome diſcoveries have been made about this firſt congreſs or charge between Eliphaz and Job. But Job hath not yet done; behold a ſecond and a third Combatant ready to enter the Liſt againſt him: And when theſe three have once tried their skill and ſtrength upon him, they all three charge him afreſh a ſecond time, and two of them a third. Was ever poor ſoul held ſo hard to it as he? How much doth the life of Grace make him exceed man, when he (as a man) could ſcare be reckoned among the living? Truth and Grace will triumph and prevail, notwithſtanding all the diſadvantages of fleſh and nature. Is it not ſtrange, that a man ſhould not be weary with arguing, while he often profeſſes he was wearied with living? That while he could ſcarce fetch his breath for pain, he ſhould do ſo much work (in a manner) without a breathing. For as the meſſengers of his troubles gave him no reſt; But while one was yet ſpeaking, there came another alſo and ſaid, &c. And while a ſecond was yet ſpeaking, a third came and ſaid, &c. So neither did theſe Diſputants about his troubles. While Eliphaz and Job were yet ſpeaking, Bildad anſwered and ſaid, &c. While Bildad and Job were yet ſpeaking, Zophar anſwered and ſaid. What Eliphaz ſaid, and Job anſwered in his firſt undertaking, you have heard: The opening of what Bildad had to ſay, and Job to anſwer, waits (till the Lord ſhall be pleaſed to vouchſafe it) a further oppertunity. What is now (as himſelf hath pleaſed to inable his unworthy inſtrument) offered, waits upon him for his bleſſing. To him all bleſſing is for ever due; on him let praiſes ever wait for all his bleſſings, Amen.

EIGHTH, NINTH, AND TENTH CHAPTERS
Of the Book of JOB.

CHAP. VIII. Verſ. 1, 2, 3.

Then anſwered Bildad the Shuhite, and ſaid,
How long wilt thou ſpeak theſe things? And how long ſhall the words of thy mouth be like a ſtrong wind?
Doth God pervert judgment? Or doth the Almighty pervert juſtice?

THE anſwer of Eliphaz to Job's firſt complaint, hath been opened in Chap. 4, 5. together with Job's reply, in the 6, & 7. In which he labours to diſ-aſperſe and vindicate himſelf from what Eliphaz had raſhly taxed him with, Hypocriſie, The name of an Hypocrite (like that of a Heretick) is ſuch, as no man ought to be patient under.

But while Job endeavours to clear himſelf in the opinion, or from the imputations of one of his friends, he runs into a further arrere of prejudices with a ſecond: Some of thoſe Arguments which he had framed to pay his debt to Eliphaz, and ſave his own integrity, being again charged upon his account by his friend Bildad the Shuhite; who preſents himſelf (a duty very commendable) as an Advocate for God; and he conceived there was but need he ſhould. Job in his reply having (in his ſenſe) wronged the juſtice of God, he takes himſelf obliged to ſtand up and clear it, to ſhew Job his ſuppoſed ſin, and provoke him to repentance, both by threatnings of further wrath, and promiſes of ſpeedy mercy. Thus in general.

More diſtinctly, there are four parts of Bildads ſpeech.

Firſt, A confutation of Job's reply to Eliphaz; and he gives it us ſhadowed by an elegant ſimilitude in verſ. 2. How long wilt thou ſpeak theſe things? And how long ſhall the words of thy mouth be like the ſtrong wind? There's a cenſure upon all that he had ſpoken.

Secondly, He gives us an aſſertive Queſtion, concerning the juſtice of God; to clear it from, and ſet it above, whatſoever might ſeem to ſtain it in the eyes of men. This we have at verſ. 3. Doth God pervert judgement? Or doth the Almighty pervert juſtice? Not he.

Thirdly, In the body of the Chapter he urges divers Arguments to confirm this concluſion, that, God is juſt; and there are three heads of Argument, by which he confirms it;

Firſt, From the example of Job's Children, and from his own preſent, with the poſſibility of his future condition, in caſe he repent, from verſ. 3, to 8.

The ſecond Argument is drawn from the teſtimony of antiquity, and that's laid down in verſ. 8, 9, & 10.

The third Argument appears in the ſimilitudes;

First, Of a ruſh or flag, in verſ. 11, 12, & 13.
Secondly, Of a ſpiders web, in verſ. 14, 15.
Thirdly, Of a Tree floriſhing for a time; but anon plucked up, in verſ. 16, 17, 18, and 19. Theſe are the Arguments and Illuſtrations of his grand aſſertion.

Doth God pervert judgment? Or doth the Almighty pervert juſtice? No he doth not. And thou mayeſt learn this leſſon from thy own experience, from the example of thy Children, from the teſtimony of antiquity, yea the withering ruſh, the ſpiders-web, the luxurious roots and branches of a tree may all be thy Maſters and inſtructors to teach thee this truth, That God is juſt.

The fourth and laſt part of the Chapter, ſets forth the favour of God, to thoſe who are faithful and ſincere: for having maintained the juſtice of God, and ſhewed how terrible he will be to hypocrites who deal falſly with him; he now mitigates and mollifies his diſcourſe, by proclaiming the goodneſs of God to ſinners repenting, yea (who are the worſt of ſinners) to hypocrites if they repent, pluck off their masks or diſguiſes, and truly humble themſelves before him. This is the ſubject of the three laſt verſes of the Chapter, Behold God will not caſt away a perfect man, &c. As if he had ſaid, Though God be juſt to deal with hypocrites, as he hath dealt with thee and thy Children, yet he will not caſt away the perfect and upright; ſhew thy ſelf ſuch, and he will receive thee. This he quickens by ſubjoyning the further ſeverity of God, to thoſe that ſhall perſiſt in their hypocriſie, verſ. 20. and in the cloſe of the 22. Neither will he help the evil doers, and the dwelling place of the wicked ſhall come to nought.

Thus you have both the general ſcope, and likewiſe the ſpecial parts of Bildad's diſcourſe, which will give us ſome help towards a more clear diſcovery of particulars.

Verſ. 1. Then anſwered Bildad the Shuhite, and ſaid.

The ſpeaker is Bildad; I ſhall not ſtay upon the perſon; who this Bildad was, of what line and pedigree, was touched in opening Chap. 2. verſ. 11. and therefore I ſhall paſs to the matter about which he ſpeaks.

Verſ. 2. How long wilt thou ſpeak theſe things? And how long ſhall the words of thy mouth be as a ſtrong wind?

He begins very chidingly, How long wilt thou ſpeak theſe things?] The words import either, firſt, admiration, How long! As if he had ſaid, Could any man have believed that thou wouldſt have ſpoken ſuch things as theſe, and theſe ſo long! How ſtrangely haſt thou forgot thy ſelf, to twiſt ſuch a thred, and ſpin out a diſcourſe ſo ſinfully, ſo frowardly, ſo long?

Secondly, The words may carry a ſence of indignation in the ſpeaker, How long wilt thou ſpeak theſe things? As if he had ſaid, I am not able to bear thee any longer, I cannot endure ſuch language, it grates harſhly upon mine ear, and is a burden to my ſpirit; for ſhame give over, hold thy peace, enjoyn thy ſelf ſilence, lock up thy lips, How long wilt thou ſpeak theſe things?

Thirdly, The charge of an accuſation may lie under theſe words, How long wilt thou ſpeak theſe things? That is, How long wilt thou ſpeak vain and fooliſh words, indiſcreet and falſe words, dangerous and blaſphemous words, imputing injuſtice unto God? Art thou obſtinate and pertinacious? Wilt thou not yet hearken to the admonitions and wholſom counſel of thy friends? How long! Thus he taxes and cenſures him. How long wilt thou ſpeak? We have the like ſence in that Queſtion, Pſal. 4. 2. where David conteſts with his hardned enemies, O ye ſons of men, how long will ye turn my glory into ſhame? How long will ye love vanity, and ſeek after leaſing? How long, and how long? It is matter of admiration to think that reaſonable creatures ſhould be ſo unreaſonable to love vanity, and to love it long. His ſpirit riſes and boyls ſo high with holy indignation, to ſee men ſo fooliſh, that his mouth muſt run over in cenſure and accuſation, How long! The Text of Wiſdoms expoſtulation, Prov. 1. 22. (How long ye ſimple ones will ye love ſimplicity?) bears the ſame gloſs, one interpretation fits both. How long wilt thou ſpeak theſe things?

Interrogatio ex adjuncto tempore aculeos addit reprehenſioni. Sanct.

Theſe things.] The demonſtrative particle may have reference to the words immediately fore-going, and only to them, How long wilt thou ſpeak theſe things? That is, the things which thou haſt ſpoken in Chap. 6, 7. The language is undervaluing and contemptuous, How long wilt thou ſpeak theſe things? Such poor ſtuff. How long wilt thou trouble thy Auditors with ſuch matter, ſuch fruitleſs, frothy, crude, and undigeſted matter; matter ſo injurious, ſo diſhonourable to God, ſo unſavory, and unedifying to man.

Taking Job (under Bildad's apprehenſion) as having failed and erred in his diſcourſe, Obſerve,

First, Perſeverance in evil is worſe then the doing of evil.

How long wilt thou ſpeak theſe things? If thou having ſpoken once amiſs had'ſt recall'd thy ſelf, and ſtopped there it had been more excuſable; To outlaſh ſometimes in a word, may be a wiſe mans caſe: but to make ſuch a continued ſtudied oration as this, and be out in all, and all to be an invective againſt Heaven, who is able to bear it? To ſpeak or do ill, though but once, is too often by once; To act evil often, is to double every act. The ſhorteſt time is too long to ſerve any luſt in. When the Apoſtle Peter (1 Pet. 4. 3.) ſaith, The time paſt of our life may ſuffice us to have wrought the will of the Gentiles; his meaning is, the time paſt is too much: our luſts have got too much of our lives, as the world hath got too much of our loves. One minute is more then we owe to the ſervice of ſin. The ſufficiency here ſpoken of is an exceſs; the time paſt of our lives is too much to work the will of the Gentiles. We may not make an equal diviſion of our lives between our luſts and Chriſt, ſo much to Chriſt, ſo much to luſt. Nothing is more unequal then this equality. We can never ſerve Chriſt too long, nor ſin too ſhort a time. We can not beſtow too much of our breath in holy ſpeeches and conferences; nor can we beſtow two little in thoſe which are vain and ſinful. We may juſtly take off thoſe who are moſt conciſe and laconical in uſeleſs diſcourſes, with, How long will you ſpeak theſe things? Frothy words are the waſte of time as well as of breath.

Secondly, Note, Bildad rebukes Job for his laviſh language.

It is our duty to be watchful over our words.

How long wilt thou ſpeak thus; we muſt obſerve our own words, and know what we ſpeak. We ſhould ſtop our own mouths, and put our ſelves to ſilence, when the tongue grows unruly. It were very happy that ſome had power as well as authority over their own mouths, and knew how to put that bridle (ſpoken of in the Pſalm) upon their own lips. It is better for a man to ſtop his own mouth by prudence, then that another ſhould ſtop it by reproof.

Thirdly, Taking Bildad's ſuppoſition ſtill, that Job was in the wrong. Note,

It is our duty to give check to fruitleſs and frothy ſpeeches, much more to blaſphemous and wicked ſpeeches.

Bildad thought it high time to ſilence Job, ſeeing Job would not ſilence himſelf. The Apoſtle repreſents to Titus the tongue-folly of the Cretians, There are many unruly and vain talkers among you, eſpecially they of the circumciſion; and what muſt be done with theſe, who cared ſo little what they ſaid? He is counſell'd how to deal with them in the next words, Whoſe mouths muſt be ſtopped, who ſubvert whole houſes, &c. It is a ſin in the hearer to let another ſpeak ſinfully, without a ſignification of his diſtaſte. The word which the Apoſtle uſeth to Titus, is a metaphor taken from the muzling of barking howling dogs, when they open unſeaſonably and are unquiet; Rational conviction is a Goſpel-muzle, and an effectual ſtop-mouth for unruly talkers. And it is obſervable, that the Apoſtle uſeth this ſimilitude of muzling a dog, when he ſpeaks of thoſe of the circumciſion, concerning whom he had given caution in a very ſutable character (Phil. 3. 2.) Beware of dogs, beware of evil workers, beware of the conciſion; that is, of thoſe who ſtood for circumciſion. Writing to the Philipians, he calls them dogs; and his adviſe to Titus is, they muſt be muzl'd. The noxious iſſues of the tongue muſt either be cured or ſtopped, Evil words corrupt (which is worſe then the corrupting of good air) good manners. An infection taken in at the ear, hath often poyſon'd the heart.

Fourthly, Taking Bildad as miſtaken (and ſo he was) in this reproof and cenſure upon Job, Obſerve, Reproofs are often grounded upon miſtakes.

It is eaſie to reprove, what we do not apprehend. Bildad perceived not the reach and drift of Job, and he falls heavily upon him with reproofs. A due underſtanding of his ſcope, would have given a fair comment upon his words. But Bildad clothes the ſpeech of Job in a ſence which he abhorred; and having put it in that ugly dreſs, he reproves and cenſures it accordingly. Many diſ-figure the opinions and doctrines of others with conceits of their own, and preſuming they hold or mean thus and thus, they diſpute not againſt the real opinion of the oppoſite party but their own diſguiſe. As the perſons of the Primitive Chriſtians were often put into Lions, or Bears-skins, by their barbarous and heatheniſh perſecutors, and then baited with Dogs; ſo are the opinions of many later Chriſtians debated.

And how long ſhall the words of thy mouth be as a ſtrong wind?

רוח כביר Spiritus ſumitur pro halitu & per Metonymiam pro verbis, i.e. pro aere articulato, & per loquelæ inſtrumenta in verba formata. Bold.

The Hebrew, word for word, runs thus; And the words of thy mouth a ſtrong wind: we reſume in this latter clauſe, How long, and add, be like, to ſupply the ſence. There is no tearm of compariſon expreſſed in the original, yet the ſtrength of one is implied, and therefore to fill up the meaning, we render, And how long ſhall the words of thy mouth be as a ſtrong wind? Mr. Broughton tranſlates it without a note of ſimilitude, How long wilt thou talk in this ſort, that the words of thy mouth be a vehement wind?

Words are air or breath formed and articulated, by the inſtruments of ſpeech. Hence breath and words are put for the ſame in divers Scriptures (Pſal. 33. 6.) By the word of the Lord were the Heavens made, and all the hoſt of them by the breath of his mouth. Breath in the latter clauſe, is no more then word in the firſt, for it was a powerful word, which cauſed all the creatures to ſtand out in their ſeveral forms. So Iſa. 11.4. He ſhall ſmite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips (or with the wind of his lips) ſhall he ſlay the wicked; It is not blowing upon wicked men that will ſlay them, but it is ſpeaking to them; there is a power in the word of a Prophet, when ſpoken in the Name of Chriſt, which deſtroyes thoſe who will not obey it, Hoſ. 6. 5. I have hewed them by my Prophets, I have ſlain them by the words of my mouth.

Græci & Latini Prophetas quoſdam ex Hebræo Cabiros cognominarunt, ob inſignem eorum ad extra gravitatem & loquacitatem idem dicti Corybantes. Bold.

Secondly, Bildad is conceived to allude to a certain ſort or ſect of men. For from Cabir here tranſlated ſtrong, the name of certain Poets or old Prophets is derived, whom the Greeks and Latines called Cabirs or Cabirims. Theſe men had an affected outward gravity, yet were full of words, and much given to Battology, repeating the ſame thing over and over. Bildad ranks Job (ſay ſome) with thoſe Prophets, How long ſhall the words of thy mouth be like thoſe roming Cabirs, who by a needleſs multiplying of words, grated the ears, and burdened the ſpirits of all the hearers? Why doeſt thou ſpeak, as if thou couldſt carry the matter with empty words, and bare repetitions.

Quos Authores Latini Divos potes, ſeu potentes vocant Græcis κάβειροι dicuntur ab hac voce, quæ potem ſive potentem denotat. Druſ. Ad magnanimitatem referri poteſt, quod corpore attenuato exhauſtiſq; viribus fortiter tamen perſiſteret in loquendo & reſpondendo. Cajet. Jobi oratio non fuit frigida & languida ſed vehemens & concitata. Pined.

Thirdly, The word ſtrong wind, may note the ſtoutneſs of Job's ſpirit, or magnanimity he expreſt in his words. Job's language was not cold and chill, as if his breath were frozen, but he ſpake with height and heat; The ſpirit and courage of a man, breathes out at his lips; How long ſhall the words of thy mouth be a ſtrong wind? When wilt thou yield to God, and lie humbly at his feet? What a heart haſt thou? Thou ſpeakeſt as big, as if thou hadſt never been touched, as if God never laid one ſtroke upon thee; thou haſt a weak body, but a ſtiff ſpirit: Thou ſpeakeſt as if thou wouldſt bear all down before thee, and by thy boldneſs, ſtorm and bluſter thoſe out of countenance, who are here to give thee counſel.

Fourthly, Take in the ſimilitude, How long ſhall the words of thy mouth be as a ſtrong wind? That is, how long wilt thou ſpeak ſo much, and ſpeak ſo fiercely. For the word Caber is more then Gadol, which ſignifies barely great. Grammarians note, that it ſignifies both continued quantity and diſcreet quantity, multitude and magnitude. How many words wilt thou ſpeak? and how great words wilt thou ſpeak? Shall thy words be as a great, various, unfolded wind? (ſo the Vulgar) Wilt thou blow all the points of the compaſs at once, and like a whirle-wind, invade and circle us on every ſide.

Such words are like a ſtrong wind.

Firſt, Becauſe of their bluſtering noiſe. There are ſtormy and tempeſtuous words. The tempeſt of the tongue is one of the greateſt tempeſts in the world. Paſſionate language troubles both the air and the ear, makes all unquiet, like an enraged angry wind.

Secondly, In ſuch words, as in ſtormy winds, there is great ſtrength to bear all down before them, or to ſway all to that point they blow for. As all the trees in a Forreſt look that way which the wind ſits: ſo all the ſpirits in any Aſſembly, are apt to turn that way, which words bearing a fair ſhew of reaſon direct. How often are the judgments and opinions of men, carried by words either to good or evil, to truth or error. And unleſs a man have good abilities of judgment and reaſon, to manage what he knows or holds, and to make himſelf maſter of it: It is a hard thing upon a large wind of anothers diſcourſe, not to have his opinion turned. Hence the Apoſtle (Tit. 1. 11.(ſpeaking of vain talkers, ſaith, Their words ſubvert whole houſes; as a ſtrong wind, ſo ſtrong words blow houſes down, They ſubvert whole houſes; as that ſubverts the frame and materials of the houſe, ſo this the people or inhabitants of the houſe; when Chriſt breathed graciouſly towards Zacheus, he ſaid (Luk. 19. 9.) This day is ſalvation come to this houſe; when falſe Teachers breath erroniouſly, ſubverſion comes to many houſes. The Apoſtle (Epheſ. 4. 14.) uſing this ſimilitude about the doctrines of men, adviſeth us to look to our ground, and that we be well rooted; That we be no more children, toſſed too and fro, and carried with every wind of doctrine; as if he had ſaid, The wind that blows from the lips of ſeducers (unleſs you be well eſtabliſhed) will carry you to and fro like children, or wave your tops up and down as trees, yea endanger the pulling you up by the roots.

Thirdly, Strong words are as ſtrong winds in a good ſence, for as many ſtrong winds purge and cleanſe the air, making it more pure and healthy; ſo thoſe ſtrong wholſom winds from the mouths of men, purge the mind of error, and cleanſe the ſoul of ſin: This is the ſpecial means which Chriſt hath ſet up to cleanſe his people from infectious and noiſom opinions. Theſe he diſperſes and diſpels by the breath of his Miniſters, in the faithful and authoritative diſpenſation of the Goſpel.

Fourthly, There are ill qualities in ſtrong winds; ſome are infectious winds, they corrupt the air, conveying ill vapors to the places on which they breathe: So there is a ſtrong, unwholſom wind of words, which carries unto ſin or error. How often are the ſpirits and manners of men infected and poiſon'd by ſuch a breath?

Fifthly, They may be compared unto ſtrong winds, in regard of the lightneſs of them; the wind hath little ſolidity ~~in it~~, and that's it which Bildad eſpecially reproveth in Job; here are a great many words, much of the tongue, but here's little matter, Words without weight are but wind: when you gather them up, weigh and conſider them fully, you can make nothing of them, there's no tack in them. Wind will not feed, no more will ſuch words; but wholſom and faithful words are meat and drink, ſtrength and nouriſhment to the ſoul: Sound diſcourſe yields a well-tempered underſtanding, many refreſhing morſels.

Laſtly, They are like ſtrong winds for the ſwiftneſs of them; words paſs ſpeedily, and fill all quickly; Their line is gone out thorow all the earth, and their words to the end of the world, Pſal. 19. 4. Another Pſalm ſpeaks as much of wiched men, Their tongue walketh through the earth, Pſal. 73. 9. As the wind runs from one part of the world to another; ſo do words, when they are ſent upon an errand, either to do good, or to do hurt; therefore God choſe the Miniſtry of the Word as an Inſtrument to ſave his people. And it is the fitteſt Inſtrument, running ſwiftly into the ears, and ſo conducting truth into the hearts of thouſands at once. Upon the day of Pentecoſt (Acts 2. 2, 3.) when the Diſciples met together, the Text ſaith, Suddenly there came a ſound from Heaven as of a ruſhing mighty wind, and it filled all the houſe where they were ſitting: firſt comes a ruſhing wind; what followeth? There appeared unto them cloven tongues with fire. Theſe repreſented the manner how the Goſpel ſhould be conveyed through the world: The Holy Ghoſt is ſent in tongues, to ſhew, that by tongues tipt and inſpired, acted and moved by the Holy Ghoſt, the word ſhould be ſubdued to the knowledge of Jeſus Chriſt. The tongue is the chief Organ of ſpeech. And obſerve, with the tongues there comes a wind, a ruſhing wind, implying that words ſpoken by thoſe tongues ſhould be as a mighty ruſhing wind, and like that wind, which filled all the houſe where they ſat, ſhould fill the world, even all Nations with the ſound of the Goſpel; that, like a ſtrong wind they ſhould bear down the errors, ſins and luſts of men before them, and like a wholſom wind, purge and winnow out all the filthineſs and uncleanneſs, the chaff and duſt of mens ſpirits. By cloven tongues, and a ruſhing wind, wonders have been wrought in the world. As thoſe unruly talkers (Tit. 1. 11.) ſubverted, ſo thoſe who talk by rule have converted whole houſes; The wind of words blows both good and evil to the world; and we may as much encourage holy tongues, Let your words be long and long, a ſtrong wind: as check a vain talker in the language of Bildad, How long ſhall thy words be a ſtrong wind.

From this general reproof, Bildad deſcends to a ſpecial charge againſt Job.

Verſ. 3. Doth God pervert judgment? Or doth the Almighty pervert juſtice?

ἀδικήσει κρίνων. Injuſte aget judicans. Sept. Theſis eſt dicendorum.

As if he had ſaid, Job, thou haſt ſpoken words which like a ſtrong wind pervert all things, and turn them up-ſide-down. But, Doth God pervert? Doth he turn things up-ſide-down? This blaſphemy is the interpretation of many of thy complaints. Thou ſeemeſt to lay this aſperſion upon God but (with indignation I ſpeak it) doth God pervert judgment.

The Queſtion is reſolvable into a vehement negation, God doth not pervert judgment, neither doth the Almighty, pervert juſtice. He gives it with a queſtion for greater emphaſis, Doth God pervert judgment? Doſt thou think he will? Far be it from thee to think ſo; Injuſtice lies far from the heart of God, Juſtice lies at his heart, He loveth judgment, Pſal. 37. 28.

To clear the Text, I ſhall briefly touch upon the ſingle terms; 1. God. 2. Almighty. 3. Judgment. 4. Juſtice: And then ſhew what it is to pervert judgment and juſtice; from all it will appear, how extreamly oppoſite it is to the very nature of God to pervert either.

Doth God.] The word is, El, ſignifying the ſtrong God, the mighty God, the powerful God. In the ſecond clauſe, Doth the Almighty pervert juſtice? We have the word, Shaddai, which name of God was largely opened at Chap. 5. v. 17. I ſhall not ſtay upon it here, but only as it reſpects the point in hand, and ſo there are three interpretations of that Title obſervable.

Firſt, It notes God all-ſufficient to do what he pleaſeth, or to effect what he deſigneth: if he gives direction for any judgment to be executed, he is Shaddai, It ſhall be done. As he is El, a powerful Judge to give ſentence, ſo he is Shaddai, an Almighty God to execute the ſentence: There is no reſiſting his power, no getting out of his hands, his name is Shaddai.

Alii vertunt uberrimum, abundantem copioſum, cujus virtus, & munificentia, per omnia permeat, & cujus uberibus & bonitate omnia alantur & nutriantur, qui nullius indiget, qui bonorum noſtrorum nulla cupiditate tangitur. Pined. ὁ τὰ πάντα ποιήσας. Sept. Quod ſic explicant, qui cunctarum rerum naturas ſummo ordine & equitate conſtituit, is in te affligendo, quod juſtum eſt, non ſubvertet.

Secondly, The word ſignifies, one who hath all abundance, plenty and fulneſs in himſelf; As alſo whoſe power, goodneſs, and bounty, flow out to the ſupply of others, himſelf having no need to receive from any other. He is a fountain of all for all. Hence Shaddai cannot but do juſtice; He that hath abundance in himſelf needs not take bribes to pervert juſtice; Needy Judges are often covetous Judges; they who have not a fulneſs of their own, are under a great temptation to wrong others, to ſupply their wants. But he that gives to all, needs not receive from any. This conſideration ſets God infinitely above one of the ſtrongeſt temptations to Injuſtice.

Thirdly, The word Shaddai, is rendred, The maker of all things. Will the Almighty, the maker of all things, who hath ſet the world in ſuch an exquiſite form and order, who hath given ſo much beauty to the creature; will he put things out of order, or do ſuch a deformed act as this, pervert juſtice? He that is the maker of all things, and hath made them in number, weight and meaſure, will he turn the world up ſide-down, or make confuſion in the world? It is not poſſible he ſhould.

So then the name Shaddai, in theſe three ſences, is aptly applied to God; in oppoſition to the perverting of juſtice. As Abraham debates the matter with him (Gen. 18. 25.) Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right? It is impoſſible for God who judgeth all men, to do an act of injuſtice unto any man. He that judgeth all can do injuſtice to none. God takes no advantage to be unjuſt, becauſe none can call him to account for injuſtice. They ſhould be furtheſt from doing wrong, who need not fear any appeal from them, or complaint againſt them, if they do wrong. The Judge of the whole earth hath none to judge him. He will do right to all, who cannot be judged by any.

Further, Conſider thoſe two words, judgment and juſtice.] Judgment and juſtice are often put in Scripture for the ſame, and when put together, the latter is as an epithite to the former, Pſal. 119. 121. I have done judgment and juſtice: that is, I have done judgment juſtly, exactly, to a hair. Sometimes they have a diſtinct ſignification.

Facere legē & præceptū eſt facere judicium. Deus ideo leges ſuas judicia vocat, quod æquiſſima ſunt, quæ præſcribit.

Firſt, Judgment ſignifies, that right which every man ought to do at all times (Pſal. 106. 3. Iſa. 5. 7.)

Secondly, The Law or rule it ſelf, according to which every man is to do right, Levit. 26. 26. Pſal. 19. 10. God calls all his Laws judgments, becauſe they are all moſt juſt and equal. Judgment hath a three-fold oppoſition, by which we may underſtand the nature of it.

Firſt, Judgment is oppoſed to anger, rigor and ſeverity, Jerem. 10. 24. Correct me, O Lord, but with judgment, not in thine anger: That is, Correct me mercifully, moderately, and in meaſure: ſuffer not thy whole diſpleaſure to ariſe; do not exact the utmoſt farthing. In which ſence the judgments of God upon wicked men in Hell ſhall be without judgment: And thus to do a thing without judgment, is all one, as to do it without mercy.

Ezek. 44. 14

Secondly, Judgment is oppoſed to folly, or to fooliſhneſs: Judgment is Wiſdom; when we ſay, Such an one is a man of judgment, we mean, he is a wiſe man. Thus judgment is an ability to judge.

Thirdly, Judgment is oppoſed to injuſtice and wrong, which is the vulgar and common meaning.

We may take it in any of theſe ſences here. As judgment is oppoſed to anger, ſo it is moderation in juſtice, Will the Lord pervert judgment? That is, Will not he be as moderate in executing judgment, as equity can admit? Hoſ. 11. 9. I will not execute the fierceneſs of mine anger. I will not return to deſtroy Ephraim, for I am God and not man, the Holy One in the midſt of thee, and I will not enter into the City. As an enemy having taken a City, to ſhew them ſome favor, ſaith, I will not enter your City with my Army, to ſpoyl and plunder you: ſo God ſpeaks here, Though men be as wicked as they can, yet God will not be as angry as he can.

Again, Will he pervert Judgment, as it imports Wiſdom? No, He walks exactly by the rule of Wiſdom, of the higheſt and pureſt Wiſdom. There are no miſts or clouds of ignorance before the eye of his underſtanding. And as he hath no darkneſs, ſo no falſe lights.

Laſtly, Take it as oppoſed to injuſtice; Will the Lord pervert judgment? Will he wrong any man? Carries he a matter ſiniſterly or partially? He will not do it.

משפט Judicium, jus & mos ſeu modus in judicando. Judicium eſt in vero abſq; errore cognoſcendo, juſtitia in tribuendo cuique quod ſuum eſt. Judicium pœnam reſpicit, juſtitia compenſationem bene actorū. Druſ.

Again, As judgment and juſtice are taken preciſely or diſtinctly.

Firſt, Judgment ſignifies due order in trying and finding out the ſtate of a cauſe: And Juſtice the giving of ſentence upon that tryal.

Secondly, Judgment is a clear knowledge of what ought to be done: And Juſtice is the doing of that which we know. Juſtice is an evenneſs and uprightneſs of Conſcience, in paſſing every thing according to received light.

Thirdly, Some diſtinguiſh them thus: Judgment is in condemning thoſe that are guilty; and Juſtice is in abſolving and acquitting thoſe that are innocent, or rewarding thoſe who have done well.

Fourthly, Thus, Judgment reſpects capital cauſes, which are for life; and Juſtice reſpects civil cauſes, which are for eſtate or liberty.

Take them in any of theſe ſences, or under whatſoever other diſtinction they are conſiderable. The Lord God El-Shaddai, is no perverter of either. He never diſturbs or clogs the order of tryal: He is no hinderer of the ſentence from due execution. He exactly underſtands every cauſe, and he awards what is due to every perſon. He wrongs no man in life or limb, in eſtate or liberty.

Thus we ſee what Judgment and Juſtice are: I ſhall now open what it is to pervert Judgment and Juſtice. The ſame word is uſed in both. *

* Iſtæ repetitiones divina eloquia multum commendant, ſive eadem verba alta ſententia ſive aliis verbis eadem ſententia repetatur, illa enim ejuſdem rei reſumptio, moram quandam in meditando & ponderando requirit, quod in Pſalmis frequens. Auguſt.

Doth

Doth God pervert?] Some tranſlate it, ſupplant Juſtice. And ſo it imports, ſecret, cunning wayes of injuſtice; for to ſupplant, properly is to come behind a man, and to ſtrike up his heels, and caſt him down, or to lay ſomewhat in his way, upon which he may trip or ſtumble, and then fall. God doth not ſupplant Juſtice, he layes no plots, he ſets no ſnares, to entangle or overthrow a man in his cauſe.

More largely, The word ſignifieth, To make crooked, and ſo it very well anſwers the point in hand. Judgment and Juſtice are both carried by a ſtraight line: They are the rectitude of our actions. To pervert Judgment, is to make crooked lines: So we have the word (Eccl. 1. 16.) That which is crooked cannot be made ſtraight. He means it of civil, not natural things, whoſe crookedneſs is often cured by art; but who can cure all civil evils? Man is not able by all his diligence to turn the courſe of things which God hath determined, though to him there appear much crookedneſs, and many diſtortions. Solomon himſelf makes this interpretation (Chap. 7. 13.) where he ſhews, that it is beſt to ſubmit to God, becauſe his will is irreſiſtible, and the effects of it unavoidable; Conſider the work of God, for who can make that ſtraight which he hath made crooked? So then, to pervert judgment is to make judgment crooked; or to make judgment (to which all things and perſons ſhould bow) to bow it ſelf down, as the word is alſo uſed, Eccleſ. 12. 3. In the deſcription of old-age, The ſtrong men ſhall bow themſelves; the legs and knees in old-age bow and double under us. To pervert juſtice is to creeple juſtice, to make it lame and halt. This word is tranſlated, to overthrow (Job 19. 6.) Know now that God hath overthrown me, and hath compaſt me in with his net. Job ſpeaks in a great paſſion, as if God had come upon him violently in judgment, and caſt him: We ſay a man is overthrown or caſt in his ſute. God overthrows men and Nations; but he never overthrows Juſtice. A man who overthrows his adverſary, may ſettle Juſtice. Job looked upon himſelf, as one againſt whom God had entred his action, and overthrown him in the ſute. Lamenting Jeremy cries out (Lam. 3. 59.) O Lord thou haſt ſeen my wrong (it is this word) Thou haſt ſeen how I am vexed, and wreſted by the hard dealings of men, judge thou my cauſe; Thou wilt judge me aright, and ſet me ſtraight again.

Judgment is perverted two wayes.

First, By Subtilty.
Secondly, By Power.

Firſt, Some pervert judgment by ſubtilty; They are wiſe to do evil. The Lord hath infinite wiſdom, and ſo is able to go beyond and over-reach all creatures; he is wiſe enough to befool all the world: but he is not wiſe to do evil; His wiſdom is not a trap or a ſnare to others, but an unerring guide and light to himſelf.

Secondly, Some pervert judgment by violence and force: if they cannot untye the knot by craft, they will cut it aſunder by power; and if they have not law for it, they have will for it, and an arm for it, and it ſhall be done. The Lord can do what he will, but he hath no will to do what is evil. He can put forth as much ſtrength as he deſires, but he hath no deſire to pervert juſtice, or to act his power to over-aw and maſter it.

Further, To pervert judgment and juſtice, hath theſe two things in it.

Firſt, To darken and obſcure the rule of judgment.
Secondly, To torture or miſ-interpret the rule of judgment.

Firſt, Judgment is perverted by darkning and obſcuring the Law or rule of Juſtice. God doth not do ſo: He never caſts a miſt before his Word, or a vail over it, that he may act againſt it.

Secondly, Neither doth he miſ-interpret his Law. A good Law ill expounded is made the warrant of an evil Judgment. A gloſs corrupting the Text of the Law corrupts Juſtice. Where tongue and conſcience are ſet to ſale, the wit muſt find out ſomewhat to help the market.

The words opened invite theſe Obſervations,

Firſt, That God is moſt exact in judgment, God is a juſt God.

It is a high truth, and we ſhould adore it, that whatſoever God doth, he is juſt in doing it. When Reaſon cannot reach, or make it out, yet Faith muſt; and we muſt honor God in what we cannot underſtand: The Lord is righteous in all his wayes, though his wayes are paſt finding out. For,

Firſt, He hears every cauſe before he judges: He doth not judge one ſide before he knows the other, or judge any man before he hath heard him fully out: We ſee both (Gen. 11. & Gen. 18.) in thoſe two great acts of Juſtice, when God confounded the builders of Babel, and when he deſtroyed Sodom, I will go down and ſee whether it be altogether according to the report that is come up unto me. God needs no Intelligence to be brought him unto Heaven; neither doth he that fills all places go to any place to inform himſelf: but he ſpeaks thus, to note how exact he is in point of Juſtice; to ſhew that he deals with the Children of men, as a man: who hearing a report of ſuch a thing done, ſaith, I will not judge of it by what I hear, but I will go to ſee whether it be ſo or no. Without evidence of the fact, the ſentence cannot be juſt, though it may be right.

Secondly, He examineth and takes confeſſion, which is another point of Juſtice. So he proceeded with our firſt Parents (Gen. 3.) propoſing Interrogatories unto them, and then the Judgment is pronounced according unto what was confeſt; he judgeth them out of their own mouths, verſ. 17. Becauſe thou haſt done this, and harkned unto the voice of thy Wife, therefore, &c.

Thirdly, God proceeds by the evidence of the Law, as well as by the evidence of the fact; and this alſo ſets forth the exactneſs of his judgment: Theſe two things make judgment perfect; you muſt not only have the evidence of the fact, that ſuch a thing is done, but you muſt have the evidence of the Law condemning ſuch a deed. Though God himſelf be an everlaſting Law, and he may judge all from his own breſt, yet he hath given out a Law, which gives the knowledge of ſin. It is ſaid, Rom. 2. They that have ſinned without the Law, ſhall periſh without the Law; as if ſome ſhould be judged without Law: but he means without a Law formally publiſhed, not materially enacted: For he ſpeaks of the Gentiles, who were not within the hearing of Mount Sinai, and had not ſeen that formality of a Law written in Tables of ſtone; yet they had a Law written in their hearts: They that have not heard the Law publiſhed or ſeen it written in a Book, ſhall be judged by the Law written in their hearts, their conſcience bearing them witneſs, and their thoughts accuſing, or elſe excuſing one another.

Fourthly, God is impartial in giving judgment: He doth not ſtrike one and ſpare another, who is under the ſame condemnation; nothing can ſway or byas him, nothing can preponderate the ballance of Juſtice in his hand; you cannot put in any conſideration to ſway his beam, beſide the right.

There are three things which uſually cauſe men to pervert juſtice, the Lord is free from them all.

Firſt, Fear of greatneſs: Some would do juſtice, but they dare not; the buſineſs concerns a great man, and to do juſtice upon ſuch, is, To take a Bear by the tooth, (as we ſay) or to play with the paw of a Lion. Now the Lord is not turned away for fear, nor defers he Juſtice for any mans big looks, The day of the Lord (ſaith the Prophet, Iſa. 2.) ſhall be againſt the high Oaks. He is El-Shaddai, the Allmighty, the all-powerful God, and therefore cares not for the might or power of man.

Secondly, Hope of reward; that's another thing which cauſeth many to pervert judgment. With ſome their hope is ſtronger then their fear: They care not for the greatneſs of men, but they hope for gain. A bribe taken or promiſed clogs and obſtructs the courſe of Juſtice (Hoſ 4. 14.) Her Rulers with ſhame do love, Give ye; the Hebrew is, Her Shields; Magiſtrates ſhould be as Shields to the people to protect them; but what did they? They love, Give ye; that word pleaſed them. They were more pleaſed with receiving rewards, then with doing right. The Lord is above all gifts, he is Shaddai, he hath all in himſelf, and needs not that any ſhould give unto him; and he tells them expreſly (Ezek. 7. 19.) That their ſilver and their gold ſhall not be able to deliver them in the day of his wrath; offer thouſands of ſilver and gold, he will not ſtay judgment a minute for it, Prov. 11. 4. Riches profit not in the day of wrath; In the day of mans wrath they ſometimes will, but never in the day of Gods.

Thirdly, Affection and nearneſs of relation pervert judgment. Many have clean hands, free from bribes, and ſtout hearts free from fears, yet they are overcome with affection and relations; theſe put out the eye of juſtice. The Lord is above all relations. As he commands us in our cleaving unto Chriſt, not to know Father or Mother, Yea to hate Father and Mother, Wife, &c. (and thoſe are neareſt to us) that we may keep cloſe unto Chriſt : So himſelf doth not know the neareſt relation, to pervert judgement or do wrong in favor of it. Hence he ſaith of Coniah (Jer. 22. 24.) Though Coniah be as the ſignet upon my right hand, yet will I pluck him thence : Let him plead nearneſs (as men do, ſuch a man is of your blood or alliance , pray ſpare him) God will not ſpare the ſignet on his right hand, that is, he will not ſtop juſtice upon any pretence of nearneſs or uſefulneſs.

Etiamſi fuiſſet Jeconia mihi chariſſimus quem ſemper in oculis ferrẽ. Jun.

Fifthly, God is exact (take them diſtinctly) both in judgment and in juſtice. He is as curious in ſearching out the cauſe, as in ſentencing the perſon. As ready to acquit the innocent, as to condemn the guilty : as careful to relieve the oppreſſed, as to chaſten the oppreſſor : as zealous in rewarding thoſe who deſerve well, as in puniſhing thoſe who do evil. Not to reward is as great injuſtice , as not to puniſh. What God hath promiſed ſhall be performed, and what he threatens ſhall be inflicted. He will neither diſcourage goodneſs by neglecting it, nor encourage ſin by winking at it. He hath bread in one hand, and a ſword in the other.

Pervertit jus, qui non punit improbos; pervertit juſtitiā, qui non remunerat juſtorum bona opera. Druſ.

Thus we ſee the Lord is moſt exact in juſtice (Pſal. 48. 10.) The right hand of the Lord is full of righteouſneſs. His power and might are his right hand ; and that right hand hath nothing but righteouſneſs in it. Few men come to that of Laban, It is in the power of mine hand to do thee hurt, but I will not : moſt do as much hurt as is in their power. God hath all power in his hand, but he wrongs no man. As none have now any cauſe to ſay, that they have received wrong from the hand of God : ſo at laſt all ſhall confeſs they have not.

Further , Bildad ſpeaking upon ſuppoſition, that God was wronged in juſtice, teacheth us,

> That, It is a duty to vindicate the juſtice of God, whenſoever we hear it wronged.

When we hear any wounding God in his faithfulneſs, truth, or juſtice, we ſhould preſently ſtand up to plead for him ; What, will God be unfaithful ? Will God pervert judgement ? Will God be untrue ? &c. Thus we ſhould plead for God. When Jeremy could not make out the juſtice of God, he is an advocate for his juſtice, Lord, thou art righteous, yet let me plead with thee. He would not have the matter once queſtioned, though the manner was enquired. Obſerve, > Laſtly, That, the judgments of God may be ſecrets to us, but they are never injuries to us.

Juſtice is in all the dealings of God, but his juſtice is not alwayes viſible. His judgments are founded upon reaſon, when upon his will, for his will is the higheſt reaſon. God cannot be unjuſt, and he ever puniſhes thoſe who are. He is ſo far from ſubverting judgment, that he ſubverteth Kings and Magiſtrates, yea, Nations and Kingdoms for ſubverting judgment ; To ſubvert a man in his cauſe, the Lord approveth not, Lam. 3. 36. The Hebrew is, The Lord ſeeth not : That is, He doth not ſee it, to approve it ; but he doth ſee it to puniſh it. He is an avenger of thoſe who will not avenge the oppreſſed. And as he looks for judgment in all places, ſo eſpecially among his own people, upon whom he beſtows moſt mercy (Iſa. 5. 2.) When the Lord had done ſo much for his vineyard, He looked for judgment, and behold oppreſſion : for righteouſneſs, but behold a cry. God makes privy ſearch thorow a Nation to find this jewel : Judgment between man and man in commerce , which is, commutative juſtice ; judgment from Magiſtrates to the people, which is, diſtributive juſtice : for theſe God is ſearching at this day ; one of the greateſt ſins among us, is the perverting of judgment : And until judgment return to man, how can we expect mercy ſhould return from God ? (Jer. 5. 1.) Run to and fro thorow the ſtreets of Jeruſalem, and ſeek in the broad places thereof, if you can find a man, if there be any that executeth judgment, that loves the truth, and I will pardon it. A Land is ſeldom fill'd with the judgments of God, till it is emptied of judgment among men. What a ſad thing is it that there ſhould be ſo many cries againſt injuſtice on earth, in a time when there is ſo much crying out for mercy from Heaven : That in ſuch a time when the Judgments of God are upon our ſelves, we ſhould not learn righteouſneſs to act it among our ſelves ! I am perſwaded the Sword of War had been ruſting in its ſheath to this day, if the Sword of Juſtice had been uſed as it ought, both to puniſh offenders, and protect the innocent. And when the Sword of Juſtice ſhall be both wayes imployed, I doubt not but the Sword of War ſhall be ſheathed again, and imployed no more, but be beaten into plow-ſhares, and our ſpears into pruning hooks. Keep ye judgment (ſaith the Lord by his Prophet, Iſa. 56. 1.) for my ſalvation is near to come, and my righteouſneſs to be revealed. God hath done terrible things in righteouſneſs among us, and we hope he will do comfortable things in righteouſneſs among us : ſeeing the righteous deſtructions of God have been upon us, and his righteous ſalvations (we hope) are near us, let not our righteouſneſs be far off.

VERS. 4, 5, 6, 7.

If thy Children have ſinned againſt him, and he have caſt them away for their tranſgreſſion.
If thou wouldſt ſeek unto God betimes, and make thy ſupplication to the Almighty.
If thou wert pure and upright, ſurely now he would awake for thee, and make the habitation of thy Righteouſneſs proſperous.
Though thy beginning was ſmall, yet thy latter end ſhould greatly encreaſe.

Theſe four verſes contain the firſt confirmation of the former general Poſition, That God is juſt : which is reſolved out of thoſe Queſtions, Doth God pervert Judgment ? Or doth the Almighty pervert Juſtice ? He doth not. Then, God is juſt, there's the Poſition. And as that Poſition conſiſteth of two parts, ſo alſo doth this proof or confirmation of it.

Firſt, That God doth not pervert judgment (taking judgment under that ſtrict notion for puniſhing of offenders) he proveth by the example of Job's Children, whom God puniſhed becauſe of their tranſgreſſion, as he conceived.

Secondly, That God doth not pervert juſtice (taking juſtice under that ſtrict and diſtinct notion of rewarding and relieving the innocent) he proveth by the readineſs of God to do Job good in caſe he ſhould humble himſelf and repent, in verſ. 5, 6, 7.

His Argument for the former may be thus conceived.

He doth not pervert judgment who puniſheth thoſe who have ſinned againſt him.
But God hath puniſhed thy Children for their ſin.
Therefore he doth not pervert judgment.

His Argument for the latter may be thus formed.

He doth not pervert juſtice, who is ready to pitty as ſoon as an offender humbly ſeeks, ſues and ſubmits unto him.
But God is ready to help thee as ſoon as ever thou humbly ſeekeſt unto him.
Therefore God doth not pervert juſtice.

Thus you have the general ſence of theſe four Verſes, as Arguments brought for proof of the former point, that God doth not pervert judgment or juſtice. I ſhall now open them diſtinctly.

If thy Children have ſinned againſt him.

There may be a two-fold ſence given of theſe words.

Firſt, Thus, Although thy Children have ſinned againſt him, and he hath caſt them away for their iniquity ; yet, if thou wilt ſeek unto him, he will do thee good. Which tranſlation makes the ſence more clear then ours , If thy Children have ſinned againſt him, &c. The one is a ſuppoſition of what might be ; the other a conceſſion of what was.

Secondly, By way of proportion, thus, As thy Children have ſinned againſt him, ſo he hath caſt them away for their tranſgreſſion. And ſo Bildad argueth with Job upon the ſame principle that Eliphaz had done before, ſcil. that his ſons and himſelf had exceedingly provoked God, and that therefore God had ſent that judgment, and laid that heavy ſtroke upon them, If thy Children, or, although thy Children have ſinned.

Againſt

Againſt him.] That word is to be opened a little. The Hebrew is, Have ſinned to him. Which is indifferently Tranſlated, either before or againſt him; we take the latter.

Every ſin is committed againſt God; that's the firſt. Sin is moſt oppoſite to God. It is againſt God in his Nature: againſt God in his Will: againſt God in his very Being. Sin would thruſt God out of the world, if it were poſſible; and therefore it is rightly tranſlated, They have ſinned againſt him. No marvel if God do ſo much againſt ſinners, when ſin doth ſo much againſt him; but it is not a miracle, that God ſhould do any thing, eſpecially ſuch great things for ſinners, when ſin doth ſo much againſt him? David (Pſal. 51. 4.) ſaw his ſin was ſo much againſt God, that he overlooks all others ageinſt whom it was; Againſt thee, thee only have I ſinned, and done this evil in thy ſight; which ſome miſ-interpret, as if, becauſe he was a King, he could do no injury to his Subjects, and therefore ſaith, Againſt thee, thee only have I ſinned. But, They who rule men, may ſin againſt man; and David ſinned in that act againſt man: Firſt, By doing private wrong: Secondly, By giving publike ſcandal. The reaſon then why David ſpake thus, was becauſe the ſin he had committed was ſo much againſt God, that though he had grievouſly offended againſt man, in taking away the life of one Subject, the chaſtity of another, and by endangering the whole Army to compaſs a cover for his ſin, yet in this, his ſin exceeded in ſinfulneſs, that he ſinned againſt God; and therefore he ſaith, Againſt thee, thee only; or take it comparatively, the ſin is ſo much againſt thee, that what is againſt any other is not worth the naming. God is not only wronged, but he is chiefly wronged in every ſin. As, becauſe in the wrong done to the life or eſtate of a Subject, the King is chiefly wronged, therefore all Inditements run in this ſtile, Againſt the peace of our Soveraign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity. Laſtly, That place may be underſtood in the ſecond ſence of, Againſt thee, that is, Before thee; and ſo it ſeems to be expounded in the latter part, Againſt thee only have I ſinned, and done this evil in thy ſight; that is, though others took no notice of this, though it was done in ſecret (2 Sam. 12. 12.) yet it was committed clearly and plainly before thine eyes, thine eyes which are ten thouſand times brighter then the Sun, beheld me in the darkneſs of that folly; and therefore againſt thee have I ſinned, and done this evil in thy ſight; as noting, that though it were conceal'd and hidden from men, yet it could not be conceal'd and hidden from God. If thy Children have ſinned againſt him.

Tibi, tibi ſoli.

And he have caſt them away for their tranſgreſſion.

Bildad's poſition is true in it ſelf, but falſe in the application, If thy Children have ſinned againſt him. It is a truth, that godly parents may have wicked Children. Grace doth not alwayes run in a Blood. But it was unevident unto Bildad, that Job's Children had ſinned againſt God in his ſence. It is not the common ſinner whom Bildad meaneth; by ſinning againſt God, he intends not the inevitable actings of ſinful nature, but the voluntary ſtudied improvements, heightnings, and provocations of ſinful nature.

Further, In that he concludes, They were caſt away for their tranſgreſſion: He faileth again. It is a truth, that ſin is the meritorious cauſe of puniſhment, Thy deſtruction is from thy ſelf, ſaith the Lord, Hoſ. 13. 9. Thy way and thy doings have procured theſe things unto thee, Jer. 4. 18. Sin will help us to ſorrow enough. Yet this is not a truth, that every man is afflicted for his ſin. As no man knows the love or hatred of God; ſo no man knows the ſin or holineſs of man by all that is before him: we cannot argue every one is caſt away for his tranſgreſſion, becauſe he is caſt away.

He hath caſt them away for their tranſgreſſion.] The Hebrew is very elegant, He hath ſent them away in the hand of their tranſgreſſion: or, He hath put them into the hand of their tranſgreſſion. Mr. Broughton tranſlates it ſo. As thy Children have ſinned againſt him, ſo he hath ſent them into the hand of their treſpaſſes. Into the hand, that is, into the power, as (Chap. 5. 20.) the hand of the Sword, is, the power of the Sword: and (Pſal. 63. 10.) They ſhall fall by the Sword: the Hebrew is. They ſhall fall by the hand of the Sword. Then, He hath delivered them into the hand of their tranſgreſſion, is, into the power of their tranſgreſſion.

There are two things conſiderable about this expreſſion of ſending or giving up into the hand of tranſgreſſion.

Simpliciter mittere aut ejicere ſignificat, quaſi cum recto tramite aberraſſent, aberrandi copiam pro libidine feciſſet.

Firſt, It may Note, That God had delivered up Job's Children unto the raign or dominion of their own ſinful hearts, or had laid the reyns in their necks, ſuffering their luſts to hurry them whither they would, to carry them captive unto every ſin, and ruſh them head-long into every evil. The word —— here uſed, ſignifies either ſimply, to ſend, or violently to caſt, or to put a thing away from us: and ſo, it is as much as if Bildad had ſaid, For as much as thy children would ſin againſt God, he ſuffered them to ſin their fill; they being wicked, he gave them up to do all wickedneſſes: They loved to wander from him, and he let them wander. We have this ſence of the word (Prov. 29. 15.) A Child left unto himſelf brings his Mother to ſhame: The Hebrew is, A Child ſent away, ſent to himſelf, or put into his own hands; A Child ſent away to himſelf, or left alone, bringeth ſhame, that is, will certainly run into vile and enormous courſes, to the ſhame of her that bare him. A Child left, or ſent to himſelf, is one that hath no guide, no governor, no inſtructor, but himſelf. A man that will learn only of himſelf, hath but a fool to his maſter; How much more then a weak Child, what a Maſter, what a Tutor hath a Child, if he have none but himſelf? To be left or ſent out to themſelves, is, to have none to counſel or adviſe them in a right way, or to give them any ſtop and check in an ill way. The character that Paul and Barnabas gave of the former times, when they preached to the Heathens at Lyſtra, was this (Act. 14. 16.) We exhort you to turn unto the living God that made Heaven and Earth, who in times paſt ſuffered all Nations to walk in their own wayes. He let them go, and never ſtaid them at all, they had no bridle of reſtraint, not ſo much as a word to bring them back; He ſuffered all Nations, as if he had ſaid, He left them in the hand of their tranſgreſſion, that their own evil hearts ſhould do what they would with them. In which ſence we may alſo underſtand that place (Act. 17. 30.) when Paul at Athens diſputed with the Philoſophers, he tells them that now God began to look towards them, and had ſent them the knowledge of Chriſt, The times of that ignorance God winked at; but now he calleth all men every where to repent. The words undergo a two-fold interpretation: Some thus, to note the indulgence of God, The time paſt of that ignorance God winked at; that is, he did not deal ſeverely and ſtrictly with them, when they ſinned, becauſe they had no means, or ſo little means to keep them from ſin. And there is a truth in it, for though ignorance doth not totally excuſe ſin, yet it doth abate the degree and meaſure of ſin. But there is another ſence, which I rather embrace, The times of that ignorance God winked at; that is, in thoſe times wherein there was ſo much darkneſs and blindneſs in the world, God let men go on in their ſin: they ſinned, and he never called upon them, he never oppoſed them, or ſent any to teach them better. God did not manifeſt his will to them as unto the Jews, Pſal. 147. 19, 20. He ſheweth his word unto Jacob, his ſtatutes and judgments unto Iſrael; he hath not dealt ſo with any Nation, &c. So that this winking is oppoſed to favor, rather then to juſtice. To have the eye upon a place, or upon perſons, is to ſhew them favor, 1 King. 8. 29. The later branch clears this meaning, But now he calleth all men every where to repent: now he doth not leave men in the hands of their tranſgreſſions: He doth not wink and let them do what they liſt: now Goſpel-light is riſen to the world, and there are many ſent out to call in and reclaim wandering prodigals, many to cry, Return, return. He ſpeaks of it as of the mercy and priviledge of that age, beyond what the former ages had enjoyed. That of the ſame Apoſtle hath a paralel ſence (Rom. 1. 20, & 26.) where deſcribing the dealings of God with the Gentiles, who ſinned againſt the light of nature, he concludes, Therefore God left them in the darkneſs of nature, in the worſt of nature: they came not up ſo high as the principles of nature might have led them in the worſhip of God, therefore he left them below the principles of nature in the things of man, He gave them up to vile affections, which is as much as to ſay, He put them in the hands of their tranſgreſſions. And ver. 28. He gave them over to a reprobate mind, to a mind that could not judge aright, which which had not a true underſtanding of any thing: Hence they elected the worſt, reprobated the beſt things. The like we have (Pſal. 81. 11.) of Gods own people the Jews, So I gave them up unto their own hearts luſts, and they walked in their own counſels. The Hebrew is, I ſent them into the pertinacy of their hearts, becauſe I had ſo often called upon them, and they would not hearken, nor return unto me, Therefore I ſaid, foraſmuch as you will not hear, you ſhall not hear; becauſe you will not obey, you ſhall have none to call you to obedience; follow the counſels of your own hearts, as long as you will. This is the firſt ſence, of putting or ſending them into the hand of their tranſgreſſion, ſcil. a leaving them to the raign of their luſts.

Expulit eos è mundo propter prævaricationem. Pagn. Permiſit eis pervenire, quod ſcelus eorum poſtulabat. Tygur.

Secondly (Which is the ſence our tranſlation holds out) Thou haſt left them, or ſent them into the hand of their tranſgreſſion; that is, Thou haſt left them in thoſe evils, which their tranſgreſſions did deſerve and call for. Our reading carries that meaning, He hath caſt them away for their tranſgreſſion: Others thus, He hath thruſt them out of the world for their tranſgreſſion; He hath ſuffered that to befall them which their tranſgreſſion called for. According to theſe, the ſence is, Thy Children ſinned againſt him, and he hath let thoſe evils which their ſin deſerved fall upon them; He hath rewarded them according to their iniquity (Iſa. 64. 6, 7.) Our iniquities like the wind have taken us away: Thou haſt hid thy face from us, and haſt conſumed (or melted) us, becauſe of our iniquities. The Hebrew is, Thou haſt conſumed or melted us in the hand, or in the power of our iniquities. And ſomewhat parallel to this ſence, is that (Gen. 4. 6.) If thou doeſt ill (ſaith God to Cain) ſin lies at the door; As if he had ſaid, Thou ſhalt be given into the hand of ſin preſently, thy ſin ſhall arreſt thee, and bring thoſe evils upon thee which it deſerveth, thou ſhalt not need any other puniſhment then thy own wickedneſs.

Alliſiſti nos in manu iniquitatis noſtræ. Vul.

Hands and power are aſcribed to ſin, becauſe God gives men over to thoſe puniſhments which their ſins challenge at his hands. Some ſins have a louder voice then others; but every ſin unpardoned (the mouth whereof is not ſtopt by the blood of Chriſt) cries to God for vengeance, till God put the ſinner into the hand of ſin, that he may at once receive pay for, and from his own folly. Obſerve from the former interpretation, > Firſt, That, the Lord doth often in judgment give man up to the power of his ſinful luſts.

This is a general truth, though we cannot draw it down to the inſtance of Job's Children: The Lord in wrath leaves man to himſelf. Every man by nature ſins freely, and many are left by God to a judiciary freedom in ſinning. He cannot reſtrain himſelf, and ſometimes God will not reſtrain him, but lets him take his fill of ſin, and be as wicked as he will (Rev. 22. 11.) He that is unjuſt, let him be unjuſt ſtill; he that is filthy, let him be filthy ſtill. This permiſſion is the higheſt and soreſt affliction. This liberty is worſe then any bondage. Thus alſo the Church leaves thoſe to their ignorance, who obſtinately refuſe inſtruction (1 Cor. 14. 38.) He that is ignorant let him be ignorant ſtill. Thoſe ſouls are in a deſperate condition, who are put out of the care either of God or of his Church. Obſerve, > Secondly, That, ſin is a puniſhment.

Tu, Domine, dixiſti, & ita eſt, ut omnis malus animus ſibi ipſi ſit pœna. Auguſt.

Ulciſcentur eum mores ſui. Cicero ad Atticũ.

Sin is the puniſhment of ſin: Thy Children ſinned againſt him, and he gave them into the hand of their ſin; he never goes unpuniſhed for ſin, who ſins and repents not. Thou, Lord (ſaith one of the Ancients) haſt decreed it, and ſo it is, That every evil mind is it's own ſcourge. The Apoſtle tells us (Heb. 10. 31.) that it is a fearful thing to fall into the hand of the living God: it is indeed; and it is as fearful a thing to fall into the hand of deadly ſins, or dead works. How dreadful a thing is it to be under the power and tyranny of our own hearts. The committing of ſin is worſe then the enduring of trouble? The Lord doth not only puniſh men according to their ſins, but he makes their ſin their puniſhment, yea, their ſins are their puniſhers. He puts them into the hand of ſin, as into the hand of a tormenter. A Heathen could threaten a wicked man, thus, His manners ſhall be his revenge. Holineſs carries its reward with it, and though no creature will recompence the good we do, yet doing good is a recompence. In keeping the Commandments of God, there is an exceeding great reward, Pſalm 19. 11. The act of keeping them is a reward, as well as the iſſue. A good work is pay enough to the worker. So alſo is an evil work, Prov. 1. 32. The turning away of the ſimple ſhall ſlay him. A ſimple Child, that will not be ruled, counſel'd or ordered (ſuch Solomon ſpeaks of, Ye ſimple ones, how long will ye love ſimplicity? That is, your own fooliſh, vain wayes) The turning away of ſuch ſimple ones from the counſel of the wiſe, ſhall ſlay them. The way of ſin is death, as well as the end or wages of it. As ſaith the Proverb of the Ancients (they are the words of David concerning Saul, 1 Sam. 24. 14.) Wickedneſs proceedeth from the wicked, but mine hand ſhall not be upon him. David knew that Saul was a man ſo wicked, that he needed no other revenger but his own ſelf, his own ſin would bring miſery enough upon him: therefore, ſaith he, Wickedneſs proceedeth from the wicked, that is, the puniſhment of wickedneſs proceedeth from the wicked man himſelf. Obſerve the occaſion of thoſe words, it was, when ſome about David adviſed him to ſlay Saul; not I, ſaith he, my hand ſhall not be upon him; I know he is a man ſo given up to ſin, ſo enſlaved to his own vile affections, that there's enough upon him already, and in a ſhort time more will be upon him; Wickedneſs proceedeth from the wicked, but mine hand ſhall not be upon him; I will leave him to the hand of his ſin, which is his Plague already, and which in a little time will attach him, and do me right, though he never would. When God took up a reſolution againſt his own people, that he would not hear or be intreated, and proteſted his mind could not be towards them, he ſaith (Jer. 15. 2.) Let them go forth, ſuch as are for the ſword, to the ſword; and ſuch as are for the famine, to the famine; and ſuch as are for the captivity, to the captivity. This was a dreadful ſentence; but for God to ſay to a people, Let them go forth in the wayes of their ſin; he that is for drunkenneſs, to be drunk; he that is for uncleanneſs, to be unclean; he that is for pride, to be proud; he that is for ſwearing, to oaths; and he that is for envy, to be envious; and he that is for Idolatry, to his Idols. O how unconceivably miſerable are ſuch a people! To be left in the hand of theſe ſins, is a ſpiritual judgement; and theſe ſins will quickly bring in temporal judgements, and not long hence eternal.

From the latter interpretation, Obſerve,

> Sin ſhall not alwayes go away unpuniſhed by outward, ſenſible evils.

God will ſink and caſt men away for their tranſgreſſions. If ſin be in the houſe, puniſhment lies at the doors, and will turn the lock and open it, or break it open upon the ſinner. And though he hide himſelf in vaults or ſecret corners, yet his iniquity will find him out. He that will not caſt away his tranſgreſſion, ſhall be caſt away for his tranſgreſſion, whether he will or no.

So much for theſe words, wherein Bildad ſets before Job the ſinfulneſs of his Children, thereby to vindicate the juſtice of God in giving them up to the dominion of their ſin, or to deſtruction for their ſin. In the next words he adviſes Job to take heed by their harms, and aſſures him of happy ſucceſs, in caſe he do. As if he had ſaid, Though they periſhed in their tranſgreſſion, yet do not thou deſpair. For,

Verſ. 5. If thou wouldeſt ſeek unto God betimes, and make thy ſupplication to the Almighty, &c.

God hath been juſt in puniſhing thy Children, and he will be merciful in pardoning thee, in accepting thy perſon, in proſpering thy eſtate, if now at laſt thou apply thy ſelf to ſeek him diligently; Though thy Children have fallen into the hand of their tranſgreſſion, yet there is hope that thou mayeſt eſcape. Thus he deals with him in a way of counſel, as Eliphaz had done before, Chap. 5. 8. I would ſeek unto God, and unto God would I commit my cauſe; this is the counſel I give thee, and the courſe I would take my ſelf, Bildad ſpeaks the ſame in effect, and almoſt in the letter; If thou wouldeſt ſeek unto God betimes, and make thy ſupplication unto the Almighty, &c. He would awake for thee.

There are two parts of Bildad's counſel.

First,

Tirſt, To humble himſelf in prayer, verſ. 5.

Secondly, To purge himſelf by repentance, verſ. 6.

Or, we may look upon this counſel as a pattern of repentance, and turning to God in three things.

First, To ſeek unto God.

Secondly, To acknowledge our own unworthineſs to receive any mercy from God.

Thirdly, To be ſincere and upright-hearted with God in both.

If thou wouldeſt ſeek unto God betimes.

שחר Eſt quaſi aurorare aut dilu- culare Deũ Diligenter, ſtdulo, & magno ſtudio quærere. Qui mane ſurgit precandi cauſâ, dicitur manicare Deũ. Druſ.

We have met with the word more then once before; and in ſtrictneſs of tranſlation it ſounds thus much, If thou wouldeſt ſeek unto God in the morning; or, If thou wouldeſt morning God, be with him early in the morning, that is, If thou wouldeſt ſeek unto him diligently: they that come in the morning about buſineſs, are diligent in their buſineſs. The Apoſtles rule is (Heb. 3.) To day harden not your hearts; but here Bildad adviſeth, Whileſt it is morning, which is the firſt part or beginning of the day, pour out thy heart to God. So then, it may be taken for ſeeking God either at the firſt of the day, the morning; or, for any earneſt, diligent and fervent ſeeking unto God in any part of the day; To ſeek God diligently, though in the night, is according to this Hebraiſme, a ſeeking him in the morning.

Herodot. l. 10. Plin. Ep. 57. ad Trajan. Tertul. Apol. cap. 2.

It was an ancient cuſtom to ſeek God in the morning (take it in the letter) early in the morning. David profeſſes this, Pſal. 5. 3. My voice ſhalt thou hear in the morning, O Lord, in the morning will I direct my prayer unto thee, and will look up. And Heathens by the light of nature, took this courſe in their profane and ſuperſtitious worſhip. Herodotus in his tenth book, tells us of the Perſian Magi, who addreſſed themſelves early in the morning to ſeek their falſe gods. And the Primitive Chriſtians were wondred at for their early devotions. Pliny in an Epiſtle to Trajan, and Tertullian in his Apologeticks for the Chriſtians, report their Aſſemblies before day-break to pray and call upon God. And there hath been and ſtill is a ſuperſtitions abuſe of this among the Papiſts, who call their morning prayers, their Mattins, becauſe they begin early in the morning. Hence Obſerve,

First, Prayer is our ſeeking unto God.

That's the general deſcription of prayer. When we pray, our work is to get near to God, to find God; every ſoul that prayes indeed, feels it ſelf at a loſs for ſomewhat that God only can beſtow. In God all that we want is to be found, and therefore he invites us to ſeek him. In this life the Saints are a generation of ſeekers: in the next, they ſhall be a generation of enjoyers; when God is fully found, there's nothing more to be ſought: Having him, we have all. The work of Heaven is to bleſs God for what we have found, not to ſeek him for what we want.

Secondly, God muſt be ſought unto without delay.

As it is with vows, ſo with prayers, Defer not to pay them; defer not to pray, Iſa. 5. 5. Seek him whileſt he may be found. Matth. 6. 33. Seek firſt the Kingdom of God; firſt in time, not only chiefly, but early, put not God behind in the latter end of the day, or in the latter end of your buſineſſes. It is beſt to begin with him who is beſt.

Thirdly, God muſt be ſought unto with diligence.

We muſt lay our ſtrength and ſpirits out in ſeeking God. It is not a ſleight enquiry which finds out God. We read that he is found of ſome who ſeek him not at all, but that he is found of any, who ſeek him negligently, we read not. Free-grace prevents thoſe who have no ability to ſeek him, but it meets not thoſe who will not lay out their abilities in ſeeking him. If thou wouldeſt ſeek unto God betimes,

And make thy ſupplication to the Almighty.

Verbum חנן denotat gratuitam illã commiſerationem, quæ ſine ullo merito impenditur.

The word which we tranſlate [Make thy ſupplication] is very ſignificant of the manner how we ſhould ſeek unto God, namely, bottoming our ſelves upon free-grace alone. A thought of our own worth is inconſiſtent with a ſupplication; Call upon the Almighty for pity, ſaith Mr. Broughton, when we ſupplicate, we deſire that to be done for us, for which there is no reaſon in us why it ſhould be done. To make ſupplication: is to ſeek help and relief freely or gratis, acknowledging there is nothing in us worthy of love. That adverb uſed in the firſt, and repeated in the ſecond Chapter, where the Devil objects, Doth Job ſerve God for nought, that is, without reſpect of good pay for his pains from God, that adverb (I ſay) comes from this verb. As we ought to ſerve God (in this ſence) for nought, and not like mercenaries for our hire: So God helps us for nought, without looking to any thing in us, or from us, as an hire of his help, The Baptiſt had his name (John) from this Word, either becauſe he preached the Free-grace of God in Chriſt, then exhibited; or, becauſe God beſtowed him upon his Parents in their old-age, as a ſpecial grace and favour: The poor (ſaith Solomon, Prov. 18. 23.) uſeth intreaties; ſome render it thus, The poor maketh, or ſpeaketh ſupplications; a poor man hath nothing of deſert to plead, why he ſhould receive your charity, but he lies at your feet and begs ſomewhat, becauſe he is in want, becauſe miſery hath arreſted and taken hold upon him: The poor uſeth entreaties, he doth not call for any thing of right, and he will not wreſt any thing from you by force; he only ſupplicates your favour. We in our drawing nigh unto God ſhould pray for grace and favour, as a poor man, begging an alms, who makes this his plea, that he is poor. So then, Bildad's counſel to Job is this, Stand not upon thy terms with God, plead not thine own integrity and good works, but caſt thy ſelf at his feet for mercy, Make thy ſupplication unto him. The word is uſed by Moſes, Deut. 3. 23. when he deſcribeth his own unbelief, for which God ſaid he ſhould not go into Canaan. And I beſought the Lord at that time, ſaying, &c. When Moſes perceived God was angry, he did not reckon his former good ſervices to ballance this failing, but he ſought unto God for mercy, as one that had never done him any ſervice at all. And as man expreſſes his deſires of Free-grace by this Word, ſo doth the Lord his higheſt actings of it, Exod. 33. 19. I will be gracious unto whom I will be gracious. To ſhew, that to make ſupplication, is, to deſire the Lord to be gracious: and to be gracious is to do that, which is deſired by a ſupplication; the ſame word in the Hebrew ſignifies both an act of loweſt humility in us, namely the making a ſupplication, and an act of the higheſt grace in God, namely the granting of a ſupplication. Hence Obſerve,

First. In ſeeking God we muſt look to receive all from his Free-grace and undeſerved favour.

Seek unto God, and make thy ſupplication to him. Mercy in God is the ſpring of all the mercies received by man. What can a beggar, who comes to a King, ask upon deſert? That's the condition of every one that comes to God: we are a company of beggars, tho riches both of temporal and ſpiritual bleſſings are treaſur'd up in God. Bleſſed are the poor in ſpirit, they who look upon themſelves as mean and low, as not having a rag of goodneſs about them, as emptied of themſelves, are the veſſels which God will fill, He that is full loatheth a honey-comb, and he that thinks he is full, is loathed ſo much by God, that his real emptineſs ſhall never be filled. When Jacob held God ſo faſt, that he would not let him go without a bleſſing, he had quite let go all hold, yea, or opinion of his worthineſs to receive a bleſſing, I am leſs then the leaſt of all thy mercies (Gen. 32. 10.) Then we are fit to receive great things from God, when we are little, and then fitteſt, when we are leaſt in our own eyes. Yea, we muſt ſupplicate God, not only as a beggar, but as a Traitor or a Rebel doth a King: who hath not only nothing in him to commend him to his acceptance, or procure his favour, but much to provoke his wrath, and incur the weight of his diſpleaſure. Every ſin in it ſelf renders us rebels againſt God. And though his own people, coming unto him in Chriſt, are under another notion, they are his ſons, yet, even they ought to have ſuch apprehenſions of themſelves for ſin. Abraham believed in him that juſtifieth the ungodly, Rom. 4. 5. Even Abraham after he was juſtified in the ſight of God through faith, looked upon himſelf as ungodly, in reference to his own works. In all our approaches to God, we ſhould reflect upon our ſelves, not only as having many wants, and no worthineſs, but as having many ſins, and (of our own) no goodneſs. God (in juſtice) viſits iniquity upon them that hate him (Exod. 20.6.) and he ſheweth mercy unto thouſands of them that love him, and keep his Commandments; They who love God and keep his Commandments, receive all from mercy. Juſtice puniſhes thoſe who break the Commandment, but mercy doth them good who keep the Commandments. We have at any time ſin enough to merit the wrath of God, but we never have goodneſs enough to merit his favour. And as no objection from our ſinfulneſs can obſtruct the way of Free-grace from moving towards us: ſo no argument from our holineſs can open the way, for Free-grace to move towards us. In all our duties we are to lie in the duſt, yea, we are to lay our duties in the duſt, and to ſeek all of God in humble ſupplications.

Conſider this verſe in connexion with the former, and then two points are obſervable from it. Bildad aſſuring Job, that though his ſons had fallen by their ſin, yet, if himſelf would ſeek unto God, and make his ſupplication, it might be well with him, teacheth us,

First, That the falls of others, whether into ſin, or under judgment for ſin, ſhould be warnings to us.

Thou ſeeſt what is become of thy ſons: let them be as a looking-glaſs for thee. Children may teach their Parents, Parents are often whipt upon their Childrens backs. The hand of God upon others points towards us, and while they are ſmitten, we are inſtructed. The Apoſtle ſums up the moſt remarkable judgments which fell upon the Jews in their paſſage from Ægypt to Canaan, and cloſeth all with this application to Chriſtians, Theſe things happened unto them as enſamples, and they are written for our admonition, &c. to the intent that we ſhould not luſt, 1 Cor. 10. 11. As if he had ſaid, God let them fall into the hand of their ſins, and their falls may help us to keep our feet. Their falls were types (ſo the word is) theſe things happened unto them typically, in them we may ſee what God will do with us, if we take their courſe, and go their way.

τύπος, propriè ſignificat notam inſculptam pulſatione ſeu percuſſione effectam, Beza. in Joh.20.25. τύπος παρὰ τὸ τύπτειν, percutere. Unde Ars Typographica.

The Greek is very elegant and expreſſive of this ſence. For a type is ſuch a form or repreſentation of a thing, as is made by hard preſſing or ſtriking of it, ſuch as we ſee in ſtamps and ſeals. It is the leaving of a mark with a blow; implying, that the Lord by thoſe ſtroks upon his ancient people, left marks upon their bodies, or printed letters there (the Greek word for a Printer is a Type-writer) which were legible to their poſterity, and are to this day. Hence the ſcar which the nails made in the hands of out bleſſed Saviour upon the Croſs, is called, The print of the nails, or, The type of the nails, Joh. 20.25. Such a type or print ſufferings leave behind them. How many ſuch types have we this day? Where can we go, but we ſee the print of the Sword, and thruſt our hands into wounded ſides, Let us not be faithleſs, but believing? The Apoſtle Peter (2 Epiſt. 2. 6.) brings the apoſtate Angels, the old world, filthy Sodome, as admonitory examples unto thoſe that ſhould live ungodly. They made themſelves evil examples by committing ſin, and God made them good enſamples by puniſhing them for their ſin.

Secondly, From the connexion, Obſerve,

That they who are equal in ſin, may be unequal in puniſhment.

Job was (in the judgment of his friends) as deep in ſin as his Children; but though he had ſinned like them, or more then they, yet he might be unlike them in ſuffering, or ſuffer leſs then they. God (ſaith Bildad) hath taken them quite away, he hath but wounded you, and if you ſeek unto God he is ready to heal you. The ſame ſinners for matter, are in Heaven and in Hell, that is, take two who have committed the ſame ſins for matter, and for degree alſo (as ſin is a tranſgreſſion of the Law) and the one of theſe may be found in Heaven, and the other in Hell at the laſt day. Yea, I believe, there are many in Heaven that have committed greater ſins then ſome that are in Hell. It is not the matter of ſin committed, but the obſtinacy, impenitency, or unbelief of the ſinner, which binds on the guilt, and ſeals up the ſinner to judgments temporal, and to condemnation eternal.

Verſ. 6. If thou wert pure and upright, he would awaken for thee, &c.

Bildad counſels Job to ſeek God, yet he puts in a caution, If thou wert pure and upright: As if he had ſaid, I adviſe thee to ſeek unto God, and to make thy ſupplication to him; but take heed of doing this with a purpoſe to continue in thy ſin, If thou wouldſt ſeek unto God, and make thy ſupplication to him in purity, and uprightneſs of heart, He would awaken for thee. Holy prayers awake God. Be holy, and thou ſhalt be ſure of audience and acceptance when thou prayeſt.

In the former verſe he gave advice for the duty to be performed, here he gives advice in reference to the perſon who is to perform the duty. Thy duty is to ſeek unto God, and to make ſupplication to the Almighty, but look thine own heart be pure and upright. Take heed of coming to a holy God in thine unholineſs.

Pure and upright.] The word ſignifieth to ſhine or gliſter, as glaſs or cryſtal, noting, that the purity of our lives in holineſs ſhines as light, Matth. 5. Let your light ſo ſhine before men. The works of the Saints ſhould be clear as cryſtal: The word is uſed (Lam. 4. 7.) to ſet forth the exacteſt beauty, Her Nazarites were purer then ſnow, they were whiter then milk, they were more ruddy in body then Rubies, their poliſhing was of Saphyr. The oyl (Lev. 24. 2.) and the frankincenſe (Exod. 30. 4.) appointed for the uſe of the Sanctuary, are both thus expreſſed, pure oyl, pure frankincenſe, ſhining oyl, or ſhining frankincenſe, tranſparent oyl, &c. ſuch as you may look thorow, not obſcure or dark. The oyl and frankincenſe were a type of their purity, who had communion with God in holy things. The ſame word is uſed by David, complaining under a temptation (Pſal. 73. 15.) of loſt labour, or labour in vain in waſhing himſelf. Some waſh in vain; becauſe they are ſtill unclean, and get not out their ſpots; others think they waſh in vain, becauſe though clean, they cannot obtain their comforts. Thus David thought he waſhed in vain, I ſaid, Verily I have cleanſed mine heart in vain, and waſhed my hands in innocency, for I am chaſtned, &c. David by cleanſing got the ſin-ſpots out as well as moſt men, but he could not get the affliction-ſpots out, this was his temptation. Sin is a blot, a ſpot, an uncleanneſs, a filthineſs; holineſs is purity, beauty, honour, light; things which have the greateſt excellency and luſtre, are but the ſhadows of holineſs.

Thus lucidiſſimum, pellucidum.

Peccatum vocatur macula, & ſanctitas munditie, quod quæ maculata & infecta erant habebantur profana & divino conſpectu indigna.

There is a two fold purity: First, The purity of our natures, which is received at converſion. Secondly, The purity of our converſations, which is renewed by repentance; we may underſtand both, or either in this place.

And upright.] It is the word uſed in Chap. 1. v. 1. Perfect and upright. Here pure and upright: we may thus diſtinguiſh them; purity refers to outward acted holineſs, or holineſs of life; and uprightneſs, to inward ſincerity, or holineſs of the heart; and ſo his meaning is, If thou wert pure in thy wayes, and ſincere in thine ends; If thy outward man, and inward man were waſhed and reformed, Then he would awake, &c. Obſerve hence, Purus ad cor pertinet, rectus ad actiones, ut dicat purus corde, rectus opere. Druſ.

First, Holy perſons are fit for holy duties, and onely they.

Sin is our ſeparation from God, and holy duties are acts of communion with him: how then ſhall ſin and duty ſtand together?

Make thy ſupplication, ſeek unto God, but be thou pure and upright. What have unholy perſons to do about holy things? God cannot like the ſervices of thoſe who are unlike him. Prayer purifies, yet purifying muſt be a preparative to prayer. Pſal. 66. 18. If I regard iniquity in my heart (if I lodge filthineſs there) God will not hear me; he will not regard my prayer. The blind man ſaw this truth, John 9. 31. (it ſeems this was a received maxim among them) God heareth not ſinners. We are commanded to pray, lifting up pure hands, 1 Tim. 2. 8. An Heathen being at Sea in a great ſtorm, and perceiving many wicked wretches with him in the ſhip, calling upon the gods, O (ſaith he) forbear prayer, hold your tongues, I would not have the gods take notice that you are here, they will ſure drown us all if they do. If an Heathen by the light of Nature, could ſay this, much more may we by the light of Scripture, That God heareth not ſinners, Iſa. 1. When you ſpread forth your hands, I will hide mine eyes from you; yea, when ye make many prayers, I will not hear, your hands are full of blood. As he ſpeaks out of the fulneſs of the grace of God, (Come let us reaſon together, though your ſins be as ſcarlet, they ſhall be as white as ſnow, &c.) So alſo the neceſſity of gracious purity in man, Waſh ye, make ye clean, &c. Obſerve,

Silete (inquit) ne vos hic navigare dii ſentiant. Bias.

Secondly, The prayers of the pure and upright are prevailing prayers.

In the next words God awakes, Jam. 5.16. The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much. Fervency of prayer effects nothing, unleſs the perſon praying be righteous; God is not melted into compaſſion by the heat of our words, but by the holineſs of our hearts. In the prayer of a righteous man there is ſtrength, prevailing ſtrength, ſuch as God himſelf yields to. As a Prince thou haſt power with God, and haſt prevailed, ſaith he to Jacob when he wreſtled with him. Obſerve, Thirdly, It is no way contrary to the doctrine of Free-grace to ſay we muſt be holy, if we deſire to be heard.

Bildad's doctrine is an excellent piece of Divinity; though he ſaid before, Thou muſt ſeek unto God, and make ſupplication to him, that out of his Free-grace he would beſtow a bleſſing upon thee, yet he adds, If thou wert pure and upright. Though we are not heard, becauſe we are pure and upright, yet none can come with a warrantable confidence to be heard in their impurity and hypocriſie; if they do, God will reject their confidences, and they ſhall not proſper in them. It is impudence, not confidence, to make ſupplication to God with a reſerve, or a reſolve in ſecret, to go on in ſin. The greateſt ſinners in the world may come to God, they that are moſt impure and filthy may find favour; yet every man that cometh unto God, muſt come with this deſire, to have his impurities removed, and his backſlidings healed; Unto the wicked, ſaith God, What haſt thou to do to declare my Statutes, or to take my Covenant in thy mouth, ſeeing thou hateſt inſtruction, and caſteſt my words behind thee, Pſal. 50. 16. It no way croſſes the doctrine of Grace, when with the ſame breath we ſay, God will do us good freely for his own names ſake, and that we muſt be pure and upright who come to God; With the pure thou wilt ſhew thy ſelf pure, and with the upright man thou wilt ſhew thy ſelf upright, and with the froward thou wilt ſhew thy ſelf froward, Pſal. 18.25, 26. But doth the Lord take colour from every one he meets, or change his temper as the company changes? That's the weakneſs of ſinful man, he cannot do ſo, with whom there is no variableneſs nor ſhadow of changing. God is pure and upright with the unclean and hypocritical, as well as with the pure and upright, and his actions ſhew him to be ſo. God ſhews himſelf froward with the froward, when he deals with them, as he hath ſaid he will deal with the froward; deny them, and reject them. God ſhews himſelf pure with the pure, when he deals with them as he hath ſaid he will; hear them and accept them. Though there be nothing in purity and ſincerity, which deſerveth mercy, yet we cannot expect mercy without them. Our comforts are not grounded upon our graces, but our comforts are the fruits or conſequents of our graces.

Bildad having ſhewed Job his duty, ſhews him a promiſe of mercy, If thou wert pure and upright, ſurely now he would awake for thee. There is a three-fold gradation of mercy in this promiſe.

That God would
1. Awake for him.
2. Proſper or pacifie his habitation.
3. Abundantly encreaſe and multiply him in his latter end.

The firſt ſtep of mercy, is, That God would awake for him. Surely now he would awake for thee. And there are three things obſervable about this.

Firſt, The certainty of it, in the word [Surely] without all doubt, or, peradventure if thou wouldſt thus ſeek to him, He would awake.

Secondly, The ſpeedineſs of it; Surely now he would awake [Now] without delay or demur; thou ſhouldſt no ſooner ſeek to God, but find an anſwer of mercy from him.

יעיר עליך

Thirdly, The benefit of it to Job, He would awake for thee. For Job might ſay, I may awaken a ſleepy Lion to riſe up againſt me; God may be angry with my prayer, and in ſtead of bleſſing pour out ſome further judgment upon me: No, ſaith Bildad, I aſſure thee, if thou thus ſeek to him, He will awake for thee, not againſt thee.

God ſometimes awakes againſt us, Jer. 31.28. It ſhall come to paſs, that as I have watched over them, to pluck up, and to break down, and to deſtroy, and to afflict, ſo will I watch over them to build, and to plant, ſaith the Lord. As the Lord would watch to do them a good turn; ſo he had watcht to do them (as we ſpeak) a ſhrewd turn. He threatens them with ſuch a watchfulneſs, Chap. 44. 27. I will watch over them for evil, and not for good. When we are dull and ſleepy in doing the Will of God, he will be watchful and active to afflict us. And when men cannot ſleep till they do evil, God will not ſleep till he brings evil. So, Daniel, in the ninth of that Prophecy, and verſ. 14. having humbled himſelf before God in prayer and faſting, and confeſſed the ſins of the people, concludes, Therefore hath the Lord watched upon the evil, and brought it upon us. God not only awakes, but watches to do a people evil, who have long abuſed his goodneſs. As men in maliciouſneſs of ſpirit watch for advantages and ſpy out opportunities to revenge themſelves, All my familiars watch for my halting, ſaith Jeremy, Chap. 20. 12. So the Lord in abundant holineſs and exactneſs of juſtice, though with a great deal of wrath and ſeverity, watches to revenge himſelf of a wicked people. He takes all opportunities and advantages againſt them, Thou haſt watched evil, and brought it upon us. His love to a returning people is as vigilant, as his anger againſt a backſliding people.

Surely now he would awake for thee.

Awake.] The word ſignifies both to awake, and to ariſe. There are two interpretations of this awaking.

Some take the words tranſitively, thus, He will awake good for thee. Not, of Job awakening God by prayer, but of God awakening proſperity, or ſtirring up bleſſings for Job. As if Bildad had ſaid, Job, now bleſſings are (as it were) aſleep, but if thou pray, God will awaken them; He will ſtir up mercies for thee, he will cure thy broken condition, he will reſtore that which is fallen; repair that which is ruined, and fetch thee out of the grave of thy deſolate eſtate. As a mans ſpirits, gifts, yea graces are ſometime aſleep, and need awakening; ſo alſo are, and do our outward comforts. It is frequent in Scripture to call the repairing of a mans eſtate, or the bringing of good to him, the raiſing of him up, He raiſeth the poor out of the duſt; he awakens them out of that low condition. Job was in the duſt, and his Children in the grave, God made a reſurrection of both for him. That's a good ſence.

Suſcitabit ſuper te bonum. Tranſitive accipitur; excitabit ſuper te, ſc. bonum quod nunc in te ſopitũ eſt.

But rather underſtand it (as our tranſlation reads) of God awakening. He will awake for thee.

He will awake.] The Pſalmiſt aſſures us (Pſal. 121.4.) He that keepeth Iſrael doth neither ſlumber nor ſleep. God never ſleepeth: How is it then ſaid, that God awakes?

For the opening of this Metaphor; Firſt, As, the Church confeſſes and profeſſes (Cant. 5.2.) I ſleep, but my heart waketh; when the Church is aſleep, yet her heart is awake towards God: So much more, when in regard of outward providences God ſeems to be aſleep, his heart is awake toward his Church, his heart (ſcil. his affection, &c.) never ſlumbereth nor ſleepeth.

Secondly, God is ſaid to ſleep, when he doth not anſwer our prayers; and when he hears prayer, then he is ſaid to awake. Hence the Septuagint render this Text, not as we, He will awake; but, He will hear thy prayer for deliverance.

δεήσεως ἐπακούσεταί σου. Deprecationem exaudiet tuã. Sept.

Thirdly, God ſleeps, not in regard of the act, but the conſequents of ſleep. Natural ſleep is the binding or locking up of the ſences. The eye and ear of God is never bound. But to mans apprehenſion the affairs of the world paſs, as if God did neither hear nor ſee. When men are aſleep, things are done which they can take no notice of, much leſs ſtop and prevent. The Parable tells us, (Matth. 13.) While men ſlept, the envious man came and ſowed tares: While the houſholder ſlept, the thief brake the houſe; and the Phariſees direct the watchmen to ſay of Chriſt in the Sepulchre, While we ſlept his Diſciples came and ſtole him away. So now, when things are ſo carried in the world, as if the God of Heaven did not regard or take notice of them; when he doth not prevent or hinder evil, when he doth not ſtop or reſtrain the rage and malice malice of men; this retiring of himſelf in the way of his providence, is called his ſleep.

Dormire videtur cum te relinquit in his calamitatibus. Druſ.

The complaint runs high, Pſal. 44.9. &c. Lord, thou goeſt not forth with our Armies, we are become a reproach unto our enemies; Thou ſelleſt thy people for nought, we are killed like ſheep all the day long. There's a deſcription of the confuſion of things; then followeth (Verſ. 23.) Awake why ſleepeſt thou, O Lord? Ariſe, caſt us not off for ever; wherefore hideſt thou thy face, and forgetteſt our affliction and our oppreſſion. Such a time was accounted the ſleeping time of God.

Hence when God, in the workings of his providence, ſearcheth out the wicked, and brings them to deſtruction; when he breaks their deſigns, and turns theis counſels backwards; when he turns their wickedneſs upon their own heads, and catches them in the ſnare which they have laid for others, then he is ſaid to awake, Pſal. 78.65. He gave his people over to the ſword, and the fire conſumed the young men; then the Lord awakened as one out of ſleep, and like a Giant refreſhed with wine; He ſmote his enemies in the hinder parts, and put them to a perpetual ſhame. Such a time was accounted Gods waking time.

So then, ſleeping and awaking, note only the changes of providence. Hence alſo the providence of God is deſcribed by an eye (2 Chron. 16.9.) which is the proper organ of ſleeping, or waking; and the exactneſs of providence, is ſet out by ſeven eyes, Zech. 3.9. The Scripture ſpeaks this language in reference to our ſoul-ſleep and awakening. When we ſin and let things go which way they will in our hearts, without taking any care, or keeping our watch againſt temptation, then we are aſleep in ſin: And when we begin to conſider our eſtates, and return to our ſelves, when we take notice how it is with us, and ask our hearts the queſtion, What have we done? This in a ſpiritual ſence is our awakening, Awake thou that ſleepeſt, Epheſ. 5.14. Our ſpiritual ſleeping and waking are the decayes or quicknings of ſoul-endeavors. And Gods providential ſleeping and waking are the ſeeming ſtops and viſible motions of his power, mercy and juſtice in the world. This is the awaking which Bildad promiſes; If thou wouldſt ſeek God, &c. Surely he would awake for thee.

The words opened teach us,

Firſt, That holy prayer ſhall certainly be heard.

If thou make thy ſupplication to him, ſurely he will awake. God cannot ſleep when a poor believing ſoul cries in his ears, If I regard iniquity in my heart, God will not hear my prayer (Pſal. 66.18.) But verily God hath heard me, he hath not turned away my prayer, nor his mercy from me. What, God turn prayer away? No, he cannot lie ſtill (as I may ſo ſpeak) when prayer knocks at the door, he muſt ariſe and open preſently. Note,

Secondly, Prayer ſhall be heard preſently.

What preſently? Yes, preſently heard, though not preſently anſwered; Surely now he will awaken for thee, even now. Holy prayers are never deferred the hearing, no not a minute, Iſa. 65.24. Before they call I will hear, and while they are yet ſpeaking I will anſwer. In the very act of praying the anſwer came forth; yea, the anſwer ſometimes antedates our asking, and the grant cometh before the petition. The giving out of the anſwer may be defer'd, but the anſwer is not defer'd. We may be heard, and heard graciouſly, and yet not preſently receive the thing we ask; but every prayer is heard and laid up, as ſoon as put up; he hangs it upon the file, he hath it ſafe by him. Prayer receives an anſwer in Heaven, as ſoon as ſpoken upon Earth, though the anſwer be not returned to us on Earth. God ſleeps not at the prayer of thoſe who are awake in prayer. Obſerve, Thirdly, Prayer is the beſt means to awaken God.

God hath many wayes to awaken man; and he hath directed man a way to awaken himſelf. When we are aſleep, he awakeneth us chiefly two wayes: Firſt, By the voice of his word: Secondly, By the voice of his Rod. He now awakens us by the loud ſounding Trumpet, and the alarms of War: when God awakeneth us by judgments, it is time for us to awaken him by prayer. We find two things in Scripture which awaken God. Firſt, The prayers of his own people. And ſecondly, The rage and blaſphemy of his enemies, Pſal. 78.65. The Prophet having deſcribed the cruelty and rage of the enemy, adds, Then the Lord awaked as one out of ſleep, and like a mighty man that ſhouteth by reaſon of wine: David makes this an argument in prayer, (Pſal. 7.) Becauſe of the rage of mine enemies awake for me to the judgment which thou haſt commanded. As if he had ſaid, Lord, ſhall mine enemies rage, and wilt thou ſleep? Wilt thou not awake for me? Ariſe, I pray thee. The noiſe of blaſphemy, and the cry of violence from wicked men, ſtir up God when he ſeems to lie aſleep. The noiſe of prayer, the cries and calls of faith in his own people, will not let him ſleep. A man whoſe heart is drenched in the world, and drowned in rivers of earthly pleaſures, prays himſelf aſleep, and his prayers bring God aſleep too; he ſleeps when he prays, and God ſleeps at his prayers, that is, God regards not his prayer; he is as one that ſleepeth, as if he heard not what was ſaid. A worldy man doth not hear what he ſpeaks, he knows not what his own requeſts are. God ſleepeth when men are thus aſleep; But when we (as the Apoſtle directs) watch and pray, then God awakes at our prayers. As in the former verſe Job was counſelled to awake to pray to God, ſo now he is promiſed, That the Lord will awake when he prayes.

Fourthly, Seeing the Lord is awakened by prayer: We learn,

That, Prayer ought to be very ſtrong and fervent.

As men are gradual in their ſleep, ſo is the Lord in his. A man is ſometimes ſlumberingly aſleep, that the leaſt noiſe will awake him, you cannot ſtir, but he will hear it. At another time a man is ſo dead aſleep, that though you hollow in his ear you cannot awake him, thunder cannot ſtir him. Sometimes God departs ſo little, that the leaſt voice calleth him again, he comes at the firſt word; at another time he is gone ſo far, that (as to a man in a deep ſleep) you muſt cry and cry again, call and call again, cry aloud before he hears. And we may (in a ſafe ſence) apply that to the true God, which Elijah did to that falſe god, Baal, when his Prieſts were calling to him from morning to night. Elijah mocking, bids them cry aloud, it may be (ſaith he) he ſleepeth: We may ſay (with reverence) thus, when any pray to God, and he doth not hear, pray aloud; not in regard of the voice and outward ſound, but pray with louder deſires of heart, with more fervency and zeal of ſpirit, Peradventure God ſleepeth; peradventure he is in a deep ſleep at this time, and he will not ſuddenly be awakened, therefore cry aloud. When God ſeemed to depart far from the Church of the Jews, with how much fervency do they cry after him (Iſa. 51.9.) Awake, awake, put on ſtrength, O arm of the Lord, awake, as in the ancient dayes? &c. They double and treble it upon him, and cry with an outſtretched voice, Art not thou he that hath cut Rahab, and wounded the Dragon? What a clamor, what a holy ſtir was here to awaken God? God himſelf ſometimes ſeems (as it were) willing to take his reſt; as when he ſaid to Moſes, Let me alone; he ſpake like a man that is in bed, or very ſleepy; Do not trouble me, let me alone; as he in the Goſpel (Luke 11.7.) when he was awakened in the night to come and give bread unto his neighbour, Do not trouble me (ſaith he) the doors are ſhut, and I am in bed with my Children, I cannot riſe and give thee, let me alone. Thus in ſome ſence the Lord expreſſes himſelf to his people, I am now in bed, do not trouble me, Let me alone. What muſt we do in this caſe? We muſt knock harder at the door, as he in the Goſpel did, For whom, though his neighbour would not riſe and give him, becauſe he was his friend, yet becauſe of his importunity he riſes and gives him as many loaves as he needed. We muſt be the more importunate to awake God, by how much he ſeems more unwilling to hear us; our modeſty (in this caſe) pleaſes him not: we muſt call and call again: He will take it well at our hands if we do ſo. We muſt give our ſelves no reſt, and let him take none; ſo the Prophet reſolves (Iſa. 62.1.) For Jeruſalem ſake I will take no reſt, I will never give over praying; and at verſ. 6. I have ſet watchmen upon thy walls, O Jeruſalem, which ſhall never hold their peace day nor night, you that make mention of the Lord, keep not ſilence, and give him no reſt, till he eſtabliſh, and till he make Jeruſalem a praiſe in the Earth. If the Lord ſhould carry it in the preſent anſwers of his providence, dence, as if he were willing to reſt, and deſired not to be troubled in this buſineſs; be not you ſo put off: but with a holy boldneſs and confidence come to him and awaken him; take no anſwer, till ye have an anſwer. He is beſt pleaſed, and moſt at eaſe, when (in prayer) we give him no reſt.

Laſtly obſerve, If God do but awake for us, all is preſently well with us.

If the eye of God be upon us for good, that brings us in all good; therefore (Zech. 2. ult.) when the Church was in her return from Babylon, the Prophet concludes with an exultation of ſpirit, Be ſilent, O all fleſh, before the Lord; for he is raiſed up out of his holy habitation; it is this word, He is awaked out of his holy habitation, now be ſilent, O all fleſh, before the Lord: All fleſh, ye that are the wicked of the world, ye that are enemies, be ye ſilent, leave your boaſting, your reproaching and blaſpheming, for the Lord is awaked, now he begins to ſtir for his people, he will ſtop your mouths ſhortly: All fleſh, takes in the Church and People of God too; O be ye ſilent, in regard of your fears and doubtings, murmurings and diſtracted complainings, ſilence all theſe, why? The Lord is awaked, he is raiſed up out of his holy habitation, that is, he that ſeemed before to confine himſelf to thoſe higher regions, and as the Atheiſt ſpeaks in Job, to walk in the circle of the heavens, not intermedling with the earth: This God is now awaked, he is raiſed out of his holy habitation, and now ye ſhall know that he orders all things here below; therefore be ſilent, O all fleſh. When Chriſt was aſleep (Matth, 8. 25.) A grievous tempeſt aroſe (ſaith the Text) in ſo much that the Ship was covered with waves. When ſtorms and tempeſts are upon the Church, God is then aſleep, though even then he directs the ſtorms, and gives law to the proud waves, But what did the Diſciples in this ſtorm? They awoke Chriſt, Maſter, ſave us, we periſh; and as ſoon as ever Chriſt was awakened, he rebuked the ſtorm, and there was a great calm. Thus when we are toſt up and down with contrary winds, and in danger to be ſplit and ſunk, if God once awake, all is calm; How quietly may they ſleep for whom God wakes? I do not ſay they ſhould ſleep careleſly, but confidently they may. God doth not wake for us to the intent we ſhould ſleep in ſecurity; but we may ſleep quietly when He ſhews himſelf awake for us, who (indeed) never ſlumbreth nor ſleepeth. And if God awake not for us, all our watchfulneſs is as uſeleſs to us as our ſleepineſs. The watchman waketh but in vain except the Lord keep the City. Except he awake, our watching can do no good; and if he awake, good will come though we be aſleep. It is our duty to be careful, and it is our comfort that the care of God is enough for us. The eye of divine Providence helps us in many humane improvidences. What their happineſs is for whom God awakes, ſee in the next words.

He will make the habitation of thy righteouſneſs proſperous.

This is the ſecond degree or ſtep of mercy promiſed; when the Lord awakes, he will awake to purpoſe. We ſay of ſome men, Early up, and never the near; they awake, and do little work; but if God awakes, ſee what he doth.

Anima eſt juſtitia & omnium virtutum domicilium. Aben Ezr.

He will make the habitation of thy righteouſneſs proſperous.] Some of the Rabbins underſtand theſe words as a deſcription of the ſoul; The habitation of thy righteouſneſs, that is, thy ſoul ſhall proſper, becauſe the ſoul is the proper ſeat of righteouſneſs and holineſs. Righteouſneſs belongeth to the inward man. Righteouſneſs being a ſpiritual thing, is houſed and lodged in the ſpirit, that's the habitation of it.

There are others of the Jews who take this habitation of righteouſneſs for the body, becauſe the body is the habitation of the ſoul, in which righteouſneſs is ſeated, and ſo the habitation of righteouſneſs by a ſecond remove, is the outward man. The Lord ſhall bleſs thy body, which now lieth in a woful plight, diſtempered and diſfigured with ſores and ſickneſſes.

But rather take the word habitation in thoſe two ordinary Scripture-ſences, either ſtrictly for the place where Job dwelt, or more largely, for all that did belong unto him. The habitation of a man is all his eſtate, and all that appertains to his eſtate; He will make thy habitation, that is, thy children, thy ſervants, thy fields, thy cattel, thy ſtock, thy all, to be proſperous.

נוה Significat domum vel ſpeciem, pulchritudinem juſtitiæ tuæ. Tur.

The Chaldee Paraphraſe readeth, He will make thy beautiful place to be proſperous. The word ſignifies beauty, as well as an habitation, as was ſhewed upon chap. 5. 3. Thither I refer the Reader. Then, habition is the ſeat of a mans outward eſtate, and his eſtate, the ſhell and the kernel, the outſide and inſide of all he hath.

Quaſi nihil aliud quam æquitatem & juſtitiam redoleant bona juſtè acquiſita. Merc.

The habitation of thy righteouſneſs.] That is, the habitation where righteouſneſs doth flouriſh, or wherein thou liveſt righteouſly.

But what is righteouſneſs?

δικαιοσύνη οὐκ μέρος ἀρετῆς, ἀλλ' ὅλη ἀρετή. Ariſt. Eth. l. 5. c. 1.

Righteouſneſs is a very comprehenſive word, The Philoſopher tells us, it takes in all other virtues whatſoever; It is not a part of virtue, but all virtue.

When righteonſneſs is ſet as diſtinct from holineſs and piety, then it is reſtrained to our dealings with men. Righteouſneſs relates to men, and holineſs to God, Luke 1. 75. Tit. 2. 12. Goſpel-Grace teaches us to live ſoberly, in oppoſition to the intemperance of our bodies; righteouſly, in oppoſition to wrong in our actions; godly, in oppoſition to all impiety and prophaneneſs of our minds.

But righteouſneſs here takes in our whole duty, whether to God or man; The habitation of thy righteouſneſs, that is, the place where thou exerciſeſt all manner of holy and righteous duties toward God and toward man. Righteouſneſs toward man, firſt, in diſtributive juſtice, giving every one his due in judgment, as thou art a Magiſtrate. Secondly, Righteouſneſs towards man in commutative juſtice, giving every one his due in commerce, as thou art a neighbour.

The habitation of thy righteouſneſs.] It is an elegant expreſſion. The Church is ſometimes called ſo, Jer. 31. 23. Thus ſaith the Lord God of hoſts, the God of Iſrael, as yet they ſhall uſe this ſpeech in the Land of Judah, and in the Cities thereof, when I ſhall bring again their captivity, The Lord bleſs thee, O habitation of righteouſneſs, and mountain of holineſs, This ſpeech they ſhall uſe: It ſeems it had been an ordinary ſalutation thus to beſpeak Judah, O thou habitation of juſtice or righteouſneſs, and mountain of holineſs. Every particular Member of the Church is named A tree of righteouſneſs, Iſa. 61. 3, They ſhall be called trees of righteouſneſs, the plantation of the Lord. Each Saint is a tree of righteouſneſs, and all of them together are an habitation, a plantation of righteouſneſs

God himſelf is ſtiled The habitation of righteouſneſs, becauſe he (in a way of higheſt excellency, or in the moſt moſt ſuperlative degree) is the ſeat of righteouſneſs; all righteouſneſs is (as it were) houſed, and dwelling in him. The Prophet (Jer. 50. 7.) deſcribing the unkind uſage which the true worſhippers ſhould find in the dayes of which he propheſieth, ſpeaks thus, All that found them have devoured them, and their adverſaries ſaid we offend not, becauſe they have ſinned againſt the Lord. They thought their brethren had ſinned againſt the Lord, and that therefore they might trouble them without ſin: They have ſinned againſt the Lord, the habitation of juſtice, even the Lord, the hope of their fathers. It is but juſtice (ſay they) for us to puniſh thoſe who ſin againſt the habitation of juſtice. Men (take it in paſſage) do evil ſometimes out of conſcience, and think they do God good ſervice, while they really wrong their brethren.

שלם Pacificabit; pacatum reddet, i. e. integrum, perfectum, omnibus bonis redundans, qualia affert pax. ἀποκαταστήσει σοι. Sept.

He ſhall make the habitation of thy righteouſneſs proſperous.] That is, he ſhall make it peaceable and quiet, ſetled and eſtabliſhed. The word ſignifies peace, plenty and proſperity. He ſhall pacifie or quiet the habitation of thy righteouſneſs. The Septuagint thus, He ſhall reſtore it to, or repair it for thee.

There are three things in that word. It may note,

1. The quietneſs of all within his family. There ſhall be peace and a good agreement in thy habitation.
2. The abundance, the fruitfulneſs, the great encreaſe of all within his family, he will make thee thrive.
3. The peaceable holding or enjoyment of all thoſe good things, free from foreign invaſion or oppreſſions. Do thus, and then neither Sabeans nor Chaldeans ſhall any more come upon thee and plunder thee. Thus he will make the habitation of thy righteouſneſs proſperous.

The ſum of all is, as if Bildad had ſaid unto Job, Thy habitation hath heretofore been an habitation of unrighteouſneſs, of impiety, of tyranny, thy houſe hath been filled with ſpoil and oppreſſion, thy Tabernacle hath been a Sanctuary for wickedneſs, a lodging or rendezvouz for all manner of riot and intemperance, of rapine and injuſtice; but now Job, if thou wilt make thy ſelf pure and upright, thou ſhalt ſee the caſe will alter; whereas before troops and armies of miſeries have invaded thee, and ſpoiled all thou hadſt within and without, if in thy houſe, where wickedneſs formerly dwelt, righteouſneſs ſhall enter and dwell, thou ſhalt ſee that with righteouſneſs peace will enter too; troubles will depart when wickedneſs departs, and evils of puniſhment will diſlodge with the evil of ſin; when thoſe gueſts, righteouſneſs and holineſs come into, and are welcomed at thy houſe, then thy houſe ſhall be better; when thy heart and thy life change, thy eſtate ſhall change; and thoſe comforts which have been ſo long ſtrangers from thee, ſhall return; thy baniſhed mercies ſhall come home again, adorn thy walls, and ſtrengthen thy family.

Ubi facta fuerit morum & ſtudiorum, fiet etiam magna fortunæ converſio.

This is the ſum of what he promiſeth in theſe words, He will make the habitation of thy righteouſneſs proſperous. Hence obſerve,

First, Proſperity is in the power of God.

If he awakes, he can make us proſperous and peaceful. If he do but ſpeak the word, our captivity ſhall return. He ſaith to a dry ſtick, flouriſh, and to a green tree, wither; his word is cloathed with power to do good or evil.

Secondly obſerve, A righteous habitation ſhall be a proſperous habitation.

Whether we reſpect perſons, families or Nations, thus it is in the ordinary diſpenſations of God. As in regard of our ſpiritual and eternal eſtate, The work of righteouſneſs is peace (Iſa. 32. 17.) ſo, in regard of our temporal and outward. Chriſt, who is the Prince of righteouſneſs, is alſo the Prince of peace: He brought righteouſneſs into the world, and then peace came into the world. If he had not made an habitation of righteouſneſs in the world, there had never been an habitation of peace in the world; in that work of his the foundation of our proſperity was laid. Jeſus Chriſt, who as a Prieſt, purchaſed our peace, is alſo the King of righteouſneſs. Bleſſings crown the head of a righteous people (Jer. 31. 23.) They ſhall ſay, The Lord bleſs thee, O habitation of righteouſneſs. If thou art a habitation of righteouſneſs, a bleſſing ſhall reſt upon thee: The Kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteouſneſs and peace, and joy in the holy Ghoſt, Rom. 14. 17. As the ſpiritual Kingdom of God is righteouſneſs, peace and joy in the holy Ghoſt: So the joy and peace of worldly Kingdoms is not meat and drink, but righteouſneſs. When Kingdoms are holy habitations, they will ſoon be quiet habitations. In Iſa. 26. 2. Open ye the gates, that the righteous Nation which keepeth the truth may enter in; thou ſhalt keep him in perfect peace. God will give and preſerve the peace of the righteous. Righteouſneſs is the pillar of a State, and the parent of peace. The mountains (Pſal. 72.3.) ſhall bring peace to the people, and the little hills by righteouſneſs. Plant righteouſneſs upon barren hills and mountains, and peace will flonriſh there.

I might hence infer a Corollary by the rule of contraries, That, Unrighteouſneſs makes unproſperous and unpeaceful habitations. An habitation of Idolatry and falſe worſhip, an habitation of cruelty and hard dealing ſhall be an habitation for owls and ſhreech-owls, a dwelling-place for every unclean bird and beaſt; theſe ſhall take up their lodgings within ſuch walls, and make their neſts in ſuch chambers.

Whilſt we are fill'd (as the Apoſtle characterizeth the Gentiles, Rom. 1.) with all unrighteouſneſs; it is no marvel if we are filled with all trouble. The Prophet Malachi brings in Edom thus reflecting upon himſelf (chap. 1. 4.) Whereas Edom ſaith, I am impoveriſhed, &c. Edom began to be ſenſible all was not well with him. Hereupon he adviſes upon a way to help himſelf, and concludes thus, We will return and build the deſolate places. This was their reſolve; but what ſaith God to it? Even this, will ye build? ye ſhall build, I will give you leave to build, but I will throw it down again. I will ſpoil your work. Why would the Lord be thus ſevere? The next words give a reaſon; They ſhall call thee the border of wickedneſs, the people againſt whom the Lord hath indignation for ever. Wickedneſs is a large word, and takes in all unrighteouſneſs towards man, as well as impiety towards God. That building cannot ſtand long, where unrighteouſneſs lies between the timber and the ſtones. God will pull down by night what ſuch men build by day. If then we would have buildings ſtand, and our habitations proſperous, let us labour to build with juſtice, and make ours the habitations of rigtheouſneſs. Look upon it in families, that which withers the comfort of a family, in children, in ſervants, is the unrighteouſneſs found in a family; if there be unrighteouſneſs there, no wonder if there be decayes and diſcontents there too. If there be unrighteouſneſs in Cities; If (Pſal. 55. 11.) deceit and guile go not out of our ſtreets, no marvel if complainings go not out of our ſtreets. We call for peace and proſperity, O that peace would come! but if our hearts were ſet upon this, if we laboured every one with himſelf, and every one with his brother, and every one with the publick to the uttermoſt of his line, that we may in our perſons, in our families, in our policies, be an habitation of righteouſneſs; how ſoon ſhould we all be a proſperous habitation, an habitation of peace.

Two things make a Nation an habitation of righteouſneſs.

First, When right is done ſpeedily.

Secondly, When right is done impartially.

Tedious delayes make Courts priſons of righteouſneſs, not habitations of righteouſneſs. Partial diſtributions ſhew a place to be a market of righteouſneſs (where he ſhall have it that bids moſt for it) not an habitation of righteouſneſs, where every one ought to have it that comes for it; Ye ſhall do no unrighteouſneſs in judgment (ſaith the Law, Lev. 19. 15.) How ſhall they avoid it? The next words give direction, Thou ſhalt not reſpect the perſon of the poor, nor honour the perſon of the mighty. Righteouſneſs: takes not notice of the perſons of men, but of their cauſes. we muſt not do unrighteouſly in charity to the poor, as well as not in hopes, or for gifts from the rich.

Again, The Hebrew ſignifies a beautiful habitation. Righteouſneſs loves to dwell in a fair houſe. It is ſo, when firſt ſwept from bribes, theſe are filth in the houſe, and the corrupters of righteouſneſs.

Secondly, A beautiful houſe hath ſtore of lights in it. Juſtice and Truth love, not corners and cloſe cells. Juſtice muſt act clearly; men cannot bear it, that what falls upon their ſenſes, ſhould not be in the light of their underſtandings. God hath ſecret judgments, but man muſt not. One potſherd muſt ſhew another why he forms or breaks him thus in judgment.

Laſtly, The beauty of the houſe of Juſtice ariſes from good Laws, and good men to execute them. Righteouſneſs cannot act without a rule; and rules cannot act themſelves. Good Laws without good Magiſtrates, never make any people a habitation of righteouſneſs. It is not good Laws, but good men which make a Kingdom happy. Now, as unrighteouſneſs makes a ſtrong people weak, a rich people poor, an honourable people baſe, a great eſtate to decreaſe and come to nothing; ſo righteouſneſs makes a weak peopeople ſtrong, a poor people rich, a mean people honourable, a little eſtate encreaſe and come to much. Thus Bildad aſſures Job with this next breath.

Verſe 7. Though thy beginning was ſmall, yet thy latter end ſhould greatly encreaſe.

This is the third gradation. God will not only awake for thee, and make thee proſperous, but he will greatly encreaſe thee. Thou ſhalt not only be ſet in as good a condition as thou waſt, but in a far better.

Though thy beginning were ſmall.] Though the head of thy eſtate (ſo the Hebrew) though the firſt of thy eſtate were ſmall.

רשית
A quo quid incipit.

The word ſmall notes a ſmalneſs either in quantity or in quality; and it is oppoſed to a double greatneſs (Gen. 25. 23.) Jacob and Eſau are thus diſtinguiſhed, the one ſhall be great, the other ſmall; which we tranſlate, the elder ſhall ſerve the younger; the greater ſhall ſerve the leſs.

Though thy beginning was ſmall. The City that Lot deſired (Gen. 19.) is called Zoar, from this word, Is is not a little one? Though thy eſtate were but a Zoar, a little one, yet it ſhall be built of a larger compaſs.

The Septuagint raiſes the ſence of the latter clauſe, Though thy beginning was ſmall, yet thy latter end ſhall be ineffable, ſuch as none ſhall be able to tell over or deſcribe. Thy eſtate ſhall be beyond account.

Τὰ ἔσχατά σου ἀμύθητα. Sept.

A Queſtion ariſes how we are to make this compariſon between Job's beginning and later end? Whether we are to refer it to the eſtate he had before his affliction, compared with what he ſhould have after his affliction; or, whether we are to underſtand it of the augmentation and encreaſe of his eſtate after his affliction, which at the beginning ſhould be but ſmall, but afterwards ſhould receive a mighty augmentation. The ſence is good either way.

Firſt, If we underſtand it of his eſtate before and after his troubles compared together, Though thy beginning or the firſt eſtate which God gave thee were ſmall, yet thy later end, or the eſtate which God will give thee, when theſe ſtorms are over-blown, ſhall wonderfully encreaſe.

Againſt this it may be objected, how can the former eſtate of Job be called ſmall, when as it is ſaid (Chap. 1.) that Job had a very vaſt eſtate? We have heard the inventory of his goods, the total ſum or apprizement of all, being given in by God himſelf, That Job was the greateſt of all the men in the Eaſt. How then can it be ſaid, that his firſt eſtate was ſmall? Though thy beginning were ſmall.

I anſwer, comparatively it may be called ſmall. An exceeding exceſs of greatneſs, leſſens and littles any other greatneſs. The Moon is a great light, but the light of the Sun makes that light darkneſs. That which is glorious hath no glory, by reaſon of the glory that excelleth; he that is rich or great hath no riches or greatneſs, by reaſon of riches and greatneſs which excel. Job had a fair eſtate before, and was the greateſt man of all the men of the Eaſt; but his eſtate is promiſed to be ſuch as ſhall obſcure the former, and render it inconſiderable. Accordingly, it is ſaid, in the ſtory of his reſtoring (Chap.42.10.) That the Lord turned the captivity of Job; alſo the Lord gave Job twice as much as he had before. Half is but a little to the whole. And at verſ. 12. The Lord bleſſed the latter end of Job more then his beginning. Which words are a good expoſition upon the Text in hand. When Joſeph ſent for his Father and Brethren to come into Ægypt (Gen. 45. 20.) he ſaith, but as for your ſtuff, do not regard that, for the good of all the land of Ægypt is before you. Joſeph knew his Father was a rich man. Jacob was no beggar: but let all that go for nothing, leave it to thoſe that will take it up, all the good of Ægypt is before you, what is all you have to the riches of Ægypt? That's the firſt ſence. Obſerve from it,

> That, the Lord is able to repair all our loſſes with abundant advantages.

We complain of loſſes; I have loſt a great eſtate, ſaith one; but the Lord is able to give thee ſuch an eſtate, as that the greatneſs of the former ſhall not be remembred.

> Secondly, They who loſe much, uſually have great repairs.

Job was great above all others in the Eaſt, but now he ſhall be made greater then himſelf. As in ſpirituals, they that have, to them more ſhall be given, and they ſhall have more abundance; ſo they that loſe much in temporals, to them more is given ſometimes then they have loſt, and they ſhall have abundance.

There is a ſecond ſence, to which the letter of the original doth rather incline, which makes both parts of the verſe look only to his ſecond eſtate, namely, his reſtauration: and ſo the ſence is this, Though thou doeſt not preſently thrive and grow up to a great eſtate, yet afterward thou ſhalt; Though after this breaking and undoing thou ſhouldeſt ſet up (as it were) but with a little ſtock, one friend bringing thee a piece of ſilver, another, a piece of gold, a third, a jewel, all making a purſe for thee: and ſo thou beginneſt but upon alms and charity, yet thy later end ſhall greatly increaſe. As if Bildad had ſaid, Though God ſhould now begin to comfort, and reſtore thee but with ſmall matters, yet do not think he will ſo conclude with thee, he hath enough in ſtore. The letter of the Original is moſt clear for this, the words being aſſertive, rather then ſuppoſitive, Thy beginning ſhall be ſmall, and thy later end ſhall greatly encreaſe: which refers to the time future, not paſt, as we and others tranſlate. Hence obſerve,

> That, the Lord doth uſually raiſe his people by degrees.

They do not receive all at once. It is true of perſons, families and Nations. We muſt not look for all in a day. Outward mercies may come too faſt upon us, there may be a glut of them. We may have more then we know how to order and take in, it may do hurt to receive all together: As it is with men that have been long pined with famine and hunger, and are grown out of their ordinary courſe by reaſon of their neceſſitated abſtinence. We do not preſently give them all manner of good chear, or bring them to a full table, and let them eat as much as they will; but we give them a little and a little at a time, and ſo by degrees bring their ſtomachs on, till they be wrought for plenty. So when the Lord brings perſons or Nations very low, he doth not bring in a glut of mercies at firſt, this would be more then they are able to bear, as they may be undone, if they have all at one receipt; but he gives as they are able to take them in, and make a right uſe of them. As Jacob ſaid to Eſau his brother, when he invited him to march with him; no, ſaith Jacob, I cannot march thy pace, I muſt conſider what my train is, I have flocks here that are great with young, And if I ſhould over-drive them one day, they would all dye: therefore (ſaith he) I will lead on ſoftly, according as the cattel that are before me, and the Children be able to endure. So it is in this caſe, the Lord in infinite wiſdom gives, as men are able to receive. We may be over-mercy'd, as well as over-afflicted; over-laden with comforts, as well as with ſorrows. And therefore as the Lord doth correct in judgment and in meaſure: So alſo doth he reſtore. We have not full tyde in a moment, or in a quarter of an hour: it would be terrible, dangerous, and troubleſom: if when it is low water we ſhould have full tide in a moment, but it comes in ſtealing by degrees, and at laſt it ſwells all over the banks. Such a ſtealing flood of mercies the Lord gives his people.

Therefore be caution'd. In the returns of mercy do not deſpiſe ſmall things. Your beginnings may be inconſiderable, this is but a little, and that is but a little, but do not deſpiſe the firſt, or ſecond little. So the Prophet counſels (Zech. 4. 10.) Deſpiſe not the day of ſmall things: The beginnings of mercy were ſcarce diſcernable, and they looked upon them as nothing, they thought they would never come to any thing. Take heed (ſaith the Prophet) do not deſpiſe ſmall things, there's more a coming. Haſt thou but a little? Doth God make but ſome little repairs of outward comforts? Do not ſlight theſe, look upon them as the beginnings of greater things. When Elijah ſent his ſervant to go, and look towards the Sea, whether he ſaw any ſign of rain, he at laſt brought him word that he ſaw a little cloud ariſe out of the Sea as big as a mans hand: would any one think that a prognoſtick of great rain? Elijah's ſervant might deſpiſe this, and ſay this is no ſign of rain; but Elijah knew better, that little aſſured him there was a mighty ſhowre at hand, he knew how it would work preſently: Go, bid Ahab prepare his Chariot, and get him down, that the rain ſtop him not. Thus it is, reſpecting dayly providences; if you ſee a mercy coming but as big as a mans hand, be perſwaded that the Lord ſends it as a fore-runner, as that which ſhall uſher in large and extenſive mercies. If we ſee the glimmering light of day break, we are not angry, becauſe it is not preſently high noon, or, becauſe we have not full light, we know the light will come by degrees; Thy beginning ſhall be ſmall, but thy latter end ſhall greatly encreaſe.

VERS. 8, 9, 10.

For enquire, I pray thee, of the former age, and prepare thy ſelf to the ſearch of their fathers.
(For we are but of yeſterday, and know nothing; our dayes upon Earth are a ſhadow)
Shall not they teach thee, and tell thee, and utter words out of their heart?

WE have opened the firſt Argument, by which Bildad confirms his propoſition laid down at verſ. 3. that God is juſt; both from the example of Gods dealing with Job's Children, *verſ.*4. and from what, God was ready to do for him, in verſ. 5, 6, 7.

The context now read contains a ſecond general Argument to prove the former aſſertion, and it is grounded upon the teſtimony or Authority of the Ancients; as if Bildad had ſaid thus, I will not preſs thee with my own bare ſentence, and ſay-ſo, with my own reaſon and authority, but I wiſh thee to ſearch the records of former times, to conſult the wiſeſt and the holieſt men that ever were in the world, and let them judge in this caſe. Enquire of the former age, and prepare thy ſelf to the ſearch of their Fathers.

It is here obſervable that Bildad manages his counſel by the ſame Arguments which Eliphaz had uſed before him: Eliphaz bid Job (Enquire who ever periſhed being innocent, (*Chap.*4.) and promiſes him peace upon repentance (Chap. 5. 23, 24.) Bildad runs the ſame ſtrain, If thou wert pure, &c. and here, Enquire of the former age, &c.

The ſtrength of his Argnment may be caſt into this form.

That is true which the holieſt and wiſeſt in all antiquity with one mouth and one conſent agree in.
But the holieſt and wiſeſt in all antiquity agree in this, that God is juſt.
Therefore this is a truth.

Hereupon he inferreth, that God had dealt juſtly with Job in conſuming his eſtate, in deſtroying his Children, and in afflicting his perſon. That's the Logical meaning or Argument of theſe three verſes.

Enquire I pray thee.] The word notes a very earneſt, and a diligent ſearch or enquiry: To enquire with induſtry, yea, with importunity. The grave hath its name in Hebrew from this word, and ſo hath Hell: becauſe the grave (as it were) calls for, or enquires after all fleſh; and Hell with much earneſtneſs gapes for wicked men, Eccleſ. 2. 10. Whatſoever mine eyes deſired. The eye is a ſtrong asker.

It is applied ſometimes to perſons, and then it ſignifies, to enquire or conſult what is to be done. Sometimes it is applied to things, and then it ſignifies, to ask that a thing may be done. Prayer is an enquiry after God, and the things of God, 1 Sam. 1. 17, 20, 27. This word is uſed about Hannahs prayer to God for a Child, Hannah conceived and bare a ſon, and called his name Samuel, ſaying, Becauſe I have asked him of the Lord.

De perſonis; ſic conſulere; de rebus ſic petere. Merc.

Further, the word is applied to God when he enquires after or asks ſomewhat of us, as if he made his requeſt and ſute to us (Deut. 10. 12.) And now, Iſrael, what doth the Lord thy God require of thee? Or, what doth he enquire after in thee? It is this, To fear the Lord thy God, &c.

Here, to enquire, is to uſe all endeavours and means to find out the beſt informations and reſolutions, which the Fathers in thoſe former ages were able to give Job in the controverſie then a foot between him and his friends, Enquire, I pray thee,

Of the former age.] By the former we are not to underſtand thoſe that were immediately preceding only, or thoſe that were preceding for ſome few generations paſt, but as the Septuagint well renders it, by former generations, we may underſtand the firſt generation; begin at the firſt, and ſo come down all along, begin as high as thou canſt. Enquire not only of thoſe who lived ſince the flood, but of all who have been ſince God created man upon the Earth; draw the line of thy ſearch thorow all ages, and thou ſhalt find the pedegree of this truth from age to age, from generation to generation, Enquire I pray thee, of the former γενεὰν πρώτην.

Age.] The word age, is taken three wayes.

Firſt, For the whole ſpace of mans life; which, when it is doubled, ſignifies a very long life, *Pſal.*61.7. Thou ſhalt prolong the Kings life (or, according to the letter of the Hebrew, thou ſhalt add dayes to the dayes of the King) and his years as many generations; or, as generation and generation, age and age, long and long, that is, very long; Two lives, or two mens ages, being (as it were) laid into one.

דור à radice דור Continue & ſucceſſive vixit, duravit; ſenſu & ſono idē quod vox Latina duro.

Secondly, For ſome ſpecial part of mans life. Mans life is divided into ſeveral ages. Some divide it into four, alluding to the four parts of the year. Some, into five, infancy, childhood, youth, mans eſtate, and old-age; comparing them to the five acts of an interlude, the Prologue whereof is infancy, and the Epilogue, decrepid old-age. Others into ſeven, in alluſion to the ſeven Planets.

Thirdly, It is taken for an age of men, or the ſtate of the time preſent. So in the Goſpel, Chriſt calleth the Scribes and Phariſees, A generation of vipers, and an adulterous generation. As if he had ſaid, You of this time and age of the world, are a viperous and an adulterous brood. So Pſal. 14. 5. God is in the generation of the righteous: That is, he favours that generation, or ſort of men; God is in all generations, but ſuch he delights in moſt; the wicked have cauſe enough to fear thoſe, in whom God delights.

Ætatem vocant Hebræi genus hominum ſimul viventiū, ſic ætas prava adultera. Apud Græcos γενεὰ, ſignificat intervallum ſeptē annorum, unde medici vetant duas ætates habenti, i.e. annos quatuor decem nato venam incidi, quod ſanguine egeat. Suid.

That of the Prophet (which Text hath variety of interpretations) is taken in this ſence (Iſa. 53. 8.) Who ſhall declare his generation? It is the word of the Text, Who ſhall declare his age, or the generation of Chriſt? Some underſtand it of his eternal generation. Others, of his temporal generation, when he was incarnate, the myſtery whereof was beyond words. A third, of that eternity which followed his paſſion. As if it were an Antitheſis to thoſe words, He was taken from priſon, and he was cut off, but who ſhall declare his generation? You may quickly write up the dayes that Chriſt lived here upon Earth, they were but few, even his pilgrimage was ſhort on Earth, but who can declare his generation? Thoſe infinite and eternal ages and revolutions, thorow which he ſhall paſs, though now you have quickly cut off his life? Others, by his generation underſtand the holy ſeed and iſſue, the Children of Chriſt. His Croſs was fruitful, and his ſufferings productive of an infinite generation, Who can declare it? Though you cut off the Father, yet this Father by dying will give life to an innumerable poſterity, Who can declare his generation? So (verſ. 10.) He ſhall ſee his ſeed. But beſides all theſe we may with good probability interpret the word generation for the time when Chriſt ſojourned in the fleſh, Who can declare this generation? That is, who can deſcribe the time or the age wherein Chriſt lived? As if he had ſaid, you ſee here in this glaſs of prophecy how they will uſe Chriſt, how bloodily and cruelly they will deal with him, he ſhall be impriſoned, he ſhall be cut off and numbred among tranſgreſſors, Who can declare his generation? What pen is able with lively colours to paint out the ſeveral wickedneſſes and Tyrannies of that age, acted againſt, and inflicted upon that holy and innocent lamb Jeſus Chriſt, who came to dye for the ſins of the world? Surely his generation, or the ſtory of his age will be ſuch, as no pen is able to draw out, or fully to delineate, Who ſhall declare his age?

Quis cogitare aut dicere poteſt quam perverſi fuerint homines, qui tempore ejus victuri ſint. Pined.

The age which Bildad calls Job to enquire into, is not a part of mans life, or the whole life of a man, or one age of men, or ſtate of times, but the whole ſpace of time from the very beginning with all things done or ſuffered, and the perſons who have been active or paſſive, doers or ſufferers in thoſe times. Thus enquire of the former age.

The reaſon why he called him to enquire of the former age, was, becauſe in thoſe times the will of God was not reduced to writing. The divinity of the firſt ages was traditional; the Scriptures were not compoſed for more then two thouſand years after the creation, but the mind of God was either immediately revealed, or carried from father to ſon, from generation to generation; being preſerved, not in paper and ink, or other formal records, but in the memories and hearts of the faithful, until the giving of the Law. Hence it was that Bildad refers Job to thoſe revelations, or to the experiences of the Fathers concerning the dealings of God in former ages.

Beroſus in his eighth book of Antiquities, reports that the Fathers after Adam ſet up two great pillars, upon which ſome affirm they inſcribed many Divine Truths: but he tells us that thoſe pillars (of which ſome monuments were ſeen after the flood) were filled rather with Aſtronomical obſervations, Mathematical ſcheams of the Heavens and figures of the Stars; we cannot put much value upon either of theſe opinions. The former cannot warrant us that any thing was regiſtred and written by Gods appointment, till the writing of the Law. And therefore Bildad, according to the uſage of thoſe times, ſends Job for information to the traditions and reports of the Fathers. For after the Law was written, the Prophets, in caſe of emergent doubts and controverſies, ſent the people, not to the traditions or experiences of former ages, but, To the Law and to the teſtimony, if they ſpeak not according to this word, it is becauſe there there is no light, or no morning in them, Iſa. 8. 20. The word once written was the rule, and though it cannot ſpeak, yet it muſt teach us how to ſpeak. If we ſpeak not according to this, there is no light in us. But the word not being written, Bildad adviſes Job well, Enquire of the former age,

And prepare thy ſelf to the ſearch of their Fathers.

Having counſel'd him to enquire of the former age; he addeth, Prepare thy ſelf to the ſearch of their Fathers; as if he had ſaid, though I bid thee enquire, yet I would not have thee ruſh hand over head upon this enquiry, Prepare thy ſelf. The word ſignifies to lay a good foundation; Due preparations are the foundation of action. Hence it ſignifies alſo to eſtabliſh; becauſe a matter is eſtabliſhed and confirmed by wiſe preparations, and conſiderate addreſſes to it. Thoſe things ſtand faſteſt about which we make not too much haſt. Further, the word ſignifies the fixing of the mind, Fix thy heart upon this work: keep thy ſpirits intent (Pſal. 108. 1.) My heart is fixed (ſaith David, which ſome render, My heart is prepared) I will ſing and give praiſe. Prepare thy ſelf

To the ſearch of their Fathers.] Before he adviſed him to enquire of the former age, here, To ſearch their Fathers; as if he had ſaid, Do not confine thy ſelf to the immediately fore-paſſed times, but go as high as thou canſt: The former age (as was touched upon that paſſage) may include all times paſt: but here to avoid all miſtakes, he gives it in expreſly. The Fathers of the former age, are the Fathers of every age. All that have lived before us, come under the relation of our Fathers. The Fathers were dead, but they lived in their monuments and works: theſe he muſt ſearch, ſo far as any mark or remembrance of them could be found. Hence Obſerve,

First, That as it is a duty in all, ſo it was a cuſtom, in ancient times, carefully to record the dealings of God with them, for the uſe of enſuing generations.

To what end ſhould Job ſearch, if nothing were to be found; The Jews were commanded to remember the works of God for their learning, after the word was written, Pſal. 78. 5. He eſtabliſhed a teſtimony in Jacob, &c. That they ſhould make them known to their Children. God hath alwayes had a book of his acts and monuments, as well as of his Laws and Inſtitutions. Names given to Children and yearly feaſts, to ſtones and pillars, have been the preſervatives and memorials of his wonderful works. The works of God are his holineſs, juſtice, power, mercy, truth made viſible. The adminiſtrations of God in one age, are for the inſtruction of all ages. God ſpake with Jacob only in perſon at Bethel, yet there the Scripture ſaith, he ſpake with all his poſterity, Hoſ. 12. 4. He found him in Bethel, and there he ſpake with us. It is then a debt to poſterity, to ſhew them what God hath done for us. Obſerve, Secondly, That it is our duty to enquire into the dealings of God in all ages.

It was their duty before the word was written, and it is a duty ſtill. The works of God are to be ſtudied and read over as well as his word, Deut. 4. 20. & 32. Ask now of the dayes that are paſt, which were before thee, ſince the day that God created man upon Earth; and ask from one ſide of Heaven to another, enquire every way to ſee whether ever God dealt with a people, as he hath dealt with thee, whether God did ever aſſay to take to himſelf a Nation from the midſt of an other Nation by temptations, and by ſigns, and by wonders, &c. Enquire this of all the former times. So Deut. 32. 7. Remember the dayes of old, conſider the years of many generations, ask thy Father and he will ſhew thee, thy Elders and they will tell thee, The Pſalmiſt promiſes to rehearſe what theſe were enjoyned to record, Pſal. 78. 3, 4. I will open my mouth in a parable, I will utter dark ſayings of old, which we have heard and known, and our Fathers have told us. Our ſpeaking of, and enquiring into, what God hath done, ſhews the harmony between his word and works. And the former providences of God are food for our faith, as well as the promiſes of God.

Thirdly, That which I ſhall rather inſiſt upon, is this,

True antiquity ever gives a teſtimony to the truth.

Quod antiquiſſimum veriſſimum.

Hence the Prophets ſend the people back to antiquity, Jer. 6. 16. Enquire for the good old-way. Every old way is not a good way, but in every good old way we may walk ſafely and ſee the foot-ſteps of truth. It is a received rule, That is trueſt which is ancienteſt. It is certainly ſo, for truth is not only ancient, but eternal. Truth is as old as God himſelf, for truth is nothing elſe but the mind of God, truth was with God from everlaſting. Truth is commonly called the daughter of time, yet (in a ſence) it is the mother of time, for it was before time was; and therefore (no queſtion) that which is ancienteſt is trueſt.

Yet there is a great abuſe of this principle. Look back to antiquity and conſult with your Fathers (ſay many) and ſee what they did, how they believed. But what is the antiquity they call us to conſult with? It is not (as Moſes ſpake in that place of Deuteronomy) antiquity, ſince God created man upon Earth, or ſince Jeſus Chriſt was upon the Earth, and gave out his Goſpel laws: but it is the antiquity of ſome later ages and editions, an antiquity far ſhort of what is indeed the ancient time. The Apoſtle (1 Joh. 2. 7.) gives us the definition of an old commandment, This is the old commandment which was from the beginning. Our ſinful nature is called the old man, and yet is a corrupt man. It is called the old man, not that it is older then the new man; the new man is not of a younger houſe, or later date then the old man. Holineſs was before corruption. And the image of God upon man, elder then ſin, the image of the Devil. There are many corruptions in doctrine, in opinion, in worſhip, in practice, which go for very old: And there are many doctrines which we call new truths; Is it becauſe thoſe corruptions are older then theſe new truths? No, new truths are elder then the oldeſt corruptions. That which we call the new world, was created in the beginning, though diſcovered but yeſterday. So new truths were given from the beginning only they were unknown till of late; and we may well conceive that ſome goodly regions of truth are ſtill (terra incognita) undiſcovered; God having reſerved them for the honour and induſtry of ſome divine Columbus, who may give us an exacter Sea-card, of divine Myſteries, then the world hath yet ſeen, though enough hath been ſeen from the beginning, for the ſafe ſteering of our courſe to Heaven. He that would enquire and make a diligent ſearch for truth, muſt go to the firſt inſtitutions, That's the old commandment which was from the beginning. The Prophet Ezekiel (Chap. 23. 43.) ſpeaks of ſome who were grown old in adulteries; that is, old in adulterating and corrupting the truth, and worſhip of God, That which is old may be old in evil, and fuller of errors then it is of dayes. We find when the good Kings of Judah reformed, they did not ſearch only into what was done in the ages immediately before them, or what their next Fathers had done; but they ſearch'd what was done in the times of their godly Fathers, how many removes ſoever diſtant from them. Hezekiah (2 Chron. 29. 6.) tells the Levites that their Fathers were in an error, that they had treſpaſſed, and done that which was evil in the ſight of the Lord, and had forſaken him; and Chap. 30. 5. ſpeaking of the obſervation of the Paſsover, he ſaith, They had not done it of a long time in ſuch ſort as it was written; therefore ver. 7. he dehorteth them ſaying, Be not ye like your Fathers which treſpaſſed againſt the Lord God of your Fathers; he doth not mean that they ſhould not be like their firſt Fathers, who had the truth purely committed to them, and ſo worſhipped God purely; but be not like your immediate fore-fathers, or your corrupt fore-fathers, how many deſcents and generations ſo ever, ye can number from them. And this was a thing ſo ſtrange, that when Hezekiah ſent the Poſts from City to City thorow the Countries of Ephraim and Manaſſeh, with this meſſage, that he would have a reformation according to the firſt inſtitution or pattern, and would not have them ſtay in what their fore-fathers had done; It is ſaid, verſ. 10. That they laughed the meſſengers to ſcorn, and they mocked them; what muſt we now be wiſer then our Fathers? Yes, ſaith he, you have done evil a long time, you and your Fathers, therefore I muſt bring you back to your firſt Fathers, in compariſon of whom, the Fathers you claim by were but Children, and thoſe degenerate Children. It is ſaid of Joſiah's reformation, (2 King.

23. 22.) That there was not the like from the dayes of the Judges, nor in all the dayes of the Kings of Iſrael and Judah; he went to the very beginning of all, there had not been ſuch a thing done before. So that if any ſhould have objected, why may not ſuch a reformation ſerve us as ſerved thoſe Kings and Judges? No, ſaith Joſiah, I will ſearch beyond their times into the remoteſt antiquities. The Church makes humble confeſſion (Pſal. 106. 6.) We have erred with our fathers; let not any turn this into a ſtubborn reſolution, and ſay, We will err with our fathers: if that be an errour which our fathers believed and practiſed, we will erre with them. So thoſe rebellious Jews pleaded (Jer. 44. 17.) We will do as our fathers. They who will do as their fathers, may ſuffer with their fathers; they who will needs err by their fathers copy, may go to hell too by their fathers copy. Jerom once deſired leave of Auſtin to err with ſeven fathers whom he found of his opinion. I ſhould not deſire that leave, nor envy any one the priviledge. The Fathers are but Children when they err, and they who will err with their Fathers, are worſe then Children.

Conſider then to what Antiquity, and to what Fathers you appeal. Many practices are very old, yet very erroneous. Many old ſayings and old doings muſt be unſaid and undone, or we ſhall be undone for ever. How many old ſayings of the Jews doth Chriſt gainſay? (Mat. 5.) Ye have heard that it hath been ſaid by them of old time, thus and thus, But I ſay unto you, &c. And (Mat. 19.) Anſwering the Queſtion about divorce, Moſes indeed for the hardneſs of your hearts, ſuffered you to put away your wives, but from the beginning it was not ſo. Beſides, ſome (like the Gibeonites) feign antiquity, they can put a gray beard upon a green head; and their opinions will be found fennowed and mouldy with errour, not with age. As we muſt take heed of novelties, ſo we muſt be cautious about antiquities. Some antiquities of old men are no better then old wives fables, of which the Apoſtle bids us beware; unlearned old wives fables are as authentick as many learned mens antiquities pleaded for. To have an itch after novelties, and to dote upon antiquities, are alike vain and dangerous. Old fables and young fancies are with me at the ſame rate; No man having drunk old wine (ſaith Chriſt, Luke 5. 35.) ſtraightway calls for new, for he ſaith the old is better. Old is better then new, if it be as good as new. But any new truth is better then the oldeſt error; and every errour, the elder it is, the worſer it is.

Again, Bildad adviſes Job to prepare himſelf to the ſearch of his Fathers, Hence obſerve,

We muſt not preſume to find truth with eaſe, or to come ſlightly by it.

Prepare thy ſelf (Prov. 2. 3.) If thou crieſt after knowledge, and lifteſt up thy voyce for underſtanding; if thou dig for it as ſilver, and ſearch for it as for hid treaſures, then thou ſhalt find, &c. A man that will find ſilver, muſt prepare and fit himſelf to ſearch for ſilver. That lies not upon the ſurface, but in the boſom and bowels of the earth. There are four things wherein this preparation conſiſts.

Firſt, Humility. God doth not teach, but reſiſt the proud, he gives more grace (humility is much grace) to the humble. A lowly minded man ſhall know the mind of the moſt high God.

Secondly, Holineſs. Submitting to, and practiſing the truth we know, prepares us to receive more of truth. He that doth the will of Chriſt, ſhall know his doctrine, Jo. 7. 17.

Thirdly, Prayer. Doth any man want wiſdom? let him ask of God, Jam. 1. 5. Truth is the daughter of God, and he will not beſtow her in marriage upon our minds, unleſs we ask him.

Fouthly, Love unto Truth. Truth is a beauty, and deſerves our love; to love truth, is not a civility, but a duty; to ſearch for truth, without love to truth, is a diſhonour to truth; and as the not receiving the love of the truth, is the cauſe why many apoſtatize and fall from it, ſo it is a reaſon why many are ſtill ignorant and cannot come at it. As God, the Father of truth, muſt be askt his good will before we can have her; ſo truth, the daughter of God ſhall be loved before we have her.

Bildad having thus adviſed Job to ſearch antiquity, giveth him a reaſon of his advice, a modeſt reaſon, reflecting upon himſelf and upon his friends.

Verſe 9. For we are but of yeſterday, and know nothing, our dayes on earth are a ſhadow.

As if he had ſaid, the reaſon why we refer thee to the former ages, is, becauſe we are able to ſay little of our ſelves, and from our own experience, we are but of yeſterday, that is, the time we have lived is very little, our dayes have been few upon earth. Truth is the daughter of time, and we are ſcarce ſons of time, we are but of yeſterday.

Yeſterday.] Taken in our common ſpeech, ſignifies only the day immediately going before. 2. It is put for the time a little before, and is as much as lately, 2 Kings 9. 26. Surely I have ſeen yeſterday the blood of Naboth, and the blood of his ſons, That is, It is not long ſince Naboth and his ſons were ſlain, and their blood is as freſh in my memory, as if it were in my eye. 3. It is put for all time, how long ſoever paſt (Heb. 13. 8.) The Apoſtle Hebraizing, ſaith, Jeſus Chriſt the ſame yeſterday, to day and for ever; yeſterday is not put for the day immediately before, or for many dayes before, but for all dayes before, even from the beginning of the world; yea, not only are all dayes paſt included in yeſterday, but the eternity which is paſt.

Apoſtolus Hebraizans, ſic utitur vocabulo, χθὲς. Heb. 13. 8.

Yeſterday and the day before, are often tranſlated before, or heretofore, Gen. 31. 2, 5. Exod. 40. 10. Ruth 2. 11. 2 Sam. 5. 2. Noting time not much paſt the preſent.

Heri & nudius tertius, dum ſimul junguntur, proverbialẽ conficiunt hyperbolem tempus nuper actum ſignificantem. Sic etiam apud Græcos, χθὲς ϗ πρῴην, Bol.

In this place by yeſterday, we are not to underſtand all time paſt, nor the time immediately paſt, but ſmall time paſt; We are but of yeſterday, that is, we have lived but a while in the world (yet they were old men) the dayes which we have ſeen are as nothing; he expreſſes their lives by the leaſt compleat time paſt, to ſhew that they had lived but a little time paſt.

So, in Scripture, this phraſe, to morrow (oppoſite to yeſterday) ſignifies not only the day immediately to come, but any time to come indefinitely (1 Sam. 28. 29.) The Devil anſwers Saul, To morrow thou and thy ſons ſhall be with me; he did not know exactly and preciſely, that it ſhould be the very next day, but he uſeth a word which would ſave his credit, if it ſhould have fallen out many dayes, or ſome few years after. To morrow may be any time to come. As then to morrow ſignifies the immediate day coming, or all time to come, ſo yeſterday ſignifies the immediate day paſt, or all time paſt. Thus one of the Ancients ſpeaks of Matthew, Yeſterday a Publican, to day a Preacher, that is, he was heretofore a Publican, and now a Preacher.

For we are but as yeſterday.] Bildad ſtileth himſelf and his friends yeſterday, to ſhew they had been but ſhort-liv'd, though they had lived long. Some have given us the date of their years, or an account how old they were. They reckon Bildad an hundred and forty, Eliphaz an hundred and fifty, and Zophar an hundred and twenty years old. In what Records the years of their nativities were found, I know not; but probable enough it is, that they were ancient men; and (chap. 15. 10.) Eliphaz ſpeaks as much, With us are both the gray-headed and very ancient men, much elder then thy father. Yet Bildad calleth himſelf and them but as of yeſterday, either abſolutely, becauſe the life of man is ſhort, or comparatively to the lives of the fathers in the firſt age of the world, who lived much longer. His meaning then is, we will not bound thee to our experiences, who have lived but a while, but inform thy ſelf from them who lived many years ago, and lived many years, ſome of them nine hundred years and more; enquire of Methuſelah, and his contemporaries, who are able to give thee a better account then we. Therefore he addeth, Hiſterni quaſi unius diei homines ſunt novi & recentes.

And know nothing.] The particle [And] is here cauſal, We are but of yeſterday, therefore we know nothing; in which ſence we read it often. Take an inſtance (Ezek. 13. 31.) Thou haſt walked in the way of thy ſiſter, therefore I will give her cup into thine hand; The Hebrew is, And I will give her cup into thy hand, thou ſhalt pledge her in the ſame cup of affliction. So here, We are but of yeſterday, and know nothing, that is, We are but of yeſterday, therefore we know nothing.

Know nothing.] The negation is not abſolute, but comparative, We know nothing, that is, we Neotericks know but little in compariſon of thoſe who lived long ago, and lived ſo long, even many centuries, gathering knowledge, and making up their obſervations; for (ch. 12. 12.) With the ancient is wiſdom, and in length of days underſtanding. Hence obſerve,

The ſhort life of man is not ſufficient to gain much knowledge.

We are but of yeſterday, and we know nothing; we cannot know much who live but little. The great Phyſitian complained long ago, Life is ſhort, and art is long; natural life is not long enough for the journey of natural knowledge, how much leſs is it for divine knowledge in the myſtery of Chriſt, which is the art of all arts, and ſcience of ſciences? Thoſe myſteries are very long, and our lives very ſhort; therefore at our beſt, we come ſhort in the knowledge of them. Hence the Apoſtle (1 Cor. 13.) ſpeaking of the moſt perfect knowledge we have in this life, concludes, we know but in part; there is a vaſt ocean of truths in the Goſpel, but we are ſtraight-necked veſſels, we take in truths but by drops; we are long a taking it in, and we have not long to take it in; hence the emptineſs of thoſe that are fulleſt. He that hath much to learn, and but a little to live, cannot learn much. And as our time is little, ſo we loſe a great deal of our time. Our loſſes of the time we have, hinder more then our having but little time. Our dayes are few, but if we could number them, we ſhould apply our ſelves to, and gain to our ſelves a ſufficient ſtock of holy wiſdom. The greateſt reaſon why we profit no more in knowledge, is, becauſe we improve our time no more, though that be a reaſon alſo, becauſe we have no more time.

Ars longa, vita brevis, Hipp.

Non parum temporis habemus, ſed multum perdimus. Sen.

Secondly obſerve, how modeſtly Bildad ſpeaks of himſelf and of his friends, We are but of yeſterday, and we know nothing.

It becometh us to have humble thoughts of our own knowledge, how much ſoever we know.

Theſe were neither children nor fools who had to do with Job, they were the wiſeſt of that age, Oracles of wiſdom, yet we know nothing, ſaith Bildad. The beſt of our knowledge here, is to know our imperfections, it is as much knowledge as we can reach, to know wherein our knowledge cometh ſhort; the Apoſtle (1 *Cor.*8.2.) is direct, He that thinketh he knoweth any thing knoweth nothing as he ought to know: He would not have us think that we know any thing, though he had ſaid in the former verſe, We know that we all have knowledge; the Apoſtle knew it, but he would not have them think it. His meaning is, I grant there is knowledge abroad in the world, I have ſome, and you have ſome. We know that we all have knowledge; which yet ſome underſtand, as if he ſpake in a ſecret Ironie, againſt thoſe who bragg'd ſo much of their knowledge; yea, we know you have knowledge, but let me tell you thus much, you who ſtand ſo much upon your knowledge; he that thinketh he knoweth any thing, he knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know. How can that be? Is not a man to think that he knows what he knows? Muſt a man think himſelf ignorant, or otherwiſe he muſt be accounted ignorant? Surely no. There are very many that know much, and they may think that they know ſomething, yea, that they know many things; but obſerve the word there, He that thinketh: the word doth not ſignifie a ſimple apprehenſion of a thing, or a bare and naked knowledge, for ſo a man may reflect upon his own knowledge, and know that he knows, as well as what he knows; but it imports thinking with a kind of inſolency and pride of ſpirit, with affectation, boaſting and vain-glory in that knowledge. He that thinketh he knows any thing, that is, he that vaunts and ſtands upon his knowledge, who conceits he hath ſo much knowledge, ſuch a head-piece that he can carry all before him by the ſtrength of his wit and parts, ſuch a knowing man knows nothing. That mans wiſdom is but conceit who is wiſe in his own conceit. In this ſence we have the word (Mat. 3.9.) Where the Baptiſt beſpeaks the Phariſees, Think not to ſay within your ſelves, we have Abraham to our father; Think not; it was not a ſin for them to think that Abraham was their father, and that they were deſcended from him; but, think not, that is, do not think of this, and ſo be proud of it. Be not lifted up upon an outward priviledge which will ſtand you in no ſtead at all if you ſtand upon it. Except you be changed and born again of the Spirit, it will not avail you, that you are born of Abraham's fleſh; if Abraham's faith be not in your hearts, it ſhall be no advantage to you that Abraham's blood runs in your veins. The word is ſo uſed again (Phil. 3.4.) If any one thinketh he may be confident, I much more. If any one may have an opinion of himſelf in regard of outward priviledges, ſurely I may, but I will not. So then an opinion, or a conceitedneſs of our knowledge, blaſts all our knowledge; ſuch a man knoweth nothing as he ought to know; he knoweth ſomewhat by rote, but he doth not know any thing (as a Chriſtian ought) by heart. By how much we have the more true knowledge of the higheſt objects, by ſo much we have the lower thoughts of our knowledge. It is beſt to know as much as we can of the beſt things, and to think as little as we can of our ſelves.

Our dayes upon earth are a ſhadow.] But were not the dayes of all the fathers a ſhadow? Yes, the longeſt life is but a long ſhadow; he means comparatively, our lives are ſhorter by much then theirs were, and therefore but a ſhadow.

There are three ſorts of ſhadows. 1. Natural. 2. Civil. 3. Spiritual.

Firſt, A natural ſhadow is a dark light cauſed by the coming of ſome thick body between us and the Sun. This is a ſhadow in a proper and ſtrict acception.

Secondly, Beſides the natural, there is a civil ſhadow, Protection is a ſhadow; and to be under a ſhadow, is to be protected: We tranſlate (*Num.*14.9.) Their defence is departed from them; the Heb. is, Their ſhadow. So, *Iſa.*4.5.& 25.4.

Thirdly, A ſhadow is taken for a dark or imperfect repreſentation of things ſpiritual; ſo all the ceremonies of the old Law are called ſhadows (*Heb.*8.5. & 10.1. & 9.9. Col. 2.17.) Ceremonial worſhip is expreſſed by a ſhadow, becauſe it was but an obſcure repreſentation of the truth; the ceremonies were interpoſed between Chriſt the true light, and us, and ſo caſt a ſhadow of him. Or, as a Painter, who is to draw the lively figure or ſhape of a man, at firſt makes an obſcure draught, or ſome imperfect lines of the body, but afterwards gives it beauty and luſtre to the life. The Moſaical rites were ſuch a ſhadow of heavenly things. Yet further, a ſhadow (which comes neareſt the meaning of this text) notes the leaſt imaginable ſign or ſemblance of a thing. So (*Ja.*1.17.) When the Apoſtle ſaith, that with God the father of lights, there is not ſo much as a ſhadow of turning, he means, there is not the leaſt ſign or token o[illegible]ng with God.

When Bildad ſaith, Our dayes up[illegible]th are but as a ſhadow, we may underſtand it, either of the time paſt, and ſo our life is but as a ſhadow that is gone. Or, it may be meant of the whole life of man taken together. The life of man (take it from the beginning to the ending, from the Alpha to the Omega, from the firſt to the laſt of it) is a ſhadow. The compariſon is frequent in Scripture, I ſhall not need to ſtay upon it. See two or three particulars of the reſemblance.

Firſt, The life of man is a ſhadow, becauſe it hath little in it that is ſubſtantial, a ſhadow is oppoſed to a ſubſtance; our life rather ſeems to be then is, it is ſo quickly gone.

Secondly, A ſhadow (though ſometime put for protection and ſafety, yet) implies unſetledneſs and uncertainty; if a man ſtands or reſts under a ſhadow, the ſhadow will leave him, it will be gone from him, and betray him to the ſcorching Sun-beams; a ſhadow never keeps long in one place, but varies with the motion of the Sun, and when it is high-noon the ſhadow goes quite up, and is not. There is ſuch an uncertainty in the life of man, it holds not one tenour, it ſtayes not in any ſtate, there is a deceitfulneſs in it, changes are upon it. The greateſt certainty of our lives is, that they are uncertain.

Umbra eſt quid inane, & nihil habens ſolidæ ſubſtantiæ, Umbra denotat malefidam ſtationem & protectionẽ fugacem, nã qui ſub umbra dormit, proditur ſtatim, atq; traditur radiis ſolis. Pined.

In general, the life of man being compared to a ſhadow, teaches us, that it is ſhort, moveable and unconſtant, there is no hold or tack in it, Pſal. 102.11. My dayes are like a ſhadow that declineth. The encreaſe of our dayes hath a declenſion in it, 1 Chron. 29.15. We are ſtrangers before thee, and ſojourners, as were all our Fathers; our dayes on the earth are as the ſhadow. How doth he explain that? There is no abiding in our dayes, as there is no abiding in a ſhadow. Many of the Ancients have repreſented the life of man, not only as a ſhadow, but leſs then a ſhadow; A dream of a ſhadow, a ſhadow of a ſhadow, an Idol of a ſhadow; which is the loweſt expreſſion that can be, as much as to ſay, a nothing of nothing. An Idol is nothing in the world. God made no ſuch thing in the world. And though our dayes be made by God in world, yet they are no ſuch thing as God made, or as the world makes them. We have met with points about the ſhortneſs and tranſitorineſs of mans life often in this book, I ſhall therefore only add a word here.

Homo vocatur σκιᾶς ὄναρ. Pin. καπνοῦ σκιά Soph. εἴδωλον σκιᾶς. Æſc;

It is our wiſdom, foraſmuch as our life on Earth is as a ſhadow, that we improve this ſhadow to gain aſſurance of eternal light: Life here is but a fleeting ſhadow, that to come is an abiding ſubſtance. Shall we for the pleaſures and comforts of a life, which is no more enduring then a ſhadow, hazard the pleaſures and comforts of a life, which endures for ever. A man hath not a ſhadow of reaſon, not a ſhadow of true wiſdom and underſtanding, who will ſpend out a ſhadowiſh life in thoſe things which are but a ſhadow, neglecting that which is the true light, and will bring us to eternal light?

Attendat igitur homo in diebus umbræ ſuæ, ut faciat aliquid dignum deſideratæ lucis ſuæ. Aug. in Pſal. 143.

Bildad having put in his parentheſis, as a reaſon why he ſends Job to the Fathers, gives him an encouragement at verſ. 10. to make this enquiry, he tells him what he ſhall get for his pains in conſulting with thoſe former ages, and with the Fathers.

Verſ. 10. Shall not they teach thee, and tell thee, and utter words out of their heart?

As if he had ſaid, Thou ſhalt not loſe thy labour by enquiring into thoſe ancient times, ſhall not they teach thee? Certainly, they ſhall, thou ſhalt not come away empty, undirected, uncounſell'd.

Shall not they teach thee?] How could they teach? They were dead and gone, they were paſt many ages before. Bildad may be conceived to anſwer, Though the Fathers are dead, yet they will ſpeak to thee and counſel thee, as well as if they lived and ſtood before thee with our ſelves. They ſhall teach thee, and they ſhall inſtruct thee. And more then that, they will not only teach thee in a complement, and ſpeak words to thee, but they will ſpeak their very hearts to thee: thou ſhalt find that they will give thee cordial counſel, They will utter words to thee out of their heart.

Utter words out of their heart.] The meaning of that is, either: Firſt, In general, they will give thee the real conceptions of their minds about theſe points, they will ſpeak ſincerely, they will not ſpeak to thee from the teeth outward, but from the heart inward. Secondly, They will ſpeak wiſely and ſeriouſly to thee about theſe things; they will utter, not ſo much words as oracles to thee out of their heart.

Eloquia ex corde proferre, eſt ſapienter loqui, ſapiens cordatus dicitur; ſtultus excors. Cor loquitur, quæ animus præmeditatus eſt os loquitur ſine meditatione.

The heart is the ſeat of knowledge and underſtanding, and a wiſe man is (homo cordatus) a hearty man, a man with a heart; and the fool in Scripture is ſaid to be a heartleſs man, a man without a heart; he cannot utter words from his heart, who wants a heart, he utters them from his mouth, or from his tongue. A fools heart is in his mouth, and a wiſe mans mouth is in his heart; he ſpeaks that which lies in the in-moſt receſſes and cloſets of his ſpirit: he ſpeaks from meditation, he brings what he ſpeaks to his heart, and from his heart utters what he ſpeaks. Chriſt aſſures us, That a good man out of the good treaſures of his heart brings forth good things, and an evil man out of the evil treaſure of his heart brings forth evil things. Every heart is a treaſury. When a good man ſpeaks evil, he ſpeaks not from his heart (though he hath a ſtock of ſinfulneſs in him) but from his lips; and when an evil man ſpeaks good, he ſpeaks it not from his heart, but from his lips: for he hath no ſtock or treaſury of good within. An hypocrite ſpeaks good with a heart and a heart, with a double heart. A fool ſpeaks without a heart, yet of the two, it is better to have no heart then two.

Or we may take the meaning of the words, as a ſecret reproof of Job; If thou wilt look after theſe Fathers, and ſearch them, they will not ſpeak as thou haſt done, raſhly, unadviſedly and indiſcreetly, but they will ſpeak from their hearts, they will utter things of weight and ſerious conſideration. From hence obſerve,

First, That old men are preſumed to have a great ſtock of knowledge.

Go to the Fathers, they will certainly teach thee. Every man ſhould labour to have a proportion of knowledge to his proportion of years, we ſhould not be Children in underſtanding, when we are men in time. The Apoſtle reproves ſuch as are ſo (Heb. 5. 2.) When (ſaith he) for the time you ought to be teachers (look upon the years that are gone over your heads, and you ought to be teachers; you ſhould have much in your hearts for the inſtruction of others, yet ſo it is) you have need that one teach you again, which be the firſt principles of the oracles of God, and you are become ſuch as have need of milk, and not of ſtrong meat.

Secondly, Obſerve, They who are dead and gone, yet ſpeak to us as if they were living.

Bildad ſends Job to the ancient Fathers, go they will teach thee and utter words out of their heart. Whilſt we conſider what they have ſpoken and done, it is as if they now ſpake, Heb. 11. 4. Abel by faith offered a better ſacrifice then Cain, and being dead he yet ſpeaketh. They who are dead ſpeak by their works, and they ſpeak by the words which they ſpake, while they were alive. The records which they have left, give us counſel to this day. When the rich man (it is the ſcope of the Parable) I ſay when the rich man (Luke 16. 7.) deſired that Lazarus might go from the dead to ſpeak to his brethren, Abraham anſwers him, They have Moſes and the Prophets, let them hear them, &c. If they hear not Moſes and the Prophets, neither will they be perſwaded though one roſe from the dead. They have Moſes and the Prophets; but Moſes and the Prophets were dead and gone; how have they Moſes and the Prophets? they have not the men before them, but they had their writings and records: they who read the Prophets writings, hear their ſpeakings. Books are ſilent voices.

If Moſes and the Prophets may be heard when dead and gone, then much more may we hear Chriſt, ſince he died and roſe, and his Apoſtles who are dead. And whereas ſome have an opinion that they do not know the mind of Chriſt, or that they cannot reform the Church, or their Churches, till Chriſt himſelf come from Heaven to do it, or till there be Apoſtles ſent perſonally to do it (they wanting an Apoſtle, cannot order the worſhip and ordinances of God, and therefore conclude againſt a preſent Church-ſtate) I ſay to ſuch, if that be your ground that you muſt have Chriſt and his Apoſtles to ſettle all for you; you have your deſires. Look into the works and word of Chriſt, into the writings and practices of his Apoſtles, both for your rule and patern. If Abraham could ſay, they have Moſes and the Prophets, they may hear them: ſurely, we may ſay much more, we have Chriſt and his Apoſtles, whom we may hear and conſult about all the inſtitutions and orders that concern the frame of his Church. We need not ſtay till Chriſt come down in perſon from Heaven, or till new Apoſtles are ſent and furniſhed with inſtruction for this work, for we have Chriſt and his Apoſtles already, we hear what Chriſt ſpake, we read the rules which he gave concerning the wayes of his worſhip and government of his Church (in all the eſſential and conſtitutive parts of either) to the end of the world. Obſerve, Thirdly, They that teach others ſhould teach their own hearts to ſpeak.

It is beſt ſpeaking to others with the heart. The heart will teach better then the tongue, yea better then the underſtanding, The word which comes from the heart of the teacher, goes ſooneſt to the heart of the hearer. Obſerve, Fourthly, The heart is the true repoſitory or treaſury of holy truths.

You may ſee where the Fathers, the holy men in ancient time laid up truth: they utter words out of their heart, then, truth was lay'd up there. Truth is (as it were) the heart of God, and therefore we muſt put it into our hearts. David hid the Commandments of God in his heart: Mary laid up the words of Chriſt there. To have the word only ſwimming in our brains, is to as little purpoſe, as to have it only in our Note-books. To have truth only in our brains, or in our books, will do us as little good as water in our ſhoes. It is a ſad thing to conſider how many thouſand Sermons are written almoſt word for word in books, and ſcarce a letter of them written in the heart. The promiſe of the new Covenant is, that God will write his law in our hearts: Let not any reſt ſatisfied in having the word written in their books. Obſerve further,

Holy men of old did highly eſteem the word and truths of God.

You may know the eſteem they had of theſe by the place where they laid theſe; the heart is the beſt place, the faireſt room in man. To put a thing into the heart, notes higheſt eſteem and approbation. When we ſay a thing is in our hearts, we cannot ſay more to expreſs our eſteem of it.

When the Apoſtle (Phil. 1.7.) profeſſes to the Philippians, I have you in my heart; his meaning is, you are moſt dear and precious to me. When we ſee a man preparing a ſpecial place, a ſafe place, a convenient place to lay a thing in, we conclude that the thing he would lay up is of value and account with him: when we are preparing and fitting our hearts to put the word and truths of God in, hereby we give a real teſtimony, that we honour the Word of God. For the moſt part the truths of God (as we ſay of things we neglect) are caſt at mens heels rather then laid up in their hearts. We may know the eſteem a Queen of England had of the City of Calice, when ſhe ſaid, It was in her heart, and there they ſhould find it, if they opened her.

So much concerning theſe three verſes, containing an argument from antiquity, and the teſtimony of tha firſt ages, by which Bildad confirms his former poſition, That God is juſt.

VERS. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15.

Can the ruſh grow up without mire? Can the flag grow up without water?

Whilſt it is yet in his greenneſs and not cut down, it withereth before any other herb.

So are the paths of all that forget God, and the hypocrites hope ſhall periſh.

Whoſe hope ſhall be cut off, and whoſe truſt ſhall be a ſpiders web.

He ſhall lean upon his houſe, but it ſhall not ſtand: he ſhall hold it faſt, but it ſhall not endure.

THis context from the eleventh to the twentieth verſe, contains an illuſtration (for ſo are ſimilitudes) of the former argument; and it is taken from a three-fold ſimilitude. Firſt, Of a ruſh, which is explained, verſ. 11, 12. and applied in verſ. 13. The ſecond is, Of a ſpiders web, explained and applied, verſ. 14, 15. The third, Of a luxuriant flouriſhing tree, explained, verſ. 16, 17, 18. applied, verſ. 19. Behold, this is the joy of his way, &c.

The ſum of all may be given in this brief;

That it is as equal and ordinary in the courſe of divine juſtice to deſtroy wicked men; as it is in the courſe of nature, for a ruſh to wither when it wants water; or, for a ſpiders web to break when it is leaned upon; or for a tree to be hewen down, when it either under-grows or over-grows its owners houſe, when caſting its roots under the foundation, it looſens the ſtones, and weakens the ground-work; or, when it ſpreads its boughs and grows ſo high that it drops upon the roof, or darkens the windows of it.

Verſ. 11. Can the ruſh grow without mire?

It cannot. The original word for a ruſh ſpeaks its nature; the root ſignifying to ſuck and drink in, or alwayes to be guzling down. The ruſh lives in liquor, and is alwayes drinking. Theſe abounded near the banks of Nilus in Ægypt. There Moſes was put into an Ark or skiff made of bulruſhes, Exod. 2. 3. The Prophet (Iſa. 18. 1, 2.) tells us of a land, ſending Ambaſſadors by the Sea, even in veſſels of bulruſhes upon the waters.

Can the ruſh grow?] In ſtrength, luſtre, and beauty. The word implies growing with a kind of pride, ſo plants do in a rich or proper ſoil, they lift up their heads, and carry it highly.

גאה Elatus eminuit, eſt mediæ ſignificationis, ſumitur pro vitioſa elatione, quæ eſt ſuperbia, etiam pro magnificentia & decore. Riv. in Hoſ. 5. 5.

Can the ruſh grow [Without mire?] Which is as much as to ſay, can a man live without food? Mire is the ruſhes meat and drink. It loves and delights in a mooriſh ſoil, and by the rivers ſide. A ruſh upon the dry land, is like a fiſh upon the dry land. At moſt the ruſh among vegetables and plants, is like thoſe fowls and beaſts among ſenſitives, which live part upon the water, and part upon the land.

Limoſus juncus, paluſtres junci amphibia.

Can the flag grow without water?] The word ſignifies any fertile place for graſs, a medow, Gen. 41. 2. Pharaoh ſaw in his dream ſeven welfavoured kine, and fat-fleſhed, and they fed in a medow. Some render it ſo here, Can the medow grow without water? Both flags and medows are ſuch drinkers, that they quickly wither, if they want water: which Bildad gives us plainly in the next verſe.

אחו Locus graminis ubi aſcuntur pecora, forſan ab אח frater quod ex una ſtirpe veluti multi fratres gignantur, quaſi herbarum quædam fraternitas.

Verſ. 12. Whilſt it is in his greeneſs, and not cut down. it withereth before any other herb.

Whilſt it is yet in his greenneſs.] Or, ſhooting up in ſtem. Some derive the Hebrew word from Ab, Father; and ſo it may be rendered from the letter of. the Hebrew, though the expreſſion be ſomewhat uncouth. While it is yet in its paternity, or fatherhood, that is, while it is flouriſhing and procreative. Others derive it from Abib, which ſignifies an ear of Corn, or the ear with the ſtalk. Hence the month Abib among the Jews had its name, becauſe in thoſe climates, corn was then eared and began to be ripe; it was the firſt moneth to the Iſraelites, becauſe of their coming out of Ægypt, and anſwered to part of our March, and part of April, Exod. 13. 4. Chap. 23. 15. This day came ye out in the moneth Abib, this moneth ſhall be to you the beginning of moneths. So then this greenneſs of the ruſh implies the ſtrength and beſt of it, the goodlineſs and beauty of it.

באבו Abib eſt ſpica matureſcens, vel ſpica cum calamo, inde Ibbo virgultum aut lignum virens in eo, ſc. tempore quo eſt parens novarum frugum & frondium. Vel ab אב pater, q.d. in paternitate ſua.

And not cut down.] That is before it is cropt and pulled up by the hand, or is fully ripe.

It withereth before any other herb.] That is, ſooner or more ſpeedily then any other herb of leſſer ſhew, but better rooting. There are two cauſes why trees wither, both which are here removed from the ruſh, and yet it withers.

Firſt, Age, but the ruſh withers, while it is young in its greenneſs.

Secondly, Violence, when it is pulled up or cut down by force of hand: but the ruſh withers, while it is not cut down. Both argue enough, the little ſubſiſtency which the ruſh hath in it ſelf; to ſeek any further account about it, were but to ſeek a knot in a ruſh.

Verſ. 13. So are the paths of all that forget God, &c.

Bildad having explained his ſimilitude, now applies it. The compariſon may be made out three wayes.

Firſt, That hypocrites are kept in life and luſtre, by outward, earthly ſupplies only, as the ruſh is by mire and water; and therefore when theſe fail, they fail alſo.

Secondly, As the ruſh dies, becauſe it hath no water; ſo an hypocrite declines and waſtes, becauſe he is not watered by the bleſſings of God, and hath no rooting in grace. The ſeed caſt on the ſtony ground (Matth. 13. 6.) withered, becauſe it had no earth. The lack of earth to the one, is the ſame with the lack of water to the other.

Thirdly, In the general, that as a ruſh flouriſhes a while, but quickly withers; ſo the beſt eſtate of an hypocrite, his greenneſs, is of no long continuance; his ſeeming graces, like his joyes, are but for a moment. Hence obſerve, Natural things are ſhadows to us of ſpiritual.

We may learn many leſſons from ſpeechleſs creatures. While we turn the leaves, and peruſe the contents of this great volumn, the book of Nature, we may find much of the God of nature. David took inſtructions from it dayly, (Pſal. 8.) When I conſider thy Heavens, the work of thy fingers, the moon and the Stars which thou haſt ordained, what is man that thou art mindful of him? I ſay likewiſe, when we behold the graſs and flowers of the field, the flag, the ruſh in the water: we may not only put the Queſtion, What is man? But we may reſolve the Queſtion, what the man is: when we look upon the meaneſt creatures, we may ſee pieces of our ſelves, they are as we are in many conſiderations, and we as they; what is man? Man is as graſs. What is a wicked man an hypocrite? He is a ruſh, he is like the chaff which the wind drives away. What is a godly man? He is like a tree planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in his ſeaſon. The Spirit of God from things ſenſible and viſible, raiſeth us up to things ſpiritual and inviſible.

The Ancients were very frequent in this kind of ſtudy, peruſing the book of Nature, and taking helps to better the underſtanding by every object of the eye. It is well obſerved by one of them,* That God ſent us the book of Nature, before before he ſent the book of Scripture. The mind of God was written upon the things which he had made, before he made Tables or Books to write his mind in. The Fathers had many revelations from the beginning, but they had not Scripture from the beginning. Some conceive that Iſaac going out into the fields to meditate, meditated upon the Text of the creature, and uſed to raiſe his heart by thoſe ſteps of earth to heavenly contemplations. It is ſaid of Solomon, (1 King. 4. 32, 33.) That he ſpake three thouſand Proverbs, and his ſongs were a thouſand and five, and that he ſpake of trees, from the Cedar tree that is in Lebanon, even unto the Hyſop that ſpringeth out of the wall; which * Joſephus expounds thus, Solomon applied his three thouſand parables or ſimilitudes unto thoſe trees or plants about which he diſcourſed, drawing ſome divine moral from every plant, whoſe nature as a Philoſopher he had deſcribed.

Familiare eſt Syris & maxime Palæſtinis ad omnem ſermonem ſuum parabolas jungere, ut quod per ſimplex præceptum teneri non poteſt, per ſimilitudines teneatur. Hier. in c.19. Mat.

* Cuilibet ſpeciei plantarum ſuam adhibuit parabolam. Joſeph. in loc.

More diſtinctly for the ſpiritualizing of this ſimilitude, conſider wherein a wicked man or an hypocrite is like unto a ruſh; the ruſh may be of good value to us, being thus improved.

Firſt, The ruſh is very ſpungy, hoven, hollow ſubſtance, it is not ſolid or cloſe-grain'd: An hypocrite hath no ſolidity, we call him a hollow-hearted man.

Secondly, Hypocrites are well compared to a ruſh or a flag, becauſe in windy weather they ſit which way ſoever the wind ſits. They take no harm by a ſtorm, becauſe they yield to every turn: let the wind blow which way it will, the ruſh breaks neither body nor branch. Let things turn which way they will, hypocrites can ſhift, and bend, and yield with them. And therefore when ſtorms ariſe, which pull down and deſtroy many goodly trees of Gods own planting, theſe ruſhes continue. Hypocrites keep their ſtanding, becauſe they never ſtand. A great man being asked how he kept his honour and preferment in ſo many changes of wind and weather, of times and Princes, anſwered, By being a willow and not an oak. He that can ſway, ſeldom breaks. Hypocrites in the Church and State, live by the ſame principles.

Thirdly, A bulruſh or a flag in time of a ſtorm hangs down the head, but when the ſtorm is over, it holds up the head, and ſtands upright again. This reſemblance between the hypocrite and a bulruſh is given by the Prophet, (Iſa. 58. 5.) Is this the faſt that I have choſen, a day for a man to afflict his ſoul? Is it to bow down his head as a bulruſh? &c. The bulruſh in a ſtorm ſeems to be humbled to the very ground, but in fair weather it is as high as ever. Hypocrites in times of publick humiliation, hang down their heads, and ſeem to lay their mouths in the duſt, but when the day is paſt, they quickly forget their ſorrows, If I (ſaith the Apoſtle, *Gal.*1.18.) build again the things which I have deſtroyed, I make my ſelf a tranſgreſſor. Hypocrites are the worſt ſort of tranſgreſſors, for they ſeem to deſtroy their ſins one day, but they indeed build them again the next.

Fourthly, The ruſh and the flag grow only in miry places, where they may have abundance of water and moiſture, which notes a kind of ſenſuality in them, and therefore they have their names from drinking. So hypocrites ſeem to be heavenly, but are indeed earthly: they are like the ruſh, they cannot live without ſtore of water, they are ſenſual, they muſt pleaſe their appetites, and delight their palates. The Apoſtle deſcribes them ſo, They ſerve not the Lord Jeſus, but their own bellies; they muſt be ſupported with the affluence of outward things, elſe they cannot hold out in profeſſion. Whereas the godly and true believers can live, when the water is drain'd or dry'd away, when outward things fail and are gone. So the Prophet Habakuk profeſſes, Chap. 3. ult. Although the fig-tree ſhall not bloſſom, neither ſhall fruit be in the vines, though the fields ſhall yield no meat, and there be no herds in the ſtall; yet I will rejoyce in the Lord, and will joy in the God of my ſalvation. A godly man will grow, when all the world decaies to him; he will rejoyce in God, when all outward comforts fail him; hypocrites muſt have ſenſual ſupplies, or they are loſt. A feigned love of ſpiritual things is ever joyned with a true love of worldly things. Chriſt ſpeaks of ſome who followed him more for the loaves then for the word. And Judas followed his Maſters bag, more then his Maſter.

Fifthly, Bulruſhes or flags yield no fruit at all, they only make a fair ſhew; hypocrites how green ſoever they are, what ſhew or profeſſion ſoever they make, yield no fruit of holineſs.

Sixthly, A bulruſh or a flag withers ſooner then any other herb, that is, then other herbs that are not ſeated ſo near the water. And this agrees well with the hypocrite, for when the hypocrite begins once to wither, he withers quickly. He never had any true life, and he will not long appear to have any. When one that hath made a fair profeſſion begins to decay, he decaies ſooner then a meer civil man; a civil man will hold out in honeſty and juſtice a great while, but a hypocrite gives over holineſs and godlineſs preſently. Beſides, God blaſts and withers an hypocrite ſooner then any other man, becauſe he hath abuſed and wronged God more then any other man. When judgments come, they fall firſt upon hypocrites, The hypocrites in Zion tremble, Iſa. 33. Trembling will take hold upon the prophane and openly wicked, but trembling takes hold ſooneſt upon hypocrites; they have moſt cauſe to tremble, who were confident without a cauſe. Falſe hope is the parent of real fear; and they who believe without repenting, ſhall repent without believing.

Verſ. 13. So are the paths of all that forget God, and the hypocrites hope ſhall periſh.

So are the paths.] So, that is, thus it comes to paſs, this is the way, and the end of all thoſe who forget God.

Sic ſane illis accidit & uſu venit, talis eſt eorũ conditio. Druſ.

The path of a man is taken two wayes.

Firſt, For his ſtate and condition, *Pſal.*1. The way of the wicked ſhall periſh; that is, the whole ſtate of a wicked man ſhall periſh.

Secondly, For his courſe and converſation, Job 33. 11. He putteth my feet in the ſtocks, he marketh all my paths, that is, takes notice of the whole courſe of my life; all my converſation, all my tradings and dealings are before God. This path of mans courſe and converſation is two-fold. There is an internal, and there is an external path. The internal is that of the mind; the mind hath its courſe, the heart hath a way, *Iſa.*57. 17. He went on frowardly in the way of his heart. The external path is that of outward actions; That which we uſually do, is our path. Thus the actions and works of God are called the paths of God, Job 40.19. Behemoth is the chief of the wayes of God, Prov.8.22. The Lord poſſeſſed me in the beginning of his way, before his works of old; Pſal.77.13. Thy way, O God, is in the ſanctuary; that is, thy actings and doings are ſeen there.

Our actions are compared to a path in two reſpects. 1. Becauſe we are frequent in them, that which is a mans courſe he treads every day. 2. They are called our paths, becauſe they lead us to ſome end; every path leads us to ſome place or other. Some actions lead to life, and ſome to death, ſome lead to Heaven, ſome to Hell, ſome to Chriſt, and ſome to Satan; to one of theſe ends, we are travelling and journeying all the dayes of our lives.

Of thoſe that forget God.] To forget God imports theſe four things.

Firſt, Not to think of God, we forget that which we mind not. The firſt act of remembring is thinking. The thief on the croſs prayed, Lord, remember me when thou comeſt into thy Kingdom; that is, think of me for good. God is not in all the thoughts of a wicked man to obey or honour him, and a wicked man is not in all the thoughts of God (in this ſence) to bleſs or pardon him.

Secondly, To forget God, is to diſobey God, or not to do the will of God, *Deut.*8.11. Beware that thou forget not the Lord thy God in not keeping his Commandments. As to remember God, is to do the will of God, *Eccl.*12.1. Remember thy Creator in the dayes of thy youth: that is, do the will of thy Creator in the dayes of thy youth: ſo to forget God, is to diſobey God, not to do his will. God is ſaid to forget us when he doth not our will, that is, when we in prayer propoſe our deſires to God to do them for us, the not doing of thoſe things for us, is to forget us. David expoſtulates, Pſal. 77.9 Hath the Lord forgotten to be gracious? He had prayed much at the beginning of the Pſalm with ſucceſs, I cried unto God with my mouth, even unto God with my voice, and he gave ear unto me. He puts up other requeſts, which finding no preſent anſwer, or ſenſible acceptance, he cries out, Hath the Lord forgotten to be gracious? Now, as when the Lord doth not our will, he is ſaid in Scripture to forget us, ſo when we do not the will of God, we indeed forget him.

Thirdly,

Oblivio aſfert contemptum.

Thirdly, To forget, is lightly to eſteem, to ſlight the Lord. That which a man highly eſteems, he keeps in his memory, and treaſures it up there; and when a man forgets a thing, eſpecially when he wilfully forgets it, he diſreſpects it, he ſlights and contemns it, Jer. 30. 14. All thy Lovers have forgotten thee, that is, thy Lovers care not for thee, they ſlight and eſteem lightly of thee. When a man comes not at one whom he loves, he is ſaid to forget him, Jer. 2. 32. Can a maid forget her ornaments, or a Bride her attire? A Maid hath a great eſteem of her ornaments, eſpecially of her wedding-ornaments; aud therefore ſhe is often thinking of them: it may be ſhe can hardly ſleep the night before, for thinking of the rich garments, yea the Bracelets and Bables ſhe is to wear upon the wedding day? Can the Bride forget her attire? Will ſhe throw theſe by the walls (as we ſpeak) or caſt them at her heels? Yet, ſaith the Lord, My people have forgotten me dayes without number. They have lightly eſteemed me, I am not ſo much to them as new cloathes, who am indeed their life, I am not ſo much remembred as unneceſſary curioſities, from whom they receive all things neceſſary, and whoſe favour is the one thing neceſſary.

Fourthly, To forget God, is to depart from God. We ſtay with God no longer then we remember him; as we cannot have communion with truth, ſo not with the God of truth, without an act of memory (Heb. 12. 5.) Ye have forgotten the exhortation which ſpeaketh unto you as unto children, My ſon, deſpiſe not thou the chaſtening of the Lord, &c. A word forgotten is to us of no more uſe then a word never ſpoken. We are without all the good we forget; and to forget God, is (Epheſ. 2. 12.) to be without God in the world; or to live on earth as if there were no God in heaven, either in regard of mercy to be received, or of duty to be performed. Hypocrites forget God all theſe wayes; though their natural memory may be good, yet ſpiritual memory (and that only holds ſpiritual things) they have none.

Hence obſerve, That, The Hypocrite is a forgetter of God.

Every wicked man is forgetful of God. Hence we find theſe put together, Pſal. 9. 17. The wicked ſhall be turned into hell, and all the Nations that forget God. But this is the ſpecial character of an hypocrite, he is a forgetter of God. Conſider this (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) ye that forget God, that is, ye hypocrites conſider this (Pſal. 50. 22.) for he ſpeaks of ſuch as had taken the Covenant of God in their mouths; What haſt thou to do (verſ. 16.) to take my Covenant in thy mouth? As if he had ſaid, Thou profeſſeſt to be in Covenant with me, to have an intereſt in me; Yet when thou ſaweſt a thief, then thou conſentedſt with him, and haſt been partaker with adulterers, thou giveſt thy mouth to evil, &c. Hypocrites take the Covenant of God in their mouths, but caſt it out of their lives; God is near in their mouths, but far from their reins (Jer. 12. 2.) If the hypocrite did not forget that God is about his bed, and about his path, and eſpieth out all his wayes, he could not be ſo falſe with God, ſo polluted in his wayes, ſo rotten in his inward parts. If an hypocrite did not forget that God being a Spirit, delighteth to be worſhipped in ſpirit, he would never be ſatisfied in worſhipping him with his body. If he did not forget that God is jealous, that he will not hold them guiltleſs who take his name in vain, he durſt not (which is his every dayes work) take the name of God in vain.

Secondly obſerve, That, Forgetfulneſs of God (howſoever it ſeems no great matter, yet) is exceeding ſinful, a wickedneſs of the higheſt ſtature.

Forgetfulneſs of God is therefore a great wickedneſs, becauſe God hath done ſo many things to be remembred by. What could the Lord have done more to make himſelf remembred then he hath done? Have I been a wilderneſs to Iſrael, or a land of darkneſs? (ſaith the Lord, Jer. 2. 31.) The words are an aggravation of their forgetfulneſs. As if the Lord had ſaid, I have been a light to you whereſoever you go, and whereſoever I go, my ſteps drop fatnes for you, and am I forgotten? Where can we ſet a ſtep, but we tread upon a remembrance of God? Every creature holds forth God unto us. He hath left his remembrance upon every Ordinance: Do this in remembrance of me, ſaith Chriſt in that great Ordinance of the Supper; yea, all the works of his providence are remembrancers of him. He leaves an impreſſion of his wiſdom, holineſs, juſtice, power upon all he doth. Now for us to forget God, who hath (as it were) ſtudied ſo many wayes to faſten himſelf in our remembrance, muſt needs be extreamly ſinful. Further, It is very ſinful to forget God, becauſe God doth ſo abundantly remember us. He hath not only done that which may cauſe man to remember him, but he hath man alwayes in his remembrance, eſpecially his own people. He hath graven them upon the palms of his hands, and they are continually before him. They who deſire to preſerve their friends freſh in memory, get their pictures in their houſes, or engrave them upon Rings and Jewels which they wear alwayes about them: But he that cuts the image of his friend in his fleſh, or draws it upon his skin, how zealous is he of his friends remembrance? Pictures and Annulets may be loſt, but our hands cannot fall off. When the Lord would ſhew how mindful he is of his Church, he aſſures her that he carries her picture alwaies about him, not drawn upon a Tablet, or engraven upon the ſignet of his right hand, but upon the palms of his hands: as if he ſhould ſay, I muſt loſe my ſelf before I can loſe the ſight or memory of thee (Iſa. 49. 16.) He remembers her ſo, that he cannot forget her. And becauſe the characters and ſtamps of nature are more abiding and indelible then thoſe of art, therefore he ſaith (ver. 15. Can a woman forget her ſucking child, that ſhe ſhould not have compaſſion on the ſon of her womb? Yea, they may forget, yet will not I forget thee. A woman may break the bonds of nature, but God will never break the bonds of his own free grace. May not all this raiſe us into David's rapture of holy admiration, Pſ. 8. Lord, what is man that thou art mindful of him, and the ſon of man, that thou viſiteſt him with ſuch remembrances? What is a wicked man, that God ſhould give him bread to eat, and cloaths to put on? And what is a godly man, that God ſhould give him Chriſt to eat, and cloath himſelf withal? That God ſhould remember us, is a wonder of mercy, but what a wonder of unthankfulneſs is it, that we ſhould not remember God? What, or who is God, that man ſhould be ſo mindles of him? Is not God worthy of all our remembrance? Is it loſs of time to call God into our thoughts? Do we ever, or in any thing remember our ſelves ſo much, as when we remember God moſt? It is a wonderful favour that God ſhould be mindful of us at all; and is it not a wonderful ſin that man ſhould be ſo unmindful of God?

Thirdly obſerve, That, Forgetfulneſs of God is a mother ſin, or the cauſe of all other ſins.

It is the cauſe of this ſin of hypocriſie, Bildad puts it as a fruit of forgetting God. Forgetfulneſs of God is threefold.

Firſt, A forgetfulneſs that there is a God.

Secondly, A forgetfulneſs who, or what manner of God he is; Thou thoughteſt that I was ſuch an one as thy ſelf (Pſal. 50.) Thou forgetteſt what manner of God I am; thou preſumeſt that will ſerve my turn which ſerves thine, or that every thing will pleaſe me which pleaſes thee; thou ſaiſt, becauſe it is no great trouble to thee to ſteal and lie, &c. therefore it is no great trouble unto me neither.

Thirdly, To forget God, is to forget what God requires; this forgetfulneſs of theſe three ſorts is productive of any, of every ſin.

Laſtly obſerve, They that forget God, ſhall quickly wither, how great and flouriſhing ſoever they are.

The reaſon is, becauſe the forgetting of God is a departing from God; and he that departs from God, departs from the fountain of life. If the ruſh go out of the water, it quickly withers, and if men will depart from God, they ſhall quickly decay; neither grace nor comforts can hold out ſeparated from Chriſt. Why is the godly man compared to a tree planted by the river ſide, which brings forth fruit in his ſeaſon, whoſe leaf ſhall not wither, and whatſoever he doth ſhall proſper? Why is the man that truſts in the Lord compared to a tree planted by the waters, that ſpreads out her roots by the river, and ſhall not ſee when heat cometh? Jer. 17. 7, 8. Is it not becauſe the Saints alwayes keep cloſe to God, by Jeſus Chriſt, who is as an ever-living fountain of water to them, refreſhing and moiſtning them ſo with continual ſupplies of the Spirit, that they ſhall not ſee when heat cometh? that is, they ſhall not be afflicted with thoſe evil effects of heat, drought and barrenneſs. They who keep covenant with God, may poſſibly feel ſome decayes, but die they ſhall not, they ſhall revive and ſprout up again; they ſhall again put forth their leaves as a plant, and their fruit as the garden of Eden; they ſhall bring forth fruit in old age, they ſhall be fat and flouriſhing.

And the hypocrites hope ſhall periſh.

The word which we tranſlate Hypocrite, comes from a root that ſignifies cloſe and covered, and by a Metaphor, polluted, defiled, contaminated, becauſe an hypocrite, though he be outwardly covered, and beautifully painted over, yet his paint is a ſpot upon him. All painting is but a ſpot in compariſon of natural beauty. An hypocrite is not ſo much painted as polluted. Hence he is called a vile perſon (Iſa. 32. 6.) The vile perſon will ſpeak villany, and his heart will work iniquity to practiſe hypocriſie, and to utter errour againſt the Lord. We have the character of hypocrites, Iſa. 58. 3. They dayly call upon my name, as a people that would know the Lord: As a people; An hypocrite doth but play a part in religion, he doth but perſonate another; like an Actor upon a Stage, who puts forth the ſeveral poſtures and geſtures of a King, when as himſelf is ſome mean fellow. An hypocrite is deſcribed acting a double part; the one is ſimulation, he labours to appear what he is not; he would ſeem to have ſome good which he hath not. And the other is diſſimulation; he labours, not to appear what he is, he would hide and cover the evil that he hath. An hypocrite is one who ſeems to be what he is not, and would not ſeem what he is. He is a Jew outwardly, and his Religion Circumciſion outward in the fleſh, Rom. 1. 18. He ſeems to be religious (Jam. 1. 26.) He is a whited Sepulcher (Mat. 23. 27.). Stately on the outſide, within nothing but rottenneſs and dead bones. The hypocrite hath a divided heart, Hoſ. 10. 3. and a double mind, Jam. 1. 8. He is not half enough for God, and too much for himſelf.

Externa facie internā ſanctitatem mentitur.

Hypocrites are of two ſorts, ſome in a large, others in a ſtrict ſence. Moſt wicked men are hypocrites in a large ſence, though ſome are above hypocriſie, they are arrived at impudence. The Prophet ſpeaks of ſuch (Iſa. 3. 9.) The ſhew of their countenance doth witneſs againſt them, and they declare their ſin as Sodom, they hide it not. They declare it not as the mourners in Zion declare their ſin, who are aſhamed of it; but they declare it as Sodom her ſin, that they may delight in it. But though there are ſome ſuch as theſe, yet the greateſt number of wicked men fall under the notion of hypocriſie in a large ſence, becauſe they keep their ſins cloſe and hide them. Hence the works of ſin are called works of darkneſs. Wicked men uſually hide their wickedneſs, and ſhew that which hath but a ſhew, their goodneſs: But in a ſtrict ſence, he is an hypocrite that ſeems to be very religious, who hath nothing but God, and Chriſt, and Heaven in his mouth, but in his heart and ſecret practices nothing but Earth and Hell. The Hypocrite is like the Onyx-ſtone, of which Naturaliſts write, that it is clear and bright in the Superficies, but the center is dark and earthy. This generation is pure, not only in their own eyes (Prov. 30. 12.) but in the eyes of many men, poſſibly in the eyes of all men, yet they are not cleanſed from their wickedneſs.

The hypocrites hope ſhall periſh.] That is, the time ſhall come when he ſhall give over the hope which he hath hoped, or the thing ſhall fail him wherein he hoped. Firſt, The object of his hope ſhall fail him, that is, thoſe benefits, bleſſings, accommodations and comforts which he looked for in the profeſſion of Religion, theſe ſhall fail him and prove falſe hopes. Hypocrites (Mat. 7.) plead with Chriſt for heaven, Lord, we have propheſied in thy name, and in thy name caſt out Devils, &c. But their hopes periſhed; Depart from me (ſaith Chriſt) I know you not. His hope periſheth when he cannot have the things he hoped for. Secondly, The act of his hope ſhall fail, his hope ſhall be ſo long deferred, that his hope ſhall die; he never had any true ground of hope, and at the laſt he ſhall not have a ſhew of hope. His hope ſhall periſh. Obſerve from the name given hypocrites,

First, That, Hypocrites are filthy and polluted perſons.

None are ſo ugly in the eye of God as they who paint for ſpiritual beauty. Pretended holineſs is more unlovely then profeſſed unholineſs to them that can diſcern it. As it is ſaid of Nabal (1 Sam. 20.) Nabal is his name, and folly is with him: So we may ſay of an hopocrite, filthineſs is his name, and filth is in him. Nabal had his name from folly, and hypocrites have theirs from filthineſs.

Secondly obſerve, Hypocrites may be full of hope for a time.

They have ſomewhat (though it be unſound) upon which they build, they think what they do and are, will ſerve the turn, and go for currant with God. This raiſes up their ſpirits. Some hypocrites will be full of hope, even while they are deſcending to the pit of deſpair. Some hypocrites are not convinced of their hypocriſie to the very laſt; ſuch die in peace while they are going down to eternal war; they go (as we uſe to ſay) like lambs, when their ſouls are among lions, and they are tumbling into the place of dragons.

Thirdly obſerve, The hoppe of hypocrites will deceive and fail them.

God rejects their confidences, they ſhall not proſper in them, Jer. 2. 37.

Laſtly obſerve, That, To loſe our hope, is the utmoſt of evils.

Bildad doth not ſay that the hypocrite is damned, and ſhall go to hell, and endure the wrath of God for ever: This one expreſſion, Their hope ſhall periſh, amounts to all this and more, if more can be. Do but ſit down and imagine in your thoughts, and contrive the utmoſt of all evils felt by men, yea, the utmoſt (were it poſſible) of all the evils of puniſhment that are in the thoughts of God, and all are wrapped up and comprehended in this one word, Their hope ſhall periſh. Hell, and wrath, and fire, and brimſtone, and the worm that never dies, meet in this one word.

Bildad goes on to illuſtrate this by a further inſtance.

Verſe 14. Whoſe hope ſhall be cut off, and whoſe truſt ſhall be as a ſpiders web.

Verſe 15. He ſhall lean upon his houſe, but it ſhall not ſtand: he ſhall hold it faſt, but it ſhall not endure.

The hypocrite clings about the object of his hope, as a man that is ready to drown, takes hold on any thing, upon a ſtraw or a rotten ſtick; but though he lean upon his houſe, it ſhall not ſtand, &c.

Theſe words contain the ſecond ſimilitude, which is both a confirmation and a further illuſtration of the former; for having concluded in ver. 13. with theſe words, The hypocrites hope ſhall periſh; he (as it were) doubleth and reſumeth it here again, Whoſe hope ſhall be cut off, and whoſe truſt ſhall be a ſpiders web.

The Original beareth different interpretations, and from that, ſeveral ſences have been given of theſe words.

כסל

The word here uſed for [hope] is not the ſame in the Hebrew, which we had in the laſt clauſe of the former verſe, His hope ſhall periſh. This word was opened at large in the fourth Chapter at the ſixth verſe, where we tranſlate it confidence; Is not this thy hope, thy confidence, the uprightneſs of thy wayes? Now, beſides that the word ſignifies hope or confidence, it ſignifies alſo folly, inconſtancy, frowardneſs of ſpirit, vanity and levity of mind. And thus ſome render it here.

This hope ſhall be cut off.] That word alſo beareth different interpretations.

קוט Debilitatus, languefactus fuit, per Metaphorā, mæſtitia, dolore, tædio affectus fuit, propriè tanquam

First, To be weakned, to languiſh; and becauſe thoſe things which languiſh and are weak, either are cut off, or are ready to be cut off, therefore it ſignifies likewiſe cutting off.

Secondly, Further the word imports gradually, 1. Diſpleaſing. 2. Loathing and abominating. 3. Chiding or contending.

βδέλυγμα, i. e. rem putidam, & quæ nauſeam parit, averſari, & eam abhorrere. Non enim placebit ei vecordia ejus. Vulg.

The words yielding theſe ſences, receive different tranſlations and interpretations. Firſt, Firſt thus,taking the former for inconſtancy or folly, his folly ſhall diſpleaſe him, or, his folly ſhall not pleaſe him. So the Vulgar. Hypocrites never pleaſe God, and at laſt they ſhall not pleaſe themſelves. The wayes and works of hypocrites are ever diſpleaſing to God, and they ſhall at laſt be diſpleaſing to themſelves. That's the ſence of their tranſlation.

And not only ſhall the wayes of an hypocrite be diſpleaſing, but a loathing, an abhorring to him; the Lord loaths him now: The prayer of the wicked is an abomination; and he ſhall loath himſelf hereafter. There is a double loathing. There is a loathing of repentance, and there is a loathing of deſpair. The former (though it be unpleaſant, yet) it is a happy loathing of our ſelves. Such loathing of our ſelves is pleaſing to God in the act, and will be pleaſant to us in the fruit (Ezek. 6.9.) They ſhall loath themſelves for the evils they have committed. And again, Ezek. 16.47. & 20.43. The word is taken for this loathing of repentance. But the hypocrite ſhall have another kind of loathing. What? a loathing of deſpair, ſeeing himſelf utterly loſt, and his hopes quite cut off, he ſhall be an abhorring to himſelf.

Hæc diſplicentia cum faſtidio quodam & tabeſcentia conjuncta eſt.

There is yet a third ſtep or degree of ſence in this word. He ſhall not only be diſpleaſed with himſelf, and loath himſelf, but he ſhall fall out with himſelf; his hope ſhall diſpleaſe or vex him into ſelf-anger. Some render the word by contending or chiding; as a man that is diſpleaſed with another, falleth out with him, wrangleth and contendeth with him; ſo an hypocrite, at laſt ſhall chide, contend and wrangle with himſelf, he ſhall contend as much with himſelf at laſt, as ever the Word of God contended with him before. An hypocrite never cometh to a Sermon, but God chides him, the word of God contends with him, and the Spirit of God hath a controverſie with him; this man will not be warned by the chiding of God, nor take that to heart, he ſtill goes on in his hypocriſie. But when no reproofs nor chidings can prevail upon his heart, he is left to the reproofs and chidings of his own heart; which will read him ſuch a Lecture,and give him ſuch a ſchooling as he never had in all his life. Conſcience may be long ſilent, and it may long flatter, but when once it begins to ſpeak, and to ſpeak right, it is the moſt terrible Preacher in the world. There is no Boanerges or ſon of thunder hath ſo dreadful a voyce. Mount Sinai it ſelf did not thunder ſo loud as Conſcience will. And as conſcience ſpeaks loud, ſo it ſpeaks long. An hypocrite ſhall reprove and chide himſelf for ever, what a fool was I? what a beaſt was I thus to flatter my ſelf, thus to mask mine own filthineſs, and to dawb over the rottenneſs of my heart with the fair covering of a verbal profeſſion? Why did I wilfully deceive my ſelf into irrecoverable perdition?

Secum ipſe litigabit, rixabitur, quæ omnia ad mentis commotionẽ & animi cruciatum pertinent. Pined.

Again, obſerve from, Whoſe folly ſhall diſpleaſe him.

That, The whole courſe of hypocriſie is nothing but fooliſhneſs.

Of all fools the hypocrite is the greateſt; and the reaſon is, becauſe he takes a great deal of pains in profeſſion, and hath no good at all by profeſſion; he ventureth himſelf many times in the world to perſecution; he runs the hazard of his credit, of his eſtate, of liberty and life. What a fool is this to take ſo much pains, and ſubject himſelf to ſo many dangers in the outward profeſſion of Chriſt, & yet at laſt to loſe the fruit and benefit of all? This folly muſt needs diſpleaſe him: he ſhall at laſt ſee what an extream fool he hath been to trouble himſelf about that which bringeth him no real good, but will really double and encreaſe all evil upon him. No man ſins at ſo dear a rate as the hypocrite.

A ſecond tranſlation takes the Noun (as we) for hope,and not for folly, and retains the former ſence of the Verb; and ſo the words are thus, Whoſe hope ſhall loath him, that is, the thing which he hoped for ſhall loath him; how loath him? It ſhall loath him, not formally, but equivalently; becauſe it ſhall do that which man doth when he loaths any thing: when we loath a thing, we flee or turn away from it; ſo, His hope ſhall loath him, that is,the thing which he hoped for, ſhall flee far away and quite depart, it will not come near him. Good ſhall remove from the hypocrite when he expects and makes after it. An hypocrite at once loaths true grace,and hopes for true comfort; but comfort here, and glory hereafter ſhall loath him,heaven ſhall ſhut againſt him.

Quem faſtidit ſpes ſua. Jun.
Eum quaſi faſtidius fugit id ipſum quod ſperat. Jun.

Or take it for the act of hope (as others) he ſhall loath his hope, that is, the very hope which he hath had ſhall be grievous and vexatious unto him;nothing ſhall grieve him more then this, that he hath hoped ſo much. His hope ſhall grieve and afflict him as bad as all his afflictions. Raiſed expectations diſappointed, prove our greateſt ſorrows. That man ſinks loweſt in grief, whoſe heart was higheſt in hope. How extreamly ſhall the hypocrite be grieved who falls as low as hell, when his hopes were raiſed up as high as heaven? The hypocrite both in his way and in his end is like the King of Babylon, He ſaith in his heart, I will aſcend into heaven, I will exalt my throne above the ſtars of God, I will aſcend above the heights of the clouds, I will be like the moſt high, yet he ſhall be brought down to hell, to the ſides of the pit, Iſa. 14.13,14.

Spes ei moleſta erit, quod illa excidat, ne id conſequatur quod expectarat. Merc.

Take the words as we tranſlate, ſo they yield a clear ſence, and very agreeable to the original, Whoſe hope ſhall be cut off. The word is rendred cut off, by a Metaphor, becauſe when a man is exceedingly diſpleaſed and vexed (as the word properly ſignifies) he many times tears his garments, and even cuts his own fleſh, like the idolatrous Prieſts of Baal, who were ſo angry becauſe they could not get an anſwer, that they cut themſelves after their manner, with knives and lancers, till the blood guſhed out upon them, 1 Kin. 18.28. Grief cuts the heart alwayes, and ſometimes cauſes cutting of the fleſh. The Lord complains (Pſal. 95. 10.) Forty years long was I grieved with this generation; it is this word, forty years long was I vexed and cut with this generation, with their murmurings, backſlidings and unbelief. They did (as it were) cut the Lord to the heart; as in another place, They broke him with their whoriſh hearts, Ezek. 6.9. God ſpeaks there as a man whoſe patience is almoſt ſpent, or as a husband grieved with the diſloyalties of an adulterous wife.

Sumitur Metaphoricè, quod ii quos tædet ſeſe torquẽt & veſtes, & ſeſe membraq; ſua diſcindant ac lacerant, & velut diſſecent. Merc.

And thus we may joyn it with hope, either as hope imports the act of hope, or the object of hope, Whoſe hope ſhall be cut off; the expectation which the hypocrite hath had ſhall come to an end. Or, a time is at hand when an hypocrite ſhall be paſt hoping. Hence obſerve, Deſpairing is the cutting off of hope.

And ſuch is the condition of an hypocrite. To have hope cut off, is the greateſt cut in the world. Will the hypocrite pray alwayes? No,at laſt his prayer ſhall be cut off; Will the hypocrite hope alwayes? No, at laſt his hope ſhall be cut off. The Saints in heaven have (in a ſence) their hope cut off, becauſe they are above hope; and at laſt all wicked mens hope ſhall be cut off, becauſe they are below hope. It is better to have all our profeſſions cut off then our hopes. Better have the thread of our lives cut off then the Anchor-cord of our hope cut off, and ſo we left to the rage and tempeſt of deſpair. Again, Joyn it with the object of hope, thus;

All that an hypocrite hopeth for or expects, ſhall be utterly taken away, and cut off from him.

His worldly comfort will be gone,and heavenly comforts will never come. He ſhall find that he hath been in a golden dream, that he hath been as one that is hungry, who dreameth that he is eating, but when he awakes, his ſoul is empty; or as a thirſty man,that dreams he is drinking,but he awakes and behold he is faint, Iſa. 29.8. When dreams ſatisfie hunger and thirſt, the hypocrites hope ſhall be ſatisfied. Hypocrites ſhall have as good as they bring. They bring God nothing but words and empty profeſſions; and they ſhall have nothing from God but air and empty expectations; their real hopes, or the thing they hoped for,ſhall be cut off. When Hypcrites awake out of their ſleep, their hopes vaniſh as a dream. Not only doth the world, but the Chriſt on whom they hoped, prove a ſhadow, a fancy, an image, an idol of their own making; their hearts were filled with leaves in ſtead of gold, as the Devil cozens his greedy votaries; Their hope ſhall be cut off.

And whoſe truſt ſhall be a ſpiders web.

As hope before, ſo here truſt, may be put either for the act or object of truſt; and both (by a Synecdoche) for the whole profeſſion of an Hypocrite.

Hope and truſt are often taken promiſcuouſly. There is a gradual difference between them, not an eſſential. Truſt is the ſtrength of hope, or the acting of a ſtrong faith. The original word ſignifies a very quiet, ſecure, ſetled truſt; when a man truſts upon or about a thing, without caſting ſo much as a jealous thought after it. Thus the Hypocrite truſts, he never ſuſpects himſelf; his heart ſaith all is well,

Lev. 25. 18. Ye ſhall dwell in the Land in ſafety; the word is, Ye ſhall dwell in the Land in truſt, becauſe an opinion of ſafety is the companion of truſt; when we truſt our condition is good, then we think our ſelves ſafe.

There are two things noted by this word.

Firſt, Boldneſs and confidence.

Secondly, Security and peaceableneſs. The hypocrite feels no trouble, and he fears none: The languiſhing of his heart is like that of Babylon the mother of whoredoms and hypocriſie, who ſaith in her heart, I ſit a Queen, and am no widow, and ſhall ſee no ſorrow, Rev. 18. 17.

This truſt, where it is true, hath a double effect. The want of which diſcovers the falſeneſs of it in the Hypocrite.

Firſt, It confirms and ſtrengthens the heart againſt all oppoſitions. And,

Secondly, It encourages the heart againſt all dangers. He that truſts in God, will walk through the valley of the ſhadow of death, and fear no evil. He dares take a bear by the tooth, or a lion by the beard: In both theſe the truſt of the hypocrite faileth. He will work and go on boldly till he meets with oppoſition; he will work in a fair day, till he meets with a ſtorm, and dangers threaten; but there he gives over. He that is not acquainted with the aſſurance-Office of heaven, will ſeldom, if at all, run hazards here on earth. True truſt brings God and the ſoul together, but the hypocrite never comes near God, and then no marvel if he be afraid to come near danger.

Note from it before we put the words together, thus much,

Whoſe truſt.] An Hypocrite doth moſt things which the upright and ſincere hearted do, and he ſeems to have every thing which the upright and ſincere hearted have. Do they pray? ſo doth he. Do they hear? ſo doth he. Do they faſt? ſo doth he. Have they faith? he hath a faith too. Have they the fear of God? he alſo hath a kind of fear. Have they zeal? ſo hath he; yea, the zeal of hypocriſie burns hotter for a blaſt, then the zeal of ſincerity. He hath Grace proper to his ſtate; falſe grace for his falſe heart; he hath truſt, ſuch as it is, a truſt which belongeth to all of his rank; ſee the character of it in the next words.

It ſhall be a ſpiders web.] The Hebrew is, It ſhall be the ſpiders houſe; the web is the houſe of the ſpider. We have the ſame word, Iſa. 59. 5. They weave the ſpiders web. Iſaiah ſpeaks of ſuch pretenders, They truſt in vanity, and ſpeak lies. Theſe were the ſpiders web which they weaved.

But why is the truſt of the hypocrite compared unto the ſpiders web? I ſhall clear that in four or five particulars, which will be as ſo many notes upon this text.

Firſt, Becauſe the profeſſion and all the works of an hypocrite are very weak and unſtable, as the ſpiders web is. There is a kind of curioſity in them, but there is no ſtrength or ſtability in them: The ſpider works very curiouſly, but her houſe will not bear any ſtreſs of weather, much leſs force of battery. The ſpiders web is no match for a broom or a whisk. Thus is the profeſſion, the truſt of hypocrites; you may ſee a neat ſpinning, a fine thread of profeſſion, accurate weavings and contrivances, but when it comes to a puſh, it is not able to ſtand; if you do but touch it, 'tis gone. Some will ſtand out longer then others, yet all fall, as Chriſt aſſures us (Mat. 7. ult.) it is the hypocrite who buildeth his houſe upon the ſand; to have a houſe built upon the ſand, is no better then to have a houſe built in the cieling; when the ſtorm comes, that houſe falls; and when the broom comes, this muſt down.

Secondly, The truſt of an hypocrite is called a ſpiders web, becauſe he fetches and formes it (as it were) out of his own bowels; that whereunto he truſteth, is wrought out of himſelf. That's the nature of the ſpider, ſhe hath no extrinſecal materials to build her houſe with; ſhe doth not hew her ſtones out of any quarry, or fetch her timber from any foreſt (as we may allude) the materials which ſhe hath, ſhe fetcheth out of her bowels. The Bee makes an houſe, and fetcheth the materials from this and that flower; ſo the Bee makes a comb for a houſe; but the ſpider ſucks no flowers. Thus it is with hypocrites, their truſt and hope is as the ſpiders web, made out of their own ſubſtance; they eviſcerate themſelves, they fetch all out of themſelves. The meaning is, all their truſt is in their own ſtrength, in their own ſtock, in their own gifts, upon theſe they build, theſe are their houſe. We find the Phariſees truſt thus grounded; ſuch was his houſe (Luke 18.) I faſt twice a week, I give alms, I pay all men their due. He was very exact in righteouſneſs according to the Law, upon this, and out of this he makes his houſe; this is to make an houſe like a ſpider. Though it be our graces we truſt upon, our truſt will be a ſpiders web. The Believer is well compared to a Bee; the Bee hath an houſe and honey, but the Bee fetcheth all from abroad, from herbs and flowers: Believers have their houſe to dwell in, and their honey to feed upon; but they ſuck all from the promiſes of Chriſt; yea, they ſuck it from Chriſt himſelf: they reſt not in the letter of the promiſes, but they go to Chriſt, who is the matter promiſed, and the accompliſher of all the promiſes. Here they build their houſe, and hew out the pillars of it.

Thirdly, Their truſt ſhall be a ſpiders web, in the iſſue it ſhall periſh like a ſpiders web. How is that? As ſoon as the houſe comes to be cleanſed, down go the ſpiders webs; when the houſe is ſwept, the cob-webs are firſt ſwept away. Thus it is with the truſt of all hypocrites; when God ſweeps his houſe, his Church, he quickly ſweeps out theſe ſpiders webs (Iſa. 14. 23.) The Prophet ſpeaks of the Beſom of God; the judgments of God are the beſom of God by which he ſweepeth his houſe. God hath a double beſom, or a double uſe of his beſom; he hath a beſom of deſtruction, and a beſom of purgation. It is a beſom of deſtruction to hypocrites, and it is a beſom of purgation to his Saints. When either the beſom of deſtruction, or the beſom of purgation is in hand, the truſt of hypocrites is ſwept away. When the Prophet deſcribes the Lord in his great and terrible judgments (Iſa. 33. 14.) The Text ſaith, The ſinners in Zion are afraid, fearfulneſs ſurprizeth the hypocrite, who ſhall dwell with devouring fire? God provoked is a devouring fire. How ſhall ſtubble and ſpiders webs ſtand before him? When trouble comes, the truſt of hypocrites goes to wrack; they tremble then, for their truſt is but a ſpiders web, it cannot ſtand one ſtroak, or endure the flaming heat. The hope of a godly man grows ſtrongeſt in times of trouble, he is purified in the fire; and the hope of an hypocrite weakens till it be none at all, in times of trouble, it is caſt out of doors amongſt the rubbiſh, or is conſumed with the fire.

Fourthly, Take this parallel between the ſpiders web, and the profeſſion of hypocrites; the ſpider makes his web to catch and enſnare others, to catch the poor flies. She hath a double uſe of her houſe, to lie in it, and to entrap flies in it. Her houſe is a ſnare. The profeſſion of an hypocrite is a ſpiders web in this notion; he makes it to catch flies with, to enſnare and deceive the ſimple, that he may prey upon them: He would count godlineſs a poor thing, did he not make a gain of godlineſs; that brings him in food and cloathing, he lives upon it. This his deceitful web is ſo fine ſpun, and fairly woven, that you cannot eaſily diſcern any thing but truth and beauty in it: Hypocrites cannot be diſtinguiſhed by the outſide of what they do; their lewdneſs is under a covert. Some tell us that the Hebrew word for an hypocrite, may be derived from another, which ſignifies a cloud; the wickedneſs of ſuch is wrapt up in a cloud; whence the Latine word for a crafty, diſhoneſt man, imports one who caſts a cloud or a miſt before his diſhoneſty; ſo that it is hard to make this diſcovery, till effects and iſſues make it. Only God looks quite through all clouds and coverings, he ſees what is in the heart, though man cannot. God ſees his contrivances are only to ſerve his turn, and attain earthly ends.

Nebulo à nebula, qui mendaciis ſuis nebulã quandam & tenebras objicit.

Fifthly, The hypocrite, like the ſpider, thinks himſelf ſafe and out of harms way, when once lodged in this profeſſion. He is ready to boaſt that the gates of hell ſhall not prevail againſt it. So much for the ſimilitude.

Animalculum illud valde imbecillum & malicioſum atque meditabundum, potius quam prudens, domicilium adificat, in quo ſe tutum exiſtimat. Bold.

Now follows the application of the ſimilitude in the fifteenth verſe.

Verſe 15. He ſhall lean upon his houſe, but it ſhall not ſtand; he ſhall take hold of it, but it ſhall not endure.

Bildad goes on to bring down his ſimilitude to this particular.

Thus the ſpider doth, and thus the hypocrite: the ſpider leans upon his houſe, there he dwels; and ſo the hypocrite he leans upon his houſe, there he dwells and reſts himſelf.

שען Nixus, innixus eſt, reclinatus fuit, incubuit totis viribus, per Metaphorā confidet.

The word which we tranſlate lean, is often uſed in the Old Teſtament, to note the vital act of faith, the act of recumbency; Faith in the vital act of it is a reſting upon another. Now falſe faith imitates true faith, that will be reſting and leaning. Faith whether true or falſe cannot ſtand alone, it muſt have a lean-to.

He leaneth upon his houſe.] It noteth leaning upon a ſtaff, or upon any ſtay (1 Sam. 1. 6.) Saul leaned upon his ſpear being weary in the battel. And Prov. 3. 5. Lean not to thine own underſtanding. Wiſe men, men of deep reach and judgment, lean to their own underſtandings, their wits are their props (Iſa. 10.20.) The remnant of Iſrael, ſhall no more ſtay themſelves upon him that ſmote them, but they ſhall ſtay upon the Lord, or, they ſhall lean upon the Lord, the holy One of Iſrael in truth (2 Sam. 22. 19.) They prevented me in the day of my calamity, but the Lord was my ſtay. God prevent his people with mercy, and their enemies prevents them with unkindneſſes, but the love of God outruns the malice of man; his love ſtaies up thoſe whom malice would caſt down. The Lord was my ſtay. And hence, the Noun of this Verb in the Hebrew ſignifies a ſtaff, becauſe we uſe a ſtaff to lean and reſt the body upon (Iſa. 3. 1.) Behold, the Lord of hoſts doth take away from Jeruſalem and from Judah, the ſtay and the ſtaff, the whole ſtay of bread, and the whole ſtay of water. The ſtay of bread, or, the ſtaff of bread; becauſe bread is that upon which the life of man leans or depends, as we depend or lean upon a ſtaff. Bread is elegantly called a ſtaff, becauſe bread ſupports the life of man, as a ſtaff doth the body. It implies this alſo, that the power, vertue and ſtrength by which bread doth ſuſtain us, comes from without; The ſtaff of bread; he doth not call the bread it ſelf a ſtaff, but he ſaith, there is a ſtaff of bread, the bread muſt have a ſtaff (of bleſſing from God) or elſe it cannot be a ſtaff (of ſtrengthning to us) as the bread is the immediate ſtaff of our bodies: ſo the bleſſing of God is the immediate ſtaff of the bread: the bread leaneth upon the bleſſing of God, as we lean upon the bread. As an hungry man leans upon his bread, ſo an hypocrite leans upon his houſe, He ſhall lean upon his houſe. That's his ſtay.

Scita eſt Metaphora, cum fulcimentū panū uſurpat pro pane fulciente, ſignificans foris vim illā panū accedere. Ut enim greſſus ſenū reguntur baculo, ita panis dicitur habere baculum. Mol. in Iſa. 3. 1.

But, what is his houſe? He ſhall lean upon his houſe.

The houſe of this hypocrite it is two-fold; or he hath two houſes. He hath a worldly houſe, and he hath a ſpiritual houſe. He hath one houſe made out of earthly materials, and another made out of heavenly materials.

He hath an houſe made out of worldly materials, and ſo ſome interpret this place, he ſhall lean upon his houſe; that is, upon his riches, upon his relations, upon his greatneſs upon his friends, upon his correſpondencies, upon the eſtimation that he hath abroad in the world, upon his reputation with his neighbours at home.

Domū impii vocat bona & facultates ejus quibus homines ſe fulciant, juxta illud, opes divitis arx ejus valida. Druſ.

Theſe framed and put together are a houſe which the hypocrite builds for himſelf, upon theſe he reſts: and that's a truth, the world is an hypocrites ſupport, the houſe upon which he leans. The money in his cheſt upholds him, not faith in his heart; his goods pleaſe him more then goodneſs. He eaſily believes that he is in the favour of God, becauſe he hath ſo much favour among men. That's one houſe.

Bildad might aim at this, becauſe Job was a man of a full and vaſt eſtate, the richeſt and greateſt of all the men in the Eaſt; as if he had ſaid, Job, thou haſt leaned upon thy outward abundance, upon thy ſheep and oxen, upon thy children and ſervants, and now thou findeſt all but a ſpiders web, ſwept away in a moment. Yet (I conceive) he means rather a houſe built of heavenly materials. And there are three ſorts of heavenly materials, out of which the hypocrite builds his houſe.

Firſt, Gifts; he hath knowledge and underſtanding in the Word and wayes of God, the gift of prayer, the gift (it may be) of Tongues of Prophecy and Preaching. Theſe are excellent materials, and upon theſe he builds his truſt, that he is in a good eſtate.

The ſecond ſort of materials, are holy Duties, he prayes, he hears, he faſteth, and he gives alms, and the like; Theſe he doth, and out of theſe materials he builds his houſe, very ſtrongly he hopes.

Thirdly, He hath finer ſtuff then all this to build his houſe of, he buildeth upon ſuppoſed graces; he can tell you, he hath faith, he hath love, he hath patience, he hath humility, and he hath ſorrow for ſin; he can count all theſe things, and out of theſe he buildeth himſelf an houſe of ſpecial confidence, ſuch a houſe as he doubts not will ſtand all winds and weathers: he hopes to ſtand ſafe in judgment, under the roof and goodly fabrick of this houſe.

Out of theſe three ſorts of materials, ſpiritual gifts, ſpiritual duties, and ſuppoſed ſpiritual graces; upon all theſe, and out of theſe he buildeth, and thinks he hath made an houſe that ſhall ſtand for ever.

The point I ſhall give you, taking in thoſe three ſorts of materials, is,

That gifts, duties, and ſuppoſed graces are the ſtay and the ſtaff, the houſe, and the ſtrength of hypocrites.

Upon theſe they lean, and in theſe they ſecure themſelves; they reſt upon this bottom for eternity. Hence they even dare to plead with God himſelf about it (Matth. 7. 22.) Many will ſay unto me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not propheſied in thy Name, and in thy Name caſt out Devils, and done many great wonders? They truſted upon, Have we not propheſied? Have we not prayed? Have we not done wonders? They thought thoſe ſufficient materials to build them a Tower which ſhould reach Heaven it ſelf; who can doubt, but they who do ſuch things as theſe ſhall do well? The gift of prophecy, the power to caſt out Devils, and work miracles, ſound high, and make a great noiſe. Yet at laſt, this Tower of their confidence proves but a Caſtle in the Air, or a ſpiders web. How confident were they, who could plead thus with God: He hath opened the ſecrets of Heaven to us, and do you think he will ſhut the gates of Heaven upon us? We have preached, we have been inſtruments of ſaving others, and ſhall not we be ſaved our ſelves? We have caſt out Devils, and ſhall we be caſt to the Devil? We have not walked in an ordinary tract of Profeſſion, but we have traded in wonders, and done miracles, we have amazed the world with reports of the great things we have done, is all this nothing? Thus they plead with Chriſt, as if he were bound to ſave them by the law of theſe ſervices: yet Chriſt tells them, Depart from me, I know you not: Surely, thought they, God will fetch his fewel for thoſe everlaſting burnings from among the rude Heathens, or debauched drunkards, adulterers, &c. not from among us. Were it not a wonder greater then any we have wrought, if we who have wrought great wonders ſhould not be admitted? One of the Ancients repreſents them in ſuch amazements, What means this ſtrange unexpected anſwer from Chriſt, Depart, &c. Muſt we depart who lived ſo near thee? Muſt we be damned, whom thou haſt thus honoured?

τί βούλεται, τὸ ξένον καὶ παράδοξον τοῦτο τέλος &c. Chryſ.

The Apoſtle Paul (Rom. 2. 17.) ſpeaking of hypocritical Jews, diſcovers ſuch a confidence, Thou reſteſt in the Law, as a man reſteth in his houſe, there he ſleeps and is quiet, ſo theſe in the Law, there they were quiet; that is, in the priviledges and outward profeſſion of the Law, or in a litteral and outward obedience to the Law. The Jews built their houſe upon, or with legal righteouſneſs, Thou reſteſt in the Law; he ſpeaks both by way of narration, and likewiſe by way of redargution. He tells what they did, and how ill they did in doing ſo. Paul rejects this as refuſe ſtuff, as hay and ſtraw, as droſs and dung, as confidence in the fleſh (Phil. 3. 3. &c.) are fleſh. So Prayer is fleſh, ordinances are fleſh, the righteouſneſs of the Law is fleſh; yea, Grace it ſelf truſted to, is fleſh. The duties which Chriſt hath appointed are the houſe of the hypocrite; but Chriſt himſelf is the houſe of the upright; He would be found in him (Phil. 3. 9.) not in duties or inherent graces. Saints deſire that much grace may be found in them, but they dare not be found in grace; they would ever be acting graces, but never truſting to them. Obſerve, Tibi applaudis quod legem ſcriptam acceperis, quod frequens es in lectione & auditione legis.

Secondly, An hypocrites hope is high and ſtrong, that his eſtate is good now, and that he ſhall receive good at the laſt.

He leaneth upon this houſe. Some are without hope in the world, of whom we may ſpeak as the Apoſtle of an Heretick (Tit. 3. 11.) they are condemned of themſelves. Some men have the ſentence of condemnation in their own hearts. But there are others, as you ſee here, who have great and ſtrong confidences in themſelves, who live and die with this confidence too; This they do upon the former witneſs. As the Apoſtle John ſpeaks concerning the witneſs which the Saints have for Heaven, There are three which bear witneſs, &c. and theſe three are one: So there are three which bear witneſs to the hypocrite, and theſe three are one; they agree in one to deceive, as the other to give aſſurance.

Firſt, The world that giveth many a man a witneſs and letters teſtimonial, that his eſtate is good, his neighbours ſay ſo, they flatter him, and cry peace, peace to him.

Secondly, Satan applauds him, the Devil gives him his good word, and tells him that certainly his eſtate is very good.

Thirdly, His own heart will ſeal to all, he ſhall have the witneſs in himſelf, as it is ſpoken of the true believer. So that the hypocrite having ſuch witneſſes, a witneſs within himſelf, a certificate under the hand of Satan, and letters commendatory from the world, all this muſt needs give him ſtrength of hope, that his houſe ſhall ſtand for ever.

But ſee the iſſue, He leaneth upon his houſe, what then?

Stetit, perſiſtit, manſ.

It ſhall not ſtand.] The word ſignifies to ſtand firmly and ſtrongly, or to continue ſtanding. He thought that the materials which he had brought together, and the hopes which he had raiſed upon them, would have been as Mount Zion, that cannot be removed, but he leaneth upon it, and it ſhall not ſtand. Whence obſerve,

All that an hypocrite truſteth unto ſhall deceive him at the laſt.

It ſhall not ſtand. Their webs ſhall not become garments, Neither ſhall they cover themſelves with their works, Iſa. 59. 6. The language is proverbial, importing higheſt diſappointment: Who would weave a web, if he knew he ſhould never have a garment by it? Or work hard, when himſelf muſt go naked? Jer. 7. 1, 2. The Lord ſends to the people by his Prophet, Say to this people, Truſt not to lying words; that is, words which will deceive and fail you, you truſt and lean to them, but they will fall away from you: What were thoſe words? Even that they had a goodly houſe to lean to, they cried, The Temple of the Lord, the Temple of the Lord: but I hope that's a ſtrong houſe, as well as a beautiful, a man may lean upon that, upon the Temple of the Lord, and do well. No, The Temple of the Lord leaned upon, will be but a ſpiders web; God gave the Jews a Temple to worſhip him in, and many of them worſhipped the Temple. We adore every duty we depend upon, and give the Ordinances of God the honour of God. We can ſtand no more by ſuch truſt-to Ordinances, then we ſhall by the neglect of them.

Theſe, and all the materials before mentioned, will be found too weak, they ſhall not ſtand. Gifts cannot commend to God. If a man had the tongue of men and Angels, if all the knowledge that ever was ſcattered in the world were brought together into one head; this cannot commend him unto God. The Devil is as full of knowledge as he can hold, and yet he is as full of wickedneſs as he can hold. Duties cannot commend to God.

And there are two ſpecial reaſons why the hypocrites duties cannot.

Firſt, He is not at all changed in duties. He prayes and ſins, hears and ſins, profeſſes and continues wicked cloſely, if not openly.

עמדי

Secondly, He leans upon his duties. Could we ſuppoſe true grace leaned on, that could not ſtand. Nothing is a ſufficient ſtrength for us to ſtay upon, but the free grace of God, and Jeſus Chriſt: Lean to theſe houſes, for they will ſtand for ever. Of all other houſes you ſhall ſay as Adam did of his wife, Gen. 3. 12. (and it is the word here uſed in the Text) The woman which thou gaveſt to be with me, to ſtay by me, to be a helper and a ſupport to me, this woman hath given me, and I did eat, ſhe hath been the cauſe of my ruine. The ſame will be ſaid of all the gifts, and duties, and graces, which we ſtand upon. God hath given them us, and he hath given them us as meet helpers, but they will deceive and ruine us, if we lean on them. We ſhall fall by them, if we hope to ſtand by them (Pſal. 23. 4.) Thou art with me in trouble (ſaith David) therefore I ſhall not fall; it is this word, Thou ſtandeſt with me. Chriſt will ſtand by us at all times, Thou ſtandeſt with me, or by me: When the world faileth, and when gifts fail, yea, when graces fail, in degree and activity, then Jeſus Chriſt and free grace will ſtand by us, Iſa. 26. 7. Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whoſe mind is ſtaied on thee. Chriſt is the only lean-to.

Quaſi apud me ſtans.

There is one clauſe further,

He ſhall hold it faſt, but it ſhall not endure.

This clauſe is of the ſame importance with the former, only the ſence is ſomewhat heightned. It notes, that the hypocrite ſhall not only lean upon his houſe, but he ſhall take ſtrong hold upon his houſe, He ſhall faſten on it; ſo Mr. Broughton. A man may lean to a thing, and have no hold of it; he that takes hold of a thing would make it firm to himſelf, and himſelf firm to it. Thus the hypocrite leans upon his houſe, and takes faſt hold of it; if it would fall from him, if any attempt to pull him away from it, or he ſticks to it, he will not let it go.

Eam mordicus tenens, ſe in ea ſtabilem & firmum ſemper fore putans. Merc.

The word ſignifies to hold faſt, ſtrongly and prevailingly. Job's wife (Chap. 2.) ſpeaks thus, Doeſt thou ſtill hold faſt thine integrity? And God himſelf ſpeaks in the ſame language concerning Job, Doeſt thou not ſee, though thou haſt moved me to afflict him without cauſe, how he holdeth faſt his integrity? The hypocrite (after his manner, Mordicus tenet) holds his duties, performances, gifts, toughly, or (as it were) with his very teeth, he will hold them to the very death, and not let them go, the hypocrite will not give over, will not be beaten off from truſting to theſe falſe and weak props, here he ſets up his reſt, he will die by his gifts, his duties, his outward profeſſion, and go no further.

It is our glory to hold integrity faſt, to hold grace faſt, yea, and duties in point of practice and obedience; but it is our ſin and danger, to hold them faſt in reliance and confidence.

It is a ſad uſe which ſome make of this truth, when they hear that hypocrites hold faſt upon duties, &c. they let go their duties; they let prayer go, repentance, and ſorrow for ſin go; they ſay, it is no matter for duties, they need not trouble themſelves, Chriſt doth all. This is to turn the grace of God into wantonneſs. We muſt let go both our graces and our duties in point of juſtification, but hold them we muſt as our lives, in converſation, and the tenour of our lives. Prayer, hearing, faſting, repenting, muſt not die, while we live; Do them we muſt, but glory in them we muſt not.

He holdeth them faſt, but (yet) it ſhall not endure.] That's the laſt thing. We ſee as often as the hypocrite riſes to take hold of his hopes, ſo often his hopes fail him: (before) It ſhall not ſtand (now) it ſhall not endure.

The word ſignifies, it ſhall not be eſtabliſhed to him, he would eſtabliſh this houſe to himſelf, but it ſhall not be eſtabliſhed, his worldly eſtate ſhall not be eſtabliſhed, his duties, his graces, his gifts, ſhall not be eſtabliſhed.

The word notes that eſtabliſhment which is made by a politick Act or Edict. It is the Jews operative word, in which they enact Laws, Eſth. 9. The word is uſed three times (ver. 29, 31, & 32.) for a political eſtabliſhment of that decree about the deliverance of the Jews from the conſpiracy of Haman, they eſtabliſhed or made a Law for it. Laws are for continuance, therefore they are eſtabliſhed and ſetled. An hypocrite would do ſo too, he would enact and aſtabliſh what he doth, but it ſhall not endure, it will be null'd and repeal'd quickly.

The word alſo ſignifies, that which is ſubſtantial (it ſhall not endure) that is, it ſhall not be as a ſubſtance, it ſhall appear at laſt to be a ſhadow, Gen. 7. 23. Every living ſubſtance was deſtroyed; it is this word, that is, every thing that ſtood up and ſubſiſted. So, Deut. 11. 6. the word ſignifies the ſubſtance and outward eſtate which Korah, Dathan, and Abiram had, They and their ſubſtance went down into the pit. The hypocrite thinks his eſtate is a ſubſtantial eſtate, yet both his worldly houſe, and his ſpiritual houſe, builded as was before deſcribed, ſhall moulder away and rot, they ſhall not endure, 1 King. 7. 21. Solomon ſet up two pillars in the Temple, and an hypocrite in his building ſets up two pillars, and he calleth them after the name that Solomon called his, the Text ſaith, The one he called Jachin, and the other Boaz; Jachin, he will eſtabliſh, and Boaz, ſtrength. Which may note that the people of God, who worſhip him in his Temple, have two pillars, two everlaſting pillars, they have Chriſt, and the free grace of God to truſt upon; theſe are the two pillars of the Temple, that ſupport our hope, and the one is truly called Jachin, eſtabliſhed, and the other Boaz, ſtrength. The hypocrite hath a Temple, an houſe, and two pillars, upon which he makes theſe inſcriptions, Upon his worldly eſtate he writes Jachin, Eſtabliſhed; Upon his ſpiritual eſtate he writes Boaz, Strength; but he will be deceived in both, They ſhall not endure. When a wicked man begins to fall, nothing ſhall ſupport him. As it was ſaid of Haman in regard of his outward honour, If theſe men be of the ſeed of the Jews, before whom thou haſt begun to fall, thou ſhalt fall utterly: So, though when an hypocrite ſees his houſe falling, he takes faſt hold of it, and endeavours to ſupport it, yet it ſhall not ſtand, fall it ſhall. The righteous falls and riſes again, he falls ſeven times in a day, and yet is raiſed up again, Prov. 24. 16. but when an hypocrite begins to fall, he falleth down, down for ever. It is ſaid of the righteous (Pſal. 37. 24.) Though he fall, he ſhall not utterly be caſt off, for the Lord upholdeth him with his hand; but when the hypocrite falleth, he ſhall be utterly caſt away, for his duties only hold him by the hand, he hath only ſomewhat of himſelf to ſupport himſelf with, therefore though he take hold of it, It ſhall not endure.

VERS. 16, 17, 18, 19.

He is green before the Sun, and his branch ſhooteth forth in his garden.

His roots are wrapped about the heap, and ſeeth the place of ſtones.

If he deſtroy him from his place, then it ſhall deny him, ſaying, I have not ſeen thee.

Behold, this is the joy of his way, and out of the earth ſhall others grow.

THE Context of theſe four Verſes holds forth to us the third ſimilitude, by which Bildad illuſtrates the condition of an hypocrite.

The ſimilitude is explained in verſ. 16, 17, 18. and applied in v. 19.

The hypocrite was firſt, compared to a ruſh, or a flag. Secondly to a ſpiders web. But now to a goodly tree. This third ſimilitude grants the hypocrite the beſt of his condition, and puts him in the faireſt poſture that can be imagined, and yet all proves nought; his root is but rottenneſs, and his bloſſom ſhall go up as the duſt; or his branches ſhall be cut down, and his root ſtubbed up. It is as if Bildad had ſaid, If you think I have ſpoken too little and too low, or have debaſed the hypocrite more then was meet, by comparing him to a poor ruſh or a flag, and his eſtate to a ſpiders web; then take him in his higheſt notion, let him be looked upon as a green flouriſhing tree before the Sun, faſtning his roots, and ſpreading out his branches, yet you ſhall ſee, at the laſt, deſtruction is his end. Behold, this is the joy of the hypocrite.

That's the ſum, and the general ſence of the words.

Three things are held forth in this ſimilitude concerning the hypocrite.

Firſt, His outward and flouriſhing eſtate in verſ. 16. He is green before the Sun, and his branch ſhooteth forth in his garden.

Secondly, His hurtfulneſs, or the annoyance which he doth to his neighbours and brethren, ſhadowed out in verſ. 17. His roots are wrapped about the heap, and he ſeeth the place of ſtones.

Thirdly, We have his ruine or cutting down, his deſtruction or pulling up, in verſ. 18. If he deſtroy him from his place, then it ſhall deny him, ſaying, I have not ſeen thee.

His flouriſhing eſtate begins in verſ. 16.

He is green before the Sun.

רטב Madere humidum ſucco ſum eſſe.

The word [Green] ſignifies moiſt, juicy, or ſappy, proper to trees: So Mr. Broughton tranſlates, He is juiceful before the Sun. And others, He is full of ſap. In which ſence the word is uſed, Chap. 24. 8. of this Book, They are wet with the ſhowres of the mountains, or moiſt, and ſappy, receiving many ſhowres from the mountains.

A tree green, juicy and full of ſap, is in the height of his ſtrength and beauty: Juice and ſap is to the tree, as blood to the veins, and marrow to the bones of a man; and therefore as a young man in the prime and ſtrength of his age is deſcribed by having his veins full of blood, and his bones full of marrow; ſo a tree is deſcribed in it's greateſt verdure, by having his root and branches full of ſap and moiſture. The hypocrite may be ſuch a flouriſhing tree, He is green before the Sun.

Before the Sun.] The Hebrew is, Before the face of the Sun. The word Shemeſh (the Sun) ſignifieth a miniſter or ſervant, becauſe the Sun is the great ſervant of the world, and miniſtreth thoſe benefits of light, heat, and influence. This (by the way) ſhould have kept the Nations from adoring it as a God, which both in name and nature was their ſervant. But what means this, Before the Sun?

First, Some take, before the Sun, to be only this, openly, conſpicuouſly, and in the ſight of all; for to do a thing before the Sun, is to do it without covert or ſecrecy, 2 Sam. 12. 12. Thus the Lord threatneth David, after that ſin of privacy committed with Bathſheba, Thou didſt it ſecretly, but I will do this before all Iſrael, and before the Sun: So the hypocrite, is green before the Sun; that is, he flouriſheth in the eye, view and ſight of all men. He hath fair leaves and branches of outward profeſſion in the Church, and of outward proſperity in the world.

Ante ſolem, i. e. palam in oculis omnium.

Secondly, Before the Sun, that is, as a tree in Summer, when the Sun returns to us, or turns upon us. In the beginning of the Spring the Sun returns: having travel'd furtheſt off from us, it comes to the Vertical point and turns about to us again. So that before the Sun, or the Sun looking towards us, is a deſcription of the Spring. And ſo it is, as if he had ſaid, As a tree when the Sun cometh towards it in the Spring, and ſhines hot upon it in the Summer, makes a fair ſhew: So the hypocrite is very green, joyful, full of contentment, whilſt he hath the Sun of proſperity ſhining upon him, whilſt thoſe warm rayes of outward comforts, heat and nouriſh him, ſo long he is green and flouriſhing.

Thirdly, Before the Sun, that is, (according to others) before the Sun ſhines too hot upon him, before the Sun ſcorches and withers him; as if he had ſaid, the hypocrite is a green tree, till the heat comes upon him, till the Sun ariſeth in his ſtrength: but aſſoon as the heat of the day, or the year comes, this tree withers. An hypocrite cannot abide the extream heat of the Sun, whereas the godly have ſuch an everlaſting ſupply of moiſture and ſap, that let the Sun ſhine as hot as it will upon them, they are green ſtill. The ordinary heat of the Sun is put for proſperity: the extream heat of the Sun, is put for perſecution. So, the meaning may be this, He is green before the Sun, that is, before the Sun of trouble and perſecution ariſeth, or (as ſome render it) before God looks angerly upon him and ſcorcheth his leaves, till then, He is green and flouriſhing. Before refers both to time, and preſence.

Antequã ſol veniat. Bibl. Reg. Ante exortũ & ardorem ſolis, i. e. antequã ſol inardeſcens eum adurat, q.d. priuſquã à Domino puniatur & viſitatur. Ardor eſt ira Domini. Merc.

Fourthly, Others take it as a deſcription of the hypocrites outward flouriſhing, which may be ſuch ſometimes as holds out before the Sun, that is, when the Sun is very hot upon him; and then this clauſe ſtands in oppoſition to the ruſh, which whilſt it is yet in his greenneſs withereth before any other herb. If the Sun riſe hot upon the ruſh, it withereth preſently, where it wants outward moiſture. But here Bildad ſeems to grant, or at leaſt to ſuppoſe, that the hypocrite may poſſibly riſe to ſuch a flouriſhing eſtate, that he holds his greenneſs, even before the Sun, in a great deal of heat and trouble. Thus Before notes preſence.

Ante ſolem, i.e. in ardore ſolis arboris more, quæ pulchre aliquandiu ſuccreſcens æſtum non timet, imò calore ſolis moderato adjuvatur & alitur. Merc.

Either way the ſence is good, He is green before the Sun cometh with his heat, that is, he cannot endure the ſcorching time of trouble: or he is green before the Sun; that is, before ſome trouble or ſcorching, before ſome heat of perſecution, this hypocrite may ſtand, He is green before the Sun:

And his branch ſhooteth forth in his garden.

יונק Significat lactantem ſeu infantem lac ſugentem per Metaphoram ſumitur pro ſucculo aut tenero ramo qui ſugit arborem. Teneriores ramuſculi lactantibus pueris ſunt ſimiles.

Branch.] The word which we tranſlate Branch, is derived from a root which ſignifies a little ſucking child, or an infant; and the reaſon is, becauſe branches which come from a tree, draw moiſture and ſap from the tree, as an infant doth milk from the mothers breaſt; therefore we elegantly in our language, anſwering the Hebrew, call ſuch branches Suckers, and we cut them off where we ſee many ſprouting from one fruit-bearing tree, becauſe they draw too much from the tree, and hinder the fruit; that's the meaning of the Hebrew word, His ſuckers: So Mr. Broughton tranſlates, His ſuckers ſprout out over his orchard. By theſe branches we may underſtand either his children, or his honour, his relations, or his reputation, theſe ſhoot forth and ſhew themſelves as branches from a tree, His branches ſhoot forth in his garden.

Hortus גן à radice Ganan, velavit, metaphoricè protexit, quod ſepto protegi ſolet.

In his garden.] That is, in that place which he hath fenced or taken in for himſelf; a garden is a plat ſeparated and incloſed from thoſe places which lie open and in common. So much the Hebrew word imports, coming from a root which ſignifies to protect or to fence a thing about, becauſe gardens are places fenced, hedged or walled in, Cant. 4.12. A garden encloſed is my beloved, Eccleſ. 2. 5, 6. I made me gardens and orchards, and I planted trees in them of all (kind of) fruits, I made me pools of water, to water therewith the wood that bringeth forth trees.

Per hortum intellige omnes rationes, quibus ſuam tuetur & auget magnitudinem, Merc.

His branches ſhoot forth in his garden.] That is, he appears very beautiful and glorious, very green and flouriſhing in his ſtate or condition, in his dignity and honour. He lives as in a garden or paradiſe: So the word is tranſlated (Gen. 2. 8.) And the Lord God planted a paradiſe, or a garden of delight. The hypocrites garden is all that by which he preſerves and keeps his worldly comforts, as we do plants and flowers of profit or delight in gardens. Thus the hypocrite grows as a goodly tree, and ſhooteth forth his branches.

This is the firſt dart of the deſcription of his flouriſhing eſtate. Hence note a point or two.

Firſt, In general (which hath heretofore been obſerved, therefore I ſhall but touch it.) viz.

> That, A wicked man, an hypocrite may abound exceedingly in outward proſperity.

He is a tree green before the Sun, and ſhooting forth his branches in his garden.

> Secondly Note, That, The thriving of hypocrites, their greenneſs and flouriſhing is only outward.

The tree is green before the Sun, but he is withered in his ſoul. Hypocrites do all before the Sun, to be ſeen, or in the ſight of men. They are of thoſe who rebel againſt the light, which would keep them from ſin, and they ſay, No eye ſees us, while they are ſinning. But they love the light which ſhews any good they do; then they ſay, O that all eyes did ſee us. Phariſees pray in the markets, and blow a trumpet when they give alms, that the ears of all, as well as the bellies of the poor, may be filled with their charity. Come ſee my zeal, ſaith Jehu. Moſes was faithful, but he never ſaid, Come ſee my fidelity. Joſhua was valiant in the battels of the Lord, yet he never ſaid, Come ſee my fortitude. The upright heart cares not to be thus before the Sun; he delights in ſecret holineſs. His goodneſs is not leſs prized, or leſs pleaſing to him, becauſe it is hidden. He takes infinitely more content in being and doing good, then in being known to be or do good.

Thirdly, Taking Before the Sun, to note the extream heat of the Sun, we may obſerve thus much from it,

> That, An hypocrite may endure trouble and perſecution for his profeſſion.

He is not like the ruſh, which preſently withereth, but he is ſometimes like a tree that ſtandeth out before the Sun a great while. We know that many have not only performed outward acts of holineſs, but they have ſometimes ſuffered in a holy cauſe; they can be paſſive in obedience, as well as active, and yet have fallen away at the laſt. Before the Sun of proſperity the hypocrite will continue green very long; and before the Sun of perſecution he may continue green a while. It is conceived by moſt, that Alexander the Copperſmith, ſpoken of by Paul (2 Tim. 4. 14.) as as a man very grievous to him, Alexander the Copperſmith did me me much evil, he oppoſed the Apoſtle, yet I ſay, this Alexander is conceived to be the man of whom we read (Acts 19. 32.) that ſtood to Paul when he was in that danger at Epheſus; there he had like to have loſt his life for appearing on his ſide; the text ſaith, They dragged him out of the multitude to the market-place. It is poſſible for an hypocrite to be green before the Sun of perſecution, at leaſt before ſome ſcorching beams of that Sun, though he is not able to bear it when it comes to the utmoſt trial, to the extream heat of the day.

Thus we ſee the hypocrites greenneſs in his branches, yet that is not all, for in the next verſe we find his roots alſo, he is ſeemingly ſetled below, as well as beautiful above. And when a tree hath flouriſhing branches and firm roots, what can be deſired more? For as when a tree is cut down root and branch, it is then utterly taken away; ſo when a tree flouriſheth root and branch, it is in beſt eſtate and higheſt perfection. Both theſe meet here; not only doth he ſhoot forth his branches in his garment, but he wrappeth his roots about the heap, and ſeeth the place of ſtones.

His roots are wrapped about the heap.

Radices ſunt divitiæ, liberi, amicitiæ, dignitates, honores.

The root of this hypocritical tree is that by which he faſtens himſelf: any accomodation or ſtrength which he hath in this world, credit, riches, friends, whatſoever ſtrengthens a man, that's his root; it is as neceſſary to faſten a tree, as to moiſten and feed a tree. Now (ſaith Bildad) he ſpreads his roots, he hath not only excellent branches outwardly, but he layes his matter ſo, that he hath rooting alſo in the world; yea, he ſeems to have rooting in the Church too.

גל à radice גלל. Volvit à ſummo ad imum.

His roots are wrapped about the heap.] The word in the Hebrew, ſignifies to roll, or bring things together, to put them up in a heap. Hence the Verb is uſed for that act of the ſoul in believing, whereby a Chriſtian gathers himſelf together, and all that he hath, and layes it upon the Lord, Pſal. 22. 8. He truſted in the Lord; the Hebrew is, He rolled himſelf upon the Lord. Hence it is tranſlated to ſignifie, Firſt, A tempeſt wherein the winds roll and are enfolded together. Secondly, A wave of the Sea, which is a rolling water. Thirdly, As here, a heap, becauſe in a heap a great many ſtones are gathered or rolled together. As, Gen. 31. 47. After that conteſt and debate of Laban with Jabob, about his departure, Jacob ſaid, Let us gather ſtones together, or roll ſtones together, and make an heap; and Laban gave it a a name, he called it Jeger-ſhahadutha, which is to ſay, A heap of witneſs, becauſe theſe ſtones were rolled together for a witneſs.

Laſtly (which ſence is applied by ſome interpreters to this Text.) The word ſignifies a ſpring or a fountain, Joſh. 15. 19. becauſe ſprings and fountains are as the gathering together of waters: The ſea is called the gathering together of waters (Gen. 1.) There waters are rolled and laid as upon a heap; and ſo proportionably every ſpring, fountain and river, is a place wherein the waters are rolled or wrapped together. Some tranſlate the word thus, His roots are wrapped about the water, or about the fountain. And that further ſets forth the ſeemingly ſure and ſtedfaſt eſtate of the hypocrite; as he hath goodly green branches above, ſo his roots are wrapped about the fountain, he looks as if he were planted by the waters ſide, as the flouriſhing tree deſcribed, Pſal. 1. A godly man is as a tree planted by the rivers ſide; ſo the hypocrite ſeems to have his roots wrapped about the waters, as if he had an ever-living ſupply from an everlaſting fountain, as if his leaves ſhould not wither, or his fruit fall off from him. That's one ſence.

But moſt go with our tranſlation, His roots are wrapped about the heap, they are intricated and folded about the heap of ſtones; and ſo the meaning of it may be given three wayes.

Impius aliquando floret inter varia impedimenta.

Firſt, In that it is ſaid, His roots are wrapped about the heap, the heap of ſtones, it notes his thriving againſt all oppoſition, here ſhadowed by heaps of ſtones. Heaps of ſtones are hinderances to the growing of a tree, to the rooting of it; therefore we ſet or plant trees in places free from ſtones: but to ſhew that he may even overcome, conquer, and ſubdue thoſe difficulties which hinder his growth, he ſaith, His roots are wrapped about the ſtones. The ſeed that was caſt in ſtonie ground, could not take root, the ſtones hindered it from a due depth of earth, Mat. 13. 15. So that Bildad according to this ſence magnifies the hypocrite, and ſpeaks high of him; He wrappeth his root about the ſtones, he grows in places of greateſt diſadvantage. A wicked man may conquer oppoſitions, and prevail againſt the pull-backs which hinder his worldly, yea, his ſeeming ſpiritual eſtate; he may encreaſe when he wants encouragements and means of increaſe; yea, he ſometimes increaſes againſt ſteps and diſcouragements, he thrives among ſtones.

Secondly, His roots are wrapped about the heap, notes, that he thrives, or will thrive, if he can, though it be to the hinderance and dammage of others; for by the heap ſome underſtand the foundation of an houſe, where ſtones are artificially heaped or laid together, not a natural or accidental heap. Trees that grow near a houſe ſhoot their roots under or about the foundation of the houſe, and ſo may be dangerous to the whole ſtructure. Thus the hypocrite will grow if he can, though he inwraps himſelf about the foundation of another mans houſe, raiſing or ſecuring his eſtate upon his neighbours wrong or ruine.

Ita latè radices diffundat ut fundamenti ſtruem offendat in ædibus Domini ſui. Jun.

In aliorum damnum propagatio denotatur. Idem.

Hypocrites care not whom they injure, ſo themſelves may thrive, though they undermine the foundation of another mans houſe, and looſen his eſtate, to faſten their own.

Thirdly, His roots are wrapped about the heaps, may note the firmneſs, and the ſeeming ſtrength of his ſtanding. He is rooted, not in ſome looſe and ſandy earth, or in tougher clay, but his roots are wrapped about a heap of ſtones. As (Matth. 7.) The houſe founded upon the ſand, could not continue when the ſtorms came, but the houſe founded upon the rock did; ſo a tree that is rooted only in looſe, ſlight ground, cannot ſtand againſt a great tempeſt, we ſee ſuch trees blown down; but that which is rooted among the ſtones, and wrapped about their heaps, that which interweaves and incorporates it ſelf (as it were) with a rock, this hath ſtrength againſt all ſtorms. Thus hypocrites pretend to Chriſt, and ſay they have wrapped themſelves about that rock; they will ſpeak great words, and bid defiance to all the world can do, profeſſing they have laid up a good foundation, and that the munition of rocks is their defence.

And ſeeth the place of ſtones.] The words may be tranſlated, He dwelleth and he ſtayeth in the place of ſtones; or, He plants himſelf among the ſtones; and then it carries the ſame ſence with the former clauſe: So Mr. Broughton, He platteth about the houſe of ſtones. And the Chaldee Paraphraſt, He ſhall ſee with his eyes the place of ſtones. We are near that ſence, And ſeeth the place of ſtones; that is (for all theſe rendrings of the Hebrew will come to a fair agreement, and the reſult is this) he lives, abides, converſes, or dwells even where there ſeems to be the leaſt probability of his ſtay, he ſtayeth in the place of ſtones.

Inter lapides commorabitur. Vulg.

Domum lapidum oculis vidit. Druſ.

The Hebrew is, houſe of ſtones; and houſe is taken either for that ſpecial place wherein men dwell, or generally for any place; ſo that, the houſe of ſtones is either an houſe naturally built; Nature uſeth a kind of art: or an houſe artifically built; Art is but an imitation of Nature. He ſeeth, that is, he ſeems to abide or continue in that houſe of ſtones, he is very eminent or glorious in that place. The ſame word is read (Dan. 8. 5.) Where Daniel ſpeaking of his Viſion, ſaith, The Goat which he ſaw in the viſion had a notable horn. The Chaldee is, a horn of ſight; he had a horn of ſight, that is, a conſpicuous, or a notable horn; or, as others render it, he had a perplexed, enfolded, or enwrapped horn, a wreathed horn. So that the word ſignifies both the conſpicuouſneſs of a thing, and likewiſe the infoldedneſs and complication of it.

Alii cornu perplexitatis, i. e. perplexum & intricatum. Merc.

A learned interpreteter gives yet another ſence, He looks into the houſe of ſtone, that is, he hinders the light, or darkens the houſe by perking up ſo proudly by, or near the windows; as if he had ſaid, he annoyes his Maſters houſe both below and above, at the foundation, and at the windows.

The ſtate of the hypocrite thus ſetled and made firm among ſtones, is yet a tottering one, it will not be able to ſtand; the eighteenth verſe ſhews this.

Verſe 18. If he deſtroy him from his place, it ſhall deny him, ſaying, I have not ſéen thée.

There is much difficulty in giving a clear ſence of theſe words.

If he deſtroy him from his place, &c.

If he] Who is that? Who is the Antecedent to this he? There is no antecedent expreſt in the Hebrew. Some underſtand it thus, If he, that is, if the Lord, if God come to take vengeance of this man who ſeems to be a tree, ſo highly grown, and ſo deeply rooted.

Secondly, We may carry on the ſimilitude thus, If he deſtroy him, that is, if the Gardener or the huſbandman, if the maſter or owner of that ground or place, ſeeing a tree thus luxuriant, growing ſo near the foundation of his houſe, and ſo wrapped about the place of ſtones, hindering the windows of his houſe; if he come to deſtroy or cut him down, it ſhall deny him.

Or, Thirdly, If he deſtroy him, that is, if the Sun deſtroy him: So Mr. Broughton tranſlates, If the Sun root him up from his place. But can the Sun root a tree up from his place? Yes, the Sun roots up a tree, when the Sun, before which a tree flouriſhes a while, caſts his beams ſo hot upon it, that it is ſcorched. Extream heat draws out all the moiſture of a tree, and kills it. In that ſence the Sun may be ſaid to root up a tree, the Sun killing the tree, cauſeth it to be rooted up. Thus we ſee divers Antecedents anſwering the he, the agent in the Text.

If he deſtroy him from his place.

The word which we tranſlate deſtroy, ſignifies properly to ſwallow down as a man ſwallows down meat and drink; and it ſignifies to ſwallow as a man ſwallows when he is very hungry; a man that is very hungry, eats his meat greedily, he throws it down whole into his throat, rather then chews it. Now, becauſe when meat is ſwallowed down, the meat is conſumed and ſpent, and is deſtroyed and comes to nothing, therefore the Hebrews elegantly tranſlate that word, which properly ſignifies to ſwallow up, to deſtroy; to deſtroy is to ſwallow up; and in that ſence (Iſa. 28. 7.) wine is ſaid to ſwallow up a man, that is, to deſtroy and conſume him. Intemperate men ſwallow up wine, and at laſt wine ſwallows up them: The wine drinks up their eſtates, their wits, their healths, their lives, their all at laſt. It is a Metaphor taken alſo from cruel and ſavage beaſts, who devour men: as Jacob ſaith of Joſeph, Surely a wild beaſt hath devoured or ſwallowed him up: And (Pſal. 35. 25.) We have that word applied to wicked men conſpiring againſt the Saints, they ſay, We have ſwallowed him up, ah! ſo would we have it; that is, we have utterly deſtroyed him, this pleaſes, this goes well on our ſide.

בלע Abſorbuit, devoravit, Metaphoricè corrupit, deſtruxit, conſumpſit, quia quod deglutitur, perditur, abſumitur. Pereleganter qui vinū multum deglutiunt, à vino abſorberi dicuntur. Pined.

Then the meaning is, Though the tree be in this ſtate, yet if the huſbandman come, he can quickly deſtroy it from his place; yea, though it be thus fairly grown, and firmly rooted, the Sun is able to kill this tree, and to draw out all its moiſture, and ſo leave it dry and ſeared, fit only to be ſtubbed for fewel. Or take it for an hypocrite, to whom the ſimilitude referreth. If God come to deſtroy him out of his place, to ſwallow him up, there's an end of him quickly; It ſhall deny him, ſaying, I have not ſeen him.

From this conſideration, that the deſtruction of the tree is ſpoken of ſo immediately after the flouriſhing of it, that word He is gren, &c. is no ſooner out, but he adds, If he deſtroy him, &c. we may note,

That, The deſtruction of hypocrites and wicked men cometh often upon them, in the height of their proſperity.

Even in the time of his greatneſs he ſhall be deſtroyed, and when his roots are wrapped about the heap. Trees ſtand ſo long ſometimes that they wither of themſelves, and then we cut them down for the fire, but this man ſhall be cut down like a tree in his prime, in his flouriſhing, when affliction and withering ſeem fartheſt off, when he thinks leaſt of deſtruction, then it ſhall come upon him; when his eſtate is like Jonah's gourd, a very pleaſant plant, and a great rejoycing to him, a worm ſmites the roots and kills it.

That of Job (chap. 20. 22.) is full to this point; In the fulneſs of his ſufficiency he ſhall be in ſtraights, A ſtrange thing that a man ſhould be in ſtraights when he is in his greateſt enlargement, that a man ſhould be emptied when he is full, that a man ſhould be nothing when he hath all ſufficiency about him, yet thus it ſhall be, In the fulneſs of his ſufficiency he ſhall be in ſtraits. As a godly man hath a ſufficiency in his wants, yea, a fulneſs of ſufficiency in his wants: So on the other ſide, an hypocrite whoſe heart is falſe with God, hath want in his ſufficiency, yea, want in the fulneſs of his ſufficiency. Which may be underſtood two wayes: either that his fulneſs in the greateſt ſufficiency of it, is unſatisfying; or that his fulneſs in the greateſt ſufficiency of it, is upon decaying and abating. (*Pſal.*78.13.) Whilſt the meat was in their mouths, the wrath of God fell upon them; while meat is in the mouth, rich clothes upon the back, while ſtore of money is in the purſe, while the land brings forth abundance of encreaſe, even in all theſe ſufficiencies a man may be in ſtraits. As it was with Agag (1 Sam. 15.) Surely (ſaith he) the bitterneſs of death is paſt; he thought himſelf ſafe, and that the ſtorm was quite blown over, but then, in that nick of time comes Samuel, and cutteth him in pieces. The Apoſtle Paul ſaith (2 Cor. 1.9.) I had the ſentence of death in my ſelf; that is, I concluded, I could not ſurvive thoſe ſufferings, I thought my ſelf a loſt man: yet the Lord delivered him, and fetched him from the grave. But when hypocrites (like Agag) have the ſentence, yea, the ſweetneſs of life in themſelves; When they ſay peace and ſafety, then ſudden deſtruction comes, as pain upon a woman in travel, and they ſhall not eſcape: God cuts them off. It follows,

If he deſtroy him from his place; what then?

It ſhall deny him, ſaying, I have not ſeen thee.

Here is the further aggravation of his miſery, when he is deſtroyed, It ſhall deny him; What ſhall deny him? Some read it thus, his place ſhall deny him. Can a place ſpeak, affirm, or deny? No, it cannot; but it is uſual in Scripture, by a Proſopopœia, a fiction of a perſon, to aſcribe ſpeech to beaſts, to trees, and places too, things not only without reaſon, but without life. Such an elegancy is here, It ſhall deny him; that is, when he is deſtroyed, if any man ſhall ask the queſtion, where is the man? Where is this goodly tree that ſtood here before? The place ſhall anſwer. He is not here now.

וכחש Mentietur ei ὁ τόπος ψεύσεται αὐτόν. Sept. Per proſopopœiam tribuit ſermonem & mendacium rei inanimæ; quod inſolens non eſt in his libris. Ita è loco ſuo excidetur & interibit, ut nullus jam agnoſcat eũ ibi unquam fuiſſe. Merc.

The Hebrew is, The place ſhall lie; the place ſhall feign and ſay, we have not ſeen him; we know not what is become of him: So men uſe to anſwer, when they are either afraid or aſhamed to own one that is asked for.

Some underſtand it of a perſon, Then one may deny him: I ſee them no more, ſo Mr. Broughton. Suppoſe a traveller, who oftentimes paſt by, and ſaw this goodly tree, when he cometh to the place again, ſees it no more, the tree is down: So he, who hath paſt by ſuch a mans houſe, and beheld his goodly ſeat, when he comes another time, there is no ſuch man there, the man is gone, It, or, he ſhall deny him, ſaying, I have not ſeen thee.

I have not ſeen thee.] We have near the ſame words, Pſal. 73. 35, 36. where the flouriſhing eſtate of a wicked man is ſhadowed under the notion of a tree, I have ſeen the wicked flouriſh like a green bay tree, &c. (yet) he paſt away, and he was not; as much as to ſay, if it be asked, what's become of him? A man ſhall anſwer, he hath not ſeen him; yea, I ſought him, but he could not be found. Such a ſence hath been ſhewed (Job 7.18.) upon thoſe words, The place thereof ſhall know him no more; A clear riddance ſhall be made of all men out of the world, eſpecially of wicked men. In that deſcription (Dan. 2.35.) of the four Monarchies, under the ſimilitude of a great Image, whoſe head was of gold, his breſt and arms of ſilver, his belly and thighs of braſs, his legs of iron, and his feet of iron and clay; The Text ſaith, Then was the iron, the clay, the braſs, the ſilver and the gold broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the Summer threſhing floors, and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them; or, as the Chaldee, They were found in no place: A time will come when all Monarchies and worldly Kingdoms, which have ſtood up in ſo much luſtre, which have dazled the eyes of all the beholders with their ſplendor, and kept all their neighbour Nations under by their power (a time ſhall come) when this clay, and iron, and braſs, and ſilver, and gold ſhall be all beaten to pieces, ſo that if a man ask, where are the four Monarchies? What's become of the pomp and ſtate of thoſe great Empires? The places of them ſhall know them no more; no man can tell where they are. There is ſuch a meaning here, this green tree, this hypocrite ſhall have his branches ſo pull'd off, his roots ſo ſtubbed up, that it will be hard to give an account what's become of him.

We find the happy and flouriſhing eſtate of the Church and people of God deſcribed, as if no place were large enough for them to dwell in (Zech. 10. 10.) I will bring them again out of the land of Ægypt, and gather them out of Aſſyria, &c. that is, I will gather my Saints, my Church, together from all parts of the world where they have lived, (while they could not live, but ſculking in corners) I will bring them together, ſo conſpicuouſly, that there ſhall be no place found for them; that is, no place capacious enough to receive them and their families. We have the ſame promiſe of enlargement (Iſa. 49.) They ſhall ſay, The place is too ſtrait for me, give place to me that I may dwell. Now, as the Saints ſhall be gathered together ſo eminently and abundantly, that no place ſhall be found big enough to hold them; ſo the hypocrite with all his greenneſs and verdure ſhall be ſo blaſted and rooted up, that the place where he was ſhall not be viſible, as his: he ſhall be ſo far from filling all places, that he ſhall fill none, The place where he dwelt ſhall ſpue him out, and by any remaining ſymptom it ſhall not be known where that man was.

So then, the ſum of all may be given thus, taking the compariſon from the tree to this wicked man;

That as a tree highly grown and deeply rooted, may be ſo cut down and ſtubbed up, that it ſhall not be known whether ever it grew upon that place or no; ſo a wicked man, though for a while he flouriſheth and overcometh all impediments that hinder him, in the eye of the world, yet at laſt himſelf and his family ſhall be ſo clean removed and ſwept away, his name and memory ſo blotted out, that there ſhall not be any print or foot-ſtep of his being upon the face of the earth.

Whence note, That the memory of wicked men ſhall periſh for ever, none ſhall own them.

If they be asked about them, they ſhall ſay, We have not ſeen them. Peter in his temptation denied Chriſt, Matth. 27. when they asked him, ſaying, Art not thou one of his Diſciples? No, ſaith he, I know not the man. As the Saints under temptation, and as hypocrites in their dayly converſation deny Chriſt: ſo the time will come when hypocrites and wicked men ſhall be denyed themſelves, their places ſhall ſay, We know them no more. They ſhall be remembred only as Pilate is remembred in that, which is called the Apoſtles Creed, who ſtands there upon record for his wickedneſs, cowardize and injuſtice in condemning Chriſt, whom he knew to be innocent. Wicked men are either forgotten, or elſe remembred with a brand of diſgrace. They who have been adored and flattered, and crept to like little gods, ſhall not be owned by the meaneſt men. Even their paraſites who have hung about them, will fall off from them, and ſay, Who, we know them? We know no ſuch men. It is propheſied (Zech. 8.23.) of the Jews, who are now a deſpiſed and ſcattered people (yet ſtill a people in the heart of Chriſt) that God will bring them forth at laſt, and they ſhall be a people ſo much honoured, that ten men out of every Nation ſhall take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, ſaying, We will go with you, for we have heard that God is with you. The deſpiſed Saints, ſuch as the world hath caſt out, and ſaid, We will not ſee or take notice of them, ſhall be honoured or envied of all. Men will be glad to take hold of their skirts, and ſay, Come, let us go with you; O that we might have a part and a portion with you, for we know that God is with you! O that we had lived the lives, and might die the deaths of the righteous! O that our beginnings had been, and that our latter ends might be like theirs! Likewiſe a time will come, when hypocrites and wicked men ſhall be deſpiſed by their admirers, and caſt out, as not worth the looking on by their groſſeſt flatterers. It was a great honour which the Orator gives Homer, a Heathen Poet, who was a man of ſuch reputation, that many great Cities ſtrove for him. One ſaid, he was born here; another ſaid, he was born there; a third, among us was the place of his birth. All deſired to own him, becauſe he was a man highly honoured for his learning in thoſe times: So on the other ſide, every place ſhall be aſhamed of ſome men; this place ſhall ſay, we have nothing to do with him; and that place ſhall ſay, we have nothing to do with him; one ſhall diſclaim him, and another ſhall diſclaim him, all ſhall refuſe him. It ſhall be the the honour of Saints to be deſired of all; and it ſhall be the ſhame and puniſhment of wicked men, to be caſt out and diſregarded by all. They who deſpiſe God, ſhall at laſt be lightly eſteemed among men.

Bildad having thus enlarged his ſimilitude, in all the parts of it, and at laſt laid the hypocrite as low as forgetfulneſs, ſo low that no man will own him, as he is alwayes ſo low that God will not own him, he concludes triumphantly againſt him.

Verſ. 19. Behold, this is the joy of his way, and out of the earth ſhall others grow.

Here's his concluſion.

This is the joy.] The word which we tranſlate joy, ſignifies the higheſt joy, a kind of leaping for joy. It is an alluſion to dogs or ſpaniels, who (you know) when their Maſters come home, leap about them for joy, and in their language bid them welcom. Such a joy is here meant, a joy lifting up the heart, a leaping, an exulting joy. The word is often applied to the joy of the Saints, they rejoyce, and (as it were) leap about Jeſus Chriſt, they triumph in the favour of God. The leaping, the exulting joy, the beſt joy, all the joy which an hypocrite hath, is but this, which hath been deſcribed; Is it not a deſirable joy? A goodly joy ſure? The words are ironical, This is the joy of his way.

Of his way.] Way is taken for the courſe, purpoſe, and inſtitution of a mans life, for the tenour of his converſation, which he holds in the world, This is the joy of his way: This is it. The particle is demonſtrative, This is it which I have told you; as if he had ſaid, caſt up all the comfort and happineſs of that flouriſhing tree, of the hypocrite, this is all that it comes to, his end is to be rooted up and not ſo much as to be owned by thoſe that knew him before.

השוש Dicitur quando gaudio geſtimus, ut canes ſolent quando peregre advenienti Domino adulantur. En hæc eſt exultatio viæ ejus ironicωs dictum. Hæc eſt lætitia qua ſibi placebit in magnitudine ſua. Viam appellat ſtatum in quo erat, q. d. en quo redeat ejus gaudium dũ ita ſeſe efferet. Merc.

There are three things which I ſhould obſerve from this, This is the joy of his way.

First, That an hypocrite may have much joy in his way.

He may rejoyce much in his condition, and thinks all's well. Falſe hopes can produce falſe joyes. Falſe faith brings forth a comfort like it ſelf, a fading comfort, a ſhadow of comfort, as that is but a ſhadow of faith. The fancy of faith is uſually fuller of joy then true faith. Satan helps forward this joy, and God for a time will not hinder it. Faith (though feigned) gives the ſoul a ſight of ſuch things as are worth the rejoycing in, and a ſuppoſed title to them will move joy, as well as a real title doth. The ſtony ground received the word with joy. The promiſes are delicious to the ſenſitive and rational part, as well as to the ſpiritual and regenerate part. Hence (Heb.6.) they that fall away are ſaid to have had taſtes of the joyes of the world to come. An hypocrite may think himſelf in Heaven ſometimes, and then like one in Heaven, he cannot but rejoyce. He may have a glimpſe of Heaven upon Earth, all whoſe Heaven is Earth. This is his joy.

Secondly, This, may be demonſtrative, and anſwers the queſtion; what is his joy? It is this, His worldly comforts, his flouriſhing outward condition is his chiefeſt joy. Then note,

The joy of hypocrites is chiefly bottomed upon outward things.

It is not the joy of the Lord, no, nor joy in the Lord, Rejoyce in the Lord, and again, I ſay, rejoyce; is the Goſpel-command. An hypocrite cannot rejoyce thus. When he rejoyces in the Lord, ſomewhat beſides the Lord cauſeth his joy. He rejoyces in his green boughs, in his goodly branches, in his ſuppoſed ſtrong root; but to rejoyce in God, as God, he knows not how. David's joy was the oppoſite of this (Pſal.4.6.) Lord, lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon me, and that will put gladneſs in my heart, more then in the time that their corn and wine encreaſed. Let me have the Sun-ſhine of thy love, and then though I have nothing but darkneſs and clouds from the world, I ſhall rejoyce. But what ſaith the hypocrite? Let my corn and wine encreaſe, let the Sun of outward proſperity ſhine warm upon me, let me have my greenneſs of creature-contentments, let me have credit and fair repute among men, theſe will put gladneſs in my heart. Theſe glad his heart, when he hath not a dram of grace or goodneſs there.

Thirdly, The joy of an hypocrite is but for a moment.

It is a periſhing joy. This is the joy of his way; you ſee what it amounts to, how well it laſts. His greenneſs is turned into withering, his root rots, and his fruit falls off. This is his joy. He is like thoſe ſpoken of in the Epiſtle of Jude, (verſ. 14.) Trees twice dead, and plucked up by the roots. That's the concluſion of the hypocrite: he hath a name to live, but he is dead, twice dead, naturally dead in ſin, and judicially dead under wrath: he was born ſpiritually dead, and his whole life is a paſſage to eternal death. He hath rejoyced a while, but he muſt mourn for ever. The portion of hypocrites is weeping and gnaſhing of teeth, (Matth. 24. 51.) Their joy is but for a morning, or a day, weeping comes at night, and that night hath no morning after it.

And out of the earth ſhall others grow.

Some read, Out of the earth ſhall ſomewhat elſe, ſome other thing grow: We, out of the Earth (when theſe are removed) other perſons ſhall grow, who ſhall inherit the place, and poſſeſs the dwelling of theſe proſperous trees. For he follows the ſimilitude of a tree, when, or where one is pulled up, another is planted and grows up in its room. Or, others ſhall poſſeſs what he hath gotten. In which ſence Job ſpeaks (Chap. 27. 16, 17.) Though the heap up ſilver as the duſt, and prepare raiment as the clay, he may prepare it, but the juſt ſhall put it on, and the innocent ſhall divide the ſilver. Which words may be a Comment upon theſe, Out of the Earth ſhall others grow; that is, others ſhall riſe up. God will bring a new generation to enjoy his ill-gotten ſubſtance, and eat the ſweet of all his labours. Solomon (Eccleſ. 2. 18.) was much afflicted, becauſe he knew not who ſhould grow up after him. I hated (ſaith he) all my labour which I have taken under the Sun, becauſe I ſhall leave it to a man, and I know not what he ſhall be, whether a wiſe man or a fool. It is a part of the vanity which lies upon man-kind, that after all a mans labour and pains, he muſt leave all unto ſome body, he knows not certainly who. But there is a greater and ſorer vanity upon the hypocrite; he ſeldom ſtayes to take his part, He ſhall not roſt that which he hath taken in hunting (Prov.12.) that is, he ſhall not have the benefit himſelf of what he hath, but others (unthought of) ſhall come out of the ground and grow in his place, This is the upſhot or ſum of all his miſery, he hath laboured for others in temporal things, and he hath got nothing for himſelf in ſpiritual things.

Alii, qui alieni erunt ab eo, & quaſi è terra alia germinabunt, in bona ipſius ſuccedentes juxta illud, repoſitæ ſunt juſto opes peccatoris. Druſ.

Further, the words may carry this ſence. That,

When wicked men are taken away, the righteous ſhall grow in their room.

Pull up the bryars and thorns, and then vines and fig-trees, lillies and roſes will grow the better. When wicked men are removed, good men will proſper.

Again, Out of the earth ſhall others grow; they were not worth the ground they went upon, though they were worth a great deal of ground, therefore out of the ground ſhall others grow. God will raiſe up a generation which ſhall be more faithful and ſerviceable unto him.

There is a fourth ſence of this expreſſion, Out of the earth ſhall others grow; that is out of the meaneſt and loweſt condition others ſhall grow: and ſo it carries an oppoſition between the condition of an hypocrite, and of a godly man. The hypocrite in his flouriſhing greenneſs ſhall be cut down to the ground, but they whoſe hearts are ſincere and upright, though they are as low as the ground, though they are upon the Earth, and are trodden down as mire in the ſtreets, yet they ſhall grow up, they who were growing high ſhall be cut down, and they who were below ſhall grow up; ſuch as they feared not, nor ſuſpected, ſhall prevail over them. They who are loweſt, even as low as the earth, ſhall be raiſed, built up, and ſet on high in the world, when God ſpeaks the word.

There is an Expoſition of this whole context, about which (becauſe many cloſe with it) I ſhall give a brief account. Divers of the learned underſtand this third ſimilitude, not as deſcribing the ſtate of an hypocrite, but as an inſtance in oppoſition to the ſtate of an hypocrite, crite, ſet forth by the ruſh and by the ſpider in the former Verſes.

Hence it is that the Italian verſion begins verſ. 6. thus, But the perfect man is green before the Sun, &c. And ſo the ſence may be given to this effect. As if Bildad had ſaid, Though hypocrites wither like a ruſh, or like a flag, though they are ſuddenly ſwept down like a ſpiders web, yet a godly man is a green tree before the Sun; he is not like a ruſh without water, but like a tree planted by the rivers ſide, which is able to endure the heat of the Sun, yea the hotteſt Sun of perſecution: [His branches ſhoot forth in his garden] he is no wild tree, no tree of the foreſt, or of the wilderneſs, he is a tree of the incloſed garden. which if it want the water from the clouds, the Gardener will take care to water it with his hand. Or [his roots are wrapped about the heap, about the fountain] he is ſtrongly ſet, and he hath water continually to feed and ſupply his branches; Thus the Church is ſo deſcribed by Balaam (Num. 24. 6.) How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, and thy Tabernacle, O Iſrael! as the valleys are they ſpread forth, as gardens by the rivers ſides, as the trees of Lign Aloes, which the Lord hath planted, and as Cedar trees beſides the waters. Thus the godly mans roots are wrapped about the fountain, and there he is fruitful; though the Sun ſhine hot upon him, yet it cannot exhale his moyſture faſter then the river can ſupply him with more. And he ſeeth the place of ſtones, he will live upon a flint, having a lively root of faith continually ſucking in refreſhings from Chriſt, under whoſe protection and favour he remains ſtrong and abounding in the work of the Lord [But if he deſtroy him from his place, it ſhall deny him] that is, if the wicked of the world attempt to root the godly man up: the place, that is, the men of the place ſhall take part with him, own him, and deny to give him up into the hands of thoſe who would deſtroy him. But if the place ſhould not ſecure him, if the power and violence of the enemy deſtroy and pluck him up, yet this is his joy, a godly man may be deſtroyed, but none can deſtroy the joy of a godly man. [This is the joy of his way] he delights in perſcution; he is as ſorrowful, but alwayes rejoycing, even in death it ſelf. [And out of his earth ſhall others grow.] He ſhall have a bleſſed poſterity to ſtand up in his ſtead, in whom he ſhall live, when he is dead. Or, if the power of the adverſary root him out of this earth, in which he lived, and drive him from this ground, from houſe and home, he ſhall grow in an other Earth (The original may bear that ſence.) If he be removed from this place, he ſhall grow in another place; if you take him from his own Country, he can grow in any Country, and if he be plucked from all Countryes he will grow up too, and in Heaven.

De terra alii germinabunt. Pagn.

Thus the whole Context may be made out as a ſimilitude of a godly man, in oppoſition to the hypocrite. But I rather acquieſce and ſettle in the interpretation before, that it is a third deſcription of the condition of an hypocrite. The original and our tranſlation fairly carry it ſo.

Bildad having thus far proſecuted the point, vindicated the juſtice of God, and illuſtrated his former proof by a threefold ſimilitude, ſhuts up and ſtates the point for God, that He is juſt, For he will not hurt the innocent, neither will he help the evil doers, &c.

VERS. 20, 21, 22.

Behold, God will not caſt away a perfect man, neither will he help the evil doers.

Till he fill thy mouth with laughing and thy lips with rejoycing.

They that hate thee ſhall be cloathed with ſhame, and the dwelling place of the wicked ſhall come to nought.

These three verſes are the Epilogue or cloſe of Bildad's diſcourſe with Job: having in the former parts of the Chapters aſſerted, and with great clearneſs illuſtrated the juſtice of God in his dealings againſt impenitents and hypocrites; he now concludes in a mollifying language, with the aſſurance of his favour and goodneſs unto thoſe who return and humble themſelves. Yet this he interweaves with threats of the diſpleaſure of God ſeen in the effects of it againſt the wicked, in verſ. 20, 22.

It is, as if Bildad had thus ſaid, Behold, God will not caſt away a perfect man. Job, thou mayeſt perceive by what hath now been ſpoken, that God is no enemy to the righteous, nor no friend to wicked men: Thou ſeeſt what the portion of a wicked man is from God, and how juſt God is in giving him ſuch a portion; yet know, that mercy ſhall act as glorioufly in the hand of God, as juſtice doth; as God is not unjuſt to favour hypocrites, ſo neither will he be unjuſt to forget the righteous and the perfect man: the hypocrite ſhall periſh, but he will fill the mouth of a godly man with laughing, and his lips with rejoycing.

Or, if we conſider his ſpeech mere diſtinctly, we may ſee two negative acts of juſtice, one toward the perfect, the other toward the hypocrite, with the effects of both.

His juſtice acts towards the perfect man, in that, He will not caſt him away. The effect whereof is, The filling of his mouth with laughing, and his lips with rejoycing.

His juſtice acts againſt the hypocrite, thus, He will not help the evil doers. The effect whereof is, That evil doers ſhall be cloathed with ſhame, and that their tabernacles ſhall not be.

We may caſt all into a form of Argument. Firſt, To the general; and then to the particular caſe of Job.

He that doth not caſt away a perfect and a good man, is juſt and righteous in his dealings and adminiſtrations.

But God doth not, will not, caſt away a perfect and a good man. Therefore he is juſt and righteous in his dealings and adminiſtrations.

Then to the particular caſe of Job.

He that doth not caſt away any perfect man, will not caſt thee away, if thou art perfect.

Therefore, Job, return, make thy way perfect before God, and He will not caſt thee away. Or take this inference. God will not caſt away a perfect man: therefore ſurely thou haſt a great deal of imperfection or inſincerity in thee, becauſe God hath thus caſt thee off, and laid thee aſide.

The like Arguments may be framed upon the other part of his juſtice, in his dealings with the wicked.

From the general ſence of the Context thus given, I come to open the particulars, as they here lie in order.

Behold, God will not caſt away a perfect man.

Behold.] Is here a ſtrong affirmation. This is a certain truth.

God will not.] The ſtrong God, or the puiſſant, will not caſt away a perfect man. God hath infinite power, but he puteth none of it forth, to this purpoſe: he never layes out himſelf in oppoſing thoſe who are perfect and righteous, The powerful God doth not caſt away a perfect man.

אל Deus fortis non abutitur potentia ſua ad conterendum ſimplicem. Pined.

Caſt away.] The word which we tranſlate, caſt away, was opened at verſ. 14. of this Chapter, and in Chap. 5. verſ. 9. There it was tranſlated by deſpiſing, Deſpiſe not thou the chaſtening of the Lord, caſt not away, or caſt not off the chaſtening of the Lord. And in verſ. 14. of this Chapter, The hypocrites hope ſhall be cut off, he ſhall caſt away his hope, or his hope ſhould caſt away and abhor him, for ſo the word bears. The Seventy tranſlate it to that ſence, He will not caſt off; that is, he will not reprobate, or diſapprove, he will not reject or diſcountenance a perfect man. And Mr. Broughton, Loe, the omnipotent will not loath the perfect. Either of the ſences are full enough to the Text.

Non Reprobabit innocentem, 70.

Only take notice that in the words there is a figure; for when it is ſaid, That God will not caſt away a perfect man; this is not all the meaning, as if God made no other reckoning of perfect men then thus, that he would not caſt them away; more is intended then expreſt, namely, that the Lord doth highly eſteem and prize righteous men, he layes them as it were in his boſom and next his heart: thus the Lord deals with the righteous, His not caſting away, is a near imbracing.

Meioſis.

There is a two fold caſting away; Firſt, Temporal. Secondly, Eternal; and in neither of theſe ſences doth God caſt away a perfect man. Not only ſhall he not periſh eternally, but not temporally. He doth not reject or caſt him away for a moment; his love is an everlaſting love, and there can be no breaches or gaps made in it, ſo as to cut off his love to the perſon, although he often ſignifies diſpleaſure againſt his ſin.

The perfect man.] The word we had in the firſt Chapter, where it is uſed to expreſs Job's compleatneſs in ſpirituals; a compleatneſs, not in degrees, but in parts; ſincerity filled up his ſoul, and ſo perfected all the limbs and members of his inward man. Hence obſerve, Firſt, A gracious ſoul ſhall never be rejected of God.

Whatſoever God doth in the world, he will never do this, Heb. 13. 5. He hath ſaid, he will never leave thee nor forſake thee. If God doth not leave a perfect man, he will not caſt him away. The Apoſtle puts the queſtion (Rom. 11. 1.) Hath God caſt away his people? God forbid. God hath not caſt away his people whom he foreknew.

Perfect men are Gods Jewels, not the rubbiſh or offſcowring of the world, though the world count them ſo. A wiſe man will not caſt away Jewels.

Perfect men are Gods ſervants, his faithful ſervants; all the willing ſervice he hath done him in the word (on this ſide Angels) is done by theſe men. A wiſe man will not caſt away ſuch as are truly ſerviceable unto him.

Perfect men are Gods children; they are born of God, and ſons of the moſt high. Natural love will not caſt away a child.

Perfect men are Gods portion, the lot of his inheritance, his revenue comes in, he hath his incomes of glory by them, A man will not deſpiſe his own glory, he will not reject his own inheritance.

Further, They who are perfect come to him in his Son, and he hath pawned his truth for it (John 6. 37.) He that cometh to me, I will in no wiſe caſt out: As if he had ſaid, this thing is furtheſt from my heart of any thing in the world. God calls after many who go away from him, but he caſts away none who come to him. None comes to him till he draws them, therefore he will not drive them away who come.

Again, Perfect men have the Spirit of God, God cannot caſt away or ſtop his ears at the voyce of his own Spirit. They have the earneſt of his Spirit; if God ſhould go about to put them off or lay them aſide, they will ſhew God thoſe tokens and pledges of his love, the earneſt he hath given them to aſſure their hearts.

Laſtly, He hath tied himſelf to them in the bond of a Covenant, they are faſt to him in the everlaſting bonds of his own love; therefore they cannot be caſt off. So he promiſes his people (Lev. 26. 44.) though they ſhould provoke him to afflict them, yet he would not reject them utterly; he might put them into the hands of their enemies, but he would never ceaſe to be their friend; for all that, when they be in the land of their enemies, I will not caſt them away. (Many think when the Saints are caſt into trouble, that God had caſt them away; no, there is no ſuch matter; when they are in their enemies hand, God holds them ſtill in his hand. yea, in his heart.) I will not caſt them away, neither will I abhor them to deſtroy them utterly, and break my Covenant with them, for I am the Lord their God. The Covenant holdeth God and his people ſo faſt together, that they ſhall never part.

We find the Church complaining grievouſly, as if ſhe were caſt away (Pſal. 44. 9.) Thou haſt caſt us off and put us to ſhame, and goeſt not forth with our Armies; and, ver. 23. The Church prayes, Ariſe, O Lord, caſt us not off for ever. So (Pſal. 60. 1.) O God, thou haſt caſt us off; and, ver. 9. Who will bring me into the ſtrong City? Wilt not thou, O God, who hadſt caſt us off? God (to ſenſe) caſts off his own people, when he caſteth them into dangers; but even then their faith takes hold of God, and Gods love takes hold of them. Though all this be come upon us, yet have we not forgotten thee, nor dealt falſly in thy Covenant (Pſal. 44. 17.) Neither had God forgotten them, or dealt falſly in the Covenant; they were his people ſtill, and as near unto him, as when they were furtheſt from thoſe troubles.

God caſts away ſome indeed, but they are ſuch as he never had within the bonds of his Covenant. He caſts away wicked men as rubbiſh, as filth and dirt; ſuch the Prophet ſpeaks of (Hoſ. 9. 15.) My God will caſt them away, becauſe they did not hearken unto him. Theſe were imperfect, not perfect men. God caſt theſe away, not from any intereſt they had in him, but becauſe they never had any. Such as will not hearken unto the word of God, God will caſt away; why? They caſt God away, when they caſt the word of God away. They caſt the Covenant behind their backs (Pſal. 50.) no wonder God caſts them behind his back; he throws them out of doors, when they throw his truth out of their hearts. Perfect men love the truth of God for ever, and the God of truth loves them for ever.

Secondly (For, as we ſaid, theſe words expreſs leſs then is meant.) obſerve,

That, Perfect men are highly eſteemed by God.

He prizes them greatly, he delighteth in them, They that honour me, I will honour, ſaith God; not only will I not caſt them away or abhor them, but I will honour them. God eſteems and prizes them, though the world diſeſteem and reject them. There is many a ſoul which the world tramples under their feet, as the mire in the ſtreets, which at that time God layes in his boſom. Chriſt embraceth ſome in his arms, whom the world, yea, whom their brethren hate, and ſmite with their tongues (Iſa. 66. 5.) Your brethren that hated you, that caſt you out for my names ſake, ſaid, let the Lord be glorified. (Not only the wicked world may do this, but brethren, even thoſe that are brethren indeed in the main, may poſſibly hate a perfect man, and caſt him out) your brethren that hated you, and caſt you out for my Names ſake; but the Lord at that time loved them, as it follows, But he ſhall appear to your joy, and they ſhall be aſhamed.

And if God doth not only not caſt away perfect ones, but eſteem them, then take theſe three cautions.

Firſt, Ye that are perfect, be ſure ye keep cloſe to God, do not caſt him off, do not caſt away the word, any one truth or command of God. Caſt not the wayes of God away, for he will never caſt you away.

Secondly, Ye that are perfect, caſt not away your confidence, Heb. 10. 35. The Apoſtle had ſhewed how cloſe God would ſtick to his people; now, ſaith he, if it be ſo, if he will bring his promiſes to paſs, then caſt not away your confidence. There is a great ſtrength of engagement in it, when we read that God will not caſt away his people, that they ſhould not caſt away their confidence in God, which hath great recompence of reward.

Thirdly, To all, take heed of caſting off, or ſlighting any perfect man; we ſhould act towards men, and think of them as God doth. It is beſt to love where God loves, and to love moſt where God loves moſt. Negative promiſes aud negative threatnings have greateſt force in them. God holds them faſteſt, and loves them deareſt, of whom he ſaith, I will not caſt them away. God will not caſt away a perfect man. There's a negative promiſe. Now ſee the portion of the wicked; that's given out in a negative threatning: God ſaith not what he will do againſt them, bnt what he will not do for them, Neither will he help the evil doers.

He will not help them.] Some read it, He will not put forth his hand to evil doers. So the Letter of the Hebrew imports. And there may be a threefold ſence given of that reading. Putting forth the hand, notes, firſt, our taking men into ſociety, fellowſhip and familiarity with us; when we would ſhew a man how we love him at our hearts, we put forth a hand, and take him by the hand. Now (ſaith he) God will not take an evil doer by the hand, to welcome or entertain him, to countenance and reſpect him, Exod. 23. 1. Put not thy hand with the wicked, to be an unrighteons witneſs: Be not of the ſame ſide, communion and fellowſhip with him in giving witneſs.

Secondly (As the Septuagint gives the ſence) He will not put forth his hand, that is, to receive a gift or an offering from wicked men. When a gift or a preſent is brought, the receiver (if he would teſtifie his liking and acceptance of it) puts forth his hand and receives it. Now (ſaith Bildad) God will not put forth his hand to receive any offering or gift from wicked men; the oblations of wicked men are an abomination unto the Lord: The good deeds of evil doers are evil in his ſight. He had no reſpect to Cain and his offering, He did not put forth his hand to receive *Cain*s offering; but he put forth his hand to receive Abel's offering. This is a profitable ſence.

Nec ullum munus impii accipiet. Sept. q. d. Non porriget manus, accepturus munus, impiorum dona non ſunt Deo grata. Pined.

Thirdly, It rather refers to Gods not aſſiſting wicked men. So Mr. Broughton renders it, He will not maintain, the hand of the miſchievous. To put forth or ſtretch out the hand, according to this Hebrew phraſe, implies ſtrong holding; or the taking of ſtrong hold upon any thing, ſo as by taking hold of it to ſtrengthen and confirm it, to give it help and aſſiſtance. A man that would give aſſiſtance to another in any buſineſs or work, puts forth his hand to him. When we want help, we uſually beſpeak a friend, Pray lend me your hand. Now here, the Lord will not put forth his hand to evil doers; that is, the Lord gives them no aſſiſtance or help in their wickedneſs. If wicked men ſay, Lord, lend us thy hand; no, ſaith he, I will not lend you my hand. We find this phraſe frequent in Scripture. That (Gen. 19. 16.) illuſtrates it fully; where Lot being warned to go out of Sodom (verſe 16.) While he lingred, the men (that is, the Ange's) laid hold upon his hand, and upon the hand of his wife, and upon the hand of his two daughters, the Lord being merciful unto him, and they brought him forth, and ſet him without the City. They laid hold upon their hands: It is the word of the Text. When the Lord ſees wicked men in any diſtreſs or danger (as Lot was in Sodom) or when they want help or aſſiſtance in any buſineſs, he will not be merciful to them in taking them by the hand, or in laying his hand ſtrongly upon them, either to pull them out of danger, or to give them help in difficulties. The ſin of Jeruſalem is charged upon her in this language by the Prophet, in a parity with that of filthy Sodom (Ezek. 16. 49.) Neither did ſhe ſtrengthen the hand of the poor and needy, that is, ſhe did not relieve, comfort or help them. The ſin oppoſite to this, is charged upon the falſe Prophets, by Jeremy (chap. 23. 14.) They ſtrengthen the hands of evil doers either by counſel, or by countenance, by flatteries or connivance. We read (Nehem. 6.) how often the enemies ſent falſe alarms to Nehemiah and the people that were with him, to terrifie and affright them; Nehemiah ſhews the enemies, deſign in it, ver. 9. They all made us afraid, ſaying, their hands ſhall be weakned from the work that it be not done; therefore in the cloſe, Nehemiah prayes, Lord, ſtrengthen mine hands (it is this word) as if he had ſaid, Lord, help me, put thine hands to mine. So, Iſa. 35. 3. Strengthen the weak hands, put your hands to their hands, Pſal. 73. 23. David acknowledging how he had almoſt fallen at the riſing of the wicked, ſhews yet what kept him up; Nevertheleſs, I am continually with thee, thou haſt holden me by my right hand; the hand of providence is the power of God upholding our being, as the hand of creation was the power of God giving us our being, Iſa. 42. 6. I the Lord have called thee in righteouſneſs, and I will hold thine hand and help thee. So, Iſa. 41. 13. That is, by holding of thine hand I will help thee. The ſame word in the original is uſed for hardning the heart (Exod. 9. 12.) becauſe hardneſs of heart ſtrengthens it to do evil. A hard heart is armed for any ſin.

The

יחזיק Denotat fortiter apprehendere, aut potius apprehendendo confortare & roborare, hoc eſt, præſtare auxilium. Improbis nõ favet, nec eos juvat. Merc.

So then we ſee, when the Lord refuſeth to put forth his hand, or to take ſtrong hold (as the word imports) upon the hand of evil men, the meaning lies in one of theſe three things;

Firſt, That he bears no favour to them, he doth not approve their cauſe or buſineſs.

Secondly, That he gives them no aſſiſtance or encouragement in their buſineſs.

Thirdly, That he will not deliver or reſcue them out of their diſtreſſes; when they are ſinking or falling, he will not put forth his hand to hold them up, or keep them from ſinking. God is not a patron or a protector, an adjutor or aider of evil doers.

מרעים

Evil doers.] We muſt not take theſe evil doers for all and every one that doth evil; for then whom would God help? We may then ſay (with reverence) God help us indeed: What a miſerable condition were we then in if God would not put forth his hand to help any that do evil? The evil doer is a man notoriouſly, profeſſedly, ſtudiouſly wicked, one that acts and deviſes evil againſt God and his wayes. Every one who doth evil, is not to be reckoned an evil doer. A man doth evil in any one act; but one act doth not make him an evil doer. A Magiſtrate muſt count him an evil doer who doth evil; and therefore he muſt take vengeance (in many caſes) of him that doth evil (though but once) Rom. 13. 4. and though he repent. The Angels were caſt as evil doers for one act, and ſo was man in innocency; but now the evil doer is one who multiplies and continues in evil deeds; to ſuch as theſe the Lord will not put forth his hand, or give them his help. Obſerve then,

> Firſt, That, God is no friend, no aſſiſtant unto men in ſinful wayes.

He will not ſtrengthen the hands, or help forward the work of wicked men. God is the puniſher and Judge of evil doers, and therefore not their helper.

Evil doers oppoſe not only Gods Law, but his Nature, therefore he will not help them. He cannot exerciſe one Attribute againſt another; his Power will not work againſt his Holineſs, or againſt his Will.

There is a twofold help which God giveth.

First, A common help.

Secondly, A ſpecial help.

We grant that God ſtrengthens the hands even of evil doers in regerd of common help; for no man could put forth his hand to any evil, as a ſinner, if God did not give him a general aſſiſtance as a creature. In this ſence the ſtrength by which men rebel and ſin againſt God, comes from God. But he doth not ſtrengthen their hands, or give them help by any ſpecial aſſiſtance. In the doing of good, we have a common aſſiſtance to the act, as there is a natural motion in it, which God gives his people with the reſt of the world; but this will not carry them out to do good compleatly. To bring forth any gracious act, they muſt have a ſpecial aſſiſtance. Hence Chriſt ſaith, without me ye can do nothing; he means it not of that general ſupport which Chriſt gives to man, by which all live, and move, and have their being in him (in that ſence no man is able to do any thing without Chriſt, for in him all things conſiſt) but when he ſaith, without me ye can do nothing, he means, without my ſpecial aſſiſtance and ſtrength ye cannot perform holy and ſpiritual duties, acceptable unto God. So the Apoſtle, We have no ſufficiency of our ſelves, ſo much as to think a good thought. We have no ſufficiency to think any thought without ſome aſſiſtance; but to think a good thought, we have not any ſufficiency without a ſpecial aſſiſtance. Wicked men are not able to do evil without a common aſſiſtance, but they have no ſpecial aſſiſtance from God to do evil. He doth neither ſtir up and excite their luſts to the act, nor ſupply their luſts while they are acting. Wicked men have aſſiſtance enough in both from their own hearts, and from Satan. Though man hath no ſufficiency in himſelf to think one good thought, yet he hath a ſufficiency in himſelf to think all evil thoughts; as he is a creature, he acts, and as he is a corrupt creature, he ſins. Man hath full power and free will to do evil, therefore the Lord doth not put forth his hand to help the evil doer.

But it will be neceſſary for the underſtanding of this and other like Scriptures, to conſider ſomewhat more diſtinctly, what God doth in reference to evil acts, or the acts of evil doers. He concurs, but not with ſuch concurrence as amounts to the helping of evil doers, or the ſtrengthening of their hands.

The firſt help which God gives evil doers is privative or negative, the calling in, or not giving out of that power, by which they might do good, or avoid evil. Thus he departed from Saul, and then Saul went on worſe and worſe againſt David. God hath ſomewhat to do with evil doers when he withdraws that help from them by which they may be kept from doing evil: Or, when he doth not aſſiſt them againſt the evil of their own hearts, and the pollutions of the world. This deſerting and leaving them unto themſelves, layes them open to ſin; yet the ſin which a man thus deſerted commits, can no more be charged upon God, then the darkneſs of the night can be charged upon the Sun for going down; ſin follows divine deſertion, not as the effect doth the cauſe, but as a conſequent doth the antecedent.

Secondly, He delivers or gives them up, firſt, to Satan; and ſecondly, to their own counſels, to a reprobate mind and vile affections, Pſal. 81. 12. Rom. 1. 24, 26. This tradition is an act beyond deſertion; there is a greater ſpiritual judgment in it, when God makes a mans own wickedneſs active againſt him, then when he doth not make his Spirit or Grace active in him. It were better to be put into the hands of all the tyrants in the world, yea, better be put into the hands of the Devil, then into the hands of our own luſts and paſſions. God doth not give a reprobate mind or vile affections, but he gives up to them.

Thirdly, Evil doers, in their doing evil, are ordered by God. Wicked men (in every ſinful act) run beyond the line of obedience, but they cannot run beyond the line of providence. God limits and circumſcribes the acts of wicked men, for otherwiſe every wicked man would be a monſter, a non-ſuch in wickedneſs, if he could; every one would be a Cain, an Ahab, a Nero, a Caligula, &c. The ſinfulneſs of men would be, not only out of meaſure ſinful intenſive, in regard of the quality of it, but out of meaſure ſinful extenſive, in regard of the quantity of it, it would break all bounds, carry all down before it, did not the Lord order and direct the diſorders and confuſions of it. There is a Sea of wickedneſs in the heart of a wicked man, which is as boyſterous and unruly as the natural Sea; and if the Lord did not ſet bounds to that Sea of wickedneſs, and ſay, Hitherto ſhalt thou come, and no further, it would overwhelm all. Thus far alſo God hath to do in the ſinfulneſs of men, to limit and ſtay them, to reſtrain and keep them in compaſs, while they ſin. Every ſin goes without the compaſs of that law which God hath given, but no ſin can get beyond the compaſs of that leave which God gives.

Fourthly, We may ſay, God aſſiſts the motions of ſin, but not the motions to ſin, or the ſinfulneſs of the motion. The ſtrength of a wicked mans hand, while he ſins, is from the Lord, but the Lord doth not ſtrengthen his hand to ſin. A ſinner hath natural help from God, but he hath no moral help from God; he hath all that from himſelf, from his own wicked heart, or from Satan. To eat, was a natural act in our firſt parent, this was from God; but to eat againſt the command was a moral act, and that was from man, and the Serpent. As ſuppoſe that a Muſitian ſhould touch or play upon a Lute that is out of tune, his touching the Lute is an artificial act, but the ſounding of it comes from the nature of the inſtrument: the ſounding of the inſtrument is from the hand of him that playes upon it, but, that it ſounds untunably, is, becauſe the inſtrument is out of tune. So the Lord by natural aſſiſtance puts the hearts and hands of wicked men into motion, but that they move irregularly, that they make ſuch harſh muſick, that there is ſo much diſcord in their actions, that's from the diſorder and untuneableneſs of their own ſpirits, not from the hand of God. They have not any moral aſſiſtance from God in ſin, but a natural only.

Or, take it negatively, God doth not help the evil doers.

Firſt, He doth not help the evil doers, by inſtilling the leaſt motion of evil into them. He caſts in, or infuſes holy thoughts and motions into the hearts of his own people, to prepare them for holy performances; but he never dropt the leaſt motion of evil into the heart of man, to fit him for wickedneſs.

Secondly, The Lord doth not excite or ſtir up that natural inherent corruption that is in wicked men; he doth not provoke or blow up their luſts. He excites the graces of his own people, when they are to do any good: they have a principle of grace in them, and this God breaths upon, moving and acting it by freſh aſſiſtances. Neither of theſe wayes doth the Lord aſſiſt evil doers.

Further, Taking the words (as they muſt) in a figure, when it is ſaid, God doth not help the evil doers; the meaning is, he doth oppoſe and reſiſt them. Hence obſerve, Wicked men are reſiſted and oppoſed by God in their evil doings.

God is ſo far from giving them any help, that he ſets himſelf againſt them. Underſtand this with a diſtinction.

There is a two-fold reſiſtance or oppoſition that God makes againſt the evil doings of men. There is,

1. A moral
2. A natural } oppoſition.

Or there is,

1. A declarative
2. An operative } reſiſtance.

When it is ſaid, that God doth reſiſt (as this phraſe imports or ſuppoſeth) wicked men in doing evil, we are to underſtand it, that he ever oppoſes them morally; that is, he ever layes a moral impediment in their way, and he ever oppoſes them declaratively, he declares his oppoſition in his Word. He never ſhews the leaſt liking of wicked men in their wayes. For when he ſaith, He that is filthy, let him be filthy ſtill; and he that is unjuſt, let him be unjuſt ſtill (Rev. 22. 11.) he doth not at all approve, but threatens theſe ſinners. This ſeeming admiſſion is the higheſt rebuke of ſin. But take it for a natural oppoſition, which is the bringing out of ſtrength and power to ſtop men in the wayes of ſin: Thus the Lord doth not alwayes reſiſt evil doers. For if he did, it were impoſſible that any wicked man ſhould move one hairs breadth in doing evil; if God would put forth his power againſt man, he could not ſtir to ſin againſt God: but God doth not ſo, neither is he bound to lay a natural impediment in the wayes of wicked men. It is enough to acquit him in his holineſs, that he ever layes a moral impediment in their way. He declareth his Law againſt, and his diſlike of their ſins: and in this ſence he alwayes reſiſts them. All the ſin of man is againſt the will of God, yet no man ſins whether God will or no. The declarative will of God is often reſiſted, but his operative will cannot be reſiſted. As (which may illuſtrate this) in the civil State, the Laws of this Kingdom lay a moral impediment in the way of thievery and robbery, &c. It is perpetually declared by the Law, that no man ought to take another mans eſtate from him violently; but yet the Kingdom doth not ever ſet a natural impediment againſt robbers, &c. That is, we do not place a power of men to guard all high wayes or houſes, to ſee that no paſſenger ſhall be robbed, or houſe broken open: So the Lord layes a moral impediment in the way of wicked men alwayes, but he doth not alwayes ſet his power againſt them, whereby he is able (if he pleaſe) to diſable wicked men from doing evil. Thirdly obſerve,

When wicked men are going down, down they ſhall.

Why? God will not put forth his hand to help them; they, whom God will not aſſiſt or help, cannot ſtand long. They in the Pſalm thought they had got the godly man at an advantage, Come (ſay they) let us perſecute and take him, for God hath forſaken him, and there is none to deliver him. Now we may have our wills of this man, for God ſtands by, and doth not own him. If God be a neuter, his friends cannot ſtand long, how then ſhall his enemies ſtand, when he is their oppoſer? We may conclude againſt wicked men, that they ſhall be deſtroyed, for God hath forſaken them, he will not own them; and as Hamans wife told him ſadly, Eſth. 6. 13. If Mordecai be of the ſeed of the Jews, before whom thou haſt begun to fall, thou ſhalt ſurely fall before him. When a man is going down, nothing can ſtay him, if God do not: his hand muſt ſupport a ſinking and tottering perſon or Nation, or elſe either falls. When wicked enemies begin to fall, they ſhall fall and periſh, for God will not put forth his hand to help the evil doers.

Now follows the effect of all. The effect firſt of Gods gracious helping of the righteous, He will not caſt away the righteous man; and is that all? Shall a righteous man be only not rejected? As mans duty ought not, ſo the mercy of God doth not ſtay in negatives. The Lord hath poſitive bleſſings in ſtore for his people; the latter part of the promiſe affirms this, He will not caſt away the righteous man, Verſ. 12. Till he fill thy mouth with laughing, and thy lips with rejoycing.

Till he fill thy mouth with laughing.] And is it but juſt till then? Will the Lord, when he hath ſet his people a laughing, leave them, and help them no more? Will he, when he hath given them cauſe of joy, caſt them off? His people had better never laugh at all, then laugh upon thoſe terms. No man can laugh long, nor at all (upon any due ground) if God leave him.

We are not to underſtand this [Till] to be a terminative, or a determinative particle, as if the Lords care and favour towards his people, ſhould be only till he put them in a good eſtate, and then they muſt ſhift for themſelves: God puts no ſuch limits to his love. It cannot ſo much comfort the ſoul to know God loves us now, as it would trouble the ſoul, to think a time may come when he will not love us. The [till] here notes a continued act; it is as much as to ſay, He will never caſt them off. The word [until] both in the Hebrew and Greek, often notes everlaſtingneſs. God makes a promiſe to Jacob in this form (*Gen.*28.19.) I will not leave thee, until I have done that which I have ſpoken to thee of. And would he leave him then? No, the meaning is, I will never leave thee (Pſal. 110. 1.) Sit thou on my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy foot-ſtool. Chriſt ſhall not be put from the right hand of God, when his enemies are ſubdued under his feet, Chriſt ſhall ſit there for ever.

Till he fill thy mouth with laughing.

Thy mouth.] Obſerve here the change of the perſon: he ſpake before in the third perſon, The Lord will not caſt away the perfect man. Now he brings it home and applies it unto Job, Till he fill thy month with laughing; as if he had ſaid, that which I ſpake in the third perſon, I meant it as appliable unto thy ſelf, that general truth may be made good to thy perſon, Till he fill thy mouth. I do not ſpeak ſpeculations or fleeing notions of things that ſhall never come to paſs; If thou follow my counſel, thy own experience will quickly teach thee, That God will not caſt thee off, till he fill thy mouth with laughing.

Hoc quod dixi in tantũ verũ eſt, ut in te ſentieris. Aquin.

Laughter is an act of joy flowing from reaſon. To fill the mouth with laughing notes great joy, ſuch an income of joy, ſo much matter of joy, that the heart cannot hold it, but out it muſt at the mouth: joy begins at the heart, there's the ſeat of it: and when the heart is ſo full of it that it cannot hold, then it runs over at the mouth and lips; that is, we expreſs the inward joy of the heart, by ſome outward ſign or token, ſpeech or geſture. So then to ſay, I will not caſt thee away, till I have filled thy month with laughing, and thy lips with rejoycing; is as much as to ſay, I will not leave thee, till thou haſt more comfort then thine heart can hold, ſo much, that thou muſt give it vent at thy lips, and be ſpeaking of it.

Os impleri dicitur riſu, cum aliquis tanta animi hilaritate perfruitur, ut illa cordis hilaritas per vociferationem, conclamationem, riſum, aut hujuſmodi exteriora ſigna valde appareat. Bold.

The word for laughter, ſignifies as well inward as outward joy, heart-laughter as well as face-laughter. Beſides there is a two-fold laughter.

Firſt, A laughing of joy. And Secondly, A laughing of ſcorn, called ſubſannation. With both theſe laughters the Lord will fill the mouths of his people.

Firſt, With laughing for joy: for joy at their own comfortable and good eſtate, for joy that the Lord hath glorified himſelf in their deliverance. Theſe things are great matter of joy to them. And then he will fill their mouths with a laughing of deriſion, they ſhall ſcorn their enemies who have ſcorned at them. God laughs at the proud oppoſers of his truth and people, Pſal. 2. He that ſitteth in the Heavens ſhall laugh, the Lord ſhall have them in deriſion. When the Lord hath confounded the plots of his enemies, he laugheth at them; his people alſo ſhall laugh, not inſulting in the ſins and miſeries of men, but in the vengeance and diſappointments which God poureth upon them. The deriſions and ſcorns of the Saints have more holineſs in them, then the devotions and prayers of wicked men. The word in the next clauſe is conſiderable.

And thy lips with rejoycing.] We tranſlate rejoycing, but the word properly ſignifies, a joyful ſound. So it is uſed (Pſal. 89. 15.) Bleſſed are the people that know the joyful ſound. And it ſignifies to make a joyful ſound, either with the mouth, which is a natural inſtrument, or with a trumpet, or any other artificial inſtrument. Bleſſed are the people that know the joyful ſound, that live within the ſound of the ſilver trumpet which congregated the people of God, and gave notice of their ſolemn meetings for publick worſhip. This word is applied ſometimes to that rude ſound or confuſed noiſe, which Souldiers make when they come on to charge in battel; they commonly make a great clamor, to ſtrike the adverſary with terror and amazement, and to encourage and raiſe their own ſpirits. The Greeks and Latines have their ſpecial terms to expreſs it by, noted by the learned in the proprieties of thoſe languages.

תרועה: à radice רוע Perſonavit, vociferatus eſt, vocem magnã edidit. ἀλαλάζειν eſt lætũ clamorẽ tollere, ut ſolent homines fiducia præditi & ſpe erecti ut milites ante præliũ. Latini Barritũ vocant; clamor quẽ Barritum vocant, non prius debet attolli quam acies utraq; ſe junxerit Veget.

Again, That word is uſed for the confuſed noiſe of worſted or conquer'd enemies, when they flee and run away. So (Judg. 7. 21.) when Gideon had diſcomfited the hoſt of the Amalekites, all the hoſt ran and cryed, they made a doleful ſound: ſo the word bears, as well as a joyful ſound.

Thirdly, The word is chiefly uſed to note the ſound or acclamation of Souldiers after victory is obtained; a prevailing army ſhouts when the adverſe forces are routed and overcome. Thus, in that famous inſtance (Joſh. 6. 5.) Joſhua gives command, that when they make a long blaſt with the rams horns, and when they heard the ſound of the trumpet, all the people ſhould ſhout with a great ſhout, which ſhout is expreſſed by the word of the Text: and verſ. 10. he charges that they ſhould not ſhout or make a noiſe with their voice till the ſeventh day, becauſe that was deſigned for the day of victory, the day when the wall ſhould fall: You ſhall not ſhout or make any noiſe with your voice, neither ſhall any word proceed out of your mouths, till the day I bid you ſhout, then ſhall ye ſhout. Baalam (Numb. 23. 21.) confeſſes he could not curſe Iſrael, becauſe the ſhout of a King was amongſt them. It is this word. That the ſhout of a King may be underſtood three wayes.

Firſt, That it was ſuch a ſhout as Kings uſed to have in their reception and coronation; Such a ſhout, ſaith he, there is among this people, as if a King were to be received and crowned. Thus when Samuel brought Saul out, whom he had anointed for King, and ſaid, See ye him whom the Lord hath choſen, that there is none like him among all the people? And all the people ſhouted, and ſaid, God ſave the King, 1 Sam. 10. 24.

Or ſecondly, It noteth ſuch a ſhout as is in an Army, where a King in perſon is leader or victor.

Thirdly, The ſhout of a King is amongſt them, becauſe the voice of a King ſhould be as the ſound of a trumpet, or ſome loud inſtrument, to enform and direct his people, as alſo to encourage them.

From all, we ſee this rejoycing is no ordinary joy; It is a high, a triumphant joy, I will fill thy lips with rejoycing, till thou ſhalt ſing VICTORIA over all thine enemies and calamities.

Further, This alſo is in it, a rejoycing with praiſe: not a bare rejoycing in the bleſſings and deliverances, but a rejoycing in the praiſes of God, who hath given thoſe bleſſings, and wrought thoſe deliverances. The Septuagint tranſlate it by rendring of thanks, or a confeſſion of praiſe, I will not caſt thee away, till I have filled thy lips with rejoycing; that is, with my praiſes. Thus David prayes (Pſal. 71. 8.) Let my mouth be filled with thy praiſe, and with thine honour all the day long. Praiſe filling the heart fills the mouth; joy as well as ſorrow pent up, ſtifles the Spirit. Hence we may obſerve, ἐξομολογήσεως, i.e. confeſſione laudis & gratiarum actionis pro accepta reſtitutaque fœlicitate.

> Firſt, That as joy is the portion of the people of God, ſo in good time they ſhall receive their portion.

He will not caſt off a perfect man, till he fill his mouth with joy, and his lips with rejoycing. Joy is their due, and joy they ſhall have. Hereafter they ſhall have their Maſters joy; Enter into your Maſters joy, will Chriſt ſay at laſt. Now they ſhall have ſuch a joy as befits them, whilſt they are in their Maſters ſervice. And as rejoycing is the portion, ſo the proper portion, the peculiar of godly men. Though laughing, as it is a natural act, is common to all men, yet in the ſence we ſpeak of, laughter is appropriated unto godly and perfect men: They only can laugh indeed, who have mourned indeed. A wicked man doth but feign a laugh. He laughs to thee, and to me, but he doth not laugh to himſelf: He hath no true laughter, while he laughs. His laughter is madneſs, and proceeds from his ignorance, not from his reaſon. Beſides other marks of difference which ſhall be put between the ſervants of God and their enemies, this is one, My ſervants ſhall rejoyce, and ye ſhall be aſhamed (Iſa. 65. 13.) This joy ariſes two wayes.

Tibi ridet & mihi, non ſibi.

Firſt, From the greatneſs of the bleſſing, which they receive for themſelves. We muſt rejoyce in the leaſt mercy, how greatly then in the greateſt? Our joyes take their meaſure by our mercies. When Sarah had a Son, ſhe ſaid, God hath made me to laugh, ſo that all that hear me ſhall laugh with me, Gen. 21. 6. Her mercy in receiving a ſon was ſo great, that it would ſerve a whole world to make merry with. The man that had found his loſt ſheep, laid it on his ſhoulders, rejoycing (it was a pleaſant burden to him) and when he came home, he called together his friends and neighbours, ſaying, Rejoyce with me (Luke 15. 6.) As ſome afflictions are ſo big, that all our own ſorrows are not large enough to weep and mourn over them: ſo ſome bleſſings are ſo big, that they call out more then our own affections to rejoyce over them.

Secondly, This overflowing joy ariſes from the greatneſs of thoſe judgments, which are poured out upon the enemies of the Saints. The overthrow of Pharaoh at the red Sea, of Jabin and Siſera at the brook Kiſhon, filled all hearts and mouths with laughter, and ſo ſhall the overthrow of Babylon, Rev. 15.

Thus, when God doth great things for his people, and great things againſt his enemies, then it is time to rejoyce greatly (Pſal. 126. 1.) The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we rejoyce, ſay the captive Jews in the morning or firſt dawnings of their deliverance from Babylon; and more then ſo, Then was our mouth fill'd with laughter, and our tongue with ſinging. And there is cauſe of great rejoycing in thoſe great things, becauſe then God fulfils his promiſes, and makes his Name glorious in his providences. Then God is greatly honoured, when his people are greatly delivered; then the blaſphemies of wicked men are unanſwerably confuted, and their mouths for ever ſtopped. From all theſe conſiderations the hearts of the Saints are filled with laughter, and their mouths with rejoycing, in a day when God works great things. At ſuch times joy, and this degree of it, is not only our priviledge, but our duty. When we carry a meſſage of thanks to God, we muſt not come with unchearful countenances, or ſowr faces. It is a comely thing, when our affections keep time and proportion with the diſpenſations of God: when we cannot ſing the ſongs of Sion, or uſe our harps by the waters of Babylon; and when we cannot but ſing either in the reſtoring of Sion, or in the ruines of Babylon.

Some may object thoſe Texts, Wo to them that laugh, &c. (Luke 6. 25.) It ſeems laughter is the portion of wicked men, for wo (we are ſure) is their portion. It's true, worldly laughter, a laughter in corn, and wine, and oil, a laughter in riches, and honours, and carnal pleaſures, as ſuch, is laughter with a wo annexed. But to laugh in the ſence of the goodneſs of God giving us outward good things, to expreſs our ſelves joyfully, when God expreſſes himſelf graciouſly, is not only comely, but holy. When Gods heart comes out at his hand, and is ſeen in his actions, our hearts ſhould come out at our mouths, and be heard in our exultations.

Thus we have ſeen the effect of the goodneſs of God upon his own people. See the effect of his juſtice upon wicked men.

Verſ. 22. They that hate thee ſhall be cloathed with ſhame, and the dwelling place of the wicked ſhall come to nought.

God reſiſts, or will not put forth his hand to evil doers, then follows, They ſhall be brought to ſhame. Shame is oppoſite to laughing: he that rejoyceth, uſually holds up his head, and cares not who ſees him; but he that is aſhamed, holds down his head, and endures not to be ſeen. Some men laugh in their ſleeves (as we ſay) but all men would be aſhamed in their ſleeves.

They that hate thee.] The word hath a double ſignification.

Firſt, It imports the putting forth of bitter hatred, when a man ſets himſelf maliciouſly againſt his brother.

Secondly, It is taken comparatively for a leſſer and more remiſs putting forth of love. He may be ſaid to hate, who wants a due heat and height of love. In that ſence Jacob was taxed for hating Leah, Gen. 29. 31. When the Lord ſaw that Leah was hated, &c. Take hatred in the common notion, and then ſurely Jacob was not a man ſo forgetful of a Husbands duty, as to hate his Wife: the meaning then is only this, The Lord ſaw that Leah had a leſs portion of love then Rachel had, or leſs then her conjugal relation called for. Jacob did not love her with that ſtrength of affection with which he loved Rachel. Which expoſition is clear, (*verſ.*30.) and he (namely Jacob) loved Rachel more then Leah; then Leah was loved, yet Jacob's loving of Rachel more then Leah, is called, hating of Leah. Not to love another in that degree we ought, is a degree of hatred. And in this ſence we may take it here; for though ſuch maliciouſly and profeſſedly ſet themſelves againſt the righteous are chiefly intended and fitted for this veſture of ſhame; yet it is cut out alſo for them, who do not love and eſteem the righteous, who do not prize and rejoyce in them, as the beauty and dignity which Chriſt hath put upon them, invites them to do. Theſe haters ſhall be cloathed with ſhame; according to the degree of their hatred ſhall be the degree of their ſhame.

They ſhall be cloathed with ſhame.] To be aſhamed at all is a great puniſhment; what is it then to be cloathed with ſhame? To be cloathed with ſhame is a great puniſhment, and moſt proper for thoſe who are proud of their cloathing.

בשת à radice בוש Puduit aliquem rei vel facti. Our Engliſh word abaſht is as near in ſound as in ſence.

Shame is the fruit of ſin. When there was no ſin in the world, there was no ſhame in the world, The man and his wife were both naked, and were not aſhamed. Innocency knew no ſhame, and glory ſhall know none. It is good to be aſhamed when we have done evil, but it is beſt to do no evil whereof to be aſhamed. Shame is a perturbation or trouble of mind, expreſſed outwardly by holding down the head, or by bluſhing in the face. And it ariſeth three wayes.

Firſt, From doing ſomewhat againſt common light: though every act of evil hath matter of ſhame in it, yet a man is not naturally aſhamed of it, unleſs it be done againſt the light of Nature. Not to be aſhamed of ſuch ſins, is to put out the light of Nature. Such men are grown down into beaſts. The impudence of Jeruſalem is ſet forth in ſinning againſt the light of Scripture without bluſhing, Iſa. 3. 9. Were they at all aſhamed? Some are ſo modeſt, that they are aſhamed to hear of, much more to be praiſed for the good which they have done; Others are ſo impudent, that they are not aſhamed to hear of, no, nor to be reproved for, the evil which they have done, Were they at all aſhamed? As if he had ſaid, what a boldneſs or impudence is this people come to; they are not aſhamed of thoſe things, which are clearly forbidden in the Word. A good man is aſhamed of any thing he hath done againſt the light of Scripture. Every man is aſhamed of what he doth againſt the light of Nature.

Secondly, Shame ariſes from long delay, or detainments much beyond expectation. When Moſes ſtaid long in the Mount, the people were aſhamed (Exod. 32. 1.) So Judg. 3. 25. when Eglon ſtaid long in the inner parlour, the Text ſaith, his ſervants, who waited without, were aſhamed.

Thirdly, Shame ariſeth from utter diſappointments. If hope deferred cauſeth ſhame, then much more hope deſtroyed. When a man ſees his hopes quite cut off, ſo that he can no way reach the thing he looked for, ſhame takes hold of him ſtrongly. David prayes (Pſal. 119. 116.) Uphold me according to thy word, that I may live, and let me not be aſhamed of my hope; that is, let me not loſe my hope, for then I ſhall be aſhamed; my enemies will rejoyce and hoot at me, where's the word upon which you truſted to be upholden? Read Iſa. 12. 9. Pſal. 27. 6. Pſal. 119. 116. In all which Scriptures we find ſhame following the total fruſtration and diſappointment of hope.

Evil doers ſhall be aſhamed upon theſe three grounds. They have done things againſt common light. They ſhall ſtay waiting and gaping long for what they deſire. They ſhall ſee themſelves totally diſappointed and defeated in their deſires; hence ſhame ſhall fill their faces, and they ſhall be covered with it as with a garment.

Here is more then bare ſhame waiting upon them, the Text ſaith, They ſhall be cloathed with ſhame. To be cloathed is applied both to ornament and diſhonour. There are three degrees of expreſſion in Scripture about ſhame.

Firſt, Barely to be aſhamed, that's the loweſt.

Secondly, To have the face covered with ſhame; Let not them that wait on thee, O Lord God of hoſts, be aſhamed for my ſake. Becauſe for thy ſake I have born reproach, ſhame hath covered my face, (Pſal. 69. 6, 7.) The Prophet complains, that his face was covered with ſhame; his enemies endeavoured to blot and aſperſe him, they poured contempt and reproaches upon his face, that is, upon his reputation in the world, (to do ſo, is to cover the face with ſhame) therefore he prayes, Let not thoſe that wait on thee be confounded for my ſake. Lord, they have covered me with ſhame, but do thou vindicate my reputation and mine honour; let not them that wait on thee be aſhamed for my ſake, becauſe I have had ſhame upon me for thy ſake: that is, let not any be diſcouraged in thy ſervice, through my ſufferings. The Apoſtle feared ſome would faint, becauſe of his tribulations, Epheſ. 3. 13.

Indui confuſione eſt Hebraiſmus quo exprimitur omnimoda & undiq; confundens verecundia. Bold. Veſtimenta dicuntur abominari, quaſi maculam contrahere timentes.

Thirdly, To be cloathed with ſhame, which implies the whole man under a covering of diſgrace. Some are ſo cloathed with ſin, that their very cloathes are aſhamed of them, being unwilling to touch or hide ſuch ſins. Job ſpeaks that ſence in Chap. 9. (verſ. 31.) concerning his own righteouſneſs in juſtification, If I waſh my ſelf with ſnow water, and make my hands never ſo clean, yet thou wilt plunge me in the ditch, and mine own cloathes ſhall abhor me; that is, if I ſhould ſet my ſelf up in my own righteouſneſs; my own cloaths would be loath to cover ſuch a piece of ſpiritual pride, as that act would witneſs me to be.

To be cloathed with ſhame, notes four things.

Firſt, The extent or abundance of it. To be cloathed with honour, is to have much honour. To be cloathed with humility, is to be very humble (1 Pet. 5. 5.) He that is cloathed is covered all over with his cloathing.

Manifeſte confundentur. Aq.

Secondly, The publickneſs of it, that ſhame cannot be hid. A man cannot go abroad but cloathing is ſeen: the filthineſs which lies underneath may be hid, but his cloathing cannot. Their ſhame ſhall cloath them, they ſhall not put their ſhame under their cloaths, their ſhame ſhall be in ſight.

Eſt quaſi præmium peccati, mercedis enim nomine Syndones olim dabantur.

Thirdly, They ſhall be cloathed with ſhame, may be underſtood thus, Shame ſhall be their reward. They have been doing the buſineſs of Satan, he ſet them a work, now ſee what livery they ſhall have at laſt, into what ſuit the Devil will put them. They ſhall go in a livery of diſhonour. Servants are cloathed by their Maſters; Satan clothes his ſervants, and this is their cloathing, they ſhall be cloathed with ſhame. Sampſon was to give thirty change of garments to the Philiſtines for a reward, if they could declare his riddle (Judg. 14. 12.) Satan gives liveries and garments of ſhame to thoſe who ſtudy out his riddles, and do his drudgery.

Natura pudore tacta ſanguinem ante ſe pro velamento diffundit & obtendit. Macr. l. 7. c. 11.

Fourthly, If we take the letter of the Hebraiſm, to be cloathed with ſhame, implies thus much, that when a man hath done a thing of which he is aſhamed, he (as it were) ſends forth blood into the face, in a bluſh, to cover that foul act, he puts out a red garment, or a ſcarlet vail to hide his filthineſs. Thus he is cloathed with ſhame. Modeſty commands nature, and (where it is but honeſtly natur'd) prevails with it to caſt this covering over all uncomlineſs in ſpeech or practice; and though this bluſh appears only in the face, yet the whole body is dipt and dyed with the ſame colour.

Solent qui erubeſcunt manum faciei, quia opprobrium ac dedecus timent, admovere. Bol.

Hence alſo they who are aſhamed, either hold their hands before their faces to cover them, or hold their heads down that they may not be diſcovered. Obſerve,

> That which evil men glory in, will be matter of their abaſement.

The Apoſtle ſaith, They glory in their ſhame (Phil. 3. 19.) not formally, but materially. No man can glory in any thing under the notion of ſhame, but many glory in that which is in it ſelf ſhameful, and will be their ſhame. The Hebrew expreſſes an Idol, by a word that ſignifies ſhame, or a ſhameful thing (and it is the root of that in the Text) becauſe Idols, firſt or laſt, make their worſhippers aſhamed, Jer. 11. 13. According to the number of thy Cities were thy gods, O Judah, ye have ſet up altars to that ſhameful thing. Idolaters ſhall ſee at laſt how fooliſh they have been in worſhipping a ſtock or a ſtone, in adoring the invention of their own brains, which can do them no good in an evil day: every Idol is a ſhameful thing, becauſe it deceiveth its worſhippers: ſo every ſinful act will be like an Idol, matter of ſhame, becauſe every ſin is a deceit, Iſa. 26. They ſhall be aſhamed for their envy at my people: They ſhall ſee their envy againſt the people of God was unreaſonable, groundleſs and fruitleſs, therefore they ſhall be aſhamed; and if they ſhall be aſhamed of their envy againſt the people of God, how ſhall they be aſhamed of their oppoſition and injuries, of their oppreſſion and injuſtice, Iſa. 41. 11. Behold all they that were incenſed againſt thee ſhall be aſhamed. The Churches enemies glory in their own ſhame, and the Church ſhall glory in the ſhame of her enemies; therefore ſhe is called to behold it, as a piece of her glory. Obſerve further,

> They that hate thee ſhall be clothed with ſhame, then, wicked men are haters of the righteous.

They are haters of God, therefore they muſt be haters of thoſe who have the Image of God upon them. As he that loves, ſo he that hates him that begets, hates him alſo that is begotten. Natural men are ſuch haters of holineſs, that they hate that which is but the Image, the Idol of holineſs, hypocriſie; they cannot endure a man who doth but ſeem religious. It is ſaid of the Panther, that he bears ſuch hatred againſt man, that if he ſee but the picture of a man, he will tear it to pieces. Many men have ſuch an hatred againſt true, real goodneſs, that they cannot abide the ſhadow or appearance of it.

And the dwelling place of the wicked ſhall come to nought.

We have met many paſſages to this purpoſe. Dwelling place, in the Hebrew, is a Tabernacle, becauſe they were wont to dwell in Tabernacles. And when he ſaith, His Tabernacle ſhall be brought to nought, the meaning is, His whole eſtate ſhall be brought to nought, not only the walls of his houſe ſhall be overthrown, but all his goods, his riches, his honours, his titles, his children, his relations, whatſoever is dear to him ſhall be brought to nought; the Hebrew is, It ſhall not be; it ſhall be, as if ſuch a thing had never been in the world. God will at laſt make an utter conſumption of wicked men. None who have Tabernacles in the world, ſhall long have a Tabernacle in the world. But the fall of theſe mens Tabernacles ſhall not be according to the condition of mortality only. As Moſes ſpeaks of Corah, Dathan, &c. Theſe men ſhall not die the common death of all men, a remarkable judgement ſhall overtake them. Some take Tabernacle, to note their religious duties, their worſhip and ſervice of God, and ſo their ſpiritual eſtate. Wicked men will ſerve God outwardly, they have their Tabernacles as well as the Saints, they pray, and hear, &c. But, be it a civil, or be it a religious Tabernacle, down it muſt, all their riches and all their religion ſhall come to nought.

οὐκ ἔστι ad verbum, non ipſum, ſubintelligitur eſt, vel erit.

. CHAP. IX. Verſ. 1, 2, 3, 4.

Then Job anſwered, and ſaid,

I know it is ſo of a truth: but how ſhould man be juſt with God?

If he will contend with him, he cannot anſwer him one of a thouſand.

He is wiſe in heart, and mighty in ſtrength: who hath hardned himſelf againſt him, and hath proſpered?

IN the former Chapter Bildad gave a threefold advice to Job.

First, To think aright of the juſtice and judgments of God.

Secondly, To humble himſelf, and ſeek unto God.

Thirdly, (which is implied in both the former) To forbear complaining of his own troubled life, or deſiring the end of it by death.

To theſe three heads of Bildad's advice or reproof, Job ſhapes his anſwer in Chap. 9, 10.

Firſt, He opens his thoughts about, and highly magnifies the Juſtice of God, verſ. 21.

Secondly, He renounces his own righteouſneſs, and proves that no man is to be judged by the preſent dealings of God with him, from verſ. 12. to the end of the Chapter.

Thirdly, He renews and juſtifies his complaint againſt his life, and his wiſhes for death, by many arguments, in Chap. 10.

In moſt of theſe points he anſwers exactly, according to the ſtrict laws and rules of diſputation.

Firſt, Repeating his Opponents argument, and then yielding what was true, denying what was falſe, and diſtinguiſhing about what was doubtful. Which he doth with ſo much acuteneſs and vigour, with ſo much ſtrength and clearneſs both of reaſon and judgment, that one of the Ancients cries out upon the whole matter of his anſwer in theſe Chapters, O how much Phyloſophy (I may ſay, how much Logick) hath Job ſhewed in this reply to the argument of Bildad!

Quantum verba hæc præ ſe ferunt philoſophiã. Chryſ.

Bildad's argument ſpeaks to this effect; God who hath puniſhed thee is juſt, therefore thou art unjuſt. Job in anſwer, grants the antecedent, but denies the conſequent. His grant of the antecedent appears in the two firſt verſes of the Chapter, I know it is ſo of a truth (I yield this) but how ſhould man be juſt with God? He proves and confirms that God is juſt, in verſ. 4. by a double medium.

Firſt, From his wiſdom, He is wiſe in heart. And Secondly, From his power, He is mighty in ſtrength. What force there is in theſe two Attributes to hold up the juſtice of God, we ſhall ſee afterwards.

The fourth verſe is likewiſe a conceſſion unto the ſecond part of Bildad's advice, namely, that Job ſhould humble himſelf. As if Job had ſaid, You adviſe me to humble my ſelf, and to ſeek unto God, it is moſt becoming I ſhould do ſo, for, he is wiſe in heart, and mighty in ſtrength; who hath hardned himſelf againſt him, and hath proſpered? There is no ſtanding out againſt God, and therefore I yield. I fall down and abaſe my ſelf before him.

That God is thus powerful and wiſe, he goes on to prove in the following parts of the Chapter to verſ. 22. by the enumeration of many particular acts and effects, both of his power and wiſdom.

The other part of his argument, namely, the conſequent, that therefore Job was unjuſt and wicked, he denies, and more, refutes it ſtrongly. His negation and refutation begin at verſ. 22. This is one thing, therefore I ſaid it, He deſtroyeth the righteous and the wicked. As if he had ſaid, This is no argument that I am a wicked man, becauſe God hath deſtroyed my eſtate, and my children; for God (in this ſence) deſtroyeth both the righteous and the wicked. It cannot be proved that I am wicked, becauſe God hath afflicted me, or, that God hath afflicted me for my wickedneſs: I know another way how to acquit the juſtice of God, and to declare him righteous, though I do not joyn with you in condemning and judging my ſelf (in your notion) unrighteous.

This is the ſum of his anſwer contained in Chap. 9.

In the tenth he renews his complaint, as before in the ſixth, and ſheweth (after he had given God glory under all his ſufferings) what great reaſon he had to be ſenſible under the pain and ſmart of his ſufferings.

Verſ. 1, 2. Then Job anſwered, and ſaid, I know it is ſo of a truth.

Thus he grants the antecedent, [I know it to be ſo of a truth] or, truly I know it to be ſo. The word hath a double force in it. Sometime of a bare, yet ſtrong aſſeveration, and ſometimes of an Oath. I know it to be ſo of a truth, I affirm or aver the thing, or truly and indeed, or verily I know the thing to be ſo. As if Job had ſaid, this is ſo much a truth, that I dare ſwear it is a truth, that God is juſt, I durſt take my oath of it, if I were called to it; I would ſwear for the juſtice of God, above all things in the world. As we ought to ſwear in truth (Pſal. 89. 49.) ſo to affirm a thing to be ſo in truth, is ſwearing.

אמנם Aſſeveratio quædam eſt rei ſibi bene exploratæ. Radix Amen, fidelem, ſtabilẽ, veracẽ eſſe, unde Amen.

Further, the word is taken either in way of affirmation, or in way of confirmation. In way of affirmation, it refers to that which is to be ſpoken; ſo frequently in the New Teſtament, Amen, Amen, verily, verily, is a vehement affirmation of what was afterwards to be ſpoken, Verily, verily, I ſay unto you. But here rather it is a note of confirmation of the truth already ſpoken: The Syriack of the New Teſtament uſes it commonly for an affirmation; the Hebrew in the Old, for a confirmation.

Amen duplicem habet ſenſum, 1. Ut ſit affirmatio eorum quæ dicturi ſumus. 2. Ut ſit confirmatio eorũ quæ jam dicta ſunt. Hebraicè innotare ſolet confirmationem. Syriacè in N. T. affirmationem. Bold.

So then, it is here a ſealing to the former truth delivered, both by Bildad and Eliphaz, about the juſtice of God; Eliphaz, in Chap. 4. verſ. 17. and Bildad, in Chap. 8. v. 3. Doth the Almighty pervert judgment? No (ſaith Job) I know it of a truth, that he doth not. And ſo the ſence runs thus.

Bildad, doeſt thou ſurmiſe, by what I have ſpoken, that I have ill or hard thoughts of the juſtice of God? Did I ever think that juſtice was perverted, becauſe I was afflicted? I acknowledge thou haſt truly ſaid, that God doth not pervert judgment; and I acknowledge thou haſt faithfully counſelled me to ſeek unto God, and make my ſupplication to the Almighty; for alas! who am I that I ſhould contend with God? What am I that I ſhould diſpute it out with him concerning my troubles, and his dealings with me? Or, if I ſhould be ſo raſh, ſo fool-hardy, and adventurous, to attempt ſuch a thing; alas! I could make nothing of it, I could not anſwer him one argument of a thouſand, whereby he might maintain his own juſtice; or to one charge and article of a thouſand, whereby he might impeach mine. I am no match for God. Therefore I yield thee the whole matter, ſo far as concerns the honouring of God in that great attribute of his juſtice, and the duty of weak man in humbling himſelf before that great God. I know it to be ſo of a truth. Note hence, > Firſt, That in all diſputes and controverſies it is a note both of an ingenuous and of an holy heart, to yield as much as without wrong to truth may be yielded unto.

It is good to agree as far as we can, if we cannot agree in all. We ſhould walk with an adverſary one mile (when it lies in our way) though we cannot walk twain. Aſſoon as Job hears a truth, he falleth down before it. He hath not a word to ſpeak againſt the truth of God, though it come from erroneous men. He will be a friend to truth, though brought by them who ſeem'd his enemies. If this law of diſputation were well obſerved, many diſputes would be ſooner ended. As ſome out of love to men, are apt to entertain their very errors; ſo ſome out of hatred to men reject their truths. Errors cannot be really adorned, nor truths ſoiled by thoſe who hold them. Our judgment about both muſt be carried by reaſon, not ſwayed by affection. Willingly to embrace and receive a truth from thoſe, whoſe errors we moſt zealouſly oppoſe, is the due temper of a champion for the truth.

Secondly, I know it to be ſo of a truth, ſaith Job, Obſerve,

A godly man is a knowing man.

He is eſtabliſhed in truths, eſpecially in great and neceſſary truths, in the vitals and fundamentals of religion, Job had been long acquainted with this principle, that God is juſt, and that every man muſt abaſe himſelf before him, how juſt ſoever any man is. Light is the firſt thing which God makes in the new creation of Grace, as it was in the old creation of Nature: He caſts in a beam, a ray into the ſoul, whereby we may diſcern of things that differ. There may be darkneſs in a godly man, but he dwells not in darkneſs: bring a truth to him, and as there is ſomewhat in his heart that anſwers and is a kin to it, ſo that apprehends and makes out his acquaintance with it, often at firſt ſight, alwayes after conſideration, unleſs he be under clouds and temptations. In thoſe caſes we may bring truths to holy men, which they do not know to be ſo of a truth, yea, which they may refuſe for errors. But uſually a good man knows truth, having learnt it before, or as having a likeneſs to other truths he knew before.

Thirdly, I know this to be ſo of a truth (ſaith Job) in the midſt of his pains, in the greateſt troubles of his fleſh, he forgets not to honour God. Hence obſerve,

A gracious heart gives teſtimony to the righteouſneſs of God, though ſeverely chaſtened under the hand of God.

When God deals moſt hardly with the ſoul, or with the body, or with ſoul and body, a holy heart hath not a hard thought of God, I know it to be ſo of a truth; He doth not only acknowledge that God was juſt, when he puniſhed others, but when he afflicted him. The common argument which the friends of Job took up to prove God to be juſt, was this: God is righteous, for he deals with men according to their deſerts: but Job argues thus, God is righteous, however he deals with men, and whatſoever thoſe men are, let men be wicked or upright, holy or prophane. When we ſee God breaking the wicked, and making gall and worm-wood, fire and brimſtone the portion of their cup; this argues his juſtice, becauſe he hath threatned ſuch with his wrath and vengeance. But the Saints go further, they proceed upon purer and ſublimer principles, maintaining that God is juſt, though he afflicts the juſteſt and holieſt man upon Earth. The righteouſneſs of God ſhines forth to them throw the darkeſt ſufferings of righteous men. The righteouſneſs of God is not grounded upon the object about which he dealeth, whether righteous or unrighteous, but upon the act of his own will, yea upon the pleaſure of his own will. His righteouſneſs proceedeth from himſelf, and he is a righteous act, what ever the object be upon which he acts. We need not ſay, God is juſt, becauſe he puniſhes the guilty; for God is juſt, though he afflict the innocent. We may at once maintain our own innocency, and the juſtice of God, while we bleed under his hand, or ſmart under his ſevereſt ſcourges. I know it to be ſo of a truth;

But how ſhall man be juſt with God?

Mr. Broughton reads, And how can man be juſt before the Omnipotent? And ſo the ſence runs more clear, taking the firſt particle for a pure copulative, whereas we read it as a diſcretive, but how ſhall man be juſt before God? Namely, in your ſence, as if he had ſaid, you diſcourſe of juſtice under ſuch a notion as renders it impoſſible for any man to be juſt before God; in one ſence a man may be righteous before God, but in yours no man can. Would you not have a man know himſelf to be juſt, unleſs he know himſelf to be without ſin? If you take juſt, to be the ſame as without in-dwelling ſin, then it is impoſſible for any man to appear juſt before God: but man may be juſt and righteous before God, though he have ſin dwelling in him, and that's my notion of juſtice in this diſpute.

Illud cum Deo vel ante Deum erit aliquid forenſe & judiciale.

Juſtice is either inherent or imputed. By inherent juſtice no man is juſt before God: according to imputed juſtice, man may be juſt, and is before God. So theſe two propoſitions are reconciled, No man is juſt before God: every believer is juſt before God. Our tranſlation uſing the diſcretive, But, ſeems to carry this intendment, that no man can be juſt before God by inherent juſtice, which the next verſe implies, For if he contend with him, he cannot anſwer him one of a thouſand.

The words taken in this ſence are the ſame with Chap. 4. verſ. 17. Shall mortal men be more juſt then God? There Eliphaz ſpeaks comparatively, in a way of exceſs, more juſt, or juſt rather then God: He cannot exceed God in any thing. Here Job ſpeaks comparatively in a way of equality, How ſhould man be juſt with God? He cannot compare with God at all. Yet the ſence is the ſame, and the denial of mans perfect inherent righteouſneſs is the ſubject of both. A juſt man comparing with God deprives himſelf of all his juſtice. He is not ſo much as man may be, by aſpiring to be what God is. But I need not ſtay in any further clearing, how man is not juſt before God, or in any obſervations from it, but ſhall refer the Reader back to Chap. 4.

Quiſquis ſe authori bonorū comparat, bono ſe quod acceperat privat, ea ipſa ratione, qua quis ſe componit Deo juſtus eſſe deſinit, quãvis juſtus fuerit. Greg.

Only take this from it, How ſhall man be juſt with God? With God; that is looking upon, or comparing himſelf unto God; as if he had ſaid, It will take down all the proud and high thoughts of man, in regard of his own juſtice and righteouſneſs, if he will but caſt his eye upon God, and duly conſider how juſt and righteous God is. Hence obſerve,

The way for us to humble our ſelves for our own ſinfulneſs, is to look up and to conſider the purity and holineſs of God.

If we ſet our ſelves before him, we ſhall ſee how vile and corrupt we are. His fulneſs will convince us abundantly of our emptineſs, his purity will ſhew us our ſpots, and his all-ſufficiency our nothingneſs. If we bring a courſe piece of cloth before a fine, we ſhall ſee what courſe ſtuff it is: if we lay a better in any kind by a worſe, the worſe will appear worſer then before. For the moſt part we who are courſe ſtuff our ſelves, compare our ſelves with thoſe who are as courſe as our ſelves. While ſome men compare themſelves with men, they begin to think they are like God himſelf. A man looking upon his neighbour is juſt before him, or ſees him no better then himſelf, of no purer threed, of no better die in his life then he; I have faults, and ſo have others; I have failings, and ſo have my neighbours; if you charge me with my ſinnings, who is it that is without ſin? As our uſual phraſe is, If the beſt mans faults were written in his fore-head, it would make him pull his hat over his eyes. Thus uſually men compare themſelves with men: but if they would look up to God, O how would the thoughts of their hearts fall, and be abaſed before him. The Phariſee could pride himſelf in his compariſons with men (Luke 18.) God be-thanked I am not as other men are, nor as this Publican. But Phariſee, art thou as God? Pure, and holy, and juſt as he? Look upwards, and pride will down. The holy Apoſtle (2 Cor. 10. 12.) ſpeaking of thoſe falſe Apoſtles, ſaith, They meaſuring themſelves by themſelves, and comparing themſelves amongſt themſelves, are not wiſe. So we may ſay to men in general, while ye take a ſcantling of your own wayes, by your own rules, and meaſure your ſelves by your ſelves, or while ye meaſure man by man, and compare creature with creature, ye are not wiſe; while we go this way to work pride will not down. Man hath ſome reaſon to ſay, I am as good as man, I have ſinned, and ſo hath he, ſuch a man hath as many ſins as I. But if we look up to God, we ſhall quickly find that he hath no ſin at all in him, and that we have no goodneſs at all in us. The beſt of Saints muſt not only confeſs, with Paul, I know that in me (that is, in my fleſh) dwelleth no good thing, Rom. 7. 18. but he muſt confeſs alſo, I know that in me, even in my ſpirit dwells no good thing, in compariſon of the goodneſs of God. Though man in regeneration is made a partaker of the divine nature (2 Pet. 14.) yet his nature cannot bear the perfections of the divine nature. How ſhall man be juſt before God?

Verſ. 3. If he will contend with him, he cannot anſwer him one of a thouſand.

This is a confirmation of the former grant. I (ſaith he) acknowledge no man can be juſt, by inherent righteouſneſs before God. For, If he would contend with him, he cannot anſwer him one of a thouſand.

חפצ Voluit, optavit.

If he would contend.] The word, If he would, is, If he have a mind, or delight to contend, if any man takes pleaſure in contending with God, he ſhall quickly (as we ſpeak) have his hand full, and his belly full of it.

From this word the Church is called Hephzibah, that is, my pleaſure is in her (Iſa. 64. 2. & Pſal. 16. 3.) David profeſſes of the Saints (Hephzibam) my pleaſure, or, my delight is in them. So here, if any one hath a pleaſure, or a delight, or would take upon him to contend with God, or (as the word ſignifies) to chide, to argue and plead with God. The word may be taken either for an angry chiding, or a rational chiding, which is diſputing. The place where the Iſraelites did contend or chide with Moſes, is called Meribah, from this word, Exod. 17. 7. And after Gideon had pull'd down Baal's altar, a great controverſie or contention, a pleading or arguing enſued, therefore he was called Jerubbaal, a contender or pleader with Baal, Judg. 6. 21.

ריב In foro & extra litigavit, diſceptavit, cauſam egit, ſeu dixit, etiam jurgavit, de verbali tantum contentione ſeu actione dicitur. Merc. Contentio hæc, eſt rationibus, objectionibus, reſponſionibus, argumentationibus cum Deo agere. Pined.

Now (ſaith Job) if a man take delight to contend, plead or argue with the Lord, What will be the iſſue of it? He is like to have a cold pull of it, He cannot anſwer him one of a thouſand, poor creature! Before I open that, take this obſervation, φιλόνεικος eſt cui victoria potior eſt veritate. Eſt in 1 Cor. 11. εἰ δέ τις δοκεῖ, non aliud eſt quam εἰ δέ τις θέλει. Si quis ſibi ea complaceat, quod contentioſus ſit Dan. Heinſ. exerc.

Man naturally loves to be contending.

Some cannot live but in this fire, and in troubled waters, 1 Cor. 11. 16. If any man ſeems to be contentious, or as the Greek carries it, lover of victory. Contentious ſpirits love victory more then truth, and to overcome more then to teach or be taught. Beſides the Verb, which we (in the Text of the Apoſtle, tranſlate ſeems, doth rather ſignifie, is to be, deſires, or hath a will to be contentious, yea, boaſts and prides himſelf in it. So the word (δοκεῖ) is uſed, Matth. 3. 9. & Gal. 6. 3. If a man think himſelf to be ſomething, &c. That is, if he boaſt and take upon him as if he were ſome great man. Thus ſome glory to be medling and contending in all Queſtions. Yea, though it be upon as unequal terms, as Jehoaſh the King of Iſrael, by his parable, ſuppoſed Amaziah King of Judah would War with him, (2 King. 14. 9.) The thiſtle that was in Lebanon, ſent to the Cedar that was in Lebanon, &c. Thiſtles will ſometimes challenge Cedars; whom we may counſel as he doth, tarry at home, why ſhouldſt thou meddle to thy hurt? It argues folly enough in any man to love contention with man, and pride enough to love contention with men above him. Then how mad are they both with folly and pride, who attempt to contend with God? Whom, as it follows, They cannot anſwer,

One of a thouſand.] A thouſand is a great number, a full number, and therefore it is put for all great numbers. It is a leading number, therefore the word in Hebrew for a thouſand cometh from a root which ſignifies to lead, and the Noun, a Duke or a Captain, who is a chief and a leader of men, Gen. 36. The Dukes of Edom, or the leaders of Edom, As alſo a maſter or teacher, becauſe he goes afore, and is a chief over thoſe he inſtructs. And hence the number thouſand in the Hebrew hath it's name, becauſe a thouſand, is (as it were) a Prince among numbers, a chief number, a Captain number; and is therefore put for all great numbers, or for the greateſt number that can be imagined: to ſay, One of a thouſand, is as much as to ſay, One amongſt all. One is not a number, it is but the ſeed, principle or beginning of number; a unity hath a ſeminal vertue in it; all numbers are made out of ones, but one it ſelf is no number. So that to ſay, one of a thouſand, is to put the greateſt and the leaſt number in oppoſition, it is as much as to ſay, a man cannot anſwer God in any thing that ever he did in the whole courſe of his life (2 Pet. 3, 8.) One day is with the Lord as a thouſand years, and a thouſand years as one day. When he ſaith a thouſand years, he means all years, all time put together, is but as one day to the Lord. A day was the firſt diſtinction of time; the firſt perfect time that was created, was a day: now put a thouſand years together, it is but as one day to the Lord; All times and one time are all one to him who inhabits eternity. In Pſal. 90. 6. it is, a thouſand years are but as yeſterday, which notes all time paſt, as Peter notes, all time to come, is but as one day, Unitas huic numero oppoſita pro nihilo habetur.

One of a thouſand, referred to a perſon, notes a choice, excellent man, among all men (Job 33. 23.) If there be an interpreter, one among a thouſand, one choiſe man amongſt many, or amongſt all. He that rightly expounds the Text of a troubled conſcience, and interprets the mind of God to ſuch a ſoul, is a chief, the flower of a thouſand, a man of men. Chriſt (Cant. 5. 5.) is called the chiefeſt of ten thouſand, the Hebrew is, a Standard bearer, ſuch are choiſe men, elect of the multitude, Chriſt is the elect of all the multitudes in the whole world; bring all Armies of men together, or an Army of man-kind, choſe amongſt them all, and you cannot find ſuch an other as Chriſt is, he is the choice of ten thouſand, that is, the choiſe of all the thouſands that are in the world.

He cannot anſwer him one of a thouſand.

He cannot anſwer.] Some refer it only to the perſon. He, that is, one man of a thouſand men, is not able to anſwer God.

Secondly, We may refer it to the matter, to the objections or charges, that ſhall be brought againſt him, he cannot anſwer to one thing of a thouſand. So Mr. Broughton, as if he had ſaid, If God brings many charges, or layes many articles againſt him, he is not able to ſatisfie God, or give a good account in one.

Vilem hominum conditionem judex contemnet. Polyc. Tantum non eſt homo, ut Deus eũ ſua reſponſione dignetur. Vitabl. Illud non poterit, idem erit quod nolet, vel per tranſpoſitionẽ verborũ, poterit non reſpondere.

Thirdly, Some refer it to God himſelf, If he (that is, man) ſhould contend with him, he would not anſwer him one of a thouſand; that is, God would not anſwer him one of a thouſand: as if he had ſaid, the matters will be ſo trivial and ſo ſleight, the charges that a man can bring againſt God, or the objections he can make, will be ſo eaſie, that the Lord will not vouchſafe to anſwer one word of a thouſand. Some men will plead priviledge to ſome charges, and all their anſwer ſhall be, they may chuſe, or it is at their liberty whether they will anſwer or no. Here He would not (referred to God) is as much as he need not, he is no way obliged to anſwer, he may claim priviledge. Further, when arguments are poor and empty, a man will ſay in diſpute, Theſe things are not worth the anſwering; or of a book, there is not one page that is worth a confutation, it carries its own confutation. Such a ſence may be made out here, God will not diſhonour himſelf by contending with ſo weak an adverſary as man, or by anſwering ſuch ſimple arguments.

Rogatus homo in judicio divino, hæſitabit, æſtuabit obmuteſcet.

But rather (as before) refer it to man, He cannot anſwer him one of a thouſand; that is, if God come to queſtion man, to lay ſuch and ſuch matters to his charge, or object againſt him, poor creature, he muſt ſhut his mouth, put up his books, he hath nothing to ſay, he muſt hide his face, For he cannot anſwer him one of a thouſand. So in verſ. 14. of this Chapter. How much leſs ſhall I anſwer him, and chuſe out my words to plead with him? Hence obſerve,

First, That there is in man a ſpirit ready to contend againſt God himſelf.

If he contend with him, or, if he plead with him, which ſuppoſes that there is ſuch a principle of pride in the heart of man. The heart of man is very full of quarrels and contentions with man, but fuller of quarrels with God himſelf. The great controverſie between God and man, is, whoſe will ſhall ſtand, Gods will or mans. God directs man one way, and man contendeth he will go another way. There is a natural unanſwerableneſs between the heart of man, and every thing that God doth or ſpeaks; hence it is that man calls God ſo often to anſwer. There is a contention, firſt, about that work of God, the foundation-ſtone of all the works of God, his decrees and counſels. While the Apoſtle (Rom. 9. 20.) ſtops ſo much mouths, he ſhews how ready they are to open, O man, Who art thou that replyeſt againſt God? Thou wilt ſay, wherefore doth he complain? Thus man begins to contend. But, O man, who art thou, that thou ſhouldſt dare to reply upon God?

Wilt thou be venturing to queſtion the righteous God? Muſt he be accountable to thee for what he did before thou hadſt a being?

Secondly, What contentions are there continually about the rules which God gives man to order his life by? Man thinks this is an unreaſonable rule, that's a hard rule, and a third is an unprofitable rule; how many riſe up againſt the Law, to which they ſhould ſubmit, and would ſhift off obedience to the rule, by complaints againſt it? The carnal mind (or, the minding of the fleſh) is enmity againſt God, it is not ſubject to the Law of God, neither indeed can be (Rom. 8. 7.) Words importing higheſt oppoſition, and that, irreconcilable. It is not, it cannot be ſubject; the mind is never ſubject to the Law, till it be changed into the Law. Chriſt ſaith, that one iota or tittle of the Law ſhall not paſs, till all be fulfilled; it is as true, that not one iota or tittle of the Law can be fulfilled by us, till our carnal minds paſs away. Paul found juſt as much ſtubbornneſs and contrariety againſt the will of God remaining in him, as there was of a carnal mind remaining in him (Rom. 7.) As man deſires not the knowledge of the will of God (Job 21. 14.) and ſecretly wiſhes, that he were ignorant of what he knows, ſo he wiſhes there were no ſuch thing to be known; and that the revealed will of God were leſs by ſo much, as it ſpecially oppoſeth his will.

Thirdly, The conteſt about providence grows as high in the hearts of men, as that about predeſtination to life, or the rule of life. The Saints ſometimes (modeſtly) enter this controverſie, Let me plead with thee, ſaith Jeremy, Chap. 12. 1. He doth it, we ſee, with a great deal of trembling and ſubmiſſion; he ſeems to ask leave before he doth it. Hypocrites contend with God proudly about their own good works (Iſa. 58. 3.) Wherefore have we faſted, and thou ſeeſt not? As if they had done ſo well, that God himſelf could not mend it. Carnal men plead with God profanely about his works; as if he had done ſo ill, that they could mend it. Ye ſay, the way of the Lord is not equal: hear now, O houſe of Iſrael, is not my way equal? Are not your wayes unequal? Ezek. 18. 25. They charged God with ill dealing, becauſe he puniſhed them who did evil. Wherefore will ye plead with me? ye all have tranſgreſſed againſt me, ſaith the Lord (Jer. 2. 29.) they began to plead with God about his diſpenſations, as if he had been unrighteous or rigorous; Wherefore will ye plead with me? I will plead with you, ſaith God, verſ. 9. God may plead and contend with man, but ſhall man plead and contend with God? Ye have all ſinned and tranſgreſſed againſt me; that's enough to ſtop your mouths; I can anſwer you with one word, Ye are a company of ſinners, then plead not with me. Plead with your mother, plead, Hoſ. 2. 2. let man plead with man, man with his neighbour. The wit of one man may compare with the wit of another, and their juſtice may hold plea with one another. But neither the juſtice, nor the wit of man, will ſerve him to plead with God. That is a ſecond obſervation, Man is not able to maintain his cauſe, and hold plea, either againſt the works of God, or for his own.

If he diſpute with God in the Schools, or Fee an advocate to implead him at the bar, he is not able to anſwer him one of a thouſand (Iſa. 45. 9.) Woe be to him that ſtriveth with his maker; it is this word, Woe be to him that contendeth with his maker, for he ſhall not be able to make out one argument, or prove any thing againſt him; ſuch a man is in a ſad condition, wo unto him. David prayes, Pſal. 143. 2. Enter not into judgment with thy ſervant, for in thy ſight ſhall no fleſh living be juſtified; As if he had ſaid, Lord, if the holieſt and pureſt, if the beſt of men ſhould come and ſtand before thee in judgment, or plead with thee, they could not be juſtified: therefore David was ſo far from contending with God, that he deprecates Gods contending with him, enter not into judgment with thy ſervant: ſuch a charge is laid upon Job (Chap. 33. 13.) Why doſt thou ſtrive with him? for he giveth not an account of any of his matters. And if he ſhould condeſcend to give an account, can any man gain by it? The Lord argues ſo convincingly, That every mouth muſt be ſtopped, and all the world become guilty before God, Rom. 3. 19. Every mouth ſhall be ſtopped, when God opens his. When God ſpeaks, man hath nothing to ſay againſt him, Every mouth is ſtopped, with this one word, Man is a ſinner. The Apoſtle points at ſome (Tit. 1. 11.) Whoſe mouths muſt be ſtopped, he means, with reaſon to convince them that they are in an error. By this one argument, That all men are ſinners, God ſtops their mouths for ever.

Thirdly, By way of corollary, we may give you that general truth,

That no man can be juſtified by his works.

If we contend with him, we cannot anſwer him one of a thouſand. He that mixeth but one ſin with a thouſand good actions, cannot be juſtified by his works; how then ſhall he be juſtified by works, who hath not one perfectly good action amongſt a thouſand ſins? Man is not able to anſwer for one thing he doth of a thouſand, no not for one thing he doth of all that he hath done. He that would be juſtified by his works, muſt not have one ill action amongſt all his actions. One flie in the box of ointment corrupts all, one defect makes a ſinner, but many good actions cannot make one righteous: If our hearts condemn us, God is greater then our heart (1 Joh. 3. 20.) Should man contend with his own heart, that will condemn him, his own heart would bring a thouſand witneſſes againſt him ſooner then one for him. Conſcience is a thouſand witneſſes; man cannot anſwer before that tribunal; how much leſs can he anſwer God, Who is greater then all our hearts, and knoweth all things! That's the argument Job goes on with, to prove that man cannot be juſtified before God.

Verſ. 14. He is wiſe in heart, and mighty in ſtrength, who hath hardened himſelf againſt him, and hath proſpered?

Which words are a further illuſtration both of the juſtice of God, and of mans duty to be humbled and abaſed before him.

He is wiſe in heart, and mighty in ſtrength.

Here is a double proof in theſe words.

A proof, firſt of Gods juſtice; why? He is wiſe in heart, therefore he knows how to do right: He is mighty in ſtrength or power, therefore he needs not pervert judgment, or do wrong for fear of man. Fear of a higher power uſually biaſſeth thoſe who are in power. Here are two Attributes which keep the balances of divine judgment in a due poiſe, He is wiſe in heart, and mighty in power, therefore there is no turning of him out of the path of juſtice.

Integerrimus judex cui nec ſapientia ad judicandū, nec potentia ad exequendum deeſt.

Secondly, It is a proof or a confirmation of the other point about which Bildad adviſeth Job, namely, that he ought to ſeek unto God, and humble himſelf before him, it would be dangerous to contend or conteſt with God. Why? He is wiſe in heart, and mighty in power. As if he had ſaid, Shall ignorant, fooliſh man contend with the wiſe God? Shall weak man contend with the mighty God? Alas! man is no match for God, He is wiſe in heart, and mighty in ſtrength, who can enter ſuch a controverſie and proſper in it?

There are two wayes to carry on a controverſie.

Firſt, By wit and policy.

Secondly, By ſtrength and power. If man will take up the former weapon againſt God, if he work by wit, and diſpute againſt God, God will be too hard for him, For he is wiſe in heart. If man will ſet his ſhoulders, or take up weapons againſt God, poor creature, what can he do? The Lord is mighty in ſtrength; from both we ſee there is no dealing with him.

These two attributes render God at once the moſt dreadful adverſary, and the moſt deſirable friend. It is a hard choice whether to have wit or power in an enemy? And who would not have both wit and power in his friend? God is here repreſented under theſe two notions, both meet in him, either of which in an enemy render him dreadful. Will any man enter the liſts, or meddle with an adverſary (who would not rather humble himſelf, and make him his friend?) Who is wiſe in heart, and mighty in power?

Dolus an virtus quis in hoſte requiret?

He is wiſe in heart.] It is ſpoken after the manner of men; the heart natural is a principal organ or part of the body, it is the ſeat of life, thither the ſpirits have their recourſe, there they have one ſpecial ſeat of reſidence; the heart is chief in man. To ſay, God is wiſe in heart, is to ſay, He is moſt wiſe, becauſe the heart is the ſeat of wiſdom. As when we ſay of a man, he is holy in heart, or he is humble in heart, or upright in heart, or he obeys God from his heart, we report ſuch a man for exceeding humble, holy, upright, and obedient. So when God is ſaid to be wiſe in heart, it imports that he hath infinite wiſdom; his, is not only wiſdom in the tongue, or ſome flaſhes of wit, but deep, ſolid, rooted wiſdom: He is wiſe, yea, he is wiſdom at heart. A fooliſh man is without an heart. As an hypocrite hath two hearts, a double heart, an heart and an heart; ſo a fooliſh man hath never an heart. Hypocrites will be found at laſt to have no hearts, they are the greateſt fools of all. Ephraim (Hoſ.7.11.) is called, a ſilly Dove without heart. Sillineſs is heartleſneſs. Therefore in Chap. 12. of this Book, verſ. 3. the heart is put alone for underſtanding, I have an heart as well as you (ſaith Job) we tranſlate it, I have underſtanding as well as you. Heart alone notes wiſdom, but a wiſe heart notes abundance of wiſdom. Hence obſerve,

God is infinitely wiſe.

He is wiſe in heart, wiſdom it ſelf. The Lord ingroſſes all wiſdom, and therefore ſtiled by the Apoſtle, God only wiſe (1 Tim. 1. 17.) he is only wiſe, becauſe all wiſdom is his; the creature hath none but what he gives out; he hath it all locked up in his own treaſury, and as he diſpenſeth it, ſo man receives it.

There is a two-fold act of wiſdom, and both moſt eminent in God. The firſt is, knowledge in the nature of things. The ſecond is, knowledge how to order and diſpoſe of things. The former is properly called Science; and the latter Prudence. Where there is much of the former, and a want of the latter, man in that caſe is like a ſhip that hath a very large ſail, but wants a rudder to order its courſe, and ballaſt to poiſe it. Both theſe meet in the Lord: he hath (as we may ſay) a vaſt ſail, infinitely extending to the knowledge of all things: and hath a moſt exact rudder, and ballaſt of prudence, to order and to mannage all things. The knowledge of ſome men is too hard for their wiſdom, they are not maſter of their knowledge, though they may be maſters in their art. The Lord knows all, and he rules all his knowledge.

כוח Differt à חיל quod ſtrenuitatem ad geſta præclara ſignificat, idem quod Græce δύναμις, quæ ſe foras exerit in opere. Merc.

And mighty in ſtrength.] It is much for man, to be ſtiled ſtrong or mighty; but mighty in ſtrength, is the ſtile of God. Theſe in conſtruction note the Almightineſs, the All-powerfulneſs, the All-ſufficiency of the Lord; he is not only ſtrong or mighty, but mighty in ſtrength.

The word which we tranſlate ſtrength (referred to man) imports that natural power, and lively vigor which in man is the principle of ſtrength, which nurſes and feeds man with continual ſupplies of activity. The Lord is mighty in this ſtrength, he hath an infinite, an everlaſting ſpring of ſtrength in him, he ſpends no ſtrength at all, how much ſoever he uſes. His lamp conſums not with burning. His ſtrength is ever vigorous, he knows no decayes or faintings, Haſt thou not known, haſt thou not heard that the everlaſting God, the Lord, the Creator of the ends of the earth fainteth not, neither is weary? (Iſa. 40. 28.) As if he had ſaid, where haſt thou been bred, that thou ſeemeſt to be a ſtranger to this truth? Man cannot do much, and he faints in doing a little. God who can do all things, never faints, how much ſoever he doth.

ἐξουσία.

Strength may be conſidered two wayes. There is Civil ſtrength, and there is Natural ſtrength. Civil ſtrength is authority and power to command. A man is armed and ſtrengthened by Laws and Commiſſions. Theſe put authority into his hands. The Lord is mighty in his ſtrength, he hath all authority, all command in his hand, not by commiſſion from others, but original from himſelf. Natural ſtrength executes and exerciſes the former; a man may have much Civil ſtrength, but if he want Natural ſtrength, to put it in act, he can do little or nothing. As God by his Soveraignty is above all creatures; ſo by his power he is able to bring all creatures under him, and ſubdue them to his command. Thus God is mighty in ſtrength. He hath a right of authority, by which he may, and an arm of power, by which he can make all ſtoop to him.

Hence obſerve, The power of God is an infinite power.

There is nothing too hard for the Lord. If he will work who ſhall let it? Iſa. 43. 13. No creature can ſuperſedeat or ſtay the works of God, God can ſuperſedeat all creatures; when creatures are in their full carreer, he can let them; The power of God is as large as his will; yea, he can do more then he wills. If the power of men were as large as their wills, what work would they quickly make in the world? If infinite ſtrength were not mannaged by infinite wiſdom, what a woful condition were we in? Both theſe are joyned in God. Therefore we can fear no hurt from his power: he can do what he will, but he will do nothing which is hurtful to his people; he will not wrong any creature, much leſs his ſervants. The Lord (if I may ſo ſpeak) is only weak about thoſe things, which proceed from weakneſs. There are ſome things which he hath no ſtrength to do, becauſe to do them argues a want of ſtrength: he cannot deny himſelf, he cannot lie, he cannot do any evil, he cannot ſin. Theſe things import impotency, therefore the Lord cannot do them. But whatſoever is for the good of his people, for the glory of his Name, for the executing of juſtice, for the fulfilling of his counſels, whatſoever is for the making good of promiſes, for all theſe the Lord is mighty in ſtrength. Never fear either a defect of power in God, or a defect in mannaging that power. Sometimes power overthrows it ſelf by its own bulk and greatneſs; but mighty ſtrength ordered with equal wiſdom, is dreadful to enemies, and comfortable to friends. A rude rout, an undigeſted Chaos of men, though very great, never did any great thing. But ſuppoſe a very numerous Army of men, and every man in that Army having as much wiſdom as would fit a General to lead and command them all, what could ſtand before them? Thus it is with God (and how admirable is the union and marriage of theſe two together!) he hath all power and all wiſdom. Every degree of power in God is acted with a ſutable degree of wiſdom; therefore there can be no miſcariage.

Vis conſili expers mole ruit ſua.

Note further, how this Attribute runs through all the Attributes of God, He is mighty in ſtrength; he is mighty alſo in truth, mighty in love, mighty in mercy, mighty in faithfulneſs; a mighty ſtrength is in whatſoever God is.

Again, Take this general concerning all the Attributes of God, when it is ſaid, He is wiſe in heart, and mighty in ſtrength, &c. Theſe are not qualities in God, they are in men. Wiſdom is to them an accident, and ſo is ſtrength, whether civil ſtrength or natural, it may be ſevered from them, and they ſtill keep their being; but the wiſdom of God is the wiſe God, and the power of God is the powerful God, and the knowledge of God is the knowing God. Theſe Attributes are not accidents, but his eſſence; not qualities, but his nature.

From both theſe Attributes laid together, Job draws down his great concluſion, which he puts by way of queſtion,

Who hath hardened himſelf againſt him, and hath proſpered?

Shew me the man: Having deſcribed the Lord in his wiſdom and power, he chalengeth all the world, and ſends defiance to all creatures in heaven and in earth, to meet with this God. As if he had ſaid, Friends, Do ye think I have any thought to contend with God? No, I know not one who hath accepted this chalenge, or hardened himſelf againſt God and proſpered. If my own conſcience would not, yet their harms who have attempted it, might warn me from ſuch preſumption.

קשה Indurare aut obdureſcere. Metaphorice à tactu ad alios ſenſus transfertur, & denotat crudele, ſævum, difficile, quod dura ſunt difficilia.

Hardened himſelf.] Hardening, under a natural conſideration, comes by withdrawing the moiſture out of any ſubſtance, whence the parts of it are condenſed, grow ſtiff and unyielding to the touch: So Philoſophers define it. That is hard which doth not eaſily ſubmit to impreſſions from without.

In a moral ſence, to harden, is to ſettle the ſpirit, or immoveably to reſolve upon the doing or not doing of a thing; when a man doth purpoſely reſolve and reſolvedly purpoſe to carry on a deſign, he hardeneth himſelf to do it. The word is uſed both in a good ſence, and in an ill ſence. In a good ſence, when a man is reſolute to do the will of God, that is, when he grows ſo reſolved, that he will not be removed by hopes, or fears, by promiſes, or by threats; When a man hath not a ſoft, ſequacious ſpirit, to be ſwayed this way and that way, but ſtands fixed and firm like a rock, ſuch a reſolute ſpirit in goodneſs, is a ſpirit hardened to do good.

When the Lord had told Ezekiel that he ſhould find the ears of Iſrael lock'd againſt his meſſages, and their hearts hardened; he gives him aſſurance of a ſutable ability to deal even with ſuch (Ezek. 3.8, 9.) Behold, I have made thy face ſtrong againſt their faces, and thy fore-head ſtrong againſt their fore-heads, as an adamant harder then flint have I made thy fore-head. The words ſeem to carry an alluſion to Bulls or Rams, who uſe to run head againſt head, when they are enraged againſt one another. And ſo the ſence is, as if the Lord had ſaid, I know this people will be mad at thee, and run upon thee like furious beaſts; but trouble not thy ſelf, I will (through my grace) make thee as ſtrong in declaring my will, as they (through pride and unbelief) are ſtrong in oppoſing it. Thou needeſt not fear to encounter theſe Bulls and Rams: holineſs ſhall make thy fore-head, that is, thy purpoſe to perform my command, harder, then wickedneſs ſhall make their fore-heads, that is, their purpoſes to diſobey what I command. As to be hardened in ſin is worſe then ſinning, ſo to be hardened in doing good, is better then doing good. Sin and grace act moſt like themſelves, when they act againſt all oppoſition. As an adamant have I made thy face. The adamant is inſuperable, as the notation of the word imports. A heart thus hardened in holineſs overcomes all the fears and terrors which the world can raiſe againſt it. Heroical Luther was thus hardened, when he ſaid, he would go to Worms, though the tiles upon every houſe in that City were match'd with a like number of Devils, ready to reſiſt him and the truth of Chriſt. But uſually hardening is taken in an ill ſence: and ſo to harden the ſpirit, noteth, Adamas ejus creditur eſſe naturæ, ut domet omnia neq; ipſe ab ulla vi ſive arte domari poſſit. Unde nomen traxit; ἀδάμας, ſonat indomitũ. Sanct. *in Ezek.*3.

First, A reſolving to ſin, whatſoever God ſaith or doth. To ſin againſt the word and works of God, that's hardening of the heart againſt God: when a man will go on in his way, though a threat be ſounding in his ears, and a judgment appear terribly before his eyes; ſuch a man is hardened indeed, he is grown valiant and couragious in wickedneſs.

Obdurare cor eſt Deũ loquentem nolle audire, contemnere, pervicaciter reſiſtere, nec ſe ejus verbo ſubjicere velle. Par. in Heb. 3. v. 8.

Secondly, A man hardens himſelf againſt God, when he ſpeaks ſtoutly againſt God: the hardneſs of the heart appears in the tongue (Mal. 3.13.) Your words have been ſtout againſt me. Stout words are a ſign of ſtout ſpirits. Our language is uſually the image of our minds. So the word of the Text is uſed (2 *Sam.*19.43.) The words of the men of Judah were fiercer then the words of the men of Iſrael: Their words were harder then the words of the men of Iſrael; they ſpake more reſolutely and manly. When a man ſets himſelf to ſpeak boldly againſt God, the wayes or the works of God, he hardens himſelf againſt God fearfully.

Thirdly, We harden our ſelves againſt God, when we are diſpleaſed with what God doth; that man makes a bold adventure, who dares paſs but an unpleaſing thought againſt the wayes or works of God.

Fourthly, Not to be ſatisfied with what God doth is a degree of hardening our ſelves againſt God: diſcontents and unquietneſſes upon our ſpirits are oppoſitions.

Fifthly, Not to give God glory in what he doth, hath ſomewhat in it of hardening of our ſelves againſt God.

And laſtly, He that will not give God glory in what he commands, is in a degree hardened againſt God. We may ſee what it is to harden our ſelves againſt God by the oppoſite of it (Prov. 28.14.) Bleſſed is the man that feareth alwayes, but he that hardeneth himſelf ſhall fall into miſchief. Hardneſs is contrary to holy fear; holy fear is a diſpoſition of heart, ready to yield to God in every thing: A man thus fearing, quickly takes impreſſions of the word, will, and works of God; and therefore whoſoever doth not comply with God in holy ſubmiſſion to his will, hardens himſelf in part againſt God.

That which is here chiefly meant is, the groſſer act of hardneſs, when men either ſpeak or go on in their way acting againſt God; let him ſay what he will, his word ſtops them not; or do what he will, his works ſtop them not. They are like the adamant, the hammer of the Word makes no impreſſion upon hard hearts, but recoyls back again upon him that ſtrikes with it. More diſtinctly, this is either a ſenſible hardneſs of heart, of which the Church complains (*Iſa.*63.15.) Wherefore haſt thou hardened our hearts? &c. Or an inſenſible hardneſs, which in ſome ariſes from ignorance, in others from malice and obſtinacy.

Further, We read of Gods hardening mans heart, and ſometimes of mans hardening his own heart. There is a three-fold hardneſs of heart.

Firſt, Natural, which is the common ſtock of all men; we receive the ſtone of a hard heart by deſcent; every man comes into the world hardened againſt God.

Secondly, There is an acquired hardneſs of heart. Men harden themſelves, and add to their former hardneſs. He ſtretcheth out his hand againſt God, and ſtrengtheneth himſelf againſt the Almighty, Job 15.25. There is a growth in ſin, as well as a growth in grace; many acts make hardneſs more habitual (2 *Chron.*36.13.) He ſtiffened his neck, and hardened his heart from turning unto the Lord. I know thy rebellion, and thy ſtiff neck, Deut. 31.27.

Thirdly, There is a judiciary hardneſs of heart, an hard heart inflicted by God, as a judge, When men will harden their hearts againſt God, he agrees it, their hearts ſhall be hard, he will take away all the means which ſhould ſoften and moiſten them, he will not give them any help to make them pliable to his will, or he will not bleſs it to them. He will ſpeak to his Prophets, and they ſhall make their hearts fat (that is, ſenſleſs) and their ears heavy, that is, heedleſs under all they ſpeak, Iſa. 6.10. Thus alſo God hardened the heart of Pharaoh, and of the Ægyptians, by the miniſtery of Moſes and Aaron.

So then we having hardneſs of heart by nature, do by cuſtom acquire a farther hardneſs, and the Lord in wrath inflicteth hardneſs, then the ſinner is pertinacious in ſinning. All theſe put together make him irrecoverably ſinful, His neck is an iron ſinew, and his brow braſs, Iſa. 48.4. Obſerve,

First, There is an active hardneſs of heart, or man hardens his own heart.

Exod.5. We read of Pharaoh hardening his heart, before the Lord hardened it; Who is the Lord (ſaith he) that I ſhould let Iſrael go? Here was Pharaoh hardening his heart, and ſteeling his ſpirit againſt the command of God; God ſent him a command to let Iſrael go; he replies, Who is the Lord? I know not the Lord; who is this that takes upon him to command me? Am not I King of Ægypt? I know no Peer, much leſs Superior Lord. It was true indeed, poor creature! he did not know the Lord; Pharaoh ſpake right in that, I know not the Lord; if he had, he would never have ſaid, I will not let Iſrael go, he would have let all go at his command, had he known who the Lord was that commanded. Thus Sennacherib (2 Chron. 32.14.) blaſphemes by his meſſengers, Who was there among all the gods of thoſe Nations that my fathers utterly deſtroyed, that could deliver his people out of my hand, that your God ſhould be able to deliver you out of mine hand? Theſe are hard words againſt God, and hardening words to man.

Every act of ſin hardens the heart of man, but the heat of blaſphemy at once ſhews and puts it into the extremity of hardneſs. Man hardens himſelf againſt God, four wayes eſpecially.

Firſt, Upon preſumption of mercy; many do evil, becauſe they hear God is good; they turn his grace into wantonneſs, and are without all fear of the Lord, becauſe there is mercy ſo much with the Lord.

Secondly, The patience of God, or his delayes of judgement, harden others; becauſe God is ſlow to ſtrike, they are ſwift to ſin. If the ſound of judgment be not at the heels of ſin, they conclude, there is no ſuch danger in ſin; Solomon obſerved this (*Eccl.*8.11.) Becauſe ſentence againſt an evil work is not executed ſpeedily, therefore the heart of the ſons of men is fully ſet in them to do evil, or, it is full in them to do evil. They have not ſome velleities and propenſions, ſome motions and inclinations, ſome queries and debates about it, but the matter (upon this ground) is fully ſtated and determined, they are ſo full of it, that they have no room in their hearts for better thoughts or counſels: the ſum of all is, they are hardned and reſolved to do evil.

Thirdly, Groſs ignorance hardens many. Firſt, Ignorance of themſelves. And ſecondly, Ignorance of God; he that knows not what he ought to do, cares not much what he doth. None are ſo venturous as they, who know not their danger. Pharaoh ſaid, I know not the Lord; he knew not the Lord, nor himſelf, therefore he ran on blind-fold, and deſperately hardened himſelf againſt the Lord.

Fourthly, Hardneſs of heart in ſinning is contracted from the multitude of thoſe who ſin. They think none ſhall ſuffer for that which ſo many do. The Law of Moſes ſaid, Thou ſhalt not follow a multitude to do evil (Exod. 23. 2.) There is a ſpecial reſtraint upon it, becauſe man is ſo eaſily led by many. The heart is ready to flatter it ſelf into an opinion, that God will not be very angry when a practice is grown common; this is the courſe of the world, this is the way of moſt men; therefore ſurely no great danger in it. And examples harden chiefly upon three conſiderations.

Ego homunc io non facerem. Ter.

Firſt, If great ones go that way; the Heathen brings in a young man, who hearing of the adulteries and wickedneſſes of the gods, ſaid, what! Do they ſo, and ſhall I ſtick at it?

Secondly, If ſome wiſe and learned men go that way, ignorant and unlearned men conclude they may.

Thirdly, If any godly men, ſuch as make more then ordinary profeſſion, do ſuch things, then who may not? The failings of the Saints are a countenance to wicked men in their follies. They are apt to follow the dark ſide of the cloud, and to approve thoſe in what they do ill, whom they ſcorn in what they do well. They imitate their falls and ſins, whoſe repentance they never think of imitating.

How many harden their hearts by their doing what is evil, whoſe hearts have been broken becauſe they did evil; from the ſin which a holy man commits againſt his purpoſe and reſolution, many purpoſe and reſolve to commit it.

Upon theſe, and the like grounds, the heart of man is hardened againſt God. Take a brief of the degrees of this hardneſs; ſee by what ſteps the heart riſes ſo high in ſinning. Man doth not grow hard at once, much leſs hardeſt; but when once he begins to harden himſelf, where he ſhall make an end he knows not.

The firſt ſtep is, the taking time and leave to meditate upon ſin, and roll it up and down in the thoughts. A hard heart lets vain thoughts dwell in it. A holy heart would not let them lodge with it.

A ſecond ſtep is, ſome taſtes of pleaſure and delight in ſin. It proves a ſweet morſel under his tongue. As the heart grows more delighted in ſin, ſo more hardened in ſin. Nothing ſhould be ſo bitter as ſin in the act; for nothing would be ſo bitter as ſin in the iſſue: but when the act is pleaſant, the iſſue is ſeldom ſuſpected.

Improbè Neptunum accuſat, qui iterum naufragium facit.

The third ſtep is, cuſtom in ſinning. It argues great boldneſs to venture often. One ſaid of him that had eſcaped danger at ſea, if you go again, you have no reaſon to complain, though you be wrack'd. Mariners are fearful of ſtorms at firſt, but through cuſtom they play with them. When a man comes off once ſafe from ſin, he will venture again, and ſo often, till at laſt he thinks there is ſcarce any venture at all in ſin. He grows bold and hardy.

By the fourth ſtep of hardneſs he comes to defend and maintain his ſin. He hath ſpoken ſo long in his heart againſt the word, which forbiddeth him to ſin, that now he can ſpeak againſt it with his tongue. He hath a plea or an argument to make the evil he doth, good. He appears a Patron, an Advocate for ſin, who was before but a practiſer of it.

Fifthly, The hard heart grows angry and paſſionate with thoſe who give advice againſt ſin; he is reſolved; and a man that is reſolved in his way, is angry if he be deſired to remove out of his way. He that is reſolved to ſleep, loves not to be awakened; A touch or a jog from him that ſits by, provokes him, he prayes to be let alone. We ſhould love the man, while we hate and reprove his ſin. But he that loves his ſin, will hate his reprovers.

Sixthly, Hard hearts grow too hard for the Word, they are Sermon-proof; they can ſit under the Preacher, and hear from day to day, but nothing touches them. A man in armour feels not the ſtroak of a ſword, much leſs the ſmart of a rod. This hardneſs of heart is a ſteel armour to the heart; it makes the man paſt feeling, till he be paſt healing. Some being often reproved, harden their hearts (Prov. 29. 1.) till their hearts are too hard for all reproofs.

And then ſeventhly, The heart is ſo hard, that the ſword of affliction doth not pierce it; the man is judgment-proof: let God ſtrike him in his perſon or eſtate, let God ſet the world afire about his ears, yet on he goes. He is like the man of whom Solomon ſpeaks (Prov. 23. 34.) who lies ſleeping in a ſtorm upon the top of the Maſt.

Eighthly, The hard heart ſits down in the chair of the ſcorner; he derides the Word, and mocks at the Judgments of God. When Lot ſpake to his Sons-in-Law about fire and brimſtone ready to fall upon Sodom and conſume it, the Text ſaith, He ſeemed as one that mocked unto his Sons-in-Law. What, tell us of judgments? of fire deſcending from Heaven? When the Skie falls, we ſhall have Larks.

Laſtly, The hard heart gets up to the Tribunal of the perſecutor, and from ſcorner, commences oppoſer of good men, and of the good wayes of God; he will do them the uttermoſt miſchief he can, who would do him all the good they can. Get thee from me (ſaith Pharaoh to Moſes, Exod. 10. 28.) Take heed to thy ſelf; ſee my face no more; for in the day that thou ſeeſt my face, thou ſhalt die. Pharaoh's hard heart ſpake hard words, and was preparing to give hard blows; he had only ſo much of honour and ingenuity left, as to warn the Prophet to avoid the blow: Which yet is more then hardneſs of heart leaves to all. Many an hard heart uſes the hand before the tongue; and inſtead of ſaying to his reprover, See my face no more leſt thou die, calls him before his face that he may die, or ſeek his death behind his back, and lies in wait for revenge. And here hardneſs of heart is at hardeſt: It is now a fit cuſhion for Satan; he ſits ſofteſt upon this ſtone. The Devil is never ſo much pleaſed, as when man is moſt hardened; the ſeed of his temptations takes root and proſpers beſt in this ſtonie ground.

But ſhall man proſper too? Shall any man thrive or make gain by hardening himſelf againſt God? Shall he come off with honour or with profit? Job anſwereth, Who hath hardened himſelf againſt him, and hath proſpered? Which may be reſolved into this negative propoſition, No man ever hardened himſelf againſt God, and proſpered.

וישלם Et pacatus fuit, vel in pace abiit (i. e.) fœliciter & bene ceſſerit. Merc.

The Hebrew thus, Hath any man hardened himſelf againſt God, and had peace? Mr. Broughton renders near it; Hath any man hardened himſelf againſt God, and found quietneſs? To have peace or quietneſs, and to proſper, are the ſame in the language of the Jews, and in a hundred Texts of the Old Teſtament.

We may underſtand Job either of theſe three wayes.

Nemo pertinax gloriari poteſt quod poſt conſecutam victoriam pace potitus fuerit. Pin.

Firſt, No pertinacious hard-hearted man could ever glory that he got the better or the day of God, and ſo proſpered into a peace by war; that's a way of proſperity in which he ſhall never tread. Gideon told the men of Penuel, When I come again in peace, that is, when I have conquered, and return proſperous, then, &c. No man ever conquered God, and ſo returned in peace. Peace was never the Trophy of a war with him.

Nemo cum Deo pugnās, ſic eum aſſidua pugna fatigavit, ut pacem accipiat ultro à Deo oblatā. Idem.

Ab æquipollente pacem aliquis pugnando obtinere poteſt, licet enim eum ſuperare non poſſit, tamen aſſiduitate pugnæ eum fatigat, ut ad pacem reducatur. Aquin.

Secondly, Who ever hardened himſelf againſt God, and proſpered? That is, Did ever any man ſo weary out God by lengthening this war, that God was (as it were) forced at laſt to offer him terms of peace? So it happens ſometimes with men, with Nations and Kingdoms: They not getting peace by victory, but being ſpent and tired out with war, begin to think of treating. Did ever any one put the Lord to offer a treaty with articles of peace, to ſave himſelf from further trouble? They who have not ſtrength enough to overcome, may yet have power enough to vex and weary their adverſary. But God can neither be vanquiſhed by force, nor vext with our policies into a peace with man.

Quis permanſit aut perſtetit, ὑπέμεινεν. Sep.

Thirdly, Others give this ſence, Who ever held out, or was able to perſiſt in a war againſt the Lord? The wicked ſhall not ſtand before God in the day of judgment, much leſs in the day of battel; Who would ſet the briars and thorns againſt me in battel? I would go through them, I would burn them together (Iſa. 27. 4.) The moſt ſteely and flinty ſpirits in the world can no more ſtand before God, then briars and thorns can before a flaming fire. The Lord ſoon breaks and deſtroyes all oppoſing power. And ſo there is a figure in the words; for man doth not only not proſper, but he is undone and cruſht for ever, by contending with God. Shall man proſper in a war with God? No, it ſhall end in his own ruine and utter deſtruction.

Hence obſerve, That, Nothing can be got but blows by contending with God.

Hoc eſt ſignum evidẽs, quod fortitudo Dei omnem humanam fortitudinem excedit, quia nullus cum eo pacem habere poteſt reſiſtendo, ſed ſolum humiliter obediendo. Aqr. Viciſti; Galilæe.

The greateſt Monarchs in the world have at one time or other found their matches, but the great God never found his match. Pharaoh contended with him, but did he proſper in it? You ſee what became of him at laſt, he was drowned in the Red Sea. Julian contended with Chriſt, he ſcoffed at him (he came up to the higheſt degrees, he ſate in the chair of the ſcorner, and in the tribunal of the perſecutor) but what got he at laſt? When he was wounded, and threw up his blood toward heaven, ſaid he not, O Galilean, thou haſt overcome; I acknowledge thy power, whoſe name and truth I have oppoſed. Chriſt, whom he had derided, and againſt whom he hardned himſelf into ſcorns and ſcoffs, was too hard for him. All that harden themſelves againſt God ſhall be worſted. Gather your ſelves together, O ye people, and ye ſhall be broken in pieces (Iſa. 8.9.) Gather your ſelves together; againſt whom? Gather your ſelves together againſt the people of God, and ye ſhall be broken in pieces; why? Emanuel, the Lord is with us. If no man can proſper by hardning himſelf againſt the people of God, becauſe the Lord is with them, how ſhall any man proſper by hardning himſelf immediately againſt God? If Emanuel will not let any proſper againſt his people, certainly he will not let any proſper againſt himſelf. Therefore (Prov. 28.24.) Solomon layes it down directly; He that hardneth his heart, ſhall fall into miſchief; & (Prov. 29. 1.) He ſhall be deſtroyed, and that without remedie; there is no help for it, all the world cannot ſave him. A hard heart is it ſelf the foreſt of all judgments, and it brings all judgments upon us. A hard heart treaſureth up wrath againſt the day of wrath (Rom. 2.5.) As a hard heart is Satans treaſury for ſin, ſo it is Gods treaſury for wrath. The walls of that fiery Tophet are built up with theſe ſtones, with their hard hearts who turn themſelves into ſtones againſt the Lord.

Then take heed of hardning your ſelves againſt God. You know the counſel which Gamaliel gave, Acts 5.39. Refrain from theſe men, and let them alone, &c. (See how tremblingly he ſpeaks) leſt you be found even to fight againſt God; as if he had ſaid, take heed what you do, it is the moſt dreadful thing in the world to contend with God; he ſpeaks as of a thing he would not have them come near, or be in the remoteſt tendency to. Man will not meddle with a mortal man if he be too hard for him; how ſhould we tremble to meddle or contend with the immortal God? Chriſt, Luke 14. warning his Diſciples to conſider aforehand what it is to be his Diſciples, gives them an inſtance of a King: What King (ſaith he) going to make war againſt another King, ſitteth not down firſt and conſulteth, whether he be able with ten thouſand to meet him that cometh againſt him with twenty thouſand? Now I ſay to you (if any ſuch be here) that have hearts ſteeled or hardned againſt God, who challenge God the field, and ſend defiance to heaven, O ſit down, ſit down, conſider whether you with ten thouſand are able to meet God with his twenty thouſand, that's great odds, half in half; but conſider whether one ſingle, ſimple man can ſtand againſt his twenty thouſand; whether a man of no ſtrength can ſtand againſt infinite ſtrength; whether you who have no wiſdom, are able to ſtand againſt him who is of infinite wiſdom. Can ignorance contend with knowledge, folly with wiſdom, weakneſs with ſtrength, an earthen veſſel with an iron rod? O the boldneſs and madneſs of men, who will hazard themſelves upon ſuch diſadvantages. He is wiſe in heart, and mighty in power: who hath hardened himſelf againſt him, and hath proſpered?

And as God is ſo powerful, that no wicked man in the world can mend himſelf by contending with him; ſo neither can any of his own people. If they harden themſelves againſt God, they ſhall not proſper. To harden the heart againſt God, is not only the ſin of a Pharaoh, of a Senacherib, and of a Julian, but poſſibly it may be the ſin of a Believer, the ſin of a Saint. And therefore the Apoſtle, Heb. 3. gives them caution, Take heed leſt any of your hearts be hardened through the deceitfulneſs of ſin; and whoſe heart ſoever is hardned againſt God, that man, good or bad, ſhall not proſper, or have peace in it. It is mercy that God will not give his own peace, or let them thrive in ſin. Grace proſpers not, when the heart is hardned; joy proſpers not, nor comfort, nor ſtrength, when the heart is hardned; the whole ſtate and ſtock of a Believer is impaired, when his heart is hardned.

And if Saints harden their heart againſt God, God (in a ſence) will harden his heart againſt them, that is, he will not appear tender-hearted and compaſſionate towards them in reference to preſent comforts; he will harden himſelf to afflict and chaſten, when they harden themſelves to ſin and provoke.

When God afflicts his people, he hardens his heart againſt them; and it is ſeldom that he hardneth his heart againſt them, till they harden their hearts againſt him. And the truth is, if they who are deareſt to him, do harden their hearts againſt him, if they quarrel and contend with him, if they riſe up againſt his commands, or neglect his will, he will make their hearts ſubmit, or he will make their hearts ake, and break their bones. If they harden their hearts againſt his fear, they ſhall feel his rod upon their backs and ſpirits too. Which of the Saints ever hardened himſelf againſt God, and hath proſpered? No man, whether holy or prophane, righteous or wicked, could ever glory of a conqueſt over God, or triumph after a war with him?

VERS. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10.

Which removeth the mountains, and they know not; which overturneth them in his anger.
Which ſhaketh the earth out of her place, and the pillars thereof tremble.
Which commandeth the Sun, and it riſeth not; and ſealeth up the Stars.
Which alone ſpreadeth out the heavens, and treadeth upon the waves of the Sea.
Which maketh Arcturus, Orion and Pleiades, and the chambers of the South.
Which doth great things paſt finding out, yea, and wonders without number.

JOB having in general aſſerted the power and wiſdom of God (he muſt have infinite power and wiſdom againſt whom no man ever proſpered by contending.) Having, I ſay, aſſerted this in general, he deſcends to make a particular proof of it; as if he had ſaid, I will not only give you this argument, that God is mighty in ſtrength, becauſe no man could ever harden his heart againſt him, and proſper; he hath foyl'd all that ever medled with him; but beſides, I will give you particular inſtances of it, and you ſhall ſee that the Lord hath done ſuch things, as ſpeak him mighty in ſtrength, and prove him as powerful as I have reported. Theſe particulars are reported in verſ. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. all cloſed with a triumphant Elogie in the tenth, Which doth great things paſt finding out; yea, wonders without number.

Subjicit Job confirmationem proximè præcedentis Syllogiſmi ab effectis potentiæ & ſapientiæ Dei, quæ ampliſſima oratione deſcribit. Mer.

The Argument may be thus formed,

He is infinite in power and wiſdom who removeth mountains, and ſhakes the earth, who commands the Sun, who ſpreads out the heavens, and diſpoſeth of the ſtars in the firmament.

But the Lord doth all theſe things, he removeth mountains, he ſhakes the earth, he commandeth the Sun, &c.

Therefore he is mighty in power, and infinite in wiſdom.

The firſt part of this argument is here implied. The Aſſumption, or the Minor is proved in verſ. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. by ſo many inſtances. Here then is an evident demonſtration of the power of God, from viſible things, from acts apparent to the eye; as if he had ſaid, If you have not faith to believe that God is infinite in power, let your ſenſes teach it you; for he removeth mountains, and they know it not; he overturneth them in his anger, &c.

He removeth mountains.

That's the firſt inſtance. The word which we tranſlate to remove, ſignifies to wax old and ſtrong, becauſe things as they grow in age, grow in ſtrength. There is a declining age, and an encreaſing age. Things very old impair, and things growing older, encreaſe in ſtrength; we have the word in that ſence (Job 21. 2.) Wherefore do the wicked become old? yea, they are mighty in power; he putteth theſe two together, growing old and mighty in power. The Septuagint render, Who maketh the mountains wax old, becauſe that which waxeth old is ready to vaniſh away (Heb. 8. 13.) or to be removed and taken away, as the Ceremonial Law was, of which the Apoſtle ſpeaks in that place.

Ὁ παλαιῶν ὄρη. Sept.

And becauſe growing old implies a kind of motion, therefore the word alſo ſignifies motion, even local motion, a moving from, or out of a place, Gen. 12. 4. Abraham departed; removed from the place where he was. This local motion is either natural, or violent; of this latter underſtand the Text, Which removeth the mountains.

The mountains.

There are Natural mountains, and Metaphorical or Figurative mountains; it is an act of the mighty power of God to remove either.

Some underſtand this of Metaphorical or Figurative mountains, and ſo mountains are great men, men of eminency, or of pre-eminency, the Kings and Princes of the world. The Chaldee is expreſs for this ſence, He removeth Kings who are as ſtrong and high as mountains. For as God hath ordered the ſuperficies of the earth, and made ſome parts of it plain, others mountains, ſome vallies, and ſome hills; ſo he hath diſpoſed of men; ſome men ſtand as upon level ground, men of an ordinary condition; other are as the low vallies, men of a poor condition; others are as high mountains, over-topping and over-looking the reſt. The word is uſed in this Metaphorical ſence, Iſa. 41. 15. I will make thee (ſaith the Lord to the Prophet) a new threſhing inſtrument having teeth: And what ſhall this new threſhing inſtrument do? Thou ſhalt threſh the mountains, and beat them ſmall, and ſhalt make the hills as chaff. Here is a Prophet ſent with a flail or threſhing inſtrument, and his buſineſs is to threſh the mountains, and to beat the hills; the meaning is, thou ſhalt deſtroy the great ones of the world, the hills, the mountains, thoſe that think themſelves impregnable or inacceſſible. But how could the Prophet threſh theſe mountains, and what was his flail? Gideon (Judg. 8. 7.) threatens the men of Succoth, that he will tear or threſh their fleſh with the thorns of the wilderneſs, and with briars. And Damaſcus is threatned, becauſe they threſhed Gilead with threſhing inſtruments of iron, Amos 1. 3. That is, they put them to extreameſt tortures. Our Prophet could not thus torture men. His threſhing inſtrument having iron teeth, was only his tongue, the inſtrument of ſpeech; with this he beat thoſe proud mountains to duſt, that is, he declared they ſhould be beaten and deſtroyed. Of ſuch a mountain, the Lord by his Prophet ſpeaks (Jer. 51. 25.) Behold, I am againſt thee, O deſtroying mountain, ſaith the Lord, which deſtroyeſt all the earth. Behold, I will ſtretch out mine hand upon thee, and will roll thee down from the rocks, and make thee a burnt mountain. This mountain was the proud ſtate of Babylon, which was oppoſite to the Church of God, this devouring mountain ſhall at laſt be a devoured mountain, devoured by fire, therefore he calls it a burnt mountain. Thus (Zech. 4. 7.) Who art thou, O great mountain? Before Zerubbabel thou ſhalt become a plain. The Prophet is aſſured that all the power and ſtrength which oppoſed it ſelf againſt the reformation and re-edification of Jeruſalem, ſhould be laid level with the ground. So we may interpret (Pſal. 144. 5.) He toucheth the mountains, and they ſmoke; the meaning is, when God doth but lay his hand upon great men, upon the mightieſt of the world, he makes them ſmoke or fume, which ſome underſtand of their anger, they are preſently in a paſſion, if God do but touch them. Or we may underſtand it of their conſumption. A ſmoaking mountain will ſoon be a burnt mountain. In our Language, to make a man ſmoke, is a proverbial, for deſtroying or ſubduing.

Chaldeus per montes intelligit reges; Qui loco movet reges fortes, ut mōtes. Targ.

Per montes intelligit reges, qui ſicut montes firmitate & robore perſtant. Rab. Dav. in Pſ. 144: 5.

And beſides, there are mountains (in this figurative ſence) within us, as well as without us. The ſoul hath a mountain in it ſelf, and it is an act of the great power of God, yea, of an higher and greater power of God, to remove inward, then it is to remove outward mountains, Iſa. 40. 4. The Prophet fore-ſhewing the coming of Chriſt, and the ſending of the Baptiſt to prepare his way, tells us, Every mountain and hill ſhall be made low. Chriſt did not throw down the outward power of men, who withſtood him; he let Herod and Pilate prevail: but mountains and hills of ſin and unbelief in the ſoul, which made his paſſage into them impaſſible, he overthrew. Theſe mountains of high, proud thoughts, the Apoſtle deſcribes (2 Cor. 10. 14.) Caſting down imaginations, and every high thing, and bringing into captivity every thought (every mountainous thought) to the obedience of Chriſt.

Theſe are Metaphorical mountains, the power of ſinful men without us, and the power of ſin, the pride of our own hearts within us. It is a mighty work of God to remove theſe mountains.

But theſe are not proper to the Text, for the inſtances which follow, being all given in natural things, ſhew, that thoſe here intended, are natural mountains.

Taking mountains for earthly, material mountains, it is doubted how the Lord removes them.

There are different opinions about the point. Some underſtand it of a natural motion. Philoſophers diſputing about mountains and hills, conclude, that they are ſubject to generation and corruption; by the addition of many parts they are generated, that is, kneaded or gathered together, and become one huge heap of earth; and by the detraction, falling and crumbling off, or taking away of theſe parts, they are removed again. Thus we may expound that (Job 14. 18.) And ſurely the mountain falling cometh to nought.

Montes natura ſua generabiles ſunt & corruptibiles, additione partium generantur, & detractione partium corrumpuntur. Aq. & Cajet.

Minime mirandum eſt, ſi quas terræ partes quæ nunc habitantur, olim mare occupabat, & quæ nunc pelagus ſunt, olim habitabantur, ſic campos & montes par eſt invicem commutari. Strab. l. 17.

Yet this cannot be the meaning of Job here. For though we grant that Doctrine of the Philoſophers, that there is a generation of mountains, and ſo a corruption of them; yet that corruption is ſo inſenſible, that it cannot be put among thoſe works of God which raiſe up the name of his glorious power. That which falls not under obſervation, cannot cauſe admiration. Slow and imperceptible motions make ſmall impreſſions, either upon the fancy or underſtanding.

Divina potentia in tā longa & ſegni montium remotiones non ſe præbet valde mirabilē, cum removere ſit qui eam rem videat. Pined.

That here ſpoken of, is quick and violent, and by its eaſie repreſentation to the eye, cauſeth wonder and aſtoniſhment in the beholders.

And ſo it imports a removing them by ſome violent motion.

Thus the Lord is able to remove, and hath removed mountains, ſometimes by earthquakes; ſometimes by ſtorms and tempeſts; ſometime thoſe mighty bulwarks are battered with thunder-balls diſcharged from the clouds (Pſal. 97. 5.) The hills melted like wax at the preſence of the Lord. Hills melt down when he appears as a conſuming fire (Pſal. 104. 32.) He looks upon the earth, and it trembleth, and he toucheth the hills, and they ſmoke. Thoſe rockie mountains are as ready to take fire, as tinder or touchwood, if but a ſpark of Gods anger fall upon them. God by a caſt of his eye (as we may ſpeak) can caſt the earth into an ague-fit, he makes it ſhake, and more, tremble with a look; he by a touch of his mighty arm, hurls mountains which way he pleaſeth, as a man doth a Tennis-ball. We read (Iſa. 64. 1.) how earneſtly the Prophet prayes, O that thou wouldeſt rent the heavens and come down, that the mountains might flow down at thy preſence; where he is conceived to allude to Gods coming down upon Mount Sinai at the giving of the Law, Exod. 19. which is ſaid to melt from before the Lord God of Iſrael, Judg. 5. 3. Some underſtand it of that day of Chriſt, when he ſhall come to judge the world; others, of that day when Chriſt came in the fleſh to ſave the world; then the mountains were levelled according to the preaching of the Baptiſt; but rather the Prophet being affected with the calamitous condition, which he foreſaw the Jews falling into, intreats the Lord to put forth himſelf in some notable works of his providence, which ſhould as clearly manifeſt his preſence as if they ſaw the heavens (ſpeaking as of ſolid bodies) renting, and God viſibly coming down; then, thoſe difficulties which lay in the way of their deliverance, and looked like huge mountains of Iron or of Adamant, would preſently diſſolve like wax, or ice before the Sun or fire. The Prophet

Ex quo & hoc loco nō abſurdè colligitur fuiſſe proverbiū ad ſignificādum maximam ſoliq; Deo convenientem potentiam. Bold.

Micah deſcribes the effects of Gods power in the ſame ſtile (chap. 1. 3, 4.) Behold, the Lord cometh forth out of his place, and will come down and tread upon the high places of the earth, and the mountains ſhall be molten under him, and the valleys ſhall be cleft, as wax before the fire, and as the waters which are powred down a ſteep place. So, to remove mountains, is uſed proverbially, Job 18. 4. Shall the earth be forſaken for thee, or ſhall the rock be removed out of his place? that is, ſhall God work wonders for thee? or, God will alter the courſe of nature as ſoon as the courſe of his providence. To ſay God can remove mountains, is as much as to ſay, he hath power to do what he will; and the reaſon is, becauſe mountains are exceeding great and weighty bodies; mountains are firmly ſetled: now, to remove a thing which is mighty in bulk, and ſtrongly founded, is an argument of greateſt ſtrength. The ſtability of the Church is compared to the ſtability of mountains, Pſal. 125. 1. They that truſt in the Lord ſhall be as Mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but ſtandeth faſt for ever. The righteouſneſs of God is compared to a great mountain (Pſal. 36. 6.) becauſe his righteouſneſs is firm and unmoveable; Thy righteouſneſs is like the great mountains, or the mountains of God. And (Pſ. 46. 2.) the doing of the greateſt things, and the making of the greateſt changes that poſſibly can happen in any Nation, or in the whole world, are expreſt by the removing of mountains; Though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midſt of the Sea, yet will we not fear, &c. That is, things which carry the greateſt impoſſibility to be done, or which are ſeldomeſt done, ſhall be done before we will do this. As men when they would ſhew how far they are from ſubmitting to ſuch a thing, ſay, We will die firſt, &c. So here, Who! we fear? No, mountains ſhall be removed firſt. He breaths out the higheſt confidence of the Church, in the loweſt, not only of her preſent, but poſſible dangers. As faith can repreſent to us better things then any we enjoy, to raiſe our joy; ſo it can repreſent to us worſe things (and put us harder caſes) then any we feel, and yet carry us above fear. A faith removing mountains, is put for the ſtrongeſt faith; Though I had all faith, ſo that I could remove mountains (1 Cor. 13. 2.) that is, though I had the ſtrongeſt faith, the faith of miracles. When Chriſt (Mat. 21. 21.) would ſhew to the utmoſt what faith can do, he ſaith, If ye have faith and doubt not, ye ſhall not only do this which is done to the fig-tree, but alſo, if ye ſhall ſay to this mountain, be thou removed, and be thou caſt into the Sea, and it ſhall be done. As if he had ſaid, if you have faith, you may do the greateſt things imaginable or deſirable; ye ſhall remove mountains. A mountain is immoveable by the meer power of a creature. Faith takes that in hand, becauſe faith acts the power of the Creator. And as the faith of man removing mountains, notes a faith of miracles; ſo the power of God removing mountains, notes a miraculous power.

Iſa. 54. 10. The mountains

So then, taking this ſpeech either for the removing of natural mountains, or taking it proverbially, as it noteth the doing of the greateſt things, and putting forth of the greateſt power, it proveth the point which Job hath here in hand, viz. That God is mighty in ſtrength; why? He is able to remove mountains. Hence obſerve, > Firſt, That, The Lord, if he pleaſeth, can alter and remove the parts of the earth, and change the frame and fabrick of nature.

He that made the mountains unmoveable to us, can himſelf remove them. The Hiſtories and Records of former times tell us how God hath miraculouſly toſſed mountains out of their places. Joſephus in his ninth Book of Antiquities, cap. 11. mentions the removing of a mountain; and Pliny in the eighth Book of his Natural Hiſtory, cap. 30. A latter writer reports, that in Burgundy, in the year 1230. There were mountains ſeen moving, which overthrew many houſes, to the great terrour of all the Inhabitants of thoſe Countries. Joſephus alſo reports the like done by an Earthquake. And another tells us of Mount Oſſa joyned to Olympus by an earthquake. So that take it in the letter, the Lord is able to remove mountains.

Mons in Burgundia à proximo monte dehiſcens, valliſque proximas conſtās multa agricularū millia oppreſſit, &c. Uvern. in faſciculo. Joſephus, Ant. l. 9. c. 12 Vide Senec. l. 5. c. 15. & l. 6. c. 15. Nat. Queſt. Plin. Nat. Hiſt. l. 8. c. 38. Cum in agro Mutinenſi montes duo inter ſe concurrebant crepitu maximo aſſultantes, &c. Eo concurſu villæ omnes illiſæ ſunt, &c.

It ſhould make us fear before the Lord, and give him glory, while we remember that even the outward frame of the world is ſubject to ſudden changes; there is no mountain, no rock, but the little finger of God can remove or pull it down. As David ſpake of his Metaphorical mountain, his great outward eſtate, Lord, thou haſt made it ſtand ſtrong, yet thou didſt hide away thy face, and I was troubled, Pſal. 30. 6. His mountain began to ſhake, and became a very molehil, uſeleſs to him, when God was diſpleaſed. If the Lord withdraw himſelf from our civil mountains, we are troubled, and if he touch the natural mountains, they are troubled. Our mountains will skip like rams, and the little hills like lambs (Pſal. 104. 4.) when he is diſpleaſed.

> Secondly obſerve, That, The power of God is made viſible to us in the changes which he works in the creature, as well as in the conſtitution of the creature.

The power of God made the mountains and created the hills; the ſame power removes mountains, and turns them upſide down. It argues as great a power to deſtroy the world, as to ſettle the world. As the Apoſtle ſhews what divinity the Gentiles might have learned in that great Book of the worlds creation (Rom. 1. 20.) The inviſible things of him from the Creation of the world are clearly ſeen, being underſtood by the things which are made, even his eternal power and Godhead. So we may ſay on the other ſide, The inviſible things of him from the confuſions which are in the world, are clearly ſeen; or, they may be underſtood by the things which are removed and changed, in theſe you may read his eternal power and Godhead. When God breaks the Laws and courſe of nature, he ſhews his power as well as when he ſetled the laws and courſe of nature. He ſhews his power when he lets the Sea out of his place to overflow the earth, as well as when he bounded the Sea that it ſhall not overflow the earth. Some things are with far leſs power deſtroyed then made, removed then ſetled; but no power can deſtroy the world, but that which made it, or ſuddenly remove a mountain, but that which ſetled it. The power of God muſt be acknowledged in altering, as well as in ordering the natural courſe or conſtitution of the creature.

And if we look to the change of Metaphorical Mountains, it is a truth, an illuſtrious truth, that the Lord diſplayes his mighty power in removing and overturning the great eſtates and eſtabliſhments of Men and Kingdoms. When God removes the Mountain of our peace, of our riches, the Mountain of outward proſperity, and of civil power, it becomes us to ſay, He is mighty in power who doth all theſe things.

God hath given great tokens and teſtimonies of his power in this. How many Mountains, great Mountains, men who were Mountains, and things which ſtood like Mountains; how many (I ſay) of theſe hath the Lord removed? The power of God and the faith of his people have wrought ſuch Miracles, He removeth the Mountains.

And they know it not.

They.] Who? Who or what is the antecedent to this They? Are the Mountains? So ſome underſtand it; and then the word [know,] or the act of knowing is by a figure aſcribed (as many times in Scripture, to creatures without reaſon, ſo) to creatures without life, Pſal. 58. 1. Before your pots can feel the thorns; the Hebrew is, Before your pots can underſtand or know the thorns, that is, before they are ſenſible of the heat of the fire to make them boil, &c. An act of ſenſe, and is aſcribed to pots, which are things inſenſible.

Nec ſciunt, ſc. montes, tribuitur rei inanimatæ ſenſus. Merc.

But others take the antecedent to be man; He removeth the mountains, and they know it not, that is, men know it not. So Mr. Broughton tranſlates, He removeth the mountains, that men cannot mark how he hath removed them out of their places in his anger.

Suppoſing men to be the antecedent, there is yet a difference about the interpretation. Men, that is, ſay ſome, unskilful men, ignorant men, they know not the meaning of this, they cannot give a reaſon why or how mountains are removed; if God doth it, they know it not. Others reſtrain it to men inhabiting the mountains, they were ſecure, and thought their dwellings ſo ſafe, that God removed their mountain before they dreamed of, much leſs feared any ſuch thing; they had no thought that God would remove

Locus ſive ab arte, ſive à natura munitus, reddit homines ab omni bellorū aut ruinæ ſuſpitione ſecuros. San.

move their mountain. Places ſtrongly fortified, either by Art or Nature, make men ſecure, and dangers unſuſpected. The deluge in Noah's time, prevailed over the higheſt mountains; but his ſinful poſterity hoped to make an artificial mountain, wherein they might even dare a ſecond deluge. Come, let us build us a City and a Tower, whoſe top may reach to heaven, Gen. 11.4. And then (except the ſtars and firmament be flouded) we ſhall be dry, how much or how long ſoever it rains. Such towring thoughts as theſe, were (ſurely) laid in the foundation of that intended Tower.

Take the Text either of natural or of figurative mountains; and to remove them, ſo, that man knows it not, may have a double meaning.

First, That it is done with great ſpeed.

Secondly, That it is done with great ſecrecy.

God is able to do great things in a little time, in ſo little time, that men ſhall not know he is doing them, till they are done. He [illegible] do great things ſecretly, ſo ſecretly, that the way of their diſpatch ſhall not be viſible to the eye, or open to the underſtanding of man, till they are diſpatch'd.

Again, this clauſe [And they know it not.] notes not only the ſecurity of men before the hand of God is upon them, but their ſtupidity, while it is upon them. So Prov. 23.35. They have ſtricken me, ſhalt thou ſay, and I was not ſick; they have beaten me, and I felt it not; the Hebrew is, and I knew it not. Hence obſerve,

> The works and judgments of God, are often unſuſpected and unobſerved by men.

He removeth mountains, even their mountains, and they know it not.

'Tis true in reference to natural, but eſpecially to civil mountains. The rich, the mighty are caſt down from their ſeats, or their ſeats are caſt down before they ſaw any hand touching them. The whore of Babylon, and mother of fornications, who ſits upon ſeven mountains (Rev. 17.9.) ſaith in her heart, I ſit a Queen, and am no widow, and ſhall ſee no ſorrow (Revel. 18.7.) Therefore ſhall her plagues come in one day, death, and mourning, and famine, &c. (*ver.*8.) If her plagues come in one day, ſhe (doubtleſs) thought not of them a day before. Babylons ſeven mountains ſhall be removed, ſhe not knowing it; and as Babylons mountains ſhall be removed, when ſhe ſhall not know, that is, ſuſpect it; ſo, which is more ſtrange, Jeruſalems mountain was removed, and ſhe did not know, that is, perceive it. The Prophets are expreſs (Iſa. 42.25.) Therefore he hath poured upon him (namely, Jacob or Iſrael) the fury of his anger, and the ſtrength of battel, and it hath ſet him on fire round about, yet he knew it not; and it burned him, yet he laid it not to heart. They were unobſervant of thoſe terrible things the Lord did among them. Some little anger paſſes often without notice, but here was the fury of anger; ſome ſleight ſkirmiſhes make no great noiſe, but here was the ſtrength of battel; and not ſome few drops of both theſe, but either of them poured upon him, by whole bucket fulls, and theſe buckets of burning fury ſet him on fire, and that not in ſome one corner or out-houſe, but round about, yet he knew it not. Which is expounded in the next words, It burned him, yet he laid it not to heart.

The Prophet Hoſea (Chap. 7.9.) ſpeaks as much of Jeruſalem, under the name of Ephraim; Strangers have devoured his ſtrength, and he knoweth it not; gray hairs are here and there upon him, yet he knoweth it not. Strangers devour his ſtrength, that is, according to the language of Job, the mountains wherein his ſtrength did conſiſt, were devoured and overthrown by ſtrangers, and yet he knew it not, he did not obſerve the hand of God in the hand of man againſt him. Gray hairs are here and there upon him; gray hairs are a great change; gray hairs note the moſt diſcernable change of a mans life. There are two ſtates of a man, eaſily diſtinguiſhed, youth, and old-age, and gray hairs make the moſt viſible diſtinction between theſe two; ſo that to ſay, Gray hairs are upon him, is to ſay there is ſuch a change upon his eſtate, as is between a young man and an old man, and yet he knows, he obſerves it not. Of all things a man is moſt apt to take notice of his own natural gray hairs: and many are ſo troubled at the firſt ſight of them (becauſe they tell us we begin to be old) that they will pick them out: but ſuch is the ſenſleſneſs of many about the dealings of God with them, that when great changes are upon them, changes like that of youth into old-age, they are not affected with it; providential or judiciary gray hairs, are not often known.

Surely many of theſe gray hairs are upon us at this day: it will be ſad, if England be like Ephraim, and know it not. It is worſe, not to know we have gray hairs, then to have them. The one is but our affliction, the other is our ſin. Gray hairs are upon us, ſtrangers have devoured our ſtrength: If we know not what God hath done, he can quickly do enough to make himſelf known. They who will not ſee the hand of God, when it is lifted up (that they may be humbled) ſhall ſee it and be aſhamed, Iſa. 26.11. If the removing and ſhaking of our mountains do not awaken us, the overturning ſhall: That's the next act of divine power in this noble deſcription.

And overturneth them in his anger.

The word ſignifies to overturn a thing, ſo, as to change the form and faſhion of it, yea, to bring it to nothing; not only to remove a thing out of its place, but to take away the very being of it, and to remove it out of the world. He not only turns mountains into mole-hils, but into plains, yea, into pits, they ſhall not be mountains any longer, nor any thing like a mountain.

הפך Vertit, ſubvertit, ſignificat verſionem, vi. in nihilum, vel in formam, aut qualitatem aliam, vel in locū alium.

It is much to remove a mountain, and ſet it in another place: but more to crumble it in a moment all to duſt, that you ſhall not find a piece or a clod of it. The Prophet threatens the obſtinate Jews in ſuch a language, Iſa. 30.13, 14. Therefore this iniquity ſhall be to you as a breach ready to fall, ſwelling out in a high wall, whoſe breaking cometh ſuddainly at an inſtant, and he ſhall break it as the breaking of the potters veſſel, &c. So that there ſhall not be found in the burſting of it, a ſheard to take fire from the hearth, or to take water withal out of the pit.

He overturneth them in his anger.] Anger in man is a mixt affection made up chiefly of theſe two ingredients; ſorrow and revenge. Some call anger the boiling of the blood about the heart, or the boiling of the heart in blood; the fumes whereof riſe ſo faſt into the brain, that anger ſometimes diſlodges reaſon, and is therefore called by others a ſhort madneſs.

The word in the Text ſignifies the Noſtrils; and the Scripture frequently applies that to anger, becauſe anger is ſeen and made viſible in the noſtrils. Quick breathing is a ſign of anger. God is without parts and paſſions, he is not angry as man: but is ſaid to be angry when he doth like man in his anger. The Lord is not moved or ſtirred by anger; but he is angry, when he makes motions and ſtirrings in the creature; he lets out the effects of anger, but himſelf hath not the affections, much leſs the perturbation of anger. Hence obſerve, Ira furor brevis. אף Ira, inde transfertur ad naſum, qui eſt inſtrumentum iræ, & in quo ira præcipuè apparet. Fames & morabile in naſum conciunt. Plaut.

> That the troubles and confuſions which are in the creature, are tokens and effects of the anger of God.

As the ſetling and eſtabliſhment of the creature, is an effect or ſign of his goodneſs, or, as theſe tell us, that God is pleaſed; ſo when the Lord hurls the creature this way and that way, when he toſſes it up and down, as if he cared not how, this is an argument of his anger; when Moſes came down from the Mount, and ſaw what the people of Iſrael had done, how they had made a golden calf and poluted themſelves with idols, ſuch a paſſion of anger came upon him, that he threw the Tables of the Law out of his hand, and brake them. So, when the Lord would ſignifie his diſpleaſure, he throws the creature out of his hand, and breaks man againſt man, Nation againſt Nation (as a potters veſſel) one againſt another. The comfort and well-being of the creature, conſiſts in this, that God holds it in his hand; if he do but let it go out of his hand, it periſhes, much more when he caſts it with violence out of his hand. The Prophet (Hab. 3.8.) deſcribing the great confuſions which God made in the world, queſtions thus, Was thine anger againſt the Rivers? Was thy wrath againſt the Sea, that that thou didſt ride upon thine horſes, and thy chariots of ſalvation? God being angry with the enemies of his people, made ſtrange work amongſt them; Rather then his people ſhall not be delivered, the world ſhall be confounded. Was the Lord angry with the Sea? When he compelled the Rivers to change their courſes, and diſcover the bottom of their channels, as in the paſſage of his Iſrael through the red Sea? No, God was not angry with the Sea, but with Pharaoh and his hoſt, with the oppreſſors and troublers of his Iſrael; and when he was thus angry, he check'd the courſe of nature and turned things upſide-down. When David was in a diſtreſs, and his enemies encompaſt him round about: what then? Then the earth ſhook and trembled, the foundations of the hills were moved and were ſhaken, becauſe he was wroth (Pſal. 18. 7.) That, God might reſcue David out of the hand of trouble, he troubled the foundations of the earth; he made the world ſhake, and Kingdoms tremble, that his David might be ſetled upon his throne. The Lord threatneth (Hag. 2. 6.) that he will ſhake the heaven and the earth, the ſea and the dry land; he will move all creatures, why ſo? He ſhakes them for the ſetling of his Zion (verſ. 7.) I will ſhake all Nations, and the deſire of all Nations ſhall come, and I will fill this houſe with glory, ſaith the Lord of Hoſts. When the Lord comes againſt the ſuperſtition, and idolatry, and profaneneſs, and wickedneſſes of the world in anger, no wonder if Kingdoms ſhake: yea, he therefore ſhakes Kingdoms, that he may eſtabliſh Jeruſalem a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that ſhall not be taken down, not one of the ſtakes thereof ſhall ever be removed, neither ſhall any of the cords thereof be broken, Iſa. 33. 20. We are waiting when God will ſhake Babylon, and in his anger overturn the ſeven mountains thereof; Babylon is built upon mountains, upon ſeven mountains, to note the ſtrength and power of it, yet the Lord will remove Babylon out of her place, and overturn thoſe mountains in the fierceneſs of his anger, and in jealouſie poured out, Then every Iſland ſhall flee away, and the mountains ſhall not be found, Rev. 16. 20. That is, the remoteſt and ſtrongeſt places which owned and maintained Babylon, ſhall either be converted or confounded; they ſhall appear no more under that ſpiritual notion, though in a natural and civil they do remain. That which is not as it was, is ſpoken of, as if it were not: A great change in our condition, is called a change of our very being. The anger of God overturns things, as if it did annihilate them. Job goes on.

Tanta extitit divinæ iræ vis pro Davide contra hoſtes defendendo, ut videbatur orbem invertere, omnia miſcere, &c. Pined.

Verſ. 6. Which ſhakes the earth out of her place, and the pillars thereof tremble.

This is a ſecond inſtance, but in higher expreſſions of the ſame power of God.

Which ſhakes the earth out of her place.

He had ſaid before, God removes mountains. Mountains are great bulky bodies, but no mountain ſo great as the Globe of the whole earth. Now (ſaith he) the Lord doth not only ſhake mountains, ſome great parts of the earth, but if he pleaſeth he can take up the whole earth, and throw it out of its place, as a man would take up a little ball, and throw it into the air, He ſhakes the earth out of her place.

ὁ σείων τὴν ὑπ' οὐρανὸν ἐκ θεμελίων, i. e. terrã univerſã. Sept.

The word which we tranſlate to Shake, ſignifies a violent motion of the mind, cauſed either by fear (Deut. 2. 25.) or grief (2 Sam. 18. 33.) We read of a trembling heart from both (Deut. 28. 25.) It is alſo applied to civil ſhakings and commotions by the troubleſom ſpirits of men, (Prov. 30. 21.) For three things the earth is diſquieted. And to unnatural ſhakings of the earth by the power of God, (2 Sam. 22. 8, &c.) So in the Text.

רגז Non ſignificat motum naturalem, ſed commotionẽ quandã ex metu, trepidationẽ, tremorem.

Some expound this of a natural motion. Thoſe men have (ſurely) a motion and turning in their brains, who tell us that there is a continued motion of the earth, that it turns and never ſtands ſtill; they would ground the motion of the earth upon this Scripture, tranſlating thus, Which moveth the earth in her place. But the Text tells us, that the earth hath pillars, and not wheels. Pillars are made for reſt, not for motion.

Didacus aſtunica putat hunc locũ illuſtrari poſſe ex ſententia Pythagoricorũ exiſtimantiũ terram moveri naturâ ſuâ. Copern.

Further, This Text ſpeaks of it, as of an act of Gods anger, therefore no ordinary act appointed in nature; and the word notes a violent motion, not a natural. But we need not ſtand to refute this motion. As when ſome denied all motion, a Philoſopher to prove it, roſe up and walked: So when any affirm or give reaſon for this motion, we may ſhew their ſenſes that the earth ſtands.

This ſhaking then is extraordinary, the Lord who made the earth firm upon pillars, can make the earth move, as if it went on wheels.

This he doth, firſt, by earth-quakes, theſe ſhake the earth (as it were) out of her place, and make it tremble. Hiſtories are full, and many mens experiences can give inſtances of ſuch terrible ſhakings of the earth. This earthquake is not meant here, for there is a reaſon in nature, for that Philoſophers diſpute much about it, and tell us, when there is a ſtrong vapour included or impriſoned in the bowels of the earth, that vapour ſeeking vent maketh a combuſtion there, and ſo the earth ſhakes. This, indeed, ſhews the mighty power of God, but it is in a natural way; whereas the Text ſeems to imply ſomewhat more, ſomewhat beyond the learning of Philoſophers and Naturaliſts.

Beſides, the Text ſaith, He ſhaketh the earth [out] of her place.

Whereas an earthquake ſhakes the earth in her place, and cauſes it to tremble upon the pillars thereof.

But did God ever ſhake the earth out of her place? We muſt underſtand the Text conditionally. We have not any inſtance that the Lord hath actually done ſo, but this ſuppoſition may be put. The Lord can remove mountains and ſhake the earth, not only in, but out of her place. We find ſuch conditional expreſſions often put in Scripture, not as if the things ever had been, or ever ſhould be done, but if the Lord will, he is able to do them (Amos 9. 5.) The Lord God of hoſts is he that toucheth the land, and it ſhall melt; that is, if the Lord do but touch the land, he can melt it. As the three children caſt into a fiery fornace, had not ſo much as a garment, or a thread about them touched with it, becauſe the Lord forbad the fire to burn: So, if the Lord bid a ſpark but touch us, it ſhall melt and conſume us, as if we were caſt into, and continued in a fiery fornace. As a word made, ſo a touch ſhall mar the world, when God will; yet he hath not done thus unto this day. So in the Text, He ſhakes the earth out of her place, imports what God can, not what he hath or will do. Note from it, Terrificam capitis concuſſit terque quaterq; Cæſariem cũ qua terram mare ſidera movit. Ovid. Met.

That the Lord is able to do greater things, then ever he actually hath done.

He hath not put the earth out of her place, the earth is where it was, but he can diſplace it. God hath never acted any of his attributes to the height, for they are infinite; he never acted power ſo high, but he is able to act it higher: He hath never acted mercy in pardoning ſo far, but he is able to act it further; a greater ſinner then ever yet was pardoned, may be pardoned. A greater enemy then ever was overcome, may be overcome. He hath run with foot-men, and they have not wearied him, and he is able to contend with horſes: in a land of peace he was never wearied, and he knows how to wade through the ſwelling of Jordan. It is comfortable to conſider, that the Lord cannot only do the ſame things again, which he hath done, but he hath never done to the utmoſt of what he is able to do: he can out-do all that he hath done, as much as the ſhaking of the whole earth out of her place, is more then to remove a mountain, yea, or a mole-hill of earth.

And the pillars thereof tremble.

We have the pillars of Heaven, Chap. 26. 11. here of the Earth.

The word in the original ſignifies to ſtand upright, to be erect, becauſe pillars do ſo. There are two ſorts of pillars, upon which there is a different interpretation of the word.

עמדי Columna erecta à ſtando dicta

There are, firſt, Supporting pillars. And

Secondly, Supported pillars. Or, there are pillars for ornament; and pillars for ſtrength. We ſet up pillars or pinacles upon the tops of great buildings for ornament, and they are ſupported pillars. We may call mountains ſuch pillars: for as when ſome ſtately Palace is built, great pillars or pinacles are ſet upon the towers, and battlements: ſo the Lord having framed the earth, hath ſet up mountains, as great pillars for the adorning of it. He ſhaketh the earth, and the pillars thereof tremble; it is true of theſe upper pillars, the mountains they tremble. But I take it rather to be meant of ſupporting pillars, under-pillars, which bear the frame above, and are as the baſes or under-props of the earth (Pſal. 105.) Who laid the foundation of the earth? the earth hath a foundation: the Hebrew is, He hath founded the earth upon her baſis, alluding to a building. Moſt buildings have their foundations in the earth; but ſome upon it, being raiſed upon pillars. So Hannah (1 Sam. 2.8.) in her Song, The pillars of the earth are the Lords, and he hath ſet the world upon them.

What are theſe pillars that the Lord hath ſet the world upon? Or where ſhall we find them?

David ſhews us (Pſal. 24. 1, 2.) The earth is the Lords, and the fulneſs thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein: for he hath founded it upon the Seas, and eſtabliſhed it upon the floods. It is ſtrange that pillars of liquid water ſhould bear up the maſſie earth; the earth ſeems rather to be the pillar and foundation of the waters. Some interpret (ſuper) which ſignifies upon, by prope or juxta, near; he hath founded it upon the ſeas, that is, he hath founded it by or near the ſeas. But take it in the letter, and it is a truth; for the Sea is as much the pillar of the earth, as the earth is the pillar of the Sea; earth and ſea being a globe and round, the ſea is as much under the earth, as the earth is under the ſea. Thus the pillars of the earth are waters; And the earth is eſtabliſhed upon the floods.

Further, If you would know what theſe pillars are, hear what Job ſaith (chap. 26. 7.) Where he aſſures us that God hangeth the earth upon nothing. We are not to think that the Lord in framing and building the earth, did firſt ſet up pillars, and then ſet the earth upon them; for the earth hangeth as a ball in the midſt of the air, without any pillars under it. Hence Job's Philoſophy teaches us, That he hangeth the earth upon nothing; there are no material or viſible pillars to ſuſtain it.

What is then the pillar of the earth? What is it that ſupports and bears it up? The real pillar of the earth it is the power of God. But the power of God cannot tremble, how then doth he ſay, When he ſhaketh the earth, the pillars thereof tremble?

In this place therefore we may expound the pillars of the earth for the lower parts of the earth, and ſo, though the whole globe of the earth taken together, be neither higher nor lower, yet in the parts of it from any point, ſome are higher, and ſome are lower, ſome above, and ſome beneath; upon what ſuperficies ſoever we are, the under parts thereof are (to us) the pillars of the earth. So the meaning is, He ſhaketh the earth out of her place, and the pillars thereof tremble; that is, he ſhaketh it ſo terribly, that if it had any outward viſible pillars, thoſe pillars muſt need tremble.

Terræ columnæ infimas terræ partes ſignificant, quæ reliquam terræ molem impoſitam ſuſtinent; hæc ſunt veluti fundamenta & fulcra terræ.

In this we may obſerve the great power of God in upholding the earth. We ſee what the pillars of the earth are; the ſuppoſed pillars are no other then the lower parts of the earth, and the true pillar of the earth is no other then the power of God: There are no other buttreſſes or pillars upon which the earth is ſet, or by which it is ſuſtained. This huge weight of the whole earth and ſeas is born up by the thin air. Is not this an argument of the mighty power of God, that the air which is a body ſo weak, that if you throw a feather up into it, it will not ſtay there, but deſcend, yet the whole maſs or globe of earth and waters hang there? God poyſeth it meerly by its own weight; for he weigheth the mountains in ſcales, and the hills in balances, Iſa. 40. 12. He upholds all things by the word of his power; and hath built this great Caſtle in the Air. Could we enter into the ſecrets of nature, and ſet our faith awork by our ſenſes, about theſe things, we ſhould be raiſed above all fears in the greateſt difficulties. If we ſaw but a bullet, or a piece of lead of a pound, yea, of a penny weight, lifted up and hang in the air without any thing to ſupport it, we would conclude it a miracle. What think you, when all the lead and iron, and braſs, and ſtone that is in the world, hang in the air without any viſible ſtay?

Quo pacto terra firma & immota conſiſtit? quidnā pro vehiculo habet? cujus rei adminiculo fulcitur? rationi nihil occurrit cui innitatur, ſi divinam voluntatem exceperis. Greg. Naz. Orat. 34. Suis librata ponderibus fixa manet.

I find ſome interpreting this clauſe as the former, in a figurative ſence, He ſhaketh the earth, that is, States, Kingdoms and Common-wealths; And the pillars thereof tremble, that is, they who ſeemed to be their ſtrongeſt ſupporters tremble and ſhake. This is a truth, and a profitable one for our meditation. To clear this;

Firſt, We find the earth in Scripture often put for States and Kingdoms (Iſa. 24. 20.) The earth ſhall reel to and fro like a drunkard, and ſhall be removed like a cottage, and the tranſgreſſion thereof ſhall be heavy upon it, and it ſhall fall, and not riſe again. The earth ſhall do this: what earth? He doth not mean the natural earth upon which men tread, but the people who tread upon the earth, or that Common-wealth wherein people are united and governed, theſe ſhall reel to and fro, and be removed like a cottage: As if he had ſaid, you thought your ſtate and Kingdom was ſetled like a ſtrong Caſtle, but I will take it down as a man takes down a little cottage, raddled only with a few ſticks and reeds. Or the meaning of it is, your Commonwealth that hath been founded by the wiſdom of ſo many Lawgivers, and is eſtabliſhed in ſo much riches and power, ſhall be removed as a poor cottage, through which every puff of wind finds a paſſage. The ſtrongeſt Kingdoms and Bulwarks of the earth are but as thatcht cottages when God takes them in hand.

Fundavit legibus urbes.

Secondly, Pillars are often taken in a political ſence, Pſal. 75. 3. The earth and all the inhabitants thereof are diſſolved. How comes it then to paſs that they are not utterly deſtroyed? It follows, I bear up the pillars of it, that is, I maintain Governors and Magiſtrates, ſome in places of power and authority, by whom ſhaking, tottering Kingdoms are upheld.

Further, There are Church-pillars as well as State-pillars; men of eminency in knowledge and learning, in parts and piety; theſe are pillars of the Church of God. So the Apoſtle calls James and Peter, Gal. 2. 9. As the Church it ſelf is the pillar of truth, ſo ſome particular members are pillars of truth, bearing it up and holding it forth, as pillars do the Laws or Edicts of Princes and Commonwealths. As theſe pillars are of Gods ſetting up, ſo of Gods bearing up. In great ſhakings of the earth, Common-wealth-pillars tremble, and Church-pillars tremble; yea, they would fall, did not the Lord ſuſtain them with his hand.

Οἱ δοκοῦντες στῦλοι εἶναι

From all, learn the inſtability of the creature. If that which is the baſis or foundation of all outward comforts be ſo eaſily ſhaken and toſt up and down, what are the comforts themſelves? If Kingdoms and Commonwealths totter, who can ſtand faſt? When the Saints feel the world ſhake and tremble under them, their comfort is, They have received a Kingdom that cannot be ſhaken. Neither men nor devils have any power to ſhake it, and God will not ſhake it; nay, with reverence we may ſpeak it, the Lord cannot ſhake that Kingdom, for it is his own: he cannot do any thing to his own wrong or diſhonour. Earth may, but heaven ſhakes not, neither ſhall any of the pillars thereof tremble for ever.

We have ſeen two acts of the mighty power of God; firſt, In removing thoſe mountains, thoſe great maſſie parts of the earth. Secondly, In ſhaking the whole maſs of the earth.

Now the thoughts of Job grow higher, and he aſcends from earth to heaven, and brings an inſtance of the power of God there, in the ſeventh verſe.

Verſe 7. Which commandeth the Sun, and it riſeth not; and ſealeth up the Stars.

And the inſtance which he makes in the heaven, ſtands (as heaven doth to earth) in a direct line of oppoſition to that which he gave about the earth. The earth in all the parts of it, is a ſetled, fixed body, and therefore the power of God is clearly ſeen in cauſing it to move; but the Sun is a moveable body, a creature in continual motion; and therefore the power of God is clearly ſeen in checking and ſtopping the motion of it. It calls for as ſtrong a hand to make the Sun ſtand ſtill, as to ſhake and remove the earth. The ſtaying of that which naturally cannot but move, and the moving of that which naturally cannot but ſtand ſtill, require a like power; and that which ſtands as the earth doth, or moves as the Sun doth, requires an Almighty power to move or ſtay it.

Sicut de natura terræ eſt immobilitas & quies, ita de natura cœli ut ſemper moveatur. Aquin.

Which commandeth the Sun, and it riſeth not.

Which commandeth the Sun.] He deſcribes God in the poſture and language of a King, giving out commands. He commandeth. God is the Soveraign of the Sun. Yet the word in the Hebrew is no more, but, he ſaith, or, he ſpeaks to the Sun; ſo Mr. Broughton tranſlates, He ſpeaks to the Sun, that it riſeth not: We, clearly to the ſence, He commandeth the Sun, becauſe the word of God to the Creature, is a Law or a Command upon the Creature.

יאמר Dixit, illud dicere eſt cū poteſtate imperandi.

He commandeth the Sun, and it riſeth not.

The phraſe implies an ordinary or a common event. But when was there ſuch a thing as this? How rare are ſuch events? I may ask, Did the Lord ever command the Sun that it ſhould not riſe? Or did ever any day appear when the Sun did not appear? we may anſwer four or five wayes.

First, Some conceive Job ſpeaks only of what God can do (as in the former inſtance) not what he ever did: He never actually gave out his command to the Sun that it ſhould not riſe; but he hath power to do it if he pleaſeth. Many things are ſpoken of the power of God, as preſently done, which only are things poſſible for him to do. That's a good interpretation of the place.

Non ad factum, ſed ad Dei potentiā refertur, qui ſi velit, poſſit viciſſitudinem ortus & occaſus ſolis tollere. Olymp.

Secondly, We may carry it further; for when he ſaith, It riſeth not, we need not take it ſtrictly, as if the Sun were ſtaid from making day at all; but, it may note any ſtop or ſudden diſappearing of the Sun. The Suns riſing is the Suns appearing; and when it diſappeareth, or is hidden, it is to us as if the Sun were not riſen. Thus God hath actually, more then once, given out a command to the Sun not to riſe. Lavater (in his comment upon this place) reports, that in the year 1585. March 12. ſuch a darkneſs fell upon the earth, that the fowls went to rooſt at noon, as if it had been Sun-ſetting, and all the common people thought the day of Judgment was come. That of the Prophet is true in the letter, as well as in the figure (Amos 4. 13.) He maketh the morning darkneſs. And (chap. 5. 8.) He turneth the ſhadow of death into the morning, and maketh the day dark with night. The holy ſtory records one famous act of God commanding the Sun to ſtand ſtill (Joſh. 10.12.) When Joſhua was in purſuit of his enemies, he prayed that the day might not haſten down; Sun, ſtand thou ſtill upon Gibeon, and thou Moon in the valley of Ajalon; and the Sun ſtood ſtill, &c. Joſhua ſpeaks as if himſelf could command the Sun. Sun, ſtand thou ſtill; he talks to the Sun, as to his ſervant or child, ſtand ſtill. It was indeed at the voyce of Joſhua, but by the word and power of God, that the Sun ſtood ſtill. So the Text reſolves; There was no day like that before it or after it (no day ſo long as that) that the Lord hearkened to the voyce of a man. So then, the Lord hearkened to the voyce of a man, and then the Sun hearkened to the voyce of a man. First, the Lord hearkned, and then the Sun hearkened, that is, by a command from God at the requeſt of a man the Sun ſtood ſtill.

Non oritur ſol, tantum eſt non appareat, nam & ortus ſolis apparitio quædam eſt. Bold.

Thirdly, It may be underſtood of ordinary Eclipſes, which are diſappearings of the Sun; and though they come in a courſe of nature, and are by natural light foreſeen many years before they come, yet there is ſomewhat in them which ſhould fill us with high thoughts of the power of God. And though an eclipſe of the Sun be no miracle, yet God once made, and can again make a miraculous eclipſe. When Chriſt the Sun of Righteouſneſs was ſhamefully crucified, the Sun in the heavens (as aſhamed to look upon that act (as from man) of prodigious cruelty and injuſtice) hid his face; and from the ſixth hour (that is, from highnoon) there was darkneſs over all the Land unto the ninth hour; that is, till three in the afternoon, Mat. 27.45. This eclipſe was miraculous; firſt, becauſe it was the full of the Moon. Which (as we receive from Antiquity) cauſed a great Philoſopher (not knowing what was doing, or who was ſuffering at Jeruſalem) to cry out, Either the God of Nature ſuffers, or the frame of Nature diſſolves.

Dionyſius Areopagita.

Secondly, Becauſe it was univerſal (as ſome affirm) over all the world; or as others (which makes it more ſtrange) that it was only in the Land of Judæa, all the world beſides enjoying the light of the Sun at that time. Which Miracle ſtands oppoſite to that in Egypt, which was plagued with darkneſs, when the Iſraelites in Goſhen enjoyed light; whereas then Judæa, where the Iſraelites dwelt, was covered with darkneſs, the reſt of the world enjoying light.

Fourthly, Some refer this ſpeech of Job's to that particular plague of darkneſs for three dayes in Egypt (laſt mentioned) which they conceive was then freſh in memory; and ſo Job had reference eſpecially unto that, when he ſaith, He commandeth the Sun, and it riſeth not. For though God at that time did not give a command to ſtop the Sun from riſing upon all parts of the earth, yet he commanded the Sun not to ariſe upon that part; when his own people had light in Goſhen, the Lord commanded the Sun not to riſe upon the Egyptians. This is a more diſtinct act of the power of God. For, as he ſpeaks, Amos 4. 7. (to note the accurateneſs as well as the power of God in his judgments) concerning the rain, I commanded the clouds (ſaith he) and I cauſed it to rain upon one City, and cauſed it not to rain upon another City: So the Lord can cauſe the Sun, if he pleaſe, to riſe upon one Countrey, and not upon another; upon one Nation, and not upon another: upon one City, and not upon another. Thus we may underſtand it, He commandeth the Sun, and it riſeth not upon one people, though it ſhineth upon others, according to the manner of that Egyptian plague.

Laſtly, We may interpret it of an extraordinary tempeſtuous time, He commandeth the Sun, and it riſeth not; that is, he makes ſuch ſtorms and tempeſts, and cauſeth ſuch vapors and clouds in the air, that the Sun is muffled up, and is as if it did not riſe. Such a day (he means of any troubles and afflictions) we have deſcribed in the Prophet Joel (chap. 2. 2.) A day of darkneſs and of gloomineſs, a day of clouds and thick darkneſs, as the morning upon the mountains. But how is a day of darkneſs as the morning? &c. The ſpeech intends thus much, that this darkneſs ſhall ſpread it ſelf as ſuddenly as the morning-light ſpreads it ſelf upon the mountains, which being higheſt, are bleſt and gilded with the firſt iſſuing rayes of the riſing Sun. God is ſaid to command the Sun not to riſe, when he vails and makes the face of the Sun with ſudden clouds, as if there were no Sun at all but clouds. Paul, in his voyage to Rome, was under ſuch a tempeſt, and the Text ſaith, That neither Sun nor Stars for many dayes appeared (Acts 27. 20.) They were as if the Sun had not riſen for many dayes. Such ſtormy, gloomy weather God can make (Ezek. 32. 7.) When I ſhall put thee out, I will cover the heaven, and make the ſtars thereof dark, I will cover the Sun with a cloud, that is, I will put a black vail or cloak upon the heavens, that the Sun ſhall not put out any light, when I put them out; when I extinguiſh thee, I will (for a time) extinguiſh the Sun alſo. The conſtellations of heaven are often expreſſed ſympathizing with the diſpenſations of God on earth, Iſa. 13. 10. Joel 2. 31. Mat. 24. 29. He commandeth or ſpeaketh to the Sun.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, The bare word of God is a command.

He ſpeaks to the Sun, and it riſeth not. The Apoſtle uſeth that word about the creation of light, 2 Cor. 4. 6. The Lord who commandeth light to ſhine out of darkneſs, hath ſhined in our hearts. The Greek is, The Lord who ſpake light out of darkneſs, which we tranſlate, The Lord who commanded the light out of darkneſs. The words of God are Laws, and therefore the ten Commandments, that part of the word which carries the name of commands from all the reſt, is yet called The ten words of God. The Greeks call the ten Commandments the Decalogue, or the ten words; ſo many words, ſo many commands. The Devil ſeems to acknowledge this great power of God (only that he might abuſe it) in Chriſt, that his word was a command. If thou be the Son of God (Mat. 4. 3.) command that theſe ſtones be made bread. The Greek is, If thou be the Son of God, ſpeak to theſe ſtones that they become bread; or, ſpeak theſe ſtones into bread; he would take that as a proof of his Divinity; If thou be the Son of God, do this: God can do this, his word is a command to all creatures; for whatſoever he impoſeth upon them, they muſt ſubmit to it, therefore do thou ſo likewiſe, ſpeak to theſe ſtones, or command theſe ſtones to become bread.

Os in Scriptura pro voluntate ſæpe accipitur, ſignificat enim locutionem, locutione enim homines quid volunt manifeſtāt.

It ſhould be matter of comfort to us; while we remember that every word of God is a command upon all creatures; He hath made a decree which ſhall not paſs (Pſal. 148. 6.) The Hebrew is only, A word which ſhall not paſs; his word is a decree which none ſhall reverſe.

Secondly, As from the former clauſe [He commandeth the Sun.] we learn, That every word of God is a command; ſo, from that which followeth [And it riſeth not] we may learn,

That, Every creature obeys the command, and ſubmits to the will of God.

Men often ſpeak, and ſpeak in the higheſt language of commanding, and yet the thing is not done; but whatſoever the Lord ſpeaks, is done. Every thing hath an ear to hear his voyce, who made both voyce and ear, Pſal. 148.8. Fire and hail, ſnow and vapour, ſtormy wind fulfilling his word. Senſleſs creatures act at Gods command, and go upon his errand, They fulfil his word. The Lord ſent a meſſage unto Hezekiah, to aſſure him that his ſickneſs was at his command, becauſe the Sun was, 2 King. 20.9, 10. Shall the ſhadow go forward ten degrees, or go backward ten degrees in the dial of Ahaz? Either way (ſaith the Lord) I can do it; either way, as thou ſhalt ask a ſign, it ſhall be done. And Hezekiah anſwered, It is a light thing for the ſhadow to go down ten degrees, but let the ſhadow return backward ten degrees. Yet he knew the Lord did not offer him a light thing in either, when he ſaid, Shall the Sun go forward or backward? The Suns going forward was within a degree as great a matter as its going backward; but Hezekiah calls it a light matter, in regard of common apprehenſion and obſervation. The Suns motion is naturally forward, and though it ſhould mend its pace, many would not much regard it; but all would ſtand and wonder at a retrograde motion, or at the Sun going backward. Hence Hezekiah calls it a light matter for the Sun to go forward, comparatively to its going backward. And from either the Lord doth teach Hezekiah that his creatures will do what he bids them; even the Sun will move miraculouſly at his word. How great a rebuke will it be to man, if he move not at the command of God, and as God commands? Shall the Lord ſay to the Sun, riſe not, and it riſeth not; and ſhall he ſay to man, ſwear not, and he will ſwear; pray, and he will not pray? Shall the Lord have better obedience from his creatures without life, then from man, who hath not only life, but reaſon? or from Saints, who have not only reaſon, but grace? They who have grace, give not ſuch univerſal obedience as things without life; for though there be a part in them active to obey, yet there is a part backward to all obedience. Let it ſhame us that there ſhould be any thing in us (who have life, reaſon and grace) reſiſting, or not readily complying with all the commands of God, when the Sun, which hath not ſo much as life, obeys his voyce; He commandeth the Sun, and it riſeth not.

Thirdly, Obſerve from the manner of this ſpeech,

That, The Lord hath a negative voyce upon the motion of all creatures.

He commandeth the Sun, and it riſeth not. It is a Royal Prerogative that the Lord commands the Sun to riſe, but that the Lord hath a power to ſtay the Sun from riſing, lifts up his Prerogative to the higheſt. In all diſputes about power, his is reſolved to be greateſt, who hath the negative voyce, which checks and ſuperſedeates all others. This is the Prerogative of God, he can ſtay the motion of the Sun and of man. The Sun dares not do his office to the day, nor the Stars to the night, if the Lord ſay no. The Sun is deſcribed, Pſal. 19.5. like a Bridegroom coming out of his chamber, dreſt and prepared; and as a Giant rejoycing to run his race: but though the Sun be thus prepared and dreſt, and ready, yet if the Lord ſend a writ, and a prohibition to the Sun to keep within his chamber, he cannot come forth, his journey is ſtopt. Thus alſo he ſtops man in his neareſt preparations for any action. If the Lord will work, who ſhall let it? Iſa. 43.13. That is, there is no power in heaven or earth which can hinder him. But if the Lord will let, who ſhall work? Neither Sun, nor Stars, nor Men, nor Devils can work, if he forbid them. The point is full of comfort. God tells Abimelech in the caſe of Sarah, Abraham's wife, whom he took into his houſe, I know thou didſt it in the integrity of thy heart, but I with-held thee, and I ſuffered thee not to touch her, Gen. 20. 6. And when Laban purſued Jacob with hard thoughts againſt him, and ſtrong reſolutions to deal harſhly with him; the Lord gave a negative voyce (Gen. 31.24.) Take heed that thou ſpeak not to Jacob either good or bad. Laban had not the uſe of his own tongue; He could not ſpeak either good or bad. Not good or bad! Was there any hurt for Laban to ſpeak good to Jacob? And the ſtory tells us, That Laban ſpake many words, and ſome bad enough to Jacob, charging him with a double theft; Firſt, for ſtealing himſelf away, verſe 26. Wherefore didſt thou ſteal away from me? Secondly, For ſtealing his Idols, verſe 30. And now though thou wouldſt needs be gone, becauſe thou longeſt ſore after thy fathers houſe, yet wherefore haſt thou ſtoln away my gods? Foul language all, though God charged him not to ſpeak a bad word to Jacob. For anſwer, know, We muſt reſtrain that reſtraint to the point of bringing Jacob back again, Thou ſhalt not ſpeak either good or bad to him, to ſtop or turn him from his way, thou ſhalt uſe no threatnings to bring him back to thee; no, nor any promiſes or allurements; thou ſhalt make no offers of better entertainment to win him to thy ſervice, which was the thing he ſo much deſired. Good and bad are the two terms of all that can be ſpoken; and where the utmoſt extreams of ſpeaking are forbidden, all ſpeaking to that purpoſe, is forbidden. When the ancient people of God were few in number, yea, very few, and ſtrangers in the Land, when they went from one Nation to another, from one Kingdom to another people, one would think, that all the world would have been upon them; but here was their protection, God had a negative voyce, Pſal. 105.15. He ſuffered no man to do them wrong. Many had (as we ſay) an aking tooth at the people of God, their fingers itcht to be dealing with them, and the text ſhews four advantages the world had againſt them. Firſt, They were few. Secondly, Very few. Thirdly. Strangers. Fourthly, Unſetled. What hindered their enemies? It was the Lords negative voyce. He reproved Kings for their ſake, ſaying, Touch not mine anointed, and do my Prophets no harm. We ſee an inſtance of this, Gen. 35.5. When Jacob and his family journeyed, the terror of God was upon the Cities that were round about them, and they did not purſue after the ſons of Jacob. They had a mind to purſue after them, to revenge the ſlaughter of the Sichemites, but God ſaid, Purſue not: and then they could not purſue, they muſt ſtay at home. And when his people the Jews were ſafe in Canaan, he encourages them to come up freely to worſhip at Jeruſalem, by this aſſurance, No man ſhall deſire the Land, when thou ſhalt go up to appear before the Lord thy God thrice in the year, Exod. 24.34. God can ſtop not only hands from ſpoiling, but hearts from deſiring. Our appetite, whether concupiſcible, or iraſcible, is under his command, as well as our actions. The Prophet aſſerts this by way of queſtion (Lam. 3.37.) Who is he that ſaith, and it cometh to paſs, when the Lord commandeth it not? That is, if the Lord doth not concur, if the Lord vote againſt the ſaying or command of any man in the world, what he ſaith, ſhall never come to paſs.

We ſhould conſider this to help our faith in theſe times. God hath a negative voice upon thoſe counſels and concluſions which are carried with one conſent of men; And the wrath of man ſhall either turn to his praiſe, or all that is beyond that, he will ſtop, the remainder of wrath (namely, ſo much as remaines over and above what turns to the praiſe of God) ſhalt thou reſtrain, Pſal. 76.6. The ſword is in motion againſt us, even as the Sun; and the ſword ſeemeth to have received a charge to paſs from one end of the Land to the other; yet a countermand from God, will ſtop this ſword from going on. If he ſpeak to the ſword, the ſword ſhall wound no more. We may intreat the ſword to wound no more, as they (Jer. 47.6.) cried out, O thou ſword of the Lord, how long will it be ere thou be quiet? put thy ſelf into thy ſcabbard, reſt and be ſtill. The anſwer was, How can it be quiet, ſeeing the Lord hath given it a charge againſt Askelon? &c. Our anſwer might be (changing place) the ſame, How can it be quiet, ſeeing the Lord hath given it a charge againſt England? A word from God draws, and a word from God ſheaths the ſword. He that commands the Sun, and it riſeth not, can command the ſword, and it ſmiteth not; the fire, and it burns not; the water, and it drowns not; the Lions, and they devour not. How happy are they who ſerve the Lord over all!

Fourthly obſerve, Seeing He commandeth the Sun, and it riſeth not,

That, The dayly riſing of the Sun is an act of grace and favour to the world.

The Sun doth not riſe alone of it ſelf; it is the Lord (as we may ſay) that helps us every morning. Therefore it is ſaid (Mat. 5.45.) He makes his Sun to riſe: His Sun, Mark how Chriſt ſpeaks of the Sun, as Gods own, that

Sun which he can either cauſe to riſe or not to riſe, cauſe to riſe upon one people, and not upon another; He maketh his Sun to riſe; there is an act of common grace in making it to riſe upon all, upon the evil, and upon the good, Mat. 5. 53. That God makes the Sun to riſe to give them light, who uſe their eyes only to rebel againſt the light, how admirable is it?

Laſtly, As to the ſpecial aim of Job, we ſee what a proof we have of the omnipotency of God, He is great in power, and mighty in ſtrength; Why? Becauſe he can ſtop the Sun. He that can ſtay the Sun, what can he not do? We ſay to men that attempt impoſſibilities, Climb up to the Moon; it is more to ſtay the Sun, then to climb the Moon. And if the Lord be able to overcome this difficulty, what difficulty can he not overcome? Here's a clear proof of the infinite power and wiſdom of God, He ſpeaks to the Sun, and it riſeth not. And,

He ſealeth up the Stars.

The Sun is the light of the day, the Stars the light of the night; He ſealeth up the Stars. Some take it to be a Periphraſis, or a deſcription of night and day, becauſe till the Sun riſeth, it is night, and when the day appears, the Stars are ſealed up, or diſappear: The Sun riſeth, and the Stars are obſcured, we ſee them not. So the former clauſe, He commandeth the Sun, and it riſeth not, is a deſcription of the night; and this latter, He ſealeth up the Stars, is a deſcription of the day. The plain ſence of both being this, He maketh both night and day.

Qui efficit noctem & diem, nam donec ortus ſol eſt, nox & adveniente die, quaſi obſignatæ occultantur ſtellæ Jun.

Secondly (ſay others) this ſeal is ſet upon the Sun, in behalf of the ſtars, He ſealeth up the Sun for the ſtars, that is, in favour of the ſtars; that the ſtars might ſometime appear in their luſtre and glory to the world, he keepeth the Sun from appearing.

Pro ſtellis ſignavit (ſc. ſolem) ſignaculo, quaſi in favorem ſtellarum Deus continet ſolis ſplendorem in altero Hemiſpherio. Cajet.

But (as we tranſlate) we may better keep the ſeal upon the ſtars, He ſealeth up the ſtars.

And ſo, ſealing may import either of theſe two things. Firſt, The ſafe cuſtody of the ſtars, He ſealeth up the ſtars, that is, he preſerveth the ſtars in their Orbs, in the places where he hath ſet them, they ſhall never drop out. Sealing is often uſed for aſſurance and ſafe keeping. Darius, Dan. 6. ſealed the ſtone upon the Den of Lions, that ſo Daniel might not be reſcued or fetcht out from the danger. The Jews, that they might keep Chriſt faſt enough, ſealed the ſtone of the Sepulcher wherein his body was laid, Mat. 27. And in a ſpiritual ſence, the ſealing of the Spirit is to make the ſoul ſafe in the love and favour of God. A ſoul that is ſealed by the Spirit of God, is ſecured of the love of God, and ſhall never drop out of his heart. So, He ſealeth up the ſtars, is, He makes the ſtars firm and faſt in their ſpheres. But rather,

Annulos nō tam ornatus quam cuſtodiæ gratia olim inventos dicit. Macrob. l. 7 Satur. c. 3. Clauſæ videntur, cum non videntur.

Secondly, Sealing is for ſecreſie, or for the hiding of a thing from the ſight of others: So in the ſealing of Letters, that they may not be ſeen, and of treaſures, that theyb e not ſtoln or taken away, Deut. 32. 34. Job 14. 17. Thus the Lord ſeals up the ſtars, when he clouds or obſcures the ſtars, and will not let them be ſeen. Some make it an alluſion to a Book. The Heavens are a great volume, wherein many Truths of God are written, his Name is there, and the ſtars are ſo many Characters or Letters of his Name. He often ſeals up this great volume, and ſo blots theſe Letters, that no man can read or diſtinguiſh them.

Stellæ & omnia cœli lumina, velut charactêres quidā efficiunt librum. Pin.

Thirdly, The meaning of He ſealeth up the ſtars, may be taken thus, He keeps in, and cloſes up the virtue and influences of the ſtars; he ſtops thoſe treaſures which uſually come down from the ſtars upon the earth. Natural Philoſophy teaches us, that all the fatneſs and fruitfulneſs of the earth is conveyed from the heavens. Heaven nurſes and ſuckles the earth; and if the Lord pleaſe, he can dry up thoſe breaſts, ſeal up thoſe influences, ſtop thoſe ſecret workings which the heavenly bodies have upon the earth.

> Hence obſerve, That, The influences of the Heavens are in the hand of God, to let them out, or ſtay them when he pleaſeth.

As he can ſeal up the ſpiritual treaſures of heaven, that the ſoul ſhall receive no light, comfort or refreſhing from them in Ordinances, ſo he ſeals up the natural influences of the heavens, that the earth and the fruits of it here below, ſhall receive no quickning, no refreſhing from them. And the earth languiſhes when the Lord ſuſpendeth and ſealeth up the natural influences of heaven; as the ſoul languiſheth, when the Lord ſtops up the ſpiritual influences of heaven, when he ſeals up the Star of Jacob, that day-ſtar from on high, Jeſus Chriſt.

What we hear of God in natural things, ſhould keep us in continual dependance upon him for ſpirituals; he ſeals with the comforts of his own Spirit, and he ſeals up all comforts from our ſpirits.

Verſe 8. Which alone ſpreadeth out the heavens, and treadeth upon the waves of the Sea.

This verſe gives us a further argument of the mighty power of God. See how Job's diſcourſe moves from earth to heaven, and from the heavens down to the ſea. He ſearches for the wonders of Gods power and wiſdom, in heaven, and earth, and in the waters. Before he ſhews God ſtopping the courſe of the Sun, and ſealing up the ſtars; now ſpreading out of the heavens, and treading upon the Sea.

He ſpreadeth out the heavens.

The heavens in reference to the earth, are the upper part of the world. The heavens are (as it were) the roof of the great houſe which God made, or as a ſpangled canopy over our heads. He ſpreadeth out the heavens: The word is of the Dual Number in the Hebrew, and hath divers derivations, which are conſiderable to enlighten us in this point.

He ſpreadeth out the heavens.] Some derive it from Shem, which ſignifies a name, a name of honour and dignity; Men of name are men of renown, Gen. 6. 4. The heavens are the moſt glorious, beautiful and renowned part of the Creation, their name is above every name of inanimate creatures.

שמאוים à שם Nomen, gloria, decus, quia cœlum eſt ornatiſſima pars mundi. Mar. in Lex Philoſ. Anſhi Haſhem.

Others, becauſe there are waters above in theſe heavens, derive the word from (Sham) which is an adverb of place, and (Majim) which ſignifies waters; as much as to ſay, there are waters, or there is the place where God hath fountains and ſtores of water. All his waters are not upon the earth, he hath Waters and Springs in heaven.

A third takes it from a ſimple, not a compound word, being near the *Iſhmaeliti*ſh word Shama, noting only ſuperiority in place, high or above.

Paulus Fagius in Gen. 1.

A fourth opinion derives it from Schamem, which ſignifies, to be amazed, or to make one at a ſtand with wonder: And the reaſon is given, becauſe the heavens are ſuch a vaſt ſtupendious body, that if a man look upon them exactly, they will amaze him. Who can obſerve the Sun, Moon and Stars, and not wonder and be tranſported at their vaſtneſs and beauty, at the ſwiftneſs and regularity of their motions; it is above the reach and apprehenſion of natural reaſon, how the Lord ſhould faſhion and ſpread out ſuch heavens.

שמאיים à שמם Obſtupuit, propter inſignem vaſtitatē iſtius corporis, quæ ipſa nos aſpicientes, in ſtuporem rapit. Piſc. in Gen. 1.

But, What are theſe Heavens which he ſpreadeth forth?

Heaven is ſometimes expreſſed with an addition, The higheſt heavens, the third heavens, in 2 Cor. 12. 12. The heaven of heavens, 1 Kings 8. 27. Paul was rapt up to the third heavens, that is, in viſions and revelations he was brought as near to God himſelf as a creature poſſibly can. Of this heaven we are to underſtand that, Gen. 1. 1. Where Moſes ſaith, In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth, and the earth was without form and void. He doth not ſay, the heavens which God created at firſt, was without form and void, but the earth was without form and void; for that heaven was a perfect creature. We read further, of the creating of thoſe heavens which we ſee, of the viſible heavens, which are the continent of the Sun, Moon and Stars. But, In the beginning God created the heaven, that heaven, which by way of eminency is called, The habitation of his holineſs and of his glory, Iſa. 63. 15. This was created in the beginning, and then, it is conceived the Angels were likewiſe created; but the earth which was then made, was an imperfect creature, and all other corporeal creatures with their ſeveral forms and fulneſs, were extracted out of the earth, which was without form and void. The very heavens (which we ſee) were made out of that firſt earth; the Sun, Moon and the Stars, yea, the very light it ſelf was made out of that earth, that general heap of matter which the Lord created at firſt, and is ſaid to have been without form and void. But the heaven which we call the heaven of heavens, the third heaven, or the higheſt heaven, was a perfect creature the firſt day, made without any pre-exiſtent matter whatſoever by the power of God. This heaven is the largeſt of all the heavens which God ſpread out.

Secondly, Take heavens for the viſible heavens. I intend not to ſtay upon Philoſophical conſiderations, only what the Scripture holds forth; we find heavens put, firſt for the ſtarry heavens, or the firmament where the ſtars have their motion, that's the heaven meant (Gen. 1:17. Pſal. 8. 7. Pſal. 19. 1.) This, according to the doctrine of Aſtronomers, is diſtinguiſhed into ſeveral orbs and ſpheres, in ſeven of which ſeven ſpecial ſtars are ſaid to move, and all the reſt to be fixed in the eighth.

The Apoſtle Jude ſeems to give a hint of thoſe planetical orbs (Jude, verſ. 13.) where he juſtly reproacheth unſetled ſpirits by the name of wandering Stars or Planets, to whom is reſerved the blackneſs of darkneſs for ever.

Thirdly, Heaven is taken in Scripture for a nearer heaven, for all that which is below the Moon, for the air and the clouds. Hence the birds are ſaid to fly in the heavens; and (Gen. 8. 2.) the rain from heaven was reſtrained, that is, the rain from the clouds, for there is no rain in that heaven above the clouds.

Triplex eſt cœlum aeriũ ſidereum, ac aliud his ſuperius inviſibile & divinũ. Dam. l. 2. de orthodox. fide.

Heaven is a building of three ſtories. The firſt ſtory, is the air and clouds, up to the Moon: The ſecond ſtory reaches all the Planets and Stars. The third ſtory is alſo called, the third heaven, or the heaven of heavens, the place of his moſt glorious reſidence, who filleth heaven and earth.

All theſe heavens the Lord ſpreadeth out.

There is a threefold ſpreading forth of a thing.

Firſt, By contuſion or beating with hammers, as a maſs of Gold or Silver, &c. is ſpread into thin plates and leaves.

Secondly, By way of rarefaction or attenuation; water is rarified by fire, and ſo are metals, when they are melted or cauſed to run with extream heat. In alluſion to which Elihu ſpeaks in his challenge to Job (Chap. 37. 18.) haſt thou with him ſpread out the sky which is ſtrong, and as a molten looking-glaſs. The sky is of a weak, ſleight matter, not hard, maſſie, or elemental, yet it is ſtrong; the nature of it being incorruptible, the figure of it round and indiſſoluble. And it is compared to a looking glaſs, for the clearneſs of it; thoſe inſtruments were made, ſome of glaſs, ſome of ſteel or braſs, molten and poliſht for that purpoſe.

Thirdly, A thing is ſpread forth by unfolding the parts, as a tent or a curtain is ſpread, and thus the ſpreading of the heavens is deſcribed, Pſal. 104. 1, 2. O Lord, thou art cloathed with honour and majeſty, thou ſtretcheſt out the heavens like a curtain. God took the vaſt matter folded together, and ſpread it as a curtain, Tabernacle or Tent. And the Latine word which carries the interpretation of this in the Hebrew, is frequently applied by ancient Authors, to the pitching of Tents in War. In this third ſence we are ſpecially to underſtand the Text, Alone ſpreadeth out the Heavens.

Hic Dolapũ manum, hic ſævus tendebat Achilles Virg. 2. Æneiad. Juxta hortos tendebat. Suet. in Galb. c. 12. de Germanorum Cohorte. Et milites tendere omnes extra vallum juſſit. Pac. l. 13.

And ſo this ſpreading is either an expoſition of the nature of the heavens (Gen. 1. 8.) The Lord ſaid, Let there be a firmament; the Hebrew is, Let there be an expanſion, or a ſtretching forth. Theſe heavens are ſo much ſpread forth, that they are called, a thing ſpread forth; and ſo the Text is a deſcription of the heavens in their firſt Creation. Or, it may refer to the words going before, and ſo theſe are a reaſon to ſhew that God can command the Sun, and ſeal up the Stars, why? He ſpreadeth forth the heavens; that is, the heavens are all of his making, and at his diſpoſing; he ſet the Sun there, and put the Stars there, he faſhioned the orbs in which they are placed, and therefore he can ſtay the Sun, and ſeal up the Stars.

Cœlum ſive firmamentũ vocatur רקיע eò quod eſt expanſum & extenſum ſuper terrã.

And as he thus ſpreadeth out the heavens, ſo, which is more obſervable, He ſpreadeth them out alone. When a piece of hangings, or the like of a large extent is to be ſpread forth, one man cannot do it, many hands are put to that work. It is an axiom in Divinity, That no creature can be an inſtrument in Creation: this ſtretching forth of the heavens is an act of Creation, therefore he alone doth it, there is none to help him.

Inſtrumentũ creationis creatura eſſe non poteſt.

Yet we find that God had ſome other with him, when he ſtretched out the heavens, though it be here attributed to him alone: and though Elihu expoſtulates with Job in this point (Chap. 37. 18.) Haſt thou with him ſpread out the sky which is ſtrong, and as a molten looking-gl. ſs? Elihu would bring down the thoughts of Job, which he conceived were too much lifted up, by ſhewing that God did this alone; Job (ſaith he) didſt thou hold one part of this great Curtain or Canopy of heaven in thy hand, and God another, and was it ſo ſpread out between you? No, neither man nor Angel was his helper; who then was with God in this work? Solomon tells us (Prov. 8. 27.) When he prepared the heavens I was there, when he ſet a compaſs upon the face of the depth. Who was that? I wiſdom was there. Jeſus Chriſt was there. Chriſt was he by whom God prepared and ſtretched forth the heavens. No creature was there, only the uncreated creating Son of God. God created alone, that is, without the help of any creature; but he created all things by the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. All things were made by him, and without him was not any thing made, that was made. Obſerve from hence,

First, The heavens are as the royal tent and pavilion of the Lord.

He ſpreadeth them out.] The Lord is often expreſt coming out of the heavens with warlike preparations: There his tent is pitcht, and he ſitteth there, as a great Commander in his pavilion, to give out orders to his Armies. He hath an hoſt in heaven, and therefore he hath a tent in heaven; or rather heaven is his tent. The Lord hath his way in the whirlwind, and in the ſtorm, and the clouds are the duſt of his feet, Nah. 1. 3. God pitches his battel in heaven; The ſtars in their courſes fought againſt Siſera. He fought from heaven; from thence he diſcharged his great Artilery, his Cannons thundered and lightened againſt the enemies of his people. He hath alſo his ſtore-houſes for ammunition, his Magazines there (Job 38.22.) Haſt thou (ſaith God to Job) entred into the treaſures of the ſnow? Or haſt thou ſeen the treaſures of the hail, which I have reſerved againſt the time of trouble, the day of battel and war? He ſpeaks of heaven as of a great ſtore-houſe, where he hath his arms, his powder and ball, all his warlike proviſion laid up againſt the day of battel. Heathens have ſpoken ſuch language, calling ſtorms and tempeſt, hail and thunder, The weapons and engines of the Armory of heaven.

Eſt alluſio armamentaria publica, ubi armorũ, machinarum & tormentorũ ingens apparatus reconditur. Bol. Quicquid habent telorum armamentaria cœli. Juven. Sat. 13.

Secondly, In that he ſaith, He ſtretcheth out the heavens alone, Obſerve,

That the Lord needs not the help of any creature to do his greateſt works.

He hath power, and he hath power in himſelf to do what he hath a will ſhould be done; let all the creatures in the world ſtand ſtill, yet God can carry his work forward. What work is like this, the ſtretching forth the heavens: There cannot be a work of ſo much difficulty under heaven, as the ſpreading forth of the heavens. He who did that alone, what can he not do alone? Though men will not, though men cannot help, the Lord can and will alone. Iſa. 59. 16. He ſaw that there was no man, and wondered that there was no interceſſor; no man to do, no man to ſpeak in that buſineſs, not a man appeared: what then? Doth the Lord ſay, Well, ſeeing there is no man to do, I alſo will let it lie? No, Therefore his arm brought ſalvation unto him, and his power ſuſtained him; he did it alone. Paul ſpeaks of himſelf, that at his firſt appearing before Nero, all men forſook him, not a man would own him, but (ſaith he) The Lord ſtood by me (2 Tim 4. 15.) This is a great encouragement to us in great affairs and buſineſſes, in the greateſt ſtraits and difficulties of the times; if men forſake and deſert, the Lord alone can do all for us; if men have not power to do what they have will to do, nor will to do what they have power; then remember, He that ſtretcheth out the heavens alone, can order our works alone, compoſe our differences alone, conquer our enemies alone. God alone is infinite, greater, ſtronger, wiſer, then all creatures together. God can be now as he will be hereafter, all in all unto us. God is enough for us without any creature; yea, God and all that he hath made cannot do more then God without any thing that he hath made.

And treadeth upon the waves of the Sea.

The Sea is a fluid body; to ſail or ſwim in the waters is ordinary, but to tread upon the waters, that's another act of wonder, He treadeth upon the waves of the Sea; or he walks on them as upon a pavement.

Verbū Darac aliquando eſt ducis prælïantis & debellantis hoſtes. Quaſi jure belli ſubjicere.

To tread upon the waves.] Imports, that God hath a command over the Sea, and the waves of it. To tread upon a thing is to have it under our power, or in ſubjection to us (Pſal. 91. 13.) the promiſe is, Thou ſhalt tread upon the Lion, and upon the Aſp; that is, thou ſhalt prevail and triumph over the greateſt evils, over enemies as ſtrong and fierce as Lions, as poiſonous and ſtinging as the Aſp, *Pſal.*108.9. Over Edom will I caſt out my ſhoe. Which notes either contempt of them; as if he had ſaid, I look upon them as worthy only to ſcrape and make clean my ſhoes. Or ſecondly, Conqueſt over them; I will walk thorow Edom and ſubdue it. *Deut.*11.24. Every place whereon the ſole of your feet ſhall tread ſhall be yours; that is, yours ſhall be conquering feet, you ſhall tread as Lords upon all lands. Yours ſhall be all the ground you go on, that is, it ſhall be ſubject to you, Judg. 5.21. O my ſoul, thou haſt troden down ſtrength; and Mic. 1.3. The Lord ſhall tread upon the high places of the earth; that is, the Lord ſhall ſubject the higheſt things that are upon the earth to his power. That place is very obſervable, Numb. 24. 17. Where Balaam propheſying of Chriſt, ſaith (as we tranſlate) A Star ſhall come out of Jacob; the Hebrew is, A Star ſhall tread out of Jacob, noting Chriſt a victorious, a triumphing Star, who ſhould come treading and trampling upon the world as conqueror; though the world, in regard of his out-ſide, trod and trampled upon him: So it is explained in the latter words of the verſe, He ſhall ſmite the corners of Moab, and deſtroy all the children of Sheth. A Star ſhall tread out of Jacob. A treading Star is a triumphing Star.

Calcabit ſtella è Jacob.

The Hebrew is, He treadeth upon the high places of the Sea; the word (Bamoth) is uſed frequently for the places where idolatrous worſhip was ſet up, their high places. Mr. Broughton tranſlates, the high waves of the Sea; becauſe Sea-waves riſe high, ſo high, that the Pſalmiſt deſcribes them, mounting up to the heaven (Pſal. 107. 26.) When theſe high waves threaten to ſwallow all, then the Lord treads upon them, that is, his power is above them, and he makes them ſubmit to his command. As to ride upon the high places of the earth (Deut. 32. 13. Iſa. 58. 14.) is to have higheſt command, and to be a chief upon the earth, or to dwell ſafely and free from annoyance upon the earth: So to tread upon the high places or high waves of the Sea, implies Gods Empire or Soveraignty over the Sea. Hence obſerve, > Firſt, That the Sea in its higheſt rage is at the beck, and under the treadings of God.

When the waves are moſt ſtirring and raging, he ſpeaks them quiet, Pſal. 89. 9. Thou ruleſt the raging of the Sea; when the waves thereof ariſe, thou ſtilleſt them. As to walk upon the Sea, is an argument of a divine power; ſo to command the Sea. When Chriſt (*Matth.*8.26.) rebuked the Sea, and ſaid, as another Goſpel hath it (Mark 4. 38.) Peace and be ſtill, as if one ſhould huſh a child; The men marvelled, ſaying, What manner of man is this, that even the winds and the Sea obey him? Winds and waves ſeem the moſt diſobedient, ſtubborn and unteachable creatures in the world; yet a word from God calms the one, and ſmooths the other. When the old Egyptians would by their Hieroglyphicks expreſs an impoſſibility, they did it by the picture of a man treading upon the waves; as if they ſhould ſay, this is as impoſſible as for a man to walk upon the waves. The Heathen Poets deſcribe Neptune their Sea-god, ſwimming, not walking upon, or treading the waters. To tread upon the waters is ſo much above man, that meer Naturaliſts thought it too much for God. Man ſhews his pride and arrogancy to the height, when he pretends to Lord it over the waves of the Sea. When the Helleſpont, a Streight of the Sea, by a ſudden ſtorm riſing upon it, broke the bridge of Boats, which Xerxes had made to paſs into Greece, and ſo oppoſed the project of that Perſian Monarch, he caſt fetters into it, as if he would teach it to know it's Lord, and cauſed it to be beaten with three hundred ſtripes, to chaſten it's former diſobedience. It is recorded in the Hiſtory of this Nation, concerning Canute an ancient Daniſh King, that when a mighty ſtorm of flattery roſe upon him, he appeaſed it by ſhewing he could not appeaſe the ſtorms of the Sea. One of his Courtiers told him in his progreſs, as he rode near the Sea ſide, that he was Lord not only of the Land, but of the Sea, and that all thoſe Seas which he ſaw, were at his command. Well, ſaith he, we ſhall ſee that by and by, and ſo walketh down to the ſhore, and pulling off his upper garment, wraps it together, and ſits upon it near the flowing of the waves, and with a loud voice ſpeaks thus, O ye Seas and Waves come no further, Touch not my feet, &c. But the Sea came up, notwithſtanding his charge, and confuted that flattery. God only hath this Prerogative, He treadeth upon the high waves of the Sea.

Ægyptii ut rem prorſus impoſſibilem demonſtrarent, hominem pedibus ſuper aquas ambulantem in ſuis Hieroglyphicis depingebant. Veteres cum ſuum Neptunum ſuper aquas ambulantem pingere non auderent, à nando ei nomen dederunt. Herod. l. 1.

Delectat Canuti regis Anglorum exemplum, qui aſſentationis procellam, procella maris in ſe admiſſa compeſcuit. Bold. ex Camb.Brit. Ex alto incitatum fluctum, ita alloquutus eſt, unda tibi jubeo, utne pedes meas tangas

There are alſo myſtical waves, which the Lord treadeth upon: people and Nations are called waters, and many waters, in the Book of the Revelation. The waves of the Sea cannot be in a greater rage, then the Nations of the earth ſometimes are. And the ſame Hebrew word by which the rage of the Sea is properly expreſt, expreſſes alſo the rage of men (Pſal. 2. 1.) Why do the Heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing? Why are the Gentiles, the great waters up, as high waves, threatning a deluge to the throne of Chriſt? The power of Chriſt is as eminent in ſtilling the rage of the myſtical, as of the literal waters; yea, we find theſe two matcht together (Pſal. 65. 7.) He ſtilleth the noiſe of the Seas, the noiſe of their waters, and the tumult of the people. Hence the Apoſtle Jude (verſ. 13.) calls wicked men, raging waves of the Sea, foaming out their own ſhame. The Lord ſitteth upon theſe floods; yea, the Lord ſitteth King for ever, Pſal. 29. 10.

There are other myſtical waves, even waves within us, which will not be trodden upon by any foot, but Gods. There is a Sea of wickedneſs in every mans heart by nature. Every wicked man is nothing but a Sea, he is a Sea of wickedneſs. The wicked (Iſa. 57. 20.) are like the troubled Sea, when it cannot reſt. And as the winds blow from all quarters of the heavens, and ſtrive upon the Seas: So there are divers luſts, which as winds ſtrive upon the face of mans heart; the luſt of pride, the luſt of covetouſneſs, the luſts of ambition, of envy, of malice, theſe enrage and ſwell the waters. The Lord treads upon the high waves of this Sea alſo, he reſtrains and keeps luſt down by his power, it would drown all elſe. Theſe raging waves ſwell too high in his own people; it is the work of his Spirit to tread theſe down; and when the winds of ſeveral temptations raiſe thoſe waves, he it is that commands them down. Who amongſt us is there, that one time or other finds not corruption raging, as the high waves of the Sea? How mighty and powerful is the Lord in that great work of his effectual grace, treading upon the waves of this Sea, remaining corruption in his ſervants and children!

Verſ. 9. Which maketh Arcturus, Orion and Pleiades, and the chambers of the South.

In the verſe immediately before, we heard of the power of God in ſtretching out the heavens; and in this we have his excellent ſkill, and infinite wiſdom diſplayed in adorning, decking and beautifying thoſe heavens which he had ſtretched forth. He hath not only drawn out a vaſt piece of work, like a large Canopy (ſuch are the heavens) but he hath embroidered this Canopy, and ſet it with rich ſparkling ſtones; he hath made ſeveral engravings, images, figures and repreſentations upon it.

In aſtrorum pulchritudine, ſitu, ordine, vi, ſtupendiſq; in hæc inferiora operationibus, admirabilis prorſus creatoris magnificentia & magnitudo plurimum elucet. Bold.

Or we may make the connexion with the latter clauſe of the former verſe. Job having ſaid that the Lord treadeth upon the high waves of the Sea; that when the Seas are moſt ſtormy and tempeſtuous, they are at his command, and that their confuſions are under his empire and order; he adds this verſe by way of anſwer to a poſſible objection. For ſome might ſay, the motion of the ſeas is from the power and influences of the ſtars, from the riſing and ſetting of the Moon, with other Planets and Conſtellations. True, ſaith Job, yet the Lord is he that treadeth upon the waves of the ſea, it is the Lord that orders them, and not the ſtars: Though the ſtars and conſtellations have a dominion over the ſeas in their ebbings and flowings, motions and revolutions, yet there is a Lord who hath power, not only over the ſeas, but over that which overpowers the ſeas, even over the ſtars of heaven. He maketh Arcturus, Orion and Pleiades, and the chambers of the South; which ſtars, according to the doctrine of Aſtronomy, have a ſpecial power upon the ſeas.

Cum multa ſint aſtra hominibus & fluctibus infenſa, eorũ præcipuè meminit, quorum vis ad ciendas tempeſtates hominibus magis eſt explorata. Sanct.

Either of theſe wayes we may make the connexion.

Firſt; That Job would expreſs the adorning of the heavens, after he had ſpoken of their making and ſtretching forth.

Or ſecondly, He would teach us, that though the heavens work upon the ſeas, yet God works upon the heavens. He maketh Arcturus, Orion and Pleiades, and the chambers of the South.

I ſhall endeavour to ſpeak of theſe diſtinctly: The holy Ghoſt giving us ſuch a Text, it is not lightly to be paſſed by; and though here are ſtrange words and uncouth expreſſions, yet we may (I hope) bring them down to an eaſie meaning, and fit them to the underſtanding of the ſimpleſt.

I ſhall touch a little in the general, before I come to every one in particular.

Job under theſe names couches many of the ſtars of heaven. A Star (according to Philoſophy) is the thicker part of his Orb or Sphear; it is thicker then other parts of the heavens; for otherwiſe as it could not hold the light, ſo it could not reflect and ſend forth the light; it could not be a veſſel for light, or a conveyance for light. Light was created the firſt day (Gen. 1. 3.) but the Lights were created the fourth day (Gen. 1. 14.) that is, certain veſſels were created to hold the light: And God ſaid, Let there be Lights in the firmament of heaven, that is, let the light which is now ſcattered through all, be gathered in certain receptacles, fit to keep, and yet fitted to tranſmit and diſperſe it into all parts of the world; Let them be for lights in the firmament of heaven to give light, verſ. 15.

Stella eſt denſior pars orbis; ideo lucent aſtra, non cœli; quia hi diaphani ſunt, & rari, aſtra autem denſa, eoq; lucem retinentia & reflectentia. Magir. Phyſ.

Of theſe Lights or Stars, ſome are called moving, and others fixed. That's the doctrine of Aſtronomers, and it is the doctrine of the Scripture. The Apoſtle Jude (verſe 13.) calling ſome wandring ſtars, ſeems to admit of that diſtinction of the ſtars, into wandring and fixed. The unfixt or wandring ſtars are ſeven, known by their names and motions. Theſe in the Text are none of them, theſe are placed above them.

The ſeat of theſe Aſteriſmes is in the eighth ſpear (to take that doctrine for granted, though many diſpute it) or ſtory of the heavens (ſo the Prophet Amos ſpeaks, chap. 9. 2. He buildeth his ſtories in the heavens; we put in the Margin, ſphears; He buildeth his ſphears in the heavens, which being one above another, are elegantly called the ſtories of heaven.) And in the eighth ſphear innumerable ſtars are fixed; ſome of which fall under ſpecial obſervation and numeration. Aſtronomers give us a Catalogue of a thouſand three and twenty ſtars, which they exactly diſtinguiſh; which is the ancient account. And ſince that, we have had many more diſcoveries by thoſe noble Navigators, who have made thorow-lights to the world, that the Eaſt might look into the Weſt, and the South into the North: The travel, ſtudy and experiments of theſe Maſters in Navigation, have brought us in an additional number of three hundred ſtars more. And ſo we reckon a thouſand three hundred and twenty three fixed ſtars, known by name; of which, theſe in the Text are a part.

The other ſtars are both innumerable and un-nameable, beyond number, and without name. Hence, when the Lord ſhewed Abraham how great his ſeed ſhould be, he carries him out, and bids him look towards heaven, and tell the ſtars, if he were able to number them, Gen. 15. 5.

The ſtars (to come a little nearer to the text) obſerved and numbred by Students in this great volume of the heavens, are diſtinguiſhed into forty and one images or repreſentations, whereof ſome (for Learnings ſake) are fancied the images of men and women, others the images of Beaſts and Fiſhes, others the images of things without life. Of theſe images, twelve are in the Zodiack, commonly called the twelve Signes. In the Southern part of the Sphear eleven of thoſe Signes are placed, and in the Northern eighteen, which added to twelve in the Zodiack, make up the number of forty one.

Omnes hæ ſtellarum imagines non tantum ordine & ſitu, verum etiam certis nominibus inter ſe diſtincta ſunt.

Now, when it is ſaid in the Text, That God makes Arcturus, Orion and Pleiades, and the chambers of the South. We are not to take them for ſo many diſtinct and particular ſtars, but for conſtellations or configurations, becauſe they ſtand in ſuch a form or figure; and ſo for the better knowledge of them, they are called by the names of ſuch creatures as they ſeem to repreſent.

We have three of thoſe ſpecial figures here in the Text, and one more general. Arcturus, Orion and Pleiades are three figures or ſtarry repreſentations in the eighth ſphear. I will open their Hebrew names; as alſo the Latine and Greek names uſed commonly in tranſlations, by which we ſhall get a clearer underſtanding in the nature of the things themſelves.

Which maketh Arcturus.

The word Gneſh in Hebrew, ſignifies a meeting or congregating of many things together; becauſe in that one, many ſtars are joyned. Arcturus in Greek, is as much as to ſay, The tail of the Bear, becauſe the ſtars called Arcturus, ſtand in a figure like the tail of a Bear.

עש Congregare, conglobare, huic reſpondet Græcum verbum συνιϛάζειν, quod eſt, commeare, vel undiquaq; convenire. Arcturus ſtella eſt in cauda minoris Urſæ, & Septentrio dicitur, παρὰ τὴν τῆς ἄρκτου οὐρὰν, ab urſinæ caudæ ſimilitudine.

The ſecond Aſteriſme, which we tranſlate Orion, is called in Hebrew (Cheſil) and that ſignifies either conſtancy or inconſtancy (the ſence runs both wayes) ſetledneſs or variableneſs. And it is applied to this ſtar or conſtellation in either ſence.

First, For conſtancy or ſetlednes, becauſe there is much ſtrength in the influences of that conſtellation.

Or ſecondly, For inconſtancy and unſetledneſs, becauſe it is obſerved, that upon the riſing of this ſtar, there is much variety, changeableneſs and unſetledneſs in the weather. Hence the Jews call that Moneth which anſwers to our November, or the ninth Moneth, Chiſlu (Zech. 7. 1.) becauſe that Moneth was uſually very ſtormy, and the weather changeable, Orion then ariſing in their Hemiſphere. The Arabick word (Algeuſe) by which this Aſteriſme is named, ſignifies a Warrior; and the Chaldee (Algebar) a Giant, all aiming at the furious, boiſterous winds which uſually attend the appearing of this conſtellation. And ſo the Greek word from which Orion cometh, ſignifies, to trouble or to diſturb. And its uſual Epithetes are bold, vehement, impetuous Orion, all betraying its unquiet and various temper.

כסיל Conſtantiam robur, vel inconſtantiam ſignificat, quod ejus ortus tempeſtatibus orbem variè turbat. Bold.

Unde November Hebraicè dicitur Chiſlu, ab ortu Orionis, quod eo mẽſe magna fit Cœli inconſtantia: Arabicè vocatur Algeuſe, i. e. Bellator; à Chaldæis, Algebar; i. e. Gigas: Θερμὸς Ὀρίων, Audax, vehemens, ardens Orion. Plin. l. 18. c. 25. Ὀρίνω, Græcis eſt turbo, concito. Pagn. in Theſ. Dum pelago deſævit hyems & aquoſus Orion.

The third ſtarry aſſociation we call Pleiades; the Hebrews, Chimah. This is a very cold conſtellation. The Greeks expreſs winter by this word, becauſe it brings in froſt and cold with it. The derivation of the Hebrew name is very obſcure. Some profeſſedly acknowledge their ignorance, that they cannot tell how to derive it; yet ſome dig the root of it in Chaldee, ſignifying firm: Others, in the Hebrew, ſignifying to deſire, or earneſtly to wiſh for a thing and the reaſon of it is (ſay they) becauſe theſe ſtars (the Pleiades) the ſeven ſtars we often ſpeak of, are much deſired by Sea-men; for ſeeing them, they have a perfect rule to guide and ſteer their courſe by. And it is an obſervation among ſome of the Rabbins, that Noah had a little window in the top of his Ark, that from thence he might (when the waters began to aſſwage, and the ſtreſs of the deluge was over) look up to the heavens, and know by thoſe ſtars what courſe his Ark made. Thus much we know, χεῖμα. Cur vocatur Chima, libenter fateor me neſcire. Bold. Quidam deducunt à קים Chaldaicum, quod denotat rem elevatam ſtabiliter & in ſublime firmiter erectam, quia eſt inſtar cardinis, quaſi polus aut vertex mundi. Alii à כמה quod eſt deſiderare, in rem aliquam tendere, quia Nauta affectant videre hoc ſignum.

know, that the ſtars are the Sea-mens night-guide, and the riſing of ſome of them falls under their more ſpecial obſervation.

Interiora Auſtri. Nam Deus ex ipſis promptuariis, quaſi de theſauris ſuis quoſdã educit ventos, & per ipſos mirabiles ſiderum illorum influxus, intelligit æſtiva ſidera, ut eſt Canicula, &c. Quæ quia ad Polum Arcticum ſpectant (qui velut inferior ſubeſt Horizonti noſtro) penetralium Auſtri ſidera vocantur quaſi in penetralibus mundi à nobis abſcondita.

The fourth title of the ſtars is, The Chambers of the South. And why The Chambers of the South? The Continent is put for the things contained. The word which we tranſlate Chambers, ſignifies any thing that is very inward or retired, and therefore tranſlated a chamber, Judg 15.1. & Cant. 3.4. Mans ſpirit is thus expreſſed, becauſe it lies ſo far inward (Prov. 24.4.) By knowledge ſhall the chambers be filled; that is the moſt ſecret parts of the ſoul ſhall be filled by knowledge, Prov. 18.8. The inward part of the belly. Prov. 7.27. They go down to the chambers of death, that is, to the inmoſt and moſt retired wayes of death, the grave. Here, The chambers of the South, are the moſt remote, hidden and ſecret parts of the South. And the reaſon why after he had expreſt the other conſtellations by ſpecial names, he gives us theſe only in general [The chambers of the South] is, becauſe the ſtars which are under the ſouthern pole, are hidden from us, and are encloſed and lodged as in a chamber: God locks them up in his treaſury, and they are ſecrets to this part of the world; the Southern Pole being under or below our Horizon. In the artificial Sphears of heaven we find few Aſteriſmes or deſcriptions of the ſtars about thoſe parts; there are many, but we perceive them not. And the virtue and operation of theſe chambered, hidden ſtars, is as ſtrong as of thoſe which appear in greateſt luſtre and beauty.

Again, When he ſaith, Which maketh Arcturus, &c. His meaning is, Which makes them appear, or do their office. Theſe ſtars were made when the heavens were made, and Job's diſcourſe is not about creation, but providence. So that to make Arcturus, &c. in the ſence of this Text, is only this, to order the times of their riſing and ſetting, to diſtinguiſh the ſeaſons of the year, and to produce their ſeveral effects in every ſeaſon, which providential acts are here eſpecially aimed at. Thus he maketh Arcturus to riſe, about the middle of September, which is the time of the Equinox, when the civil day and night are even, and ſhare the hours of the natural day equally between them. Or, as others account, this ſtar riſes about eleven dayes before the Equinox. So, by Arcturus, we may underſtand that ſeaſon of the year. And he maketh Arcturus, is, he orders and diſpoſeth of the ſeaſon, commonly called Autumn. Orion ſhines forth in our Hemiſphear about the moneth of December, and by that winter is deſigned. The Pleiades begin at the Spring, therefore called Vergilia, becauſe they ariſe (vere) in the Spring, and diſappear or go down toward Winter. The chambers of the South are fiery ſtars, which have their chief influence upon us in heat of Summer.

And ſo we may put the Text into theſe plain expreſſions, He maketh Arcturus, Orion and Pleiades, and the chambers of the South, that is,

Firſt, He makes and orders Summer and Winter, Spring, and Harveſt, becauſe theſe ſtars divide the four ſeaſons of the year.

Or ſecondly, thus, He makes hot and cold, wet and dry, ſtorm and calm.

Or thirdly, As theſe four conſtellations are aſſigned to the four chief points of heaven. Arcturus is known by all who know any things in the heavens, to be ſeated about the Northern Pole, whoſe oppoſites are thoſe ſtars in the Chambers of the South. Orion dwells in the Eaſt, and the Pleiades in the Weſt.

So the plain Engliſh of the words is this, That the Lord by his mighty power and wiſdom ordereth and appointeth the motions of heaven, from Eaſt to Weſt, from North to South.

Laſtly, To clear up the ſence of this Text, we muſt underſtand theſe four conſtellations Synecdochically, theſe being put for all the reſt; for as God orders theſe, ſo every ſtar in the firmament; the leaſt are under his eye, and at his diſpoſe, as well as the greateſt. But becauſe theſe are the moſt eminent, uſeful and efficacious in their appearances, motions and influences, therefore theſe are named; He maketh Arcturus, Orion and Pleiades, and the Chambers of the South.

We may obſerve from the words thus opened, divers profitable inſtructions.

First, All the ſtars are placed in the heavens by the ſpecial deſignment of God for the uſe and good of men.

Moſes (Deut. 4. 19.) gives a caution to Iſrael from the Lord, that they ſhould take heed of imitating the Heathens in their abominations, and this is one particular, Leſt thou lift up thine eyes to heaven, and when thou ſeeſt the Sun, and the Moon, and the Stars, even all the hoſt of heaven, ſhouldſt be driven to worſhip them, which the Lord thy God hath divided unto all Nations under the whole heaven. Obſerve that, The Lord thy God hath divided them unto all Nations under heaven; therefore take heed that thou do not worſhip them.

They are the work of God, they are creatures; and worſhip, which is proper to the Creator, muſt not be given to them. It is a remarkable Text, Leſt (ſaith he) thou ſhouldeſt be driven to worſhip them. How driven? Not by external force and power, but driven by the ſtrong inclination of thine heart, raviſhed with ſuch beautiful objects. The excellency that is in the works of God, hath power to draw, yea, to drive the heart of man to commit Idolatry. Job ſhews this, while he acquits himſelf ſo induſtriouſly from it (Chap. 31. 26, 27.) If I beheld the Sun when it ſhined, or the Moon walking in brightneſs, and my heart hath been ſecretly enticed, or my mouth had kiſſed my hand, this alſo were an iniquity to be puniſhed by the Judg, &c. Some tranſlate that (Deut. 4.) in this language of Job, Leſt thou be deceived to worſhip the Sun, Moon and Stars, and hoſt of heaven. This is very conſiderable; but the thing I chiefly note in that Scripture, to the point in hand, is this, That the Lord hath made and appointed the ſtars to the ſeveral parts of the heavens, he hath divided them to all Nations under the whole heaven. Some ſtars are the portion of one people, others of another. As the earth is an inheritance divided among the children of men, ſo alſo are the ſtars and heavens. We ſeldom conſider what riches we receive from that part of our inheritance; moſt think they live by the earth only: No, ſaith Moſes, The Lord hath divided the heavens, the Sun, Moon and Stars unto all Nations under heaven. He hath ſetled it, what ſtar ſuch a Land ſhould have, and in what ſeaſons, as alſo, what proportions of the Sun and Moon, for light, heat and influence. He hath made them for the children of men. Man is fed and cloathed, warmed and cheriſhed from heaven more then from earth; and the lot and diviſions which we have of the earth are naturally and uſually good or bad, rich or barren, pleaſant or unpleaſant, healthy or unwholeſome, according as the Aſpects of the heaven and ſtars are more or leſs benign or favourable unto them. Moſes (Deut. 29. 26.) reproves the ingratitude of the Jews by this argument, Becauſe they went and ſerved other gods, and worſhipped them, gods whom they knew not, and whom he had not given to them. So we tranſlate. But the Letter of the Hebrew gives it thus; Who had not given to them, or divided among them any portion. As if Moſes had ſaid, The Lord divided and gave the heavens and the ſtars among you, and theſe baſe dunghil-gods never gave you ſo much as a clod of earth, and will ye depart from Jehovah to ſerve them?

Per hanc diviſionem intelligit ordinem & motum Planetarum, qui in ſuis orbibus ita diſponuntur, ut unaquæq; regio ſuo tẽpore eorum gaudeat influxibus. Pined.

Secondly obſerve, God knoweth the number, the names and the nature of all the ſtars.

He gives them ſpecial names. Theſe in the tranſlation, are names of mans impoſition. Yet the holy Ghoſt uſes Heatheniſh names in the New Teſtament (Acts 28. 11.) We read of a Ship in which Paul ſailed to Rome, whoſe ſign was Caſtor and Pollux, two Pagan Sea-gods. It is ſaid, that God brought all the beaſts of the earth to Adam, that he ſhould give them names; but he brought not the hoſt of heaven to Adam, that he ſhould give them names; he named them himſelf, Pſal. 147. 4. He telleth the number of the ſtars, he calleth them all by their names. Men are not able to tell the number of the ſtars; they tell diſtinctly but to a thouſand three hundred, or a few more, and they are not able to tell all theſe by diſtinct names, but they are conſtrained to reckon them by conſtellations, where a whole family of ſtars are called by one name. The Lord hath made it his ſpecial priviledge to tell the number of the ſtars, and to call them all by their names. And theſe are named in the Text for all the reſt. Hence obſerve, Thirdly, Some ſtars are more excellent, of greater virtue and name then others.

When theſe are named, it is for ſpecial reaſon. The Lord nameth theſe as ſtars of more then ordinary dignity. Theſe are in degree next to the Sun and Moon: when a few are named for many, we uſually name the chiefeſt; as the whole people of the Jews are ſet forth by the Heads of their Tribes, by the Chiefs; and when a Nation is ſpoken of, it is by thoſe greater names, the Magiſtrates and the Miniſters. Theſe are named, becauſe they have moſt to do, and the greateſt buſineſs in a Nation. . So theſe ſtars are here named, becauſe they are of ſpecial uſe and influence. The Apoſtle gives us this clearly (1 Cor. 15. 41.) There is one glory of the Sun, another of the Moon, and another glory of the Stars; for one ſtar differeth from another ſtar in glory. One ſtar hath a more honourable name then another. Some ſtars God doth not vouchſafe to name particularly to us, when others, which are of greater glory, are. As in building, ſome parts of it are chief, The foundation, the top-ſtone, the corner-ſtone; the ſtrength and beauty of the whole building are comprehended under theſe. God hath made differences and degrees in all creatures, in the heavenly as well as the earthly. The name of moſt ſtars are concealed, as being of a lower degree. And we find that whenſoever in Scripture ſtars are ſpoken of, ſcarce any are named but theſe, and theſe are often named, which implies their ſuperiority and dignity. The Prophet urges this as an argument of humbleſt addreſſes unto, and dependance upon God (Amos 5. 8.) Seek him that maketh the ſeven ſtars (that is, Pleiades) and Orion, and turneth the ſhadow of death into the morning, &c. He doth not ſay, Seek him that maketh all the ſtars; the Lord made all. But becauſe he hath given ſo much virtue and excellency to theſe, theſe only are reported as of his making. Here, Which maketh Arcturus; there, Seek him which maketh the ſeven ſtars; as if he had ſaid, In thoſe ſtars God hath laid out much of himſelf, and made his power and wiſdom moſt viſible: How much hath God in himſelf, who hath communicated ſo much to one ſenſleſs creature?

And though ſtars differ thus one from another, yet they envy not one another. Which leſſons us to be content, though God make our names leſs named in the world, then the names of many of our brethren; though he truſt more talents to, or put more light into others, then into our ſelves. One ſtar differs from another ſtar in glory, but no ſtar envies anothers glory.

Fourthly, Job being about to declare the power and wiſdom of God, gives inſtance (among other things) in this, He maketh Arcturus, Orion, &c. Hence obſerve,

The power and wiſdom of God ſhine eminently in the ſtars.

The power and wiſdom of God ſhine in every graſs that grows out of the ground, yea, in every clod of earth; much more then in the ſtars of heaven. Much of God is ſeen in thoſe works of God; yea, ſo much, that many have been drawn to make them gods. There is ſo much of God ſeen in the heavens, that not only Heathens, who had not the true knowledge of God; but his Covenant-people, who knew him, and whom he knew above all the families of the earth, have been drawn away to worſhip the Hoſt of Heaven. That place before-cited (Deut. 4.) hinteth as much, Take heed leſt when thou lifteſt up thine eyes to heaven, and ſeeſt the Sun, and the Moon, and the Stars, even all the hoſt of heaven, thou ſhouldeſt be driven to worſhip them and ſerve them. If thou lift up thine eyes to the ſtars, and not higher, even to God who made the ſtars, thou wilt quickly miſtake the ſtars for God, or make the ſtars thy god; the heart of man is mad upon Idolatry. Read how often the Jews are taxed with this ſin, 2 King. 21. 3. & in 2 King. 17. 16. & in Amos 5. 26. Which clears this truth, that much of the power and wiſdom of God is ſtamped upon the ſtars; if God did not much appear in the ſtars, ſo many had not taken the ſtars for God, or given them, which is proper and peculiar to God, religious Worſhip.

There are five or ſix things which ſhew the power of God, and his wiſdom in making of the ſtars.

Firſt, The greatneſs of the Stars; ſuch vaſt bodies ſhew an infinite power in their conſtitution. It is incredible to ordinary reaſon (unleſs men have skill and learning to make it out, and to lay the courſe of Nature together) that the ſtars are ſo great. The Sun is reckoned by Aſtronomers to be one hundred ſixty ſix times bigger then the earth: the Moon indeed, which is called a great Light, is thirty nine times leſs then the earth, yet that magnitude is far beyond common apprehenſion. Some other of the Planets are almoſt an hundred times bigger then the earth. And whereas the fixed ſtars are diſtinguiſhed into ſix magnitudes or differences of greatneſs; thoſe of the firſt magnitude (which are many) are conceived to be one hundred and ſeven times bigger then the whole earth. We look upon a ſtar, as if it were no bigger then the blaze of a Candle, and the Countrey-man wonders if the Moon be bigger then his Buſhel, or broader then his Cart-wheel. If the moſt judicious enter the conſideration of theſe things, they may ſoon come to amazement, that ſo many ſtars in heaven ſhould be more then an hundred times bigger then all the earth. And if there are ſuch vaſt bodies in heaven, what a vaſt body is heaven? That Continent muſt needs be exceedingly exceeding vaſt, which contains ſo many exceeding vaſt bodies in it. If we get but a nook or a corner of the earth for our portion, we preſently think our ſelves great men; yet what is all the earth to the heavens? And what are the heavens we ſee, to that heaven which is unſeen, to which theſe are but a Pavement? The heavens which are to us a roof, are but a floor to the higheſt heavens.

A ſecond thing which ſhews the mighty power and wiſdom of God in the ſtars, is the multitude of them; they are innumerable: Man cannot tell them (only God can) they are like the ſand of the ſea for number. A multitude of little ſands make a huge body; then how great a body do a multitude of great bodies make?

Thirdly, The ſwiftneſs of their motion. That theſe mighty vaſt bodies ſhould be carried about every day, ſo long a journey, and never tire or wear, ſhews infinite power and wiſdom.

Fourthly, this is more admirable, the exact order of their motion. That innumerable ſtars ſhould move continually in the heavens, and yet not one of them move out of courſe: this regularity of their motion is ſetled by an Ordinance of heaven (Jer. 31. 35.) Where the Lord, to aſſure his people that he would be ſteady and ſtedfaſt in the wayes of his love to them, and that he would not caſt them off, tells them that he would be as firm to them in his Covenant, as he is in the Ordinances of heaven: Thus ſaith the Lord, which giveth the Sun for a light by day, and the Ordinances of the Moon and of the Stars, for a light by night, &c. As if he had ſaid, I have made a ſtatute and a decree which is irrepealable and irrevocable concerning the the motion of the ſtars. There is an ordinance of heaven for it; ſo that as the celeſtial bodies cannot but continue the courſe I have aſſigned them for the enlightning of theſe inferior parts, while the world laſts: So the Covenant which I have made with you, ſhall not fail to give you light. Thus he infers in the next verſe, If theſe Ordinances depart from before me, ſaith the Lord, then ſhall the ſeed of Iſrael alſo ceaſe from being a Nation before me for ever; but that cannot be, I have eſtabliſhed theſe ſtars by a firm and perpetual decree, therefore you are much more eſtabliſhed.

And ſuch is the exactneſs of their order and motion, that the ſtars of heaven are frequently in Scripture called an hoſt or an army: Now an army, as it conſiſts of many perſons (which is one reaſon why the ſtars are called an hoſt) ſo an army rightly marſhalled, is caſt into an exact form, and ſo regular for motion, that it is one of the goodlieſt ſights in the world. Now the ſtars are the hoſt of heaven, they ſtand (as it were) in Battalia, they keep rank and file; there is not ſo much as one of that great multitude out of place; therefore, Judg. 5. 20. Where they are ſaid to fight againſt Siſera, they are deſcribed fighting in courſes; The ſtars in their courſes fought againſt Siſera; as if the ſtars had been drawn up, now one Regiment, then another Regiment of them, to charge upon Siſera and his hoſt: the heavens fought, and the ſtars fought, that is, the Lord by an heavenly power and influence of the ſtars confounded Siſera, and all the enemies of Iſrael.

Fifthly, There is a moſt efficacious virtue in the Stars.

It is a ſecret virtue, and it is a ſtrong irreſiſtible virtue, no power in the creature can ſtop it: Therefore God challenges Job, in chap. 38. 31. Canſt thou bind the ſweet influences of Pleiades, or looſe the bands of Orion? There are influences in the ſtars, and canſt thou bind them? ? Is it in the power of any creature to ſtop the iſſues and out-flowings of the ſtars? Their influences are ſo efficacious, that none can bind them, but he that looſeth them; none can bind them but the hand and power which made them; there is ſo much efficacy in them, that if God let them go on in their natural vigor, their effects are wonderful. I (ſaith the Lord, Hoſ. 2. 21, 22.) will hear the heavens, and they ſhall hear the earth, and the earth ſhall hear the corn, and the wine, and the oyl, and they ſhall hear Jezreel: As if he had ſaid, the heavens are next in power to me, they are ſecond to my ſelf in working; therefore I will hear the heavens: the heavens cannot do it unleſs I give them a commiſſion; but I will hear the heavens: I will leave a power in the heavens, and the heavens ſhall hear the earth, and the earth ſhall hear the corn, &c. There is a gradation, a deſcent from God to us, and the heavens are the next receptacle, the immediate veſſel, receiving and taking in power and virtue from God to diffuſe and ſend down upon the creatures here below; I will hear the heavens, and they ſhall hear the earth.

πρῶτον δεκτικόν.

Sixthly obſerve, That, The ſtar's and conſtellations of heaven can do nothing of themſelves, but as they receive order and commiſſion from the Lord.

עשה

Non tantum facere, ſed etiam aptare, diſponere, dirigere, & præparare ſignificat.

He maketh Arcturus and Orion, &c. They have great power, but it is the Lord that maketh them. That word [He maketh] doth not ſo much ſignifie the Creation, as the providential diſpoſition of the ſtars, as was noted in the Expoſition of it. He maketh them, that is, he orders and diſpoſeth them, or he acts the ſtars, he trims up thoſe lamps of heaven; the word is ſo uſed (2 Sam. 19. 24.) Mephiboſheth, while David was in trouble, had not dreſſed his feet; the Hebrew is, He had not made his feet, that is, he had neglected his body; now (ſaith Job) the Lord is he that makes, dreſſes, or trims up thoſe lamps of heaven; though they have a natural virtue, yet that virtue is quickned by providence. Providence is a continued creation. He maketh Arcturus, Orion and Pleiades.

The ſtars are the ſervants of God, they receive orders and directions from him for all they do. And the reaſon why the Lord did ſo often call his people off from gazing upon the ſtars, and reproved ſtar-gazers, was, becauſe they looked no further then the ſtars; they thought the ſtars did all, they did not eye God that made Arcturus, Orion, &c. but they only eyed Arcturus, &c. Therefore he threatens the Star-gazers and monthly Prognoſticators, who took upon them to reſolve future events by the conjunction of Planets and Planetary Aſpects; placing an uncontroulable power in the hands of the heavens and ſtars, whereas I (ſaith the Lord) make Arcturus: I made him, and I make him do what I command, not what you foretel. Therefore (Iſa. 44. 24, 25.) the Prophet ſpeaking of Gods work in making the heavens and the ſtars, preſently adds, how he befools men that will propheſie from the ſtars, as if they could tell infallibly what ſhall come to paſs. I am the Lord that maketh all things, that ſtretcheth forth the heavens alone, that ſpreadeth abroad the earth by my ſelf. What follows? That fruſtrateth the tokens of the liars, and maketh diviners mad. I ſtretch out the heavens: ſome will needs propheſie out of the heavens. I have ſet the ſtars in the heavens, and they are for ſignes (Gen. 1. 14.) but I have not ſet them for Prophets: If any preſume to declare or reſolve what ſhall be done, I reſolve to puniſh their preſumption. I take delight to fruſtrate men who delight in this, and to befool them who would be thus wiſe. This is my name, The God that ſtretcheth out the heavens alone, and that maketh Diviners mad. Great diſappointments enrage; and ſome men loſe their reaſon, when they loſe the credit of doing things above reaſon. Becauſe they cannot be as Gods to foretel good or evil, they will not be ſo much as men; He makes the Diviners mad. The Law was peremptory and ſevere againſt them (Deut. 18. 9.) There ſhall not be found amongſt you any one that uſeth divination, or is an obſerver of times. Why not an obſerver of times? May we not obſerve times and ſeaſons? May we not look up to the heavens and conſider their motions? Yes, we may obſerve times holily, but not ſuperſtitiouſly, as if ſome times were good, others bad, ſome lucky, others unlucky; as if the power of God were ſhut up in, or over-rul'd by his own inſtruments and inferior cauſes, this is diſhonourable unto God, and thus the Jews were forbidden to uſe any divination or to obſerve times.

The Heavens and Stars are for ſignes, but they are not infallible ſignes. They are ordinary ſignes of the change of weather, Mat. 16. 2, 3. They are ordinary ſignes of the ſeaſons of the year, Spring and Summer, and Harveſt and Winter; they are ordinary ſignes of a fit time to till and manure the ground, to plow, ſow and reap. The earth is fitted and prepared for culture by the motion of the heavens. The heavens are at once the Alphabet of the power and wiſdom of God, and of our works: We may read there when to do many buſineſſes, Gen. 8. 22. While the earth remaineth, ſeed-time and harveſt, and cold and heat, and ſummer and winter, and day and night ſhall not ceaſe. Thoſe ſeaſons ſhall continually return according to the time of the year, meaſured by the Sun, Moon and Stars. Thus, they are ſignes of ordinary events. And God ſometimes puts the ſign of an extraordinary event in them, Mat. 24. 29. Immediately after the tribulation of thoſe dayes ſhall the Sun be darkened, and the Moon ſhall not give her light, and the ſtars ſhall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens ſhall be ſhaken; which ſome underſtand allegorically, others literally, of ſtrange apparitions and impreſſions in heaven, either before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, or the day of Judgment. So Acts 2. 19, 20, &c. Thus God puts a ſign in them of extraordinary events.

But ſhall man from them prognoſticate and foretel extraordinary events? as when there ſhall be famine and peſtilence, war and trouble in Nations: This the Lord abhorreth. The counſels of God about theſe things are written in his own heart; what is man that he ſhould tranſcribe them from the heavens? But if men will ſay, they are written there, God will blot out what they ſay, and prove theirs to be but humane divinations, yea, that they were received from hell, not written in heaven (Iſa. 47. 13.) I will deſtroy the ſignes of them that divine; Let now the Aſtrologers, the Star-gazers, the monthly Prognoſticators ſtand up and ſave thee from theſe things that ſhall come upon thee; Behold, they ſhall be as ſtubble, they ſhall not be able to deliver themſelves. It is good to be a Star-beholder, but a wicked thing to be a Star-gazer; that is, to look upon the ſtars ſo, as if we could ſpell out the ſecret providences of God, and read future events in the Book of thoſe Creatures. It is our duty to look upon the heavens, as they declare the glory of God; but it is a ſin to look upon the heavens, as if they could declare the deſtinies, fates and fortunes of men. All which vanities are largely and learnedly confuted by Mr. Perkins, in his Book, called The reſolution of the Countrey-man about Prognoſtication.

Now that the ſucceſs of every creature is in God, not in the Stars, we may ſee, firſt, In the order of the Creation; God created the earth, and commanded it to bring forth fruit upon the third day, but the Lights in the firmament were made the fourth day: The earth can bring forth without the Midwifry or help of the heavens. God himſelf made the earth fruitful without, yea, before the Stars were made. Upon which, one of the Ancients gives this obſervation, Surely (ſaith he) the Lord in his providence made the earth fruitful in all its Glory, before he put the ſtars in the heavens, to the intent to make men ſee, that the fruitfulneſs of the earth doth not depend upon the heavens or ſtars. God needs neither the rain of the clouds, nor the warmth of the Sun, to produce theſe effects. He that made all ſecond cauſes to work in their ranks, can work without the intervention of any ſecond cauſe. And becauſe the Lord foreſaw men would doat much upon ſecond cauſes, and venture to prognoſticate by the heavens the fates of men, and the fruitfulneſs of the earth, therefore he made the earth fruitful before he made Arcturus, or placed thoſe Conſtellations in the heavens.

Secondly, The providence of God works under the decree of God. His providence is the execution of his Decree. Therefore we muſt not bring the decrees down to providence, but we muſt raiſe providence up to the Decrees.

Thirdly, The heavens, and thoſe heavenly bodies, Arcturus, &c. are but general cauſes, there are ſpecial cauſes beſides of the earths barrenneſs or fruitfulneſs, of tempeſts at Sea and troubles at Land; and the Lord is able to invert all cauſes, to work beyond cauſes, without cauſes, and againſt cauſes: So that nothing can be infallibly fore-told from the poſitions, conjunctions or revolutions of thoſe heavenly bodies. Obſerve, Laſtly, That it is our duty to ſtudy the heavens, and be acquainted with the ſtars.

In them the wonderful works of God are ſeen, and a ſober knowledge in nature may be an advantage unto grace. Holy David was ſuch a ſtudent (Pſal. 8. 3.) When I conſider thy heavens, the work of thy fingers, the Moon and Stars which thou haſt ordained. Conſideration is not a tranſient or accidental, but a reſolved and a deliberate act. Shall we think that God hath made thoſe mighty bodies, the Stars, to be paſt by without conſideration? Shall men only pore upon a lump of earth, and not have their hearts lifted up to conſider thoſe lamps of light? Shall man make no more uſe of the Stars then the beaſts of the earth do, namely, to ſee by them? When I conſider thy heavens, ſaith David. Heaven is the moſt conſiderable of all inanimate creatures, and more conſiderable then moſt of the animate: and David's when, when I conſider the heavens, notes not only a certainty, that he did it, but frequency in doing it. Some of the Rabbins tell us, that when Iſaac went out into the field to meditate (Gen. 24. 63.) The ſubject of his meditation was the Stars, or the heavens. It is good to take field-room ſometimes to view and contemplate the works of God round about. Only take heed of the former folly, of Aſtrological curioſities, confining the providence of God to ſecondary cauſes; avoid that, and the heart may have admirable elevations unto God, from the meditation of the works of God. (Pſal. 19. 1.) The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament ſheweth his handy work; if the heavens declare the glory of God, we ſhould obſerve what that glory is which they declare. The heavens preach to us every day. Their line is gone out through all the earth, and their words to the end of the world, Pſal. 19. 4. Sun Moon and Stars are Preachers, they are univerſal Preachers, they are natural Apoſtles; the world is their charge, their words, ſaith the Pſalm, go to the ends of the earth. We may have good doctrine from them, eſpecially this doctrine in the Text, of the wiſdom and power of God. And it is very obſervable that the Apoſtle alludes to this Text in the Pſalm, for a proof of Goſpel-preaching to the whole world, Rom. 10. 18. So then, faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God. But I ſay, have they not heard? Yes verily, their ſound went into all the earth, and their words unto the end of the world. The Goſpel like the Sun caſts his beams over, and ſheds his light into all the world. David in the Pſalm ſaith, Their line is gone out, &c. By which word he ſhews, that the heavens being ſo curious a fabrick, made (as it were) by line and level, do clearly, though ſilently, preach the skill and perfections of God: Or, that we may read divine truths in them, as in a line formed by a pen into words and ſentences (the original ſignifies both a meaſuring line, and a written line.) Letters and words in writing being nothing but lines drawn into ſeveral forms or figures. But the Septuagint, whoſe tranſlation the Apoſtle citeth, for (Kavam) their line, read (Kolam) their ſound; either miſ-reading the word, or ſtudiouſly mollifying the ſence into a nearer compliance with the latter clauſe of the verſe, And their words into the ends of the world.

קו Significat lineam, non modo extenſam, hoc eſt, funiculum, ſed etiam ſcriptam, hoc eſt ſcripturā Par. in Rom. 10. Pro קולם קום

Thus I have endeavoured to make thoſe things plain, which are here repreſented (to vulgar ears) under ſtrange, unuſual, and hidden expreſſions.

Job is full of Philoſophy and Aſtronomy, he was a great ſtudent in the heavens, doubtleſs, and a holy ſtudent. Job having given theſe ſeveral inſtances, gathers them all into a general concluſion in verſ. 10.

Verſ. 10. Which doth great things paſt finding out, yea, and wonders without number.

Theſe words are repeated from the diſcourſe of Eliphaz in Chap. 5. v. 9. I would ſeek unto God, and unto God would I commit my cauſe, which doth great things and unſearchable, marvellous things without number. I will not ſtay in a particular diſcuſſion of them, but refer the Reader to the place before cited, where the Text is opened at large, and particular obſervations given from it. Take only this obſervation in general.

That, A godly man labours to exalt God, both in his thoughts and in his words, with heart and tongue, when God depreſſes and humbles him moſt.

Mark in what a condition Job was, when he ſpeaks thus honorably of the name and power of God; one would think Job had little reaſon to extol the power of God, which he felt to his own ſmart. Job was ſtript of all he had, his outward comforts were taken from him, and the Arrows of the Almighty wounded his very ſpirit. Now when he had wounded Job thorow and thorow, thorow fleſh and thorow ſpirit, even at this time, when God appeared, making no uſe of his power but to undo Job, Job is in his Encomium, all in the praiſe and commendation of God. He indites a Chapter on purpoſe to ſet forth the power and wiſdom of God, while he employed both to make his afflictions both great and accurate. This ſhews the admirable frame of his ſpirit; in all his diſtempers his heart ſtood right, and he would ſpeak good of God, what evil ſoever befel him from Gods hand. Let God afflict with his power, yet a gracious heart rejoyces in it. A gracious heart will lift up that power which weakens and throws it down. Let the Lord imploy his wiſdom to undo, to impoveriſh ſuch a man, to bring him into ſuch ſtraights that he cannot get out; yet he hath enlarged thoughts of that wiſdom, He ſees God is as wiſe in troubling us, as he is in delivering. That language of Spira, is the right language of Hell (I judge not his perſon, but his ſpeech) who in a great temptation ſpake thus, I would I had more power then God, or, O that I were above God. He was angry that God had ſo much power, becauſe God uſed his power againſt him. A carnal man would be above God: eſpecially, if God at any time puts forth his power againſt him. When he is hard beſtead and hungry, he frets himſelf, and curſes his King and his God, looking upward (Iſa. 8. 21.) to murmur at God, not to pray unto him, or ſpeak good of him. It is obſerved by one of the Ancients concerning the Heathen, That if God did not pleaſe them, he ſhould be no longer God. Such are our hearts by nature, if God do not uſe his power, wiſdom, mercy for us, we preſently wiſh he had no power, wiſdom, nor mercy for any in the world; we would be above God, unleſs God will ſerve us: but an holy heart ſaith thus, Let God improve his power and wiſdom which way he pleaſeth, if to afflict and chaſten me, yea to deſtroy and caſt me to Hell, his be the power for ever, I extol his power. Nature can only praiſe God, and ſpeak good of him, when he is doing of us good: But grace prompts the heart to indite a good matter, and bids the tongue be as the pen of a ready writer to advance God, when ſenſe feels nothing but ſmart, and ſees nothing but ſorrow round about. Then grace is in her heights, when ſhe can lift up God higheſt, while he is caſting us down, and laying us loweſt: When we can honour God frowning, as well as ſmiling upon us; ſmiting and wounding, as well as kiſſing and imbracing us, then we have learned to honour God indeed.

Tertullian: Illud eſt impiorum ingenium, ut Deum non ulterius celebrent, quā cum bene facit.

VERS. 11, 12, 13.

Lo, he goeth by me, and I ſee him not; he paſſeth on alſo, but I perceive him not.

Behold, he taketh away, who can hinder him? who ſhall ſay unto him, what doeſt thou?

If God will not withdraw his anger, the proud helpers do ſtoop under him.

JOB having in the former context exalted the power and wiſdom of God in many inſtances, and cloſed all with an admiring ſentence, He doth great things and unſearchable, marvellous things without number. He, in theſe words ſeems to give a proof of thoſe attributes of Gods works, that they are innumerable and unſearchable, &c.

Verſ. 11. For lo, he goeth by me, and I ſee him not; he paſſeth on alſo, but I perceive him not.

As if he had ſaid, I am not able to reckon how often he worketh, for I cannot alwayes perceive him when he worketh, I am not able to ſearch out all his great and wonderful actings, for I cannot ſee him in many of his actings.

He goeth by me, and I ſee him not.

The Lord is ſaid to go by us, not in regard of any local motion: for, he that filleth all places, moves to none, Do not I fill heaven and earth? Is the Lords query of himſelf to thoſe who thought to play leaſt in ſight with him. And he convinces them that they could not be hid from him in ſecret places, becauſe he fills all places. There is no place to be found beyond the line of heaven and earth, both which God fills (Jer. 23. 24.) Then his motion is not local, but providential; God doth not move to act, but his acting us his moving. He goeth by us, doing marvellous things for us, and we ſee not when he is doing, or what he is doing.

The other word here uſed [He paſſeth on] is of the ſame ſence, yet more peculiar and proper to the motion of ſpirits: we had it in Chap. 4. 15. A ſpirit paſſed before me, ſaith Eliphaz, when he ſpeaks of the viſion that appeared. It ſignifies to change and vary, either place or condition. The tranſitory changeableneſs of the creature, is expreſſed by it (Pſal. 102. 27.) Thou doeſt change them, and they ſhall be changed; the creatures paſs on, as from place to place, ſo from condition to condition, The faſhion of them paſſeth away (1 Cor. 7. 31.) They have not only a perfective change, but a corruptive change; but of the Lord he ſaith, Thou art the ſame, and thy years ſhall have no end. The word is uſed for changing by oppreſſive deſtruction, (Prov. 31. 8.) Open thy mouth for the dumb, in the cauſe of all ſuch as are appointed to deſtruction, or death. Such as are appointed to that great change, are called, The Sons of change or deſtruction: Thus the Original. So that the word ſignifieth any change or motion, whether perfective or corruptive. The Lord (ſaith Job) paſſeth on, he maketh changes, he worketh ſometimes to perfect, ſometimes to deſtroy, but I perceive him not, I am not able to make out what he doth.

Here are two words, one referring to ſenſe, the other to underſtanding, He goeth by me, and I ſee him not; that is, my ſenſes cannot find him: He paſſeth on alſo, and I perceive him not; that is, he deſtroyeth, he buildeth, he planteth, he rooteth up, but I am not able to apprehend him, or unriddle the meaning of his wonderful works, He doth great things, and things unſearchable.

There is much variety of opinion about the meaning of theſe words. Though I think the meaning is clear in that general I have now given, yet I will touch a little.

Non eſt uni interpretatio hujus divini acceſſus & receſſus. Pined.

Firſt, Some interpret Job's diſcourſe converſing ſtill, in and about the natural works of God, the earth, the heavens, the waters and the air (of which he had ſpoken before) as alſo about the body of man (Act. 17. 28.) In him we live, and move, and have our being. God is about us, he is ever with us, and yet we obſerve not, either when he begins to work, or reſteth from working. How he is in all things, without all things, and above all things, is not known.

Multa ſunt naturalia quorū ſupremū auctorem Deum, vel opus inchoantem, vel ab opere ceſſantē non obſervamus, atq; ita præcedenti ſententiæ hæc innectitur, tanquā illius ſubjecta ratio. Id.

Secondly, Others take his going and paſſing for the acts of his favour or diſ-favour, He goeth by me in beſtowing favours, and He paſſeth on, in taking them away: his acceſſes or receſſes in mercy or judgment, his love and his wrath are often indiſcernable, He goeth by me, he paſſeth on, he varieth his workings, and I perceive him not. To paſs by is taken ſometimes for ſparing, pardoning, or ſhewing mercy. The Lord by his Prophet (Amos 7. 8.) reports ſeveral judgments, from a full execution of which he was taken off, yet at laſt he reſolves, I will not paſs by them any more (it is the word here) that is, I will not have mercy on them any more, I will not ſpare them any more, the next time I come with my drawn ſword in my hand, I will be ſure to ſmite and wound before I put it up, I will not paſs by them any more. So [He paſſeth by me] may note the ſparing mercy of God. The Lord ſpareth man many times, and pardons him, not ſuffering his whole diſpleaſure to ariſe, when man takes no notice, but is inſenſible of it. The word is uſed in this ſence (Prov. 19. 11.) It is the glory of man to paſs by an offence; that is, to ſpare a man that hath offended, not to puniſh him or take revenge: and it is ordinary in our phraſe of ſpeech to ſay, I will paſs you by for this time, that is, I will not take any ſevere notice, or ſtrict account of what you have done. And we find in the ſame prophecy of Amos, that to paſs thorow, notes judgment and wrath, in the oppoſite ſence; In Chap. 5. 17. In all vineyards ſhall be wailing; Why? For I will paſs thorow thee, or I will paſs into thy bowels or inwards: So the letter of the original; that is, I will come to judge thee, I will paſs thorow thee as a revenger, and wound thee deeply, inſomuch that in all vineyards there ſhall be wailing; why in all vineyards? When he ſaith, There ſhall be wailing in all vineyards, it implies there ſhould be wailing every where: for if there were joy in any place, it would be in the vineyards; vineyards are places of mirth and refreſhing; grapes make the wine, which makes glad the heart of man. Therefore when he threatens, That in all vineyards there ſhall be wailing; it is as much as if he had ſaid, There ſhall be ſorrow in thoſe places where uſually the greateſt joy was found, or there ſhall be ſorrow in every place. Joy ſhall diſlodge and give place to ſorrow, for, I will paſs thorow thee, ſaith the Lord. So that as the work of providence in ſparing, and the work of providence in puniſhing, may be underſtood by this word, with a little varying of the conſtruction. He paſſeth by me in the wayes of mercy, and I ſee him not; and he paſſeth thorow me in the wayes of judgment, and I ſee him not. I cannot ſee or underſtand him as I ought, either in wayes of judgment, or of mercy.

Thirdly, We may take the words, as they are an argument to prove the power and wiſdom of God, to be ſuch, as man is no way able to match or to deal withal, which is the ſubject Job is upon. He would ſet the Lord infinitely above all that is in the creature, and he doth it here by an argument drawn from his nature. What is his nature? Why, he is moſt ſimple, he is a ſpirit without any mixture, without any compoſition, without any materiality, he is inviſible, bodily eyes cannot behold him, therefore certainly bodies are not able to overcome him. Man being a material ſubſtance, is not able to ſee the Lord, then ſurely he is not able to contend with, much leſs to conquer the Lord; What then doth he medling with him? It was ſaid at verſ. 4. of this Chapter, Who ever hardned himſelf againſt him, and hath proſpered? is fleſh and blood any match for a ſpirit? If man would ſtrive with God, where ſhould he have him? He goeth by me, and I ſee him not; he paſſeth on alſo, and I perceive him not; I know not where to meet him, he can come upon me on every ſide, he may take me at all advantages, and deſtroy me, for I know not how to guard or defend my ſelf. If a man were to fight with an enemy, whom he could not ſee, and yet his enemy ſaw him; what an advantage had his enemy againſt him? Doth any man harden himſelf againſt God? He goeth by, and we ſee him not; How then can we deal with him, or ſtand againſt him? Thus (I ſay) it may be an argument to make good that great aſſertion, That there is no contending with God; fleſh and blood are too weak for a ſpirit. It is the argument which the Apoſtle uſes, to ſhew that the Devil is too hard for man, We wreſtle not with fleſh and blood, but with principalities and powers, with ſpiritual wickedneſſes, &c. Epheſ. 6. They paſs by us, and we underſtand it not, they are now here amongſt us, and we take no notice of it. We are no matches for evil ſpirits, much leſs are we able to match the moſt holy Spirit. Spiritual wickedneſſes are ſtrong, but ſpiritual holineſſes are ſtronger. This third interpretation renders the words a deſcription of an invincible enemy.

Deus ſimpliciſſimus eſt ſpiritus & inviſibilis, itaq; neq; nos adorientem cum venit, neq; cū abit pedem referentem ſentire poſſumus.

Eſt invicti hoſtis deſcriptio.

Fourthly, It may be underſtood in the general, to note the infinite diſtance which is between God and man, or the dignity of God above man. The Lord is omnipreſent, he is going by, and he is paſſing on, he is in all places, and he acts his power and wiſdom where he pleaſes. Poor man is confined to a place, to a ſpot of earth; when he is here, he cannot be there; but God is every where: And though God be every where, yet he cannot be ſeen any where, where he is. God ſees all, himſelf being unſeen, and fills all places, his preſence being unperceived; nothing is hid from him, yet he is hid to every thing, but the faith of his own people. Thus He goeth, and we ſee him not; he paſſeth on, and we perceive him not.

Significatur hic ſumma diſtantia inter Deum homines: Deus omnia videt, & rebus omnibus præſentia & efficacia ſua intervenit, homo ſuo affixus loco Deum non videt niſi in effectis. Coc.

And ſo the whole is a confirmation or proof of the general aſſertion, that the Lord is infinite in power and wiſdom, and that man is an ignorant narrow-room'd and narrow-hearted weak creature compared unto him. We may form up the Argument thus:

He is weak and ignorant in compariſon of God, who cannot ſee or comprehend where God is, or what God doth.

But man is not able to comprehend or ſee where God is, or what God doth.

Therefore man is weak and ignorant in compariſon of God.

The ground is this, He that cannot comprehend or ſee what another doth, is not able to hinder or match him in what he doth: But ſuch is the ſtate and condition of man, he is ſo far from being able to equal God in dignity, or hinder what he doth, that he cannot find out or know what God doth.

Yet this is not to be taken ſtrictly, as if man did not at all perceive or underſtand what God doth. Job in the former context gave us a large account of the works of God, what wonders he had done. The Saints find out ſome of Gods doings in the world, though the blind world ſee not any thing he doth. But he ſpeaks comparatively; The Lord paſſeth on, and we perceive it not; that is, it is little of God that we perceive; it is little of the workings of God that we ſee at the beſt. * There are many perſons who do not ſee him at all, and many works that are not ſeen at all by any perſon. And they, the eyes of whoſe underſtandings are annointed to ſee moſt clearly, are not able to ſee all that God doth. None can ſee all, ſome will not ſee what they may (Iſa. 26. 10.) Lord, when thy hand is lifted up, they will not ſee it; and in the former verſe, In the land of uprightneſs will he deal unjuſtly, and will not behold the Majeſty of the Lord. That which good men ſee is but little, and evil men ſee nothing. So that, as the Lord goeth altogether inviſibly in his eſſence, ſo moſtly in his actions; man ſees but few things of the many, and little of the great things which God doth.

I meet with a groſs expoſition of this Text given by ſome Papiſts. No man (ſaith one of them) can know whether God dwell or abide in him or no. And Bellarmine in his Book 5. and Chap. 5. concerning Juſtification, citeth it to prove, That a believer cannot know that he is juſtified, but muſt believe blind-fold, or take the work of juſtification by grace, in the dark, For (ſaith he) God goeth by us, and we ſee him not; he paſſeth on, and we perceive him not: That is (as his gloſs ſpeaks) God cometh in favour to juſtifie, or he leaveth under wrath, and yet man remains ignorant both of the one, and of the other ſtate. Surely he was at a great pinch to find a proof for his point, when he was forced to repair to this Scripture to ſeek one. Providence toward man-kind (not the juſtification of a ſinner) is the proper ſubject of this Text. And as there is nothing for a blindfold juſtification here, ſo many other Scriptures are expreſly againſt it. To ſay that a man cannot know when God loveth him, or ſhineth upon him, is to contradict what our Saviour aſſerts, John 14. 17. I will ſend the Spirit of truth, whom the world cannot receive, becauſe it ſeeth him not, neither knoweth him; but ye know him, for he dwelleth with you, and ſhall be in you. Ye know him, ſaith Chriſt to his people; the Saints ſee God in a ſpiritual ſence, or in his workings upon their ſpirits. And though God works much upon our ſpirits, which we know not, yet we have a promiſe of the Spirit, by whom we know God in his workings. Few know when God is nigh, or when he is afar off, what his goings away mean, or what his comings. But when he cometh to the Saints, they know he cometh; and when he hideth or departeth from them, they know his hidings and departures. Hence their joyes and over-flowings of comfort, when he manifeſts his preſence; and hence their bitter complainings and cryings after him, where he ſeems to abſent himſelf and hide his face: yet this Text hath a truth in it, in reference to the inward and ſpiritual, as well as the outward and providential dealings of God, that ſometimes, He goeth by us, and we ſee him not; he paſſeth on alſo, and we perceive him not. Hence learn, Firſt, That, God is inviſible in his eſſence, and incomprehenſible in many of his actions.

Mans eye cannot ſee him: Mans underſtanding cannot comprehend what he doth.

But why ſpeaks Job this, as a matter of wonder, if it be the common condition of man-kind? Behold, he paſſeth by, and I ſee him not; who can ſee him? Who can perceive or comprehend him? When Moſes (Exod. 33. 20.) deſired to ſee his face, the Lord anſwers, No man can ſee my face and live; God ſpake to Moſes face to face, that is, familiarly, as a man ſpeaketh to his friend, yet Moſes did not, could not ſee the face of God. No man can ſee God in his eſſence or nature: A ſight of God would aſtoniſh, yea, ſwallow up the creature, It is death to ſee the living God; and man muſt die before he can ſee God ſo fully as he may, and know as he is known. But (though the face of God be inviſible) yet his back-parts may be ſeen. Behold (ſaith the Lord to Moſes) there is a place by me, ſtand thou there upon a rock, and thou ſhalt ſee my back-parts; thou ſhalt ſee much of my glory ſhining forth, as much as thou canſt bear, as much as will ſatisfie thy deſire (were it a thouſand times larger then it is) though not ſo much as thou haſt (not knowing what thou askeſt) deſired of me. My Name ſhall be proclaimed, Gracious and merciful, &c. the back-parts of God may be ſeen; the inviſible God diſcovereth much of himſelf to man; and ſhews us a ſhadow of that ſubſtance which cannot be ſeen.

Some may object that of the Prophet Iſaias, crying out; Wo unto me, for mine eyes have ſeen the King, the Lord of hoſts, Chap. 6. 5. Seen him? could Iſaias ſee him, whom Job and Moſes could not? Iſaias did not ſee him in his eſſence and nature, but in the manifeſtations and breakings forth of his glory. His train filled the Temple, ſaith the Text (verſ. 1.) or his skirts. It is an alluſion to great Kings, who when they walk in State, have their trains, or the skirt of their royal robe held up. 'Twas this train, which Iſaias ſaw. He ſaw not God who was preſent, but he ſaw the manifeſt ſigns of his preſence. That ſpeech of Iſaiah ſeemed to ſavour of, and border upon higheſt blaſphemy, and was therefore charged as an article of accuſation againſt him; he was indited of blaſphemy for ſpeaking thoſe words, I have ſeen the Lord; his enemies taking or wreſting it, as if he had made the Lord corporeal and viſible with the eye of the body. And it is conceived he was put to death upon that, and one other paſſage in his prophecy, Chap. 1. 10. calling the Princes of Judah, Princes of Sodom, and the people thereof, the people of Gomorrah.

But though God be thus inviſible in his eſſence, yet there is a way by which the eſſence of God may be ſeen. And of that Moſes, to whom the Lord ſaid, Thou canſt not ſee my face, the Author to the Hebrews ſaith (Heb. 11. 24.) That he ſaw him who was inviſible; the letter of the Text carries a contradiction in the adjunct, it is as much as if one ſhould ſay, He ſaw that which could not be ſeen. The meaning is, He ſaw him by the eye of faith, who could not be ſeen by the eye of ſenſe; faith ſees not only the back-parts, but the face of Jehovah: the eſſence of God is as clear to that eye, as any of his attributes, yea his eſſence is as plain to faith, as any of his works are to ſenſe. Thus he is ſeen, Whom no man hath ſeen nor can ſee (1 Tim. 6. 16.) not the Saints in Heaven: they are not able to ſee the Lord in his eſſence, He paſſeth by them there, and they ſee him not; in Heaven we are promiſed a ſight of him, yet not that ſight; Bleſſed are the poor in ſpirit, for they ſhall ſee God: and without holineſs no man ſhall ſee the Lord, then holy men ſhall ſee him: the ſtate of the Saints in glory is viſion, as here it is faith (2 Cor. 14. 12.) We ſhall ſee him face to face, and as he is (1 Joh. 3. 2.) Theſe Scriptures which ſpeak of the eſtate of the Saints, beholding God in glory, are not to be underſtood, as if the nature and eſſence of God could be ſeen, for no man hath ſeen that, nor ever ſhall; but they are meant of a more full and glorious manifeſtation of God; We ſhall ſee then face to face; that is, more plainly, for it is oppoſed to ſeeing him in a glaſs; we ſee him now in a glaſs, that is, darkly, in ordinances, in duties, in his word, and in his works, but there ſhall be no need of theſe glaſſes in Heaven. We ſhall have ſo direct and full manifeſtation of God, that theſe glaſſes which reflect him ſhall be out of uſe. The Saints on earth have ſometimes a ſight of God without a glaſs, that is, out of all ordinances, promiſes and works either wrought in them or for them. God comes near to their ſpirits, and lifts them above means, and ſhews them his love, and their intereſt in him by an immediate witneſs of the Spirit (1 Joh. 5. 8.) For although the water and the blood (juſtification and ſanctification) never witneſs without the Spirit; and though the Spirit never witneſſes againſt them, or where they are not, yet the Spirit doth often witneſs above them and without them, that is, they not being called forth to give their witneſs. This is next door to heaven; only, the viſion in heaven will be exceedingly heightned and raiſed, not only above our viſion by ordinances, but above our viſion by immediate revelation or witneſs.

Further conſider, The ſight we have of God is in Chriſt. God is ſeen in every creature (Rom. 1.) much more in Ordinances; but Chriſt is the expreſs image of his perſon, and the brightneſs of his glory, Heb. 1. 3. He is the Medium by which we ſee God now, and ſome have thought we ſhall ſee him only in Chriſt for ever. But it is out of doubt that in this life God is ſeen only in Chriſt ſavingly. We of our ſelves are ſo far off from God, that we cannot ſee him. There muſt be a due diſtance between the organ and the object; we are afar off from God, until Chriſt bring us near; we come to, and ſee the Father through the Son. And how near ſoever we are to any object, we cannot ſee it without an eye. We are naturally blind, the eyes of our mind muſt be enlightened before we ſee him; Chriſt cleareth our underſtandings, and cures our blindneſs, He is made to us of God wiſdom (to ſee our need of him to be made) righteouſneſs to us, and ſanctification and redemption, 1 Cor. 1. 30. Again, the Medium muſt be light; if the eye be clear, yet while the air is dark, we cannot ſee. There muſt be an outward light, as well as an inward light to ſee by; that Jeſus Chriſt makes alſo: for, He is the light of the world, as well as the enlightner of every one that cometh into the world. He ſends the means of knowledge, as well as gives an ability to know. He ſends light to the eyes of our mind, and he is light in the eyes of our mind. What we ought to know comes from him; and how to know as we ought, comes from him. Without him, God goeth by us in the Goſpel, and we ſee him not; he may paſs on for ever, and we never perceive him.

> Secondly obſerve, That, As the Lord in his nature cannot be ſeen at all; ſo (ſuch is the weakneſs of man, that) we cannot ſee him fully in his word or works.

How little is it that we ſee, that we know of God in either? What admirable alterations are there in the courſe of natural things, in the Sun, Moon and Stars, in the growth of herbs & plants, and in our own bodies, which we ſee not? What admirable adminiſtrations are there in the courſe of civil things? The beginnings, growths and declinings of Common-wealths, the tranſplantations of people from Countrey to Countrey, their oppreſſions by injuſtice, their confuſions by war, their eſtabliſhments by peace, their conſumptions by plague and famine, their encreaſe by health and abundance, are little minded by the moſt of men. How doth God turn Nations upſide down, and hurl Kingdoms together, and we perceive him not? Some take no notice at all of God, as doing ſuch things; none taking ſuch notice as they ought. We obſerve creatures, what this man did, and what the other, ſuch men were malicious and unfaithful, ſuch were valiant and wiſe, ſuch were ſelf-ſeekers, ſuch ſelf-deniers, ſuch conſtant Patriots, and ſuch were Apoſtates. Thus we ſee men, but we ſeldom ſee God in the great tranſactions and motions of Kingdoms. And we ſee him leaſt of all in the courſe of ſpiritual things, in his working upon our hearts; God works wonders in us, and we perceive him not. We regard not his comings or goings, his comfortings or withdrawings, when our ſpirits are heated, or when they are cold; when we are ſtrong, or when we are weak: There are continual varieties and changes in our ſpirits, had we a clearneſs to make obſervation. The work of God in the heart of a Believer, moving it, ordering it, preſerving it, comforting it, purging it, is as wonderful, and more, then any of his works in the whole world.

> Thirdly note, Man is not fit to ſit as a Judge upon the works and dealings of God.

Shall we judge God in what he doth, when we cannot apprehend what he doth? A Judge muſt have the full cognizance of the matter before him, how elſe can he paſs ſentence about it? Shall man be ſo bold as to get up into the Throne, and paſs ſentence upon what God doth, when he cannot apprehend or take in evidence of what he doth? He goeth by thee, and thou ſeeſt him not; he paſſeth on alſo, and thou perceiveſt him not; and wilt thou cenſure what thou canſt not perceive?

Fourthly, Which is Job's ſcope,

> It ſhould be matter of great humiliation to us, that we ſee ſo little of God.

God works round about us and in us, and yet we know little of him. Our blindneſs ſhould abaſe us in our own eyes: God is all eye and all hand, and we ſo blind that we cannot ſee what God doth. It muſt lay man low in his own ſight to conſider how little he ſees of God.

Verſe 12. Behold, he taketh away, who can hinder him? who ſhall ſay unto him, what doſt thou?

This and the next verſe contain a proof of mans weakneſs, as the former doth of mans ignorance and blindneſs; He paſſeth by, and I ſee him not. There is mans blindneſs. He taketh away, and who can hinder him? There is mans weakneſs. Suppoſe a man ſhould ſee God in his works, and apprehend what he is about, yet though he hath ſo much light as to ſee God, he hath not ſo much ſtrength as to hinder God: Is not this an argument of mans weakneſs? What, contend with God! God doth many things, and thou canſt not ſee him; or if thou ſeeſt him, yet it is not in thy power to ſtop him; Behold, he taketh away, and who can hinder him? Yea, man is ſo far from being able to ſtop or hinder God in what he is about to do, that man hath not right to queſtion God, or to ask him what he is about to do. Man is neither ſtrong enough to ſtop him from what he will do, nor righteous enough to queſtion him for what he doth. This is the total denying of any poſſibility in man to deal with God. How can he ſtop God in what he doth, who cannot ſo much as ask him what he doth? Who ſhall ſay unto him, what doſt thou?

Behold, he taketh away?

The word ſignifies to take away by violence and force, to take away as a robber takes, to ſteal away: As if he had ſaid, ſuppoſe the Lord comes by open violence to take a thing from thee, or ſecretly, and as it were by ſtealth, to bereave thee of thy eſtate, or of thy life, if he take all from thee, and ſtrip thee naked, what canſt thou do? So the word is uſed (Prov. 23. 28.) Speaking of a wicked woman, of an harlot, She lieth in wait as for a prey; the Hebrew is, She lieth in wait as a robber, to take away the eſtate, yea, and the life of thoſe whom ſhe ſhall entangle. Some underſtand this more ſpecially of taking away life. If he will ſtop thy breath, and deliver thee up to death; ſo Auguſtine upon the place: or as the Chaldee, If he take one out of the world, who can hinder him? As if Job had ſaid, The Lord may not only take away ſo much as he hath taken from me, but more, without wrong to me. He hath taken away my goods, and my eſtate, my children and friends, he hath fetched away my health and ſtrength, my beauty and outward comforts; if he come and take away my life alſo at next bout, I cannot hinder him; I can neither compel him to reſtore, nor call him to an account; I can neither urge him to reſtitution, nor charge him with oppreſſion. He plainly intimates the rapine of his goods by the Chaldeans, &c. Of which he ſpake poſitively (Chap. 1. 21.) The Lord hath taken; and here by way of general ſuppoſition, If he take away,

Who ſhall hinder him?

Mr. Broughton tranſlates, Who ſhall make him reſtore? So he carries it in alluſion to men, who violently take away the goods and eſtates of another. If a man come with force and take away my goods, I may make him reſtore them again by a greater force; but if the Lord take away and ask me no leave, I cannot make him reſtore. The word ſignifies to ſtop or turn a thing, and becauſe in recovering of a prey, or in making a man reſtore, we ſtop and ſtay his courſe, therefore the word is indifferently applied to both.

ישובנו à radice שוב Vertere aut reducere, quis reſtituere eum faciet, quis recuperabit aut reducet prædam?

Others underſtand it in this ſence, If he taketh away, who ſhall hinder him? That is, who can turn him from his purpoſe? who can ſtop him in the thing he hath a mind to do? The vulgar tranſlation varies much; If he ſuddenly ask a man a queſtion, who ſhall be able to anſwer him? The Hebrew word which ſignifies to return, ſignifies to anſwer; anſwering is the return of a word (Prov. 8. 13.) He that anſwereth (or returneth a word) before he heareth a matter. But I ſhall lay that by, though the abettors of the Vulgar make great ſtore of it; interpreting their meaning thus, If the Lord cite a man to judgment, and bring him to trial, man is not able to anſwer him, or to plead his own cauſe. Man cannot ſtand before the Lord. Hence obſerve, Quidam nō de præda, ſed de ipſo Deo intelligunt. Quis revocabit eū à propoſito? Si repentè interroget, quis reſpondebit ei? Vulg. Vel quòd reſpondens cōvertit ſe ad interrogantem; vel quòd reſponſum regeratur, reſtituaturq; tanquam debitum interroganti.

First, That, All our comforts are in the power of God.

If he taketh away,] ſuppoſeth he can take away, and he can take all away, and do us no wrong. It is no robbery if God rob us; his robbery is no wrong: Why? Becauſe he comes not as a thief, but as a Lord and Maſter of our Eſtates; he may come and take them away as he pleaſeth, and when he pleaſeth.

Secondly, Note this from it, He taketh away.

That which God doth by the hand of the creature, is to be reckoned as his own act.

He taketh away when creatures take away. It is ſeldom that God dealeth immediately with us in theſe outward providences; he ſends men, ſtirs inſtruments to do what is done. But that which man doth, the Lord doth (Iſa. 42. 24.) Who gave Jacob to the ſpoilers, and Iſrael to the robbers? Did not I the Lord? Men ſpoiled and robbed them, yet it was the Lords act to ſend thoſe ſpoilers; Did not I the Lord? As that which man doth in ſpirituals, is the Lords act; when man converteth and ſaveth, it is the Lord that ſaveth and converteth; when man comforteth and refreſheth by applying the promiſes, it is the Lord that comforteth and refreſheth; when man gives reſolution in doubts, it is the Lord that reſolveth doubts; mans act is the Lords. So here when man robbeth and ſpoileth us, the act is from the Lord, though the wickedneſs of the act is from the man. The Lord ſuffers men to ſpoil and undo us; yea, the Lord orders them to ſpoil us: It is done not only by his permiſſion, but by his commiſſion; not only with his leave, but by his appointment; I will ſend them againſt an hypocritical Nation, and againſt the people of my wrath will I give them a charge, to take the ſpoil, and to take the prey, and to tread them down like the mire of the ſtreets, Iſa. 10.

Thirdly obſerve, Whot the Lord will do either by himſelf, or by inſtruments, no man can ſtop or prevent.

If he taketh away, who ſhall hinder him? The Lord hath abſolute power; if he will overthrow men or families, or whole Kingdoms, none can ſtay him. There have been four great Monarchies in the world, and the Lord coming in judgment againſt them, hath taken all away. The united ſtrength of all creatures cannot ſtand before him when he is angry and reſolved. The Babylonian could not ſay and perform it, I will keep my Throne. The Perſian could not ſay and do it, I will keep my State: The Grecian could not ſay and maintain it, I will keep my glory: The Roman could not ſay and make it good, I will keep my Empire. When the Lord had a mind to it, he came and fetcht away the power and glory, the crown and dignity of thoſe Monarchs, he threw down their thrones, brake their ſtates, darkened their glory, diſſipated their Empires, no man could hinder him. How are ye fallen from heaven, O Lucifers, ſons of the morning? how are ye cut down to the ground, which did weaken the Nations? Though ye ſaid in your hearts, we will aſcend into heaven, we will exalt our thrones above the ſtars of God; We will aſcend above the heights of the clouds, we will be like the moſt high; yet how are ye brought down to hell, to the ſides of the pit? All that look upon you, ſay, Are theſe the men that made the earth to tremble, that did ſhake Kingdoms? Thus the Lord hath taken away the Thrones of Princes, and none could hinder; he hath alſo removed the Candleſticks of Churches, and none could hinder. Chriſt threatned the ſeven Churches in Aſia, that he would come and take away their Candleſticks; which of theſe hindered him? Both Crowns and Candleſticks muſt down, if he ſpeak the word. It is ſaid, when David kept his Fathers ſheep, there came a Lion and a Bear, and took a Lamb and a ſheep out of the Flock; but he aroſe and went out after them, and reſcued both Lamb and Sheep, taking the prey out of their teeth: When the Lord Chriſt, the Lion of the Tribe of Judah, will come and tear and take away, no David can reſcue out of his hand. The five Kings that came againſt Sodom, took away Lot; Abraham went with his Army and made them reſtore, made them bring back again; it is ordinary with man, when one hath robbed another, for a ſtronger to make him reſtore and vomit up the ſweet morſels which he hath ſwallowed. It is not thus with God.

First, Power cannot do it; though the inſtruments which he uſeth to take away from us, be weak, yet the ſtrong ſhall not be able to make the weak reſtore. A weak Nation may deſtroy a ſtrong Nation, and the ſtronger ſhall not be able to make the weaker reſtore, if the Lord ſend them. When the Babylonians encamped about Jeruſalem, he warns them by his Prophet, Do not think you ſhall deliver your ſelves by your great ſtrength, I have ſent them to take your City and your State. And though they were all wounded men, yet they ſhall riſe up and take your City (Iſa. 43. 13.) I will work (ſaith the Lord) and who ſhall let it? Who ſhall let it? Why, they might ſay, We will have ſome that ſhall let it: No (ſaith the Lord) none ſhall let it; Behold, I have ſent to Babylon, and deſtroyed all their Princes: thoſe that ſought to hinder me in my work, by their power and counſel, are broken, though they ſeemed as ſtrong as iron bars (ſo the word is) theſe bars of iron cannot keep me from entring, I will break all oppoſition raiſed againſt my work.

Secondly, As power cannot hinder him, ſo policy cannot; no counſel ſhall ſtop him: They (Iſa. 7. 6.) took counſel and reſolved ſtrongly, We will go up againſt Judah, and deſtroy it, and ſet a King in the midſt of it, even the ſon of Tabeal; the Lord anſwereth in the next words, It ſhall not ſtand, neither ſhall it come to paſs. You reſolve to do it, you make it out in your counſels, how to hinder mine, but it ſhall not be, it ſhall not come to paſs. As no counſel againſt us ſhall ſtand, if the Lord be with us (Iſa. 8. 10.) ſo no counſel for us ſhall ſtand, if the Lord be againſt us.

Thirdly, When the Lord is reſolved to take away the peace and glory of a Nation, or of a Church, he will do it, and no ſpiritual means ſhall hinder him, prayer it ſelf ſhall not hinder him. If any thing in the world can move the Lord to reſtore, when he taketh away the peace of a people, it is prayer, and the cry of his people. Prayer hath often met the Lord, as Abigail did David (1 Sam. 25.) and prevailed with him to put up his ſword, which was ready to deſtroy. At the voyce of prayer the Lord hath reſtored that which he took away, and hath ſtayed from doing that which he ſeemed fully reſolved to do, Pſal. 106. 23. The Lord would have deſtroyed them, had not Moſes his choſen ſtood before him in the breach. Did Moſes out-power the Lord? did he out-wit or out-policy the Lord? No, but Moſes prayed, and prayed ſo ſtrongly, that the Lord was hindered, that is, he, as if he had been hindered, did not effect the thing; he reſtored their comforts again, when he had arreſted but ſome of them, and ſeemed to come armed with reſolution to take all away. Yet ſometimes we find the Lord will come and take away, and prayer it ſelf, prayer and faſting, cries and tears ſhall not hinder, God will trample upon all theſe. God was reſolved to take away the glory of Iſrael; and to aſſure them that he would, he takes away that wherein their chief aſſurance lay, that he would not (Jer. 15. 1.) Thus ſaith the Lord, though Moſes and Samuel ſtood before me, yet my mind could not be toward this people, &c. As if he had ſaid, Ye think to hinder me now, ye will ſtop me, ye will ſend out prayer, your old friend, which hath helped you heretofore at many a dead lift. And if you cannot pray enough your ſelves, you will procure prayers, and pray in the aid of prayer from all the Favourites that I have in the world, ye will get Moſeſes and Samuels, ſuch as they, to pray for you; ye may do ſo if ye will, but it ſhall not profit you; they and ye ſhall loſe your labour, even theſe labours will not quit coſt, or be worth the while to the end ye aim at; for, though Moſes and

Samuel ſtood before me, and intreated for this people, yet my mind could not be toward them: caſt them out of my ſight, and let them go forth, ſuch as are for the ſword, to the ſword; and ſuch as are for death, to death; and ſuch as are for captivity, to captivity. Thus, I ſay, ſometimes the Lord is reſolved to take away life, riches, glory, peace, the all both of perſons and Nations, that nothing ſhall help us, or hinder him; no, not the prayers and cries, not the ſupplications and tears of his own people, which are the ſtrongeſt ſtops of all in the way of provoked juſtice. If prayer cannot ſtay deſtruction, and obtain a reprieve from death; if the prayers of a Moſes and a Samuel cannot, nothing can; it is, as if God had ſaid, The beſt means ſhall fail you, therefore all means ſhall fail you: if when prayer cannot hinder God, we reſort to other means; it is as if we ſhould think to faſten an Anchor with a twined threed, which hath broken a cable; or to conquer an enemy with a pot-gun and a bull-ruſh, whom we could not with Sword and Cannon. And as God will not ſometimes be entreated, ſo he ought not at any time to be queſtioned; which is the next point.

Who ſhall ſay unto him, What doeſt thou?

Supremus judex eſt à quo non poteſt eſſe provocatio.

That's further conſiderable; man is not only not able to ſtop the Lord from what he would do, but he hath no right to put in a plea againſt what he hath done, no nor to ask him what he hath been doing, or why he did it. The ſuperior may ask the inferior, and call him to an account: Every inferior Judge and Court, is accountable to thoſe above; that is the higheſt Court, and he the higheſt Judge, to whom no man can ſay, What doeſt thou? The Parliament of England is therefore the higheſt Judicatory in this Kingdom, becauſe their actions are not queſtionable in any other Court; one Parliament may ſay to another, What haſt thou done? This Parliament hath ſaid to Parliaments that have gone before, What have ye done in making ſuch and ſuch Laws? No power of man beſides their own can queſtion ſome men, much leſs can any man queſtion God, and ſay to him, What doeſt thou? He is ſupreme, there is no appeal to any other higher Judge, or higher Court. Hence obſerve, Whatſoever God reſolveth and determineth concerning us, we muſt bear it, and quietly ſubmit.

Quicquid de nobis Deus ſtatuit libenter ferendum eſt.

No man may ſay unto him, What doeſt thou? Why do ye ſit ſtill (ſaith the Prophet, Jer. 8.14.) Aſſemble your ſelves, and let us enter into the defenced Cities, and let us be ſilent there, for the Lord hath put us to ſilence, and given us waters of gall to drink, becauſe we have ſinned againſt him. The Lord hath put us to ſilence; that is, the Lord hath done theſe things, and we are not to queſtion him about them, or to ask him what he hath done, or why he hath done thus? Therefore let us be ſilent, ſay they. Let us not murmur at, and complain over our own ſufferings, much leſs tax and charge God for his doings. It becomes us to obey Gods ſuſpenſion; to be ſilent, when he puts us to ſilence. The Lord never ſilences any (unleſs in wrath to thoſe who would not hear) from ſpeaking in his Name, and publiſhing his word. But he hath ſilenced all from ſpeaking againſt his works; and it will be ill with us, if our paſſions (how much ſoever God ſeems to act againſt us) ſhall take off this ſuſpenſion. The Lord is uncontrollable in all his works. When Nebuchadnezzar (Dan. 4.35.) came to himſelf, and began to think and ſpeak like a man, after he had been among the beaſts, ſee what an humble acknowledgment he makes concerning God: All the inhabitants of the earth (ſaith he) are reputed as nothing, and he doth according to his will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth, and none can ſtay his hand, or ſay unto him, What doeſt thou? Here, we have both parts of Job's ſpeech; none can ſtay his hand, which is the former; and none can ſay unto him, What doeſt thou? which is the later. That great Monarch acknowledged he had no power to queſtion God, though he at that time had power to queſtion all the men upon the earth. Nebuchadnezzar ſpeaks like Job. A wicked man may make a true report of God. Many ſpeak right of the Lord, whoſe hearts are not right with him. Nebuchadnezzar was converted from beaſtlineſs, but I find not that he was converted to holineſs. He came home to his own Court, but I ſee no proof that he came home to the Church of God; yet, ſee how divinely he ſpeaks, and how humbly he walks, not ſo much as offering to ask God (who had chang'd him from a Commander of men, to a companion of beaſts) What doeſt thou?

We may ask the Lord (in one ſence) what he doth? Yea, the Lord doth nothing in the world, but his Saints and ſervants are enquiring of him about it. He invites them to petition for what they would have, Ask of me things to come concerning my ſons, and concerning the work of my hands command ye me (Iſa. 45. 11.) Though man cannot order or enjoyn the leaſt thing upon God, yet at the entreaty of his people, he is as ready to do, as if he were at their command. And as we are thus invited to ask things to come, ſo we are not totally denied to ask about things already done. We may ask him in an humble way for information, not in a bold way of contradiction. We may in zeal to his glory, not in diſcontent with our own condition, expoſtulate with him about what he hath done. So Joſhua (Chap. 7.7, 8.) Alas O Lord God, wherefore haſt thou at all brought this people over Jordan, to deliver us into the hand of the Amorites to deſtroy us? Would to God we had been content, and dwelt on the other ſide Jordan, &c. but how durſt Joſhua ſpeak thus? What if God would deſtroy them, was it not his duty to bear it, and let God alone? Yes doubtleſs, and ſuch I doubt not was the frame of Joſhua's ſpirit. If Iſrael only had been to ſuffer, Joſhua had held his peace, at leaſt from ſuch language; but he ſaw a further matter in it; the glory of God was like to ſuffer in their ſufferings: the cloſe of his prayer betrayes this holy diſpoſition of his heart, verſ. 9. And what wilt thou do unto thy great name? As if he had ſaid, Lord, the matter were not much, though the name of Iſrael were blotted out from under Heaven, ſo thy Name were written in fairer characters. But I fear a blow to Iſrael will be a blot to thy Name, and therefore I have taken upon me to pray this prayer unto thee, and I have prayed rather for thee, then to thee. All prayers are made to God, and yet ſome are made for him. Not that he hath any want, or is in any the remoteſt poſſibility of any danger, but only for the promoting of his glory; and that the world may not have occaſion of a diſhonourable thought of him, whoſe honour never abates in it ſelf, or in the eyes of his own people. Thus we may ask him what he hath done, and why he hath brought ſuch deſolations upon his people. But we may not ask him what he hath done, either to queſtion his right to do it, or to queſtion his righteouſneſs in doing of it. No creature may put the queſtion upon either of theſe terms, What haſt thou done? much leſs conclude, Thou haſt done that which thou haſt no right to do, or, thou haſt been unrighteous in doing it. Either of theſe is higheſt blaſphemy: for, whatſoever the Lord doth, he hath right to do, and whatſoever the Lord doth, he is righteous in doing it.

Hence it followeth by way of Corollary,

That, The Lord is of abſolute power.

He is the Sovereign Lord, Lord over all; there is no appeal from him, no queſtioning of him. Solomon ſpeaketh of the power of a King, in this language (Eccleſ. 8.4.) Where the word of a King is, there is power, and who may ſay unto him, What doeſt thou? But is there nothing which a King doth, about which it may be ſaid unto him, What doeſt thou? And what is this word of a King? The word of a King, is the Law of his Kingdom: all that a King doth or ſpeaks beſides the Law, he ſpeaks as a man, not as a King; and that's the meaning of Solomon's Text; which Court-flatterers have corrupted with their unſound gloſſes, as if every word of a King were of abſolute power, and muſt have peremptory obedience. A King is for his Kingdom; and while he commands according to the rules and Laws of his Kingdom, no Subject may queſtion him, or ſay unto him, What doeſt thou? There is no power above his power, as he is armed with the power of his Laws. And becauſe whereſoever the Word of God is, there is his Law; therefore whereſoever the Word of God is, there is power; and no man may ſay unto him, What doeſt thou? Every word of direction, ſpoken by God, is a Law; becauſe his will is the Law of all things and perſons. As the will of man by nature is not ſubject (by obeying it) to the righteous Law of God, neither indeed can be; ſo the will of God by nature is the ſubject, containing all righteous Laws, neither indeed can it not be: for though God be voluntarily, and with higheſt freeneſs righteous, yet he is righteous neceſſarily, and with greateſt undeclinableneſs; as he is freely what he is, ſo it is impoſſible for him not to be what he is. And therefore no man ought to ſay to God, What doeſt thou? Seeing God can do nothing, but what he ought. In vain then is God either attempted by power, or ſollicited by prayer againſt his own mind; For,

Verſ. 13. If God will not withdraw his anger, the proud helpers do ſtoop under him.

Though, If God taketh away, none can hinder him; though none ought to ſay unto him, What doeſt thou? whatſoever he doth: yet poſſibly ſome will be venturing upon this hard task, and undertake this impoſſible adventure, attempting to recover Gods booty, and his priſoners out of his hand: but ſee the iſſue, If God will not withdraw his anger, the proud helpers do ſtoop under him. Suppoſe any ſhould come to help, protect and patronize thoſe whom God hath a mind to take away and deſtroy, ſhall they proſper or ſpeed? No, not only they themſelves whom the Lord hath taken away, but their aſſiſtants, and their ſecond, all that appear for them (except God call in his anger) ſhall fall before him.

If God will not withdraw his anger.] The letter of the Hebrew is, If the Lord will not turn away his noſtrils, or his face. Noſtrils or face are taken here, as in many other Scriptures, for anger, becauſe there is ſuch an appearance of anger in the face and noſtrils; acted paſſion is ſeated there, as was noted (Chap. 4.9.) Therefore to turn away the face or noſtril, is to turn away from anger, *Pſal.*78.38. Many a time turned he away his anger; it is this word. When the Lord is angry, the turning of his face towards a man ſheweth he is reconciled; and when he is angry, the not turning away of his face, ſhews that he is unreconciled, or reſolved to continue angry. And while God is ſo reſolved, man is in a ſad caſe, his helpers muſt ſtoop. The ſtrength of Iſrael will not lie or repent (1 Sam.15.29.) The Hebrew is, The victory of Iſrael. The Lords ſtrength is victory. Victorious perſons can hardly be overcome, but victory cannot; therefore except himſelf will withdraw, except himſelf overcome himſelf, it is not in the power of all creatures to overcome him (Job 23.13.) He is in one mind, and who can turn him? As if he had ſaid, except the Lord will turn himſelf, and alter what he himſelf hath determined, it is not in men to cauſe him to alter, He is in one mind, and who can turn him? And what his ſoul deſireth, even that he doth; which is the higheſt expreſſion of power imaginable. How many things do our ſouls deſire which we cannot do? We are deſiring and deſiring, yet our hands are not able to bring it to paſs, The deſires of the ſlothful (alwayes) ſlay them, becauſe (ſaith Solomon, Prov.21.25.) their hands refuſe to labour; and the deſires of the diligent ſlay them, ſometimes, becauſe they cannot compaſs the thing deſired, with all their labour; but as for the Lord, What his ſoul deſireth, even that he doth. And as his deſires are irreſiſtible, ſo is his anger, his iraſcible appetite is as victorious as his concupiſcible, unleſs God withdraw his anger.

The proud helpers do ſtoop under him.] The word is, Helpers of pride, that is, ſuch as think themſelves moſt powerful and able to help, The helpers of pride, or the ſtrong helpers. The ſame word (note that by the way) ſignifies ſtrength and pride, becauſe we are ſo apt to be proud of our ſtrength. If a man have a little ſtrength in the world, ſtrength of friends, or of riches, ſtrength of body or of mind, ſtrength of underſtanding, ſtrength of memory, ſtrong parts, he is under a ſtrong temptation to pride. Pride is one of the greateſt weakneſſes of man, but it is alwayes grounded upon ſuppoſed ſtrength.

But who are theſe proud, theſe ſtrong helpers?

Some underſtand it of the good Angels, who are the ſtrongeſt, the higheſt of created helpers; Angels ſtoop under the power of God as well as men.

Others expound theſe ſtrong helpers to be Devils, who are evil Angels, to whom evil men ſeek ſometimes for help. If the Lord will not turn away his anger, though men ſeek to the Devil for help (as Saul did) that helper ſhall ſtoop under him. Saul conſulted with a witch (the Devils oracle) yet he could not be delivered by a witch.

Qui portant orbē. Vulg.

Others underſtand by theſe ſtrong helpers, godly men; if the Lord will not turn away his anger, the righteous ſhall ſtoop under him, that is, they ſhall not be able to reſcue a perſon or a Nation from the anger of God by prayer, or by the utmoſt improvements of their intereſt with God. Some places have fallen, becauſe they wanted godly men to ſupport them; and ſome places have fallen, though they had godly men to ſupport them. The Vulgar Latine tranſlation renders, They that bear up the pillars of the world, ſhall fall. Godly men bear up the pillars of the world. Though the Hebrew will not bear their tranſlation, yet the ſence is good. Godly men are the worlds ſupporters. It is ſaid (Revel. 12.16.) That the earth helped the woman; that is, worldly men for carnal ends helped the Church, when a flood of perſecution, caſt out of the mouth of the Dragon, was ready to ſwallow her up. But the Church continually helps the world, and ſwallows up many of thoſe floods of Gods diſpleaſure, which elſe would drown the world. And becauſe the Church was ſo thin, and there were ſo few godly men in the old world, therefore it was drowned, *Gen.*7. And becauſe ten righteous perſons were not found in Sodom, fire from heaven conſumed it (Gen. 18.) God ſeeks for Saints many times to ſtand in the gap, and ſave a Kingdom, (Ezek. 22.30. Jer. 5.1.) and yet ſometimes Kingdoms are not ſaved, though many ſuch ſtand in the gap. Except the Lord turn away his anger, theſe Porters of the world ſhall not ſupport it, theſe ſpiritual Atlaſſes ſhall faint and fall under him. The Heathens had a fiction of a mighty Gigantine man, whom they called Atlas, him they fancied bearing up the frame of nature: it is moſt true in a ſpiritual ſence, the Saints bear up the world; yet if the Lord turn not away his anger, the world muſt totter and fall too, notwithſtanding theſe helpers. For the Saints do not bear up the world, or ſave Kingdoms from wrath, by giving the leaſt ſatisfaction to the juſtice of God (that's the ſole Prerogative of Jeſus Chriſt) but only by imploring the mercy of God. Or they are therefore ſaid to turn away the wrath of God from a people, becauſe God will not pour out his wrath upon that people, while his Saints are mingled with them. The tares are let grow, leaſt in pulling them up, the wheat ſhould be pulled up alſo. It is good for the worſt to have the neighbourhood of thoſe who are good.

Further, More generally theſe proud helpers are ſuppoſed to be Kings and Common-wealths, joyned in ſtrongeſt confederacies; and then the ſence is, If God come againſt a Nation, though it joyn with other Nations, though hand joyn in hand, the hand of one King in the hand of another, yet it ſhall not eſcape or go unpuniſhed.

The proud helpers ſhall ſtoop under him.

There is yet another interpretation, which reſtrains and limits the word Rahab particularly to Egypt, Unleſs the Lord turn away his anger, helpers out of Egypt ſhall ſtoop under him, or Egypt helping ſhall ſtoop under him. We find frequently in the Scriptures of the Old Teſtament, that Egypt is called Rahab. And that name did well ſute with Egypt, which was both a ſtrong and a proud Kingdom, *Pſal.*87.4. We will remember Rahab and Babylon, that is, Egypt and Babylon. Egypt and Babylon are matcht together for pride, and for oppreſſion, perſecuting the people of God. And *Iſa.*51.9. Art not thou it that hath cut Rahab, and wounded the Dragon? That is, art not thou (O Lord) he that didſt cut Egypt in pieces, when they oppoſed thy people, and woundedſt Pharaoh in the midſt of the Red Sea. In Job 26. verſ. 12. ſome tranſlate Rahab, Egypt: we render the Text thus, He divideth the Sea with his power, and by his underſtanding he ſmiteth thorow the proud; ſo we, By his underſtanding he ſtrikes thorow Rahab, that is, thorow Egypt, ſay others. And ſo they make that Text and this an argument, that the book of Job was penned after the deliverance of the people of Iſrael out of Egypt, and that in theſe paſſages Job had reference to the mighty work of God, in deſtroying the Egyptians at the Red Sea. Taking the word thus, the Text is, Unleſs the Lord turn away his anger, Egypt ſhall ſtoop under him; as if he had ſaid, Do you not remember a late inſtance of Gods power? Egypt thought to contend with God, to hold his people in bondage whether he would or no, when he had a mind to bring them forth; but you know Egypt ſtooped: God brought down the pride, and abated the ſtrength of it.

Loquitur propheticè. Bold. Adjutores Ægypti, i. e. angeli ejus gentis. Ut in prophetia Danielis, princeps Perſiæ. Druſ.

And that other place (Chap. 26. 12.) may be gloſſed thus, He divided the Sea by his power, that is, the Red Sea, and by his underſtanding he ſtruck thorow Rahab; that is, when the Egyptians purſued his people, he deſtroyed them. Which interpretation carries a very clear proof that Job alludes to the deliverance of Iſrael out of Egypt, and therefore lived after the time of that deliverance; though others who grant the expoſition, deny the inference, maintain that Job ſpake this prophetically, not hiſtorically. This we know, that Egypt was a place much ſought to for help, and therefore it is elegantly ſaid, If the Lord turn not away his anger, Egypt ſhall ſtoop; that Nation which hath been ſo often called out to help and relieve other Nations, that Nation which hath ſo often helped and relieved other Nations, ſhall not be able to help, Iſa. 31. 1. They go down to Egypt for help, as if Egypt had been as a City of refuge, or the place of common reſort for help. And Iſa. 30. 7. The Egyptians ſhall help in vain; the Text is very appliable to this point; we read it thus, The Egyptians ſhall help in vain, and to no purpoſe, therefore have I cried concerning this, their ſtrength is to ſit ſtill. Their ſtrength ſhall not deliver you, they ſhall help in vain, therefore I have warned you (ſaith the Prophet) to ſit ſtill, to be quiet with your own ſtrength, and it is better to do ſo then to go down thither for help. But the word which we tranſlate ſtrength, is that in the Text, Rahab; and we may render the whole thus, The Egyptians ſhall help in vain, and to no purpoſe; therefore I cryed to them in this thing, They are proud, or only pride, Therefore ſit ſtill. As if he had ſaid, Will ye go to Egypt for help? Ye go but to a proud people for help, and ye had better have no helpers, then proud helpers; ye had better be quiet and ſit ſtill at home, for they ſhall help you in vain. So it is an elegant alluſion to their nature and diſpoſition. The truth is, proud helpers are very unſafe helpers, for the Lord reſiſteth the proud; and I wonder how they can help us to reſiſt our enemies, who are reſiſted by the Lord himſelf? They will prove but ill friends to us, who have the Lord for their enemy.

Superbia tantum eſt, quieſce: fortaſſe vult dicere, nihil aliud eſſe in ea quam ſuperbiam.

They ſhall ſtoop under him.] The word is often uſed for worſhipping, it imports likewiſe any caſting down or abaſement, becauſe we in the worſhip of God ought to be exceedingly abaſed and humbled before him, Pſal. 38.6. I am troubled, I am bowed down greatly. So Habak. 3. 6. The perpetual hills did bow, that is, the power (for it is conceived to be a continued Allegory) of the great Monarchs, who were as the mountains and hills of the world, bowed under the Lord. The word is uſed to the ſame ſence (Iſa. 49.23.) where the Lord promiſeth his people, That Kings ſhall be their nurſing Fathers, and Queens their nurſing Mothers, they ſhall bow down to thee with their face toward the earth, and lick the duſt of thy feet. The Church ſhall have the honour to be honoured by the Kings and Princes of the world, they being converted ſhall bow down ſo low to the Scepter of Jeſus Chriſt, held forth by the Church, as if they would lick up the very duſt, and ſhall employ their power and authority for the good and protection of the Church. The ſpeech of Iſrael (Gen.27. 29.) in his prophetick bleſſing upon Jacob, Let thy mothers ſons bow down to thee; and of Jacib, in his, upon Judah (Gen. 49. 8.) Thy fathers children ſhall bow down before thee, note greateſt honour and ſubjection to them both.

The meaning of all is plainly this, That except the Lord himſelf ſuſpend his own act, and reſtrain his anger, no power in heaven or earth, how ſtrong, how proud, how confident of ſucceſs ſoever, is able to force him, or to alter him. Helpers ſhall not help themſelves, much leſs thoſe to whoſe help they come, againſt the mind and purpoſe of God. Obſerve here,

First, Thoſe paſſions which are aſcribed to God, are fully under the command of God.

The paſſion of anger is aſcribed to God, yet the anger which we ſay is in God, hath no power over God: Mans anger uſually maſters him; but God is alwayes maſter of his anger; that is, he can turn and withdraw his anger when he pleaſeth. There is no perturbation in God; when he is offended, he is not moved; his motions are all without upon the creatures, he hath none in his own boſom. The paſſions of the Lord are his moſt ſerious counſels and determinations; and we therefore ſay, he is angry, becauſe thoſe counſels of his acted, look like the effects of anger. Obſerve, Secondly, That, It is not in the power of man to turn away the anger of God.

He doth not ſay, except men by prayer or other means ſtop the anger of God, but, Except the Lord withdraw his anger, all help is vain. Prayer is ſaid to appeaſe the wrath of God, and to ſtay his anger; Moſes ſtood in the gap, and Aaron came out with incenſe to turn away his wrath; yet it is an act of Gods will, which turns away his anger, not the force of our prayer; prayer therefore prevails with God, becauſe he hath ſaid, it ſhall. He is infinitely free when himſelf acknowledges that we lay the powerfulleſt reſtraint upon him: when the Lord is turned by prayer, it is his will to be turned; it was his counſel, and is his command that prayer ſhould be made as a means to turn him; and it is his promiſe, that he will turn to us when we pray. Then it appears to us that the Lord hath decreed to do a thing, when he ſtirs up the hearts of his people to pray for the doing of it; and that he is purpoſed to withdraw his anger, when he draws out their hearts ſtrongly to entreat his favour. Obſerve, Thirdly, That, until God be appeaſed towards a perſon or a people, there is no remedy for them in the world.

The proud helpers ſhall ſtoop under him. If the helpers themſelves fall, who can riſe by theſe helpers? If they are caſt down, how ſhall we be upheld by them? What if the people of a provoking Nation aſſociate themſelves together, or aſſociate themſelves with other Nations, or call in help and aid from all that are round about them, ſhall they therefore eſcape in their wickedneſs? they ſhall not eſcape. Unleſs God help our helpers, they are helpleſs to us. When many companies, and great Commanders repaired to David at Ziklag, David went out to meet them, (1 Chron. 12. 17.) and ſaid, If ye be come peaceably to help me, mine heart ſhall be knit to you; but if ye be come to betray me, &c. Amaſai who was chief of the Captains, anſwers (v. 18.) Thine are we, David, and on thy ſide, thou ſon of Jeſſe: peace, peace be unto thee, and peace be to thy helpers, for thy God helpeth thee. Our helpers cannot give us peace, unleſs God give them peace; our helpers muſt be helped by God, before they can give us help. The anger of God breaks all the ſtaves we lean on, and makes them as reeds, which wound rather then ſupport; till God is quiet all is unquiet, and when he is unpacified, men ſhall be unpacified, or their peace ſhall be to our loſs. As, if he withdraw his anger, enemies ſhall oppoſe in vain: ſo except he withdraw his anger, friends ſhall help in vain.

Laſtly, They who ſtrive to deliver thoſe whom God will deſtroy, ſhall fall themſelves before God.

If God be reſolved upon the thing, not only they that are helped, but the helpers alſo ſhall ſtoop under him: helpers cannot help themſelves when he is angry; they ſhall be like Idols, which have eyes and ſee not, hands and cannot act, either to ſave themſelves, or thoſe that truſt upon them. The greateſt ſtrength in the world without God, it is no better then an Idol, which is nothing in the world. Strength cannot be ſtrong for it ſelf, and help cannot help it ſelf. Our help ſtands in the Name of the Lord, which made heaven and earth, and not in the name of any creature under any part of heaven, or upon the face of the whole earth.

VERS. 14, 15.

How much leſs ſhall I anſwer him, and chuſe out my words to reaſon with him?

Whom, though I were righteous, yet would I not anſwer, I would make ſupplication to my Judge.

JOB having in the former paſſages of this Chapter lifted up the glory and majeſty of God, in his power and juſtice, and ſhewed the utter inſufficiency of creatures to implead his Juſtice, or to reſcue themſelves out of the hand of his power; he now draws his ſpeech nearer home, and calling his thoughts from thoſe remoter journeyes up to the heavens, and among the ſtars, over the mountains and hills, down to the depths of the ſea, and foundations of the earth, about all which he had diſcourſed; I ſay, calling his thoughts from theſe remoter travels, he comes now cloſer to the matter, and from all thoſe premiſes, deduces a concluſion in the words of the Text, to vindicate himſelf from that charge which his friends laid upon him, as if he were a contender with the power, or an accuſer of the wiſdom and juſtice of God. From the folly and blaſphemy of both which imputations, he diſaſperſeth himſelf in theſe two verſes, by an argument taken from the greater to the leſs; and we may form it up thus.

He who is ſo ſtrong, wiſe and juſt, that all the powers in heaven and earth are not able to oppoſe or ſtay him; ſurely I alone, or ſingle I, a poor, weak creature, am not able to oppoſe or ſtay him.

But (as I have cleared by thoſe former inſtances) God is ſo ſtrong, wiſe and juſt, that all the powers of heaven, the ſea, the mountains, and the pillars of the earth, the Sun, Moon and Stars, together with the greateſt and mightieſt of all the children of men, are not able to reſiſt him.

Therefore I, a poor, weak creature, lying here in this ſad condition, am not able (nor have I any deſign) to do it.

Cum robuſtiſſimæ illæ creaturæ, montes, mare, cœli, ei cedant, & quæcunque robore efferuntur & præſtant, quãto minus ego? Merl.

Only the concluſion of this Syllogiſm is expreſt, in the fourteenth and fifteenth verſes, the premiſes are couched in the foregoing context.

Here take notice in general, that Job falls in the concluſion ſomewhat below the premiſes. There the intendment was to demonſtrate the ſtrongeſt creature unable to reſiſt the power of God; but Job ſpeaks lower of himſelf, I am ſo far from being able to ſet my ſtrength againſt the ſtrength of God, that I acknowledge I am not able to hold diſcourſe with him, or ſpeak with him about theſe things; I have not only no power to oppoſe, but I have no words to oppoſe him.

Verſe 14. How much leſs ſhall I anſwer him, and chuſe out my words to reaſon with him?

Si robuſti nihil valent contra illum quanto minus ego debilis & infirmus homuncio? Druſ. Nunquam animo finxi quod vos de me fingitis, me poſſe aut velle illi ex æquo reſpõdere. Pined.

How much leſs.] The word is uſed in the fourth Chapter; How much leſs in them that dwell in houſes of clay? Both Texts bear the ſame ſence. If he charge his Angels with folly, and put no truſt in thoſe his ſervants, then, how much leſs in them who dwell in houſes of clay? So the argument lies here, If thoſe mighty and powerful creatures, and the mightieſt of the children of men are not able to contend with God, how much leſs ſhall I anſwer him, and chuſe out my words to reaſon with him? As if he had ſaid, It never ſo much as came into my thoughts to contend with God; I confeſs I have complained grievouſly about my troubles, and have ſpoken ſome things unadviſedly, but it never entred into my heart to quarrel with God, or ſtand in battel array againſt him, no not ſo much as in a battel of words.

How much leſs ſhall I anſwer?

Shall I anſwer.] There is a twofold anſwering, both appliable to this Text.

Firſt, There is an anſwering by way of fact, a real anſwer, or anſwering to a condition. Thus one man anſwers another that is of equal power and ſtrength, of the ſame meaſure in abilities and gifts with him. Thus alſo, as Solomon ſpeaks (Prov. 27. 19.) Face anſwers face in the water, that is, the face ſeen in the water, is of the ſame feature and complexion with that which looks upon the water. Thus bodies and buildings anſwer one another, when they carry the ſame dimenſions; and thus money anſwers all things, becauſe it bears value with every thing.

Secondly, There is anſwering by words, which is twofold. Firſt, Contradictory. Secondly, Satisfactory. The former is that which the Apoſtle forbids ſervants to uſe (Tit. 2. 9.) Exhort ſervants to be obedient unto their own maſters, and to pleaſe them well in all things, not anſwering again. Servants cannot pleaſe their maſters unleſs they anſwer to what they are demanded; and they cannot pleaſe their maſters if they oppoſe what is duly commanded; this anſwering again is unſeemly in ſervants.

The latter kind of anſwering is that which the Apoſtle Peter charges upon all Chriſtians (1 Pet. 3. 15.) Be alwayes ready to give an anſwer to every man that asketh you a reaſon of the hope that is in you, with meekneſs and fear. To anſwer thus is every mans duty, both to God and man. To anſwer by contradicting the command of God, is rebellion. To anſwer by ſatisfying the demands of God, is a duty. To anſwer by a proportion to the power or wiſdom of God, is infinitely beyond mans ability. Job abhorred the firſt, he was ready (as well as he could) to perform the ſecond; and therefore Job is chiefly to be underſtood of the third; How much leſs ſhall I anſwer him? That is, I do not look upon my ſelf as a match for God; as if I had ſtrength proportionable to his ſtrength, or wiſdom ſuitable to his, as if I could thunder like him. I do not think that I am able to anſwer his reaſon by my reaſon; no, I am ſo far from an ability to anſwer him with reaſon, that I know not how to chuſe out words to reaſon with him; How much leſs ſhall I anſwer him? &c.

From the whole obſerve, before I come to particulars,

A godly mans thoughts are loweſt of himſelf.

Job had gone through the ſeveral ſeries of the Creatures; and finding them unable to contend with God, concludes himſelf more unable then they. Doubtleſs he might have anſwered God as well as any. If any are able to contend with God, godly men are, they have the greateſt ſtrength; ſuch of them eſpecially as Job, a man of that height and elevation of ſpirit in holineſs, of whom God hath given his word, That there was none like him in the earth. What creature (except an Angel) came ſo nigh the Creator as Job? and yet when he had looked over them all, he ſaith, How much leſs ſhall I? He thought any one might enter the liſts, and contend with the Lord better then he. Man (having reaſon) is more able then all the irrational creatures; and amongſt men, godly men; and among godly men, they who reach the higheſt degrees of godlineſs, are moſt able, and yet Job, a man ſet upon the top and pinacle of all perfection attainable in this life, ſaith, How much leſs ſhall I?

They of whom God hath the higheſt thoughts, have the meaneſt thoughts of, and put the loweſt rates upon themſelves.

No man ever received a fairer or more valuable Certicate from God then Job did, and yet no man could ſpeak more undervaluingly of himſelf then Job did.

Secondly obſerve, The more we know God, the more humble we are before him.

Job having much knowledge of God, quickly found out his own utter inſufficiency to deal with God; How much leſs ſhall I anſwer him? Not that he had leſs ability to anſwer God then others, but being more acquainted with God, and living nearer God then others, he ſaw his own inſufficiency more then others. The more communion we have with God, the more knowledge we have of God, the leſs and the lower we are in our own eyes. The reaſon why men are ſo full of pride, is, becauſe they are ſtrangers from God, they know nothing of him as they ought. And proportionably, as any one is further diſtant from, or more ignorant of God, the more doth pride prevail upon him, even as humility grows more humble in proportion to his nearer approaches. When Job was yet brought nearer to God, he was more humbled, chap. 42. 5, 6. I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye ſeeth thee; that is, I have a clearer and more glorious manifeſtation of thee to my ſoul then ever, I now perceive thy power, thy holineſs, thy wiſdom, thy faithfulneſs, thy goodneſs, as if they were corporeal objects, as if I ſaw them with mine eye; Wherefore I abhor my ſelf in duſt and aſhes: he could not go lower in his thoughts of himſelf then this expreſſion laid him. Abhorrence is a perturbation of the mind, ariſing from vehement diſlike, or extreameſt diſeſteem. Abhorrence, ſtrictly taken, is hatred wound up to the height. As exulting is the higheſt act of joy, and delighting the higheſt act of love, ſo abhorring is the deepeſt act of hatred; and to abhor, repenting in duſt and aſhes, is the deepeſt act of abhorrence. Thus low Job goes, not only to a diſlike, but to the furtheſt degree of it, abhorrence of himſelf, when he ſaw the Lord. So Iſaiah (in the ſixth of his Propheſie) when God came near him, and he ſaw ſo much of God, cries out, I am undone, for I am a man of polluted lips; but did not Iſaiah know he was a ſinful man, a man of polluted lips till then? Yes, but he was never ſo ſenſible of it, as then. He ſaw his own pollution more then ever by the light of the glory of God that ſhone round about him. He never ſaw himſelf ſo clearly, as when the Majeſty of God dazel'd his eyes. When the Sun ſhines bright into a room, we may ſee the leaſt mote in the air; ſo when the glory of God irradiates the ſoul, we ſee all the motes and atomes of ſin, the leaſt ſpot and unevenneſs of our hearts or lives; this brings the ſoul low, and will keep it ſo: The more we know of God, the more we honour him, and our ſelves the leß. Theſe two are eminent effects of knowing God. As God riſes in our thoughts, ſo we fall. Paul, who had been rapt up into the third heavens, and had a multitude of divine revelations, calls himſelf The leaſt of the Apoſtles (1 Cor. 15. 9.) and leß then the leaſt of all Saints (Eph. 3. 8.) Not that any thing can be leſs then the leaſt. The Apoſtles holy Rhetorick doth not croſs Ariſtotle's Philoſophy. But (the original being a double diminutive) his meaning is, he was as little as could be, therefore he puts himſelf down ſo little as could not be, leß then the leaſt. Job ſpeaks near him, How much leß ſhall I anſwer him?

The Queſtion imports an inability in him for reſolution. He thought himſelf ſo much leſs able to anſwer then they, that he could not tell how much leſs; and therefore leaves others to caſt it up, and take the account how ſhort he was of that buſineſs; he knew it was much, but how much it was, he knew not: How much leß ſhall I anſwer him?

And chooſe out my words to reaſon with him?

בחר Elegit. LXX. vertunt per ἐκλέγω & ἐπιλέγω. Exod. 17. 9. c. 18.25. Per αἱρέομαι (Job 34 4.) & προαιρέομαι, Deut. 7. 6. Hinc בחרי Juvenis ad militiam & negotia electus & idoneus. Loqui ſelectis verbis, ornata & compoſita oratione.

The word ſignifies choice upon exact trial; it is uſed in that ſence, Exod. 17. 9, Moſes biddeth Joſhua chooſe out men to go and fight with Amalek; he did not take them as they came to hand, or lay his hand violently upon them to preſs them, but he adviſedly took his choice; he had pickt men for that ſervice. David gathered all the Children of Iſrael; he had a ſelect company to fetch up the Ark (2 Sam. 6. 1.) And when he undertook the Duel with Goliah, the Text ſaith, he went to the brook, and choſe him out five ſmooth ſtones; they were choice ſtones, fitteſt for his ſling. As it is among perſons and things, ſo among words; there are choice words: Some are but rubbiſh, refuſe words; others are precious, wiſe, ſuitable words: How ſhould I chooſe out my words to reaſon with him? Shall I think by ſetting words in a curious frame, to prevail with God? or ſhall I by ſpeaking rhetorically and elegantly, overcome him? There is much power in Oratory, in choice of words, and therefore the holy Ghoſt forbids the Miniſters of the Goſpel to ſpeak with choice words, in that ſence, namely, with rhetorical and artificial ſtrained eloquence, which naturally pleaſeth the ear, and takes the heart; which kind of ſpeech is called wiſdom of words (1 Cor. 2. 17.) and the enticing words of mans wiſdom (chap. 2. 4.) They, having an aptneſs in them to entice or perſwade, are called enticing or perſwaſive words. And becauſe he would have little or nothing of the creature ſeen in winning ſouls, therefore the Apoſtle profeſſes he uſed not ſuch eloquence of words. Great Orators have carried whole Aſſemblies by the ears. And leſt it ſhould be thought that the Miniſters of the Goſpel convert men with Oratory, therefore they muſt not uſe ſuch choice words. It becomes them not, like Rhetoritians and Orators, to poliſh their ſtile with an affected curioſity and exactneſs of Language. But as affected language is ſinful, ſo neglect or rudeneſs of ſpeech is not without blame. We ſhould labour to ſpeak properly and weightily; ſo it becomes us to chooſe our words, and not to ſpeak till we have heard what our ſelves would ſay. And thus Job knew he ought to chooſe his words, when he ſpake to God; but he knew alſo he could not make any ſuch choice, either of rhetorical and perſwaſive words, or of logical and argumentative words, as might fit him to anſwer God, or reaſon with him. He was aſſured that neither the eloquence of his ſtile could perſwade him, nor the ſtrength of his arguments convince him; How ſhall I chooſe out words to reaſon with God?

In the Original, the word [reaſon] is not found; only thus, Shall I chooſe out words with him? To chooſe out words with another, bears this elegancy, as if Job had ſaid, If I ſhould ſet my ſelf to chuſe words with God, he would chuſe better words then I, more forcible words then I; he is more able infinitely to make choice of words and matter to convince me, then I to convince him: For the word which we tranſlate [words] may ſignifie not only words with which matter is cloathed, but the matter it ſelf cloathed with thoſe words. The ſum of all is, I can neither chooſe matter nor words to diſcourſe and argue with God, his invention and judgment about both, infinitely exceeds mine.

Mr. Broughton refers the word [chooſing] to Job, and not to words, thus; Shall I chooſe to word it with God? to plead and debate the buſineſs with God? Surely of all elections, I would not make that; I will not chooſe to make any words with God: ſilence and ſubmiſſion becomes me better. That's a good ſence.

But here a doubt may ariſe from a paſſage (chap. 13. 3.) Where Job ſpeaks thus, Surely I would ſpeak to the Almighty, and deſire to reaſon with God; how then doth he here ſay, Shall I chooſe out words to reaſon with God? As if he had ſaid, by no means, I will not do this thing; and yet there he ſeems very ambitious of the attempt, and confident of the ſucceſs; I deſire to reaſon with God.

I anſwer, There is a twofold reaſoning with God. There is a reaſoning of declaration, and a reaſoning of conteſtation. When Job ſaith, I deſire to reaſon with God, his meaning is only this, I deſire to declare and ſet forth my caſe and condition before him. We may reaſon with God by way of narrative; he allows us to tell him how it is with us.

Further, Job ſpeaks in chap. 13. comparatively, ſhewing how much he had rather declare his caſe to God, then to his friends: God was a better friend to unboſom himſelf to, then any of, or all his three friends; for he ſaith of them in the very next words, Ye are forgers of lies, ye are all Phyſitians of no value; to what purpoſe would it be for me longer to make known my caſe, and ſhew my grief to you? I had rather reaſon with God then man. But as for that other reaſoning by way of conteſtation and quarrelling with the providence and works of God, Job profeſſeth in this place, he had no mind to it; he would never chooſe that task, or ſet himſelf to chooſe out words for that end; it was too high for him. He ſaw it was neither wiſdom nor duty to deal with, and undertake God, either with an open, or a cloſed hand; either with Logical ſubtilties, or Rhetorical flouriſhes.

Again, Whereas Job ſaith, he would not reaſon with God; it will be queried, May we not reaſon with God at all? The Lord himſelf ſaith (Iſa. 1. 18.) Come, let us reaſon together. If the Lord calleth us to reaſon with him, may we not then reaſon with him? Is it not ſinful modeſty to refuſe what God offers? To clear that,

I anſwer, There are two wayes wherein we may not reaſon with God.

Firſt, We muſt not reaſon with him in our own ſtrength.

Secondly, We muſt not reaſon with him upon our own worth.

And that is the full meaning of Job, I would not chooſe to reaſon with God, that is, to reaſon with God in my own ſtrength, as if I had power to deal with him. Or ſecondly, I would not reaſon with God upon my own worth, as if there were any thing in me upon which I were able to make it out that God ought not to deal thus with me; and that's clear by the words which follow, Though I were righteous, yet would I not anſwer; that is, I would not at all ſpeak with God ſtanding upon this bottom, or under the title of my own worthineſs. In either of theſe wayes it is ſinful to reaſon with God: But we may reaſon with God in the way of declaration, before ſpoken of.

In prayer there is a reaſoning with God; and the reaſonings and pleadings that are in prayer, are the life and ſtrength of prayer. Prayer is not only a bare manifeſtation of our mind to God, by ſuch a ſuit or petition; but in prayer there is, or ought to be a holy arguing with God about the matter which we declare, which is a bringing out and urging of reaſons and motives, whereby the Lord may be moved to grant what we pray for. The prayers of the Saints recorded in Scripture, are full of arguments.

I ſhall ſhew it in one example, as a taſte for the reſt; Jacob cob in his diſtreſs at the approach of his brother Eſau, flees to God in prayer (Gen. 32.) And he doth more then ſpeak in prayer, he argues, yea, he wreſtles with God in prayer. The ſum of it is ſet down (v. 11.) Deliver me, I pray thee: To the undertaking of this deliverance, he urgeth the Lord by no fewer then ſeven arguments. Firſt, From Gods Covenant with his Anceſtors, O God of my Father Abraham, &c. As if he had ſaid, remember thoſe names with whom thou madeſt ſolemn Covenant of protection, both to them and their poſterity. The ſecond is from Gods particular command for this journey; Thou ſaideſt unto me, return: I departed not on my own head, but by thy direction; and therefore thou canſt not for thy honour, but free me from danger, ſeeing at thy word I am fallen into it. Thou O Lord, art even engaged to give me defence, while I yield thee obedience. Thirdly, He puts him in mind of his promiſes; Thou ſaideſt, I will deal well with thee; and that includes all other promiſes made unto him: theſe he makes as a Bulwark to defend him, or as his Anchor in the ſtorm. This Anchor muſt fail, and this Bulwark be broken down before the danger comes to me. If thy promiſe ſtand, I cannot fall. The fourth is the confeſſion of his own unworthineſs. Faith is alwayes humble, and while we are moſt confident in Gods word, we are moſt diſtruſtful of our own deſert; I am not worthy of the leaſt of thy mercies. Though I am thus bold to urge thy Covenant, yet I am as ready to acknowledge my own undeſert: Thou art a debtor by the promiſe thou haſt made to me, not by any performance of mine to thee. Fifthly, He ſeeks to continue the current of Gods favour, by ſhewing how plentifully it had already ſtreamed unto him, which he doth by way of Antitheſis, ſetting his former poverty in oppoſition to his preſent riches; With my ſtaff I paſſed this Jordan, and now I am become two bands; that is, thou haſt bleſſed me abundantly, and ſhall my Brothers malice blaſt all? Am I encreaſed only to make him abound? The ſixth Argument is, the greatneſs and eminence of his peril, v. 11. I fear leſt he will come and ſlay the mother upon the children; a proverbial ſpeech in the holy Language, like that of cutting off branch and root in one day, both denoting total exciſion, or an utter overthrow. Seventhly, He ſhuts up by reenforcing the mention of the promiſe, which he urgeth more ſtrongly then before; there it was only, Thou ſaidſt, I will deal well with thee; but here it is, Thou ſaidſt, in doing good, I will do thee good, that is, as it is rendred in our tranſlation, I will ſurely do thee good; and therefore let not my Brother do me evil. We ſee Jacob's praying was reaſoning with God, and himſelf in the iſſue got not only a new bleſſing, but a new name, Iſrael, a Prince with God, a prevailer both with God and men.

And thus we may reaſon with God in the ſtrength, and for the ſake of Chriſt in all our prayers. For as when God calls for our obedience, he uſually adds perſwaſion to his precept, and reaſons with us, as well as directs us; his commands are not alwayes barely authoritative, and the reſolves of his prerogative: ſo when we call upon God for audience, we ſhould add perſwaſions to our petitions, and reaſon with him, as well as intreat him. Only we ſhould be careful to reaſon from right Topicks and heads of argument, ſuch as theſe;

First, From the freeneſs of the Grace of God.

Secondly, From the firmneſs of his Promiſe.

Thirdly, From the greatneſs of our need, or of the Churches miſery.

Fourthly, From all the concernments of his own Glory, &c. Thus we may reaſon with God for the doing of any thing we ask according to his will; and in theſe reaſonings, the ſpirit, life and ſtrength of prayer conſiſts.

So then, the only thing which Job declineth as ſinful and unbecoming, is, to reaſon with God as a contender; he might humbly reaſon with him as a petitioner, or as a remembrancer; Put me in remembrance (ſaith the Lord, Iſa. 43. 26.) Let us plead together; declare thou that thou maiſt be juſtified. We may declare our cauſe, and we need not fear to declare our ſins, that God may juſtifie us; but we muſt not preſume to declare our righteouſneſs, that we may juſtifie our ſelves; this Job diſclaims.

How much leſs ſhall I anſwer him, and choſe out words to reaſon with him?

Towards the further clearing of theſe words, we may take notice that Job puts himſelf under a double relation. In the former part of the verſe he puts himſelf in the Reſpondents place; How much leſs ſhall I anſwer him? And in the latter part of the verſe he puts himſelf in the Opponents place; And chooſe out words to reaſon with him? His meaning is, If the Lord will object againſt me, I am not the man who dares, or is able to anſwer him. And if I ſhould take upon me to object againſt the Lord, the Lord may, and can eaſily anſwer me. From which notion of the words, two points may be obſerved.

Firſt, No man can anſwer what God hath to object againſt him.

The Lord hath a thouſand arguments which we are not able to give him ſatisfaction in (as was touched in the beginning of this Chapter, verſ. 3.) We cannot anſwer him one of a thouſand. If God ſhould caſt a man to hell, what hath he to ſay for himſelf, as from himſelf, when God objects, Thou haſt ſinned. If God afflict a man, and lay him low, giving him this argument for what he doth, I am thy Creator, I formed and made thee; if I break thee to pieces, what canſt thou ſay againſt me? If the Lord ſhould ſay, I am thy Sovereign, I have ſupream power over thee, may I not do with thee what I will? what hath man to anſwer? Man muſt be ſilent, and lay his hand upon his mouth; he hath not a word of reaſon or holineſs to reaſon againſt God in any of his diſpenſations.

Let man (on the other ſide) gather as many arguments as he can to object againſt God, he is able to wipe them all off preſently, to blow them away with a breath. All the ſhifts and apologies, the excuſes and arguings which any make for their ſins, or which they make for themſelves againſt the juſtice and wiſdom of God, are anſwered with a word; ſo that, put man in the Opponents, or in the Reſpondents place, he can make no work of it.

Secondly, Obſerve from this phraſe, Shall I chooſe out words to reaſon with him?

God is not taken with words.

Fine phraſes and eloquent ſpeeches will not carry it with him; If we would prevail with God, we muſt ſpeak our hearts to him rather then our words: yet we ought to chooſe out words (as was touched before) when we ſpeak to God. As we muſt take heed how we hear, while he ſpeaks; ſo we have need to take heed what we ſpeak in his hearing. That's Solomon's advice, Eccleſ. 5. 2. Be not raſh with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be haſty to utter any thing before God. That is, ſpeak not vainly and unadviſedly, thy tongue running before thy wit. Let wiſdom guide thy tongue, and let thy heart ſhew thee wiſdom; Let not thy heart be haſty to utter, when its office is to conceive, not to utter. But how ean the heart be haſty to utter? Utterance is the buſineſs of the tongue. The heart is then haſty to utter, when it ſuffers the tongue to utter what it ſelf hath not throughly concocted by meditation, and made its own. As in the body, ſo in the mind, the third concoction is that which nouriſhes and aſſimilates. So then Solomon s meaning is, Let not raw, unboiled, undigeſted thoughts paſs out into diſcourſes, or be ſtampt into words before the Lord. As there is a ſin of curioſity, ſo there may be a ſin of neglect. Extreams are equally dangerous. The diſtance that is between God and us, proclaims this duty of our moſt reverent addreſſes to him. He is in heaven, and thou upon earth, therefore let thy words be few; and yet the fewneſs of words pleaſes God no more then the multitude of them doth. We ſay, In many words there can hardly be a ſcarcity of errors; and in a few words there may be not a few errors, poſſibly more errors then words. Fewneſs, ſimply taken, is not the grace of words: But becauſe they who ſpeak but little, do uſuall think the more, and ſo their words are ſteep'd long in their hearts, therefore few words are uſually choice words. It is a ſin, if we are well conceited of our words; and it is a ſin, if our words be not our beſt conceptions. How ſhall I chooſe out words to reaſon with him?

Verſe 15. Whom, though I were righteous, yet would I not anſwer; but I would make ſupplication to my Judge.

אם־צדקתי

This brings the matter to the height; Who, I reaſon and plead with God? I anſwer him? No, Though I were righteous, yet would I not anſwer him. The ſtrength of the argument lies thus; as if Job had ſaid, I am ſo far from entring a conteſt with God, that I profeſs I would not do it, though I had the greateſt advantage and fitneſs to do it of any man in the world; though I were righteous, I would not do it. I do not ſay, that the reaſon why I would not plead with God, is becauſe I am wicked, ſinful and abominable, more guilty and unrighteous then my neighbours, or then you, my friends; but how righteous ſoever I were, I would not do it. Job ſpeaks as a man who would ſhew how much he dreads the power and ſtrength of another; What, I fight with ſuch a man? I contend with ſuch a man? No, I profeſs I would not fight with him, though I were as well weapon'd, arm'd and prepar'd as any man in the world, I would not come near him. If there be any armour or weapon, any furniture or preparations which may enable man to contend with God, it is the armour of righteouſneſs, and the furnitures of Grace. Now, ſaith Job, though I had that armour, though I were righteous, I would not contend with him. The Apoſtle argues much after this rate, 1 Cor. 13. about that great point of Goſpel-charity; where he telleth us, that all things are as nothing without charity; and he inſtanceth in thoſe things which ſtand higheſt in the thoughts of man, to commend him to the acceptation both of God and man, verſ. 2, 3. Though I have the gift of propheſie, and underſtand all myſteries and all knowledge, and though I have all faith, ſo that I could remove mountains; and though I ſhould give my body to be burned, and have not Love, what would it advantage me? Though I ſhould give all my goods to the poor, and have not Love, &c. It is poſſible for a man to give abundance to the poor, and yet have a dearth of love, both to them and to God, in his heart; all the love that moveth him, may be love to himſelf: therefore (ſaith he) Though I give my goods to the poor, it profits me nothing; he puts all theſe ſuppoſitions, which are the greateſt advantages for heaven (except Chriſt) imaginable, and yet concludes all but as ſounding braſs or a tinckling Cymbal, nothing but noiſe without Charity. So here, to ſhew how impoſſible a thing it is for creatures, in their own ſtrength, to contend with God, he puts a ſuppoſition upon that which is moſt probable to carry us thorow it, Righteouſneſs; Though I were righteous, I were not able to anſwer him, no not I.

Though I were righteous.

It is, as if Job had further expreſt himſelf to this ſence; I am ſo far from juſtifying my ſelf in all my complainings (which was the thing his friends taxed him with) as if God could find nothing amiſs in what I have ſpoken, that I freely confeſs there is not the moſt conſiderate, righteous or holy action that ever I did in my life, which I durſt bring to the touchſtone, to the balance, to juſtifie my ſelf before God by; no, but inſtead of that, I would fall down and abaſe my ſelf, as knowing that I am before him whoſe eyes (being ten thouſand times brighter then the Sun) are able to ſee unrighteouſneſs, where I ſee nothing but righteouſneſs: Do not think I am juſtifying my ſelf as a righteous man, in what I have ſpoken or done; for though I were righteous, yet I would not (upon that ground) go about to plead my cauſe, or ſtand it out with God. Or thus, I know I am unrighteous and unclean, but if I were righteous, I would not anſwer him.

Here a Queſtion or two muſt be reſolved: As,

Firſt, Was not Job righteous? He puts the Queſtion, Whom, though I were righteous: Was Job an unrighteous man? Doth not he himſelf ſay (chap. 29. 14.) I put on righteouſneſs, and it cloathed me. Why then doth he here only make a ſuppoſition of it? Whom, though I were righteous; when-as there he makes it a poſition, that he was cloathed with righteouſneſs.

I anſwer (to clear this Scripture) Man is righteous in a double oppoſition: Righteous, Firſt, In oppoſition to the wicked; and theſe may be taken in three ranks; either, Firſt, The abominable and prophane: Or ſecondly, Hypocrites and unſincere: Or thirdly, Oppreſſors, and ſuch as are unjuſt in their dealings toward men. As righteous is oppoſed to wicked in theſe three, Prophane, Hypocrites or Oppreſſors, ſo Job was a righteous man. Job was not prophane, he feared God; Job was not an hypocrite, he was perfect and upright; Job was not an oppreſſor, the loins of the poor bleſſed him. And that's the peculiar ſence of chap. 29. I put on righteouſneſs, that is, righteouſneſs in all my dealings with men.

Secondly, Righteous is oppoſed to imperfect, or that which hath any failing or want in it. And in this ſence Job was not righteous; and that's his meaning here; Though I were righteous, that is, though I had the uttermoſt perfections which a creature is capable of, yet I would not ſtand upon them, and plead it out with God. The teſtimony which the Lord gave concerning Job (chap. 1. 1.) is in words of an inferiour ſence; this in the text is above them both. The Lord there certifies, that Job was perfect and upright. But though he was perfect and upright, yet he was not righteous. He was perfect in oppoſition to inſincerity, and he was upright in oppoſition to injuſtice; but he was not righteous in oppoſition to imperfection, If I were righteous; as I know I am not.

Further, Righteouſneſs is twofold. There is a righteouſneſs of the perſon, and a righteouſneſs of the cauſe, Though I were righteous: Job doth not forſake the righteouſneſs of his cauſe, he only diſclaimeth the righteouſneſs of his perſon. I acknowledge I am not righteous in my ſelf, and I will not yield that my afflictions and ſufferings argue me unrighteous.

Juſtus in judicio opponitnr improbo reo, qui cauſa cadit. Druſ.

Here another queſtion ariſes, if we take Job's ſuppoſition of a man righteous, it will be demanded, May not a righteous perſon anſwer God?

I anſwer, There is no created righteouſneſs can anſwer God. God chargeth his Angels with folly; he ſaw evil in them, compared to himſelf. A righteous Angel cannot ſtand it out with God, much leſs the moſt righteous man. God indeed would have accepted man in the righteouſneſs of works, had he continued in innocency; and yet he might have ſeen folly in man abiding in innocency, as he doth in thoſe Angels which continue innocent. No created righteouſneſs can anſwer God.

But there is a righteouſneſs in which we may anſwer God; Job's ſuppoſition excludes not that; namely, the righteouſneſs of faith which we have by Chriſt. Man righteous by faith, or by imputed righteouſneſs, may anſwer God; but man righteous by works, or inherent righteouſneſs, cannot. He that is righteous by the righteouſneſs of faith, hath to anſwer God, becauſe hath ſomewhat of God to anſwer God with; Faith doth not bring man to anſwer God, but God to anſwer God; Chriſt anſwers God for every Believer: and Chriſt can anſwer God fully to all the demands of juſtice, without abatement. Chriſt hath not compounded with our Creditor for our debts, but paid them to the utmoſt farthing. A believer is able to anſwer God, and doth anſwer him every day; when he asks the pardon of ſin, he offers the righteouſneſs of Jeſus Chriſt. And that which he offereth by faith, he will ſtand to, and plead with God upon; God hath what he can deſire, or his Juſtice expect; the believer bids him try to the uttermoſt, if there be any imperfection or flaw in it, he will venture his ſoul upon it. In this ſence man anſwers God. But Job ſpeaks about inherent perſonal righteouſneſs, the righteouſneſs of his wayes. Upon this he will not venture a hair of his head, much leſs his ſoul and everlaſting peace.

Cum hic juſtitiam ſibi tribuit, non de ea agit quæ ad legis normam poſſit ſubſiſtere: Solum enim Dei tribunal ſeveriſſimum Chriſti juſtitia non reformidat, ſed agit de de juſtitia inchoata, quæ quantumvis Deo grata ſit, non tamen ad amuſſim reſpondet perfectioni illæ quam lex requirit. Merl.

Though I were righteous, I would not anſwer him.

There is ſomewhat further conſiderable, for as [righteous] is a judiciary word, ſo likewiſe is [anſwer.] And it implies, that Job would not only not anſwer God objecting or reaſoning, but that he would not anſwer him accuſing or charging him, judging or ſentencing him. I muſt acknowledge my ſelf to be what God judgeth me to be, and that I am worthy to ſuffer what he judges me to ſuffer.

Reſpondere, verbum eſt forenſe, &c. Sanct.

Si ille me arguet, aut in me ſententiā feret, etſi cauſa mea juſta ſit, non audebo illi reſpondere aliquid objicienti, aut in me pronuncianti; me enim rationibus obruet, & ſua opprimet Majeſtate. Merc.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, Job having ſhewed the weakneſs and ignorance of the creature in his former diſcourſe, here you ſee whither it tended; namely, to prove man to be ſinful and unrighteous. This teaches us,

That, All the failings, infirmities and weakneſſes which are in man, are the iſſues and effects of the ſin of man.

Man

Ex effectis cauſam declarat, unde enim tanta in mentibus hominum caligo & inſcitia, unde tanta infirmitas corporum & animorum, niſi ex peccato? Merl.

Man is an unrighteous creature, therefore a weak creature. Job argues from the effect to the cauſe, from the fruit to the root: man hath infirmities upon him, therefore he hath ſin in him. Where there is no ſin, there is ſtrength; and where there is no ſin, there is knowledge. Perfect holineſs ſcatters all the clouds of darkneſs and ignorance.

Secondly, Though I were righteous, I would not anſwer him; then it follows,

Unrighteous men cannot anſwer God.

If a righteous man cannot, can an unrighteous? No marvel if David ſaith in Pſal. 1. The wicked ſhall not ſtand in judgement, for (in a ſence) the righteous cannot ſtand in judgement, that is, they cannot plead their own righteouſneſs before God. Wicked men have nothing to help them, no help without, and none within, they have nothing but ſin in them, and they have no Saviour without them. Hence the Apoſtle Peter argues (1 Pet. 4. 18.) If the righteous ſcarcely be ſaved, where ſhall the ungodly and ſinners appear? If Abel be not able to anſwer God, how ſhall Cain? If David cannot, how ſhall Saul? They who have not the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, have nothing but unrighteouſneſs of their own. Obſerve, Thirdly, The vaſt difference that is between the ſpirit and temper of a godly man, and of a wicked man.

O the humility of Job's ſpirit! Job will not juſtifie his own righteouſneſs, or juſtifie himſelf in his righteouſneſs. A wicked man will juſtifie his ſin, or juſtifie himſelf in his ſin. A Saul will juſtifie his diſobedience, but a Job will not juſtifie his obedience. Job will not take upon him to be a righteous man; though God had told him he was perfect and upright. A wicked man will take upon him to be righteous, though God tell him to his face a thouſand times, that he is vile and filthy. How do wicked men ſeek for pleas and covers to make themſelves appear righteous! How do they gild the baſe metal of their hearts, and paint over thoſe rotten poſts to make them appear beautiful! Chriſt tells the Phariſees that they were like filthy ſepulchres, full of dead mens bones, yet they would be painted over with the notion of a righteous generation. Job who had much righteouſneſs and faithfulneſs in him, would not own them, and modeſtly bluſhes at the praiſe of God, Though I were righteous, yet I would not anſwer. Obſerve, Fourthly, The righteouſneſs of man is not pleadable before the righteous God.

Though I were righteous, yet I would not anſwer him. The Apoſtle (1 Cor. 4. 4.) gives a parallel teſtimony, Though I know nothing by my ſelf, yet am I not hereby juſtified. Paul knew nothing by himſelf, that is, he had not any guilt upon him that he knew of; he did not allow himſelf in any ſin, but kept his conſcience void of offence, both toward God and toward man; yet (though it was thus with him) he diſclaims all opinion of himſelf, I am not hereby juſtified, this is not the plea I have to make before God; he is able to find out failings where I find none, he knows better then I, what I am. Obſerve, Fifthly, A godly man looks upon his own righteouſneſs as no righteouſneſs.

Whom though I were righteous, I would not anſwer. His ſuppoſition hath a negation in it, I am not righteous. Job did not deny the work of the Spirit, or the grace of God in him; but he would not own them in his pleadings with God. He could ſtand upon his terms with men, and let them know who he was, and what he had done (and it was reaſon he ſhould) but before God he had nothing to mention but Chriſt: In reference to the higher degree of grace, for ſanctification we muſt forget all that is behind, and preſs on to that which is before: And in reference to the whole grace of juſtification, we muſt forget all our ſanctification. The leſs we remember our own righteouſneſs, the more righteous we are in Chriſt. As we abate in our ſelves, we encreaſe in him. Chriſt draws the picture of an hypocrite to the life (Luk. 18.) in that Parable of a Phariſee and a Publican, going up to the Temple to pray; and the deſign of Chriſt in that Parable, is held forth at verſ. 9. to be the conviction of ſuch as truſted in themſelves that they were righteous, and deſpiſed others. Now what did this Phariſee? He thanks God he was not as other men, extortioners, unjuſt, adulterers, or as that Publican; and then he minds God that he gave tithes, and kept faſts twice a week; and ſo makes a goodly report of himſelf, both in the negative and in the affirmative, what he was, and what he was not. Never did any good man tell God ſuch a ſtory of his own life, as the Phariſee told. The Saints love to do well, more then to hear well from others, much more then to hear well from themſelves; they love to do good, more then to receive good, much more, then to ſpeak good of themſelves. When Chriſt is repreſented ſitting in judgment (Matth. 25. 35.) he tells the faithful of all their good deeds, or acts of charity, I was an hungred, and ye gave me meat; I was thirſty, and ye gave me drink; I was a ſtranger, and ye took me in; naked, and ye cloathed me, &c. Hear how the Saints anſwer, as if they had done no ſuch thing; When was this Lord? When ſaw we thee hungry, and fed thee, &c. We have forgot the time. They did ſo little mind the good they had done, that they remembred not they ever did it. The Lord keeps a faithful record of what his people do, but themſelves do not. It is our duty to remember to do good, but let God alone to remember the good we have done. The Lord is not unrighteous to forget our labour of love (Heb. 6. 10.) but we loſe our righteouſneſs, unleſs we forget it. If we much remember what we do, God will remember it but little: The ſervants of God know well enough when they do good (to do good ignorantly, is a degree of doing evil.) They know when they do good, and they know what good they do; but when 'tis done, 'tis to them as unknown.

Hezekiah (Iſa. 38. 3.) put God in mind of his good deeds, Lord (ſaith he) remember how I walked before thee with an upright heart, &c. Hezekiah deſired the Lord to remember his uprightneſs. So Nehemiah in divers paſſages of that book (Chap. 13. 14, 22, 29, 31.) puts the Lord in remembrance of his righteouſneſs. But it is one thing to put the Lord in remembrance of what we have done hiſtorically; and another thing to plead what we have done legally. It's one thing to ſhew to the Lord the work of his own grace in us; and another thing to mind the Lord of our works to obtain his grace. Hezekiah would have God to take notice of what he was, to pity him in his ſickneſs, Lord, I am thus, remember the work of thy hands, as I am thy creature; remember the work of thy Spirit, as I am a new creature, as I am thy ſervant. And Nehemiah puts all upon the ſcore of mercy: He did not ſay, Lord, remember me for what I have done, anſwer me according to what I have done, but, Remember me, O my God, concerning this, and ſpare me according to the greatneſs of thy mercy (Chap. 13. 22.) If Saints at any time remember God of their works, it is not to ground an argument of merit upon their works, but to ſhew God the workings of his grace and ſpirit.

Though I were righteous, I would not anſwer him; What then? What will Job do? What courſe will he take for himſelf, if he will not anſwer the Lord? What? This courſe he takes, and it is the beſt.

I would make ſupplication to my Judge.

τοῦ κρίματος αὐτοῦ δεηθήσομαι. Sept.

The Septuagint render it thus, I would deprecate his judgment; that is, I would ſue for mercy. As if he had ſaid, I am not without hope, becauſe I have none in my ſelf: I am not loſt, becauſe I am loſt to my ſelf: I have a ſure way yet left, I will make ſupplication to my Judge; or as Maſter Broughton reads it, I would crave pity of my Judge: As if he had ſaid, Though juſtice caſt me, yet mercy will relieve me. Mercy will help me as well, and honour God more.

למשפטי Ad facientem judicium me. Mont. Eum qui me judicare facit. Pagn.

The word notes humbleſt ſubmiſſion, as when a man begs for his life. Jacob (Hoſ. 12. 4.) wept and made ſupplication. The brethren of Joſeph (Gen. 42. 21.) were exceedingly afflicted at the remembrance of their hard uſage toward him their brother, when they ſold him to the Egyptians, We would not hearken when he beſought us; it is this word, Think with how much ſubmiſſion Joſeph being ready to be ſold unto ſtrangers, ſupplicated his brethren for pity; Or how a man will lie begging at an enemies feet, who is ready to kill him. With ſuch ſubmiſſive language Job reſolved to crave pardon and pity at the hands of God.

Thus he obeyes the counſel of Bildad in Chap. 8. If thou ſeek unto God, and make thy ſupplication unto him betimes. Job ſeems to anſwer, Your counſel is good, friend Bildad, Though I were righteous, I would not anſwer him; but (according to your advice) I would make ſupplication to my Judge. The prayers of the Church in greateſt ſtraights and and diſtreſſes, are uſually expreſſed by this word [Supplications.] All petitionary Prayer is ſupplication; but becauſe we are much abaſed, and laid very low at ſuch times, therefore prayer then put up, is ſpecially called ſupplication. Hence Solomon at the dedication of the Temple, putting caſes and ſuppoſitions of many afflictions incident to that people, ſtill concludes, At what time they ſhall confeſs their ſins, and pray, and make ſupplication, then, &c. (1 King. 8.) And (Eſth. 4. 8.) Mordecai ſends to Eſther, charging her to go in to the King, What to do? To make ſupplication unto him. The lives of the Jews being given away to ſatiſfie the malice of Haman, it was time for her to ſupplicate in the lowlieſt poſture. Thus Job had it in the thoughts of his heart to make ſupplication to his Judge; as if he had ſaid, If I were to ſtand at the tribunal of an earthly Judge, I would not ſupplicate, but plead; I would not petition his favour, but ſtand upon my right; I would not crave his pity, but expect his juſtice; I would bring forth my reaſons and arguments, my proofs and witneſſes, this courſe would I run with an earthly Judge: but my cauſe being with God, I will only put a petition into the Court, and ſubmit unto him, let him do with me what he pleaſeth. Hence we may obſerve,

First, That there is no weapon can prevail with God, but only prayer and ſupplication.

Job's thoughts had travel'd thorow all the creatures, and found not one of them could ſtand before God; therefore he reſolves to fall down before him: I will make ſupplication. Prayer overcometh when nothing elſe can. Chriſt conquered by dying, and we conquer by ſubmitting. And yet it is not ſupplication as an act of ours, but ſupplication as it is an ordinance of Gods that prevails with him: he looks upon prayer as having the ſtamp of his own inſtitution; otherwiſe our greateſt humblings could prevail no more then our proudeſt contendings. The Word preached prevails upon the heart, not as it is the act of a man, who diſpenſeth it (there is no ſtrength in that) but as it is an ordinance of God, who hath appointed it: So humble ſupplication obtains much with God, becauſe he hath ſaid it ſhall.

Etſi opus virtutis exercuero ad vitam, non ex meritis, ſed ad veniam convaleſco. Prece itaq; innitendū eſt cū recta agimus, ut omne quod juſtè vivimus, humilitate condiamus. Greg.

Secondly, To make ſupplication is to crave pitty.

As prayer prevails, ſo no plea in prayer can prevail, unleſs we plead pity, pity, mercy, mercy; a ſuppliant looks for all good at the hand of Free grace. We at any time have ſin enough to procure us evil (Jer. 4. 18.) Thy ſins have procured theſe things unto thee; But we never have goodneſs enough to procure us any mercy. Mercy comes for mercy's ſake.

Thirdly, In that he ſaith, I would make ſupplication to my Judge. Obſerve,

God is the Judge of all our actions and intentions.

Job was in a great conteſt with men, but (ſaith he) men are not my Judges, God is my Judge, It is a comfort to the Saints to remember that God is their Judge. Job was not afraid of God in that relation: no, it was a rich conſolation to think that God was his Judge. He is a righteous Judge, a merciful Judge, a pitiful Judge; we need not be afraid to ſpeak to him under that notion. Job ſaith not, I will make ſupplications to my father (which is a ſweet relation) but (which is moſt dreadful to wicked men) he conſiders God as a Judge: The Saints are enabled by faith to look upon God as a Judge, with aſſurances of mercy.

Laſtly obſerve, The whole world ſtands guilty before God.

Rom. 3. 19. Every mouth muſt be ſtopped: Job will only make ſupplication, he had nothing elſe to do or ſay. We do not preſent our ſupplications unto thee for our righteouſneſs, but for thy great mercy (Dan. 9. 8.) We can get nothing from God by opening our mouths in any other ſtile, or upon any other title then this, of an humble acknowledgment of our unworthineſs: the lower we go in our own thoughts, the higher we are in the thoughts of God; and we find the more acceptance with him, by how much the leſs acceptance we think we deſerve. Nothing is gained from God, either by diſputing or by boaſting. All our victory is humility.

VERS. 16, 17, 18.

If I had called, and he had anſwered me, yet would I not believe that he had hearkned unto my voice.

For he breaketh me with a tempeſt, and multiplieth my wounds without cauſe.

He will not ſuffer me to take my breath, but filleth me with bitterneſs.

THis holy man having abaſed himſelf in the ſenſe of his own inability and unrighteouſneſs before the Lord, and diſclaimed the leaſt intendment of contending or diſputing with him (as was ſeen in the former context) now confirms it by a further ſuppoſition, in verſ. 16, 17, 18. and ſo forward. As if he had ſaid, Ye ſhall find I am ſo far from wording it with God, or ſtanding upon mine own juſtification with him (though I have pleaded mine integrity before you my friends) that I here make this hypotheſis or ſuppoſition, If I had called, and he had anſwered, yet would I not believe that he had hearkned unto my voice.

There is much variety in making out the ſence of theſe words. The Septuagint read it negatively, If I had called, and he had not anſwered me, I would not believe, &c. Moſt of the Hebrew writers fall very foul upon Job, and tax him harſhly for this ſpeech. What? Would he not believe that God hearkned unto him, when he had anſwered him? Is not this unbelief a plain denial of providence, or at leaſt of ſpecial providence? I would not believe that he had hearkned unto my voice, is (in their ſence) as if he had ſaid, I think God takes no care, or makes no account of particulars, he looks not after this or that man, what he ſpeaks, or for what he prayes. I can ſcarce believe that my condition is under the care of God, or that he will take notice of me; if I ſhould call upon him, or if I plead before him, what ſhall I get by it? Do ye think he will deſcend to the relief of ſuch a one as I am? Why then do ye move me to call upon him? &c. If I ſhould pray, and if he ſhould anſwer me, I can hardly be perſwaded that he will pity me, and do me good.

A ſecond opinion caſts him into the deeps of deſpair; as if Job had altogether laid aſide hope of receiving any favour by calling upon God, or of comfort, by putting his caſe to him.

But all theſe aſperſions are unworthily caſt upon Job, a man full of humility and ſubmiſſion to the will of God: his frequent prayers and applications of himſelf to God do abundantly confute all ſuch unſavoury conjectures. But the Jewiſh Commentators carry on their former ſtrain, being all along very rigid towards this holy man, very apt to put the worſt conſtructions upon doubtful paſſages, and ſometimes ill ones upon thoſe which are plainly good.

More diſtinctly.

There is a difficulty about the Grammatical meaning of one word in the Text, which carries the ſence two wayes.

If I had called, and he had anſwered me.

The Hebrew word, which we tranſlate [Call] ſignifies ſometimes to pray, and ſometimes to plead or challenge: An act of invocation, or an act of provocation: it is rendred both wayes here. By moſt, as we, If I had called upon him; that is, If I had prayed or made my ſute unto him. By ſome, If I had ſent in my plea (as to begin a ſuit of Law with him) or my challenge, as to enter the combate with him, &c.

קרא Alii invocare, alii provocare vertunt.

As it is taken for a challenge, ſo the ſence lies thus, If I ſhould ſtand upon terms with God, and call him to an account to make good what he hath done; And he had anſwered me; that is, if he had condeſcended to give me an account of his wayes; yet I would not believe that he had hearkned unto my voice, that is, that he had yielded to me, or acknowledged that he had done me wrong. Shall I, who am but duſt and aſhes, prevail in my ſuit, and get the day by pleading and contending with the great God of Heaven and Earth?

Take the word as it ſignifies invocation, or calling by way of petition (Pſal. 50.15.) Call upon me in the day of trouble, and I will deliver thee. And ſo two or three interpretations are offered.

Tam infirma eſt caro, ut etiam propoſitis divinis promiſſionibus nolit credere. Iſidor.Clar.

First, Some in favour of Job conceive that he ſpeaks this only through the infirmity of his fleſh, that it was ſin within him that ſpake, and not Job; according to that of the Apoſtle, Rom. 7. Not I, but ſin that dwelleth in me: So Job ſpeaks, as if he did not believe that God would hear him when he prayed; but whoſe voice was this? Not Job's, but his ſins; the corruption, the infirmity of Job gave out ſuch language, not he. As we may ſay in reference to an action, I did it not, but ſin that dwelleth in me, ſo to a word, I ſpake it not, but ſin and corruption that dwelleth in me, gave out ſuch language.

Pleriq; Latini ad eas conditiones referunt quas oratio efficax requirit; quarum defectu non exaudimur, atq; ea ratione ſibi timere Jobũ

Secondly, I would not believe that God had hearkned to me, though he had anſwered me; may refer to the manner of his prayer or invocation, as not coming up to the height and meaſure of the duty, as not fulfilling that Law of prayer which the Lord requireth; and ſo, becauſe his prayers were imperfect and weak, therefore he would not believe that ever God had taken notice of him, or hearkned to his voice: As if he had ſaid, You bid me make my ſupplication; if I do, yet I will not believe that God takes notice of my prayers. Why? becauſe mine are but cold and unbelieving prayers, weak and diſtracted prayers, the prayers of a diſtemper'd heart, the prayers of a confuſed ſpirit, ſuch I confeſs mine are; therefore I cannot believe God will hearken to my voice.

Videtur hoc eſſe animi mirabiliter demiſſi, atq; ſibi ſuæq; orationi diffidentis, fidentis vero de ſola divina bonitate. Pined.

But rather in the laſt place, take the ſence thus, that Job in theſe words, breaths out the humility of his ſpirit; as if he had ſaid, I am ſo far from ſtanding upon my terms with God (as was ſhewed before) as if I had hopes to carry it with him by contending, that though I come in the humbleſt manner to invocate and call upon his Name, and I find him ſo gracious and merciful to me, as that he doth anſwer me in my requeſts, and grant the thing I deſire; yet I will not believe that he hath hearkned to my voice, that is, that he hath done this for any worthineſs in me, in my ſervices, or prayers, I will not believe that the anſwer I receive from heaven is obtained by any value which my perſon hath with God.

Non ex diffidentia hoc dicit, ſed ex timore, Dei reveritus judicium. Druſ.

Such is the coldneſs and deadneſs, the languiſhment and unbelief of my heart in prayer, ſuch are my prayers, that the truth is, I cannot believe I am heard, when I am heard, I cannot think my petition granted, when I ſee it is granted. Thus it ſets forth the exceeding humility and lowlineſs of his ſpirit, he would give all the glory unto God in granting his petitions, and take nothing at all to himſelf in making thoſe petitions, I would not believe that he hath hearkned to my voice.

What voice was it then that he believ'd God hearkned unto? He hearkned to the voice of the Mediator, to the voice of Chriſt: He hearkned to the voice of his own free grace: He hearkned to the ſounding of his own bowels. He hearkned to the motions and interceſſions of his Spirit in me; to the motions and interceſſions of his Son for me. It is not my voice that hath got the anſwer; he alone that hath granted it of his good pleaſure in Chriſt.

I would not believe that he had hearkned to my voice.

אמן Credere, ſtabile eſſe.

The word ſignifies both believing and eſtabliſhing, or to believe and eſtabliſh; and the reaſon of it is, becauſe faith ſettles the heart, Faith is the eſtabliſhment of the ſoul. An unbeliever hath no bottom, he is built without a foundation, his ſpirit is unfixed.

And that act of believing [I would not believe] is the general act of Faith, namely, a firm aſſent to the truth of what another ſpeaketh. An aſſent to the truth of it two wayes. To the truth of it, Firſt, Hiſtorically, that ſuch a thing was ſpoken or for done; and then Logically, that the thing is true which is ſpoken. When he ſaith, I would not believe that God hath done this, his meaning is, I would not aſſent to it, as done for my ſake, or for my voice; not that he would not believe the thing was done at all. He aſſented to the word and anſwers of God, when he did receive it; but in that reſtriction, he would not believe it, namely, in reference to himſelf, that he hath hearkned to his voice.

To hearken] Is more then to hear; it notes the inclination of the mind rather then the attention of the ear. As to ſtop the ear notes the ſhutting of the heart againſt obedience, rather then of the ear againſt audience. To tell a tale to a deaf man, is to ſpeak to one hears, but will not grant.

From all it appears,

Firſt, That, Job ſpeaks very highly of the goodneſs of God, namely, that God anſwers prayer, though he hath not reſpect to the voice of him that prayeth; Though he had anſwered me, yet would I not believe that he had hearkned to my voice.

Secondly, That, he ſpeaks exceeding humbly and ſubmiſſively of himſelf, my voice; what am I, a poor creature, that I ſhould think I had carried the matter with God?

Thirdly, That, he ſpeaks very wiſely and underſtandingly concerning the nature and efficacy of prayer, and the means procuring anſwers of prayer. When man prayes, God anſwers; but he doth not anſwer becauſe man prayes.

Providentia Dei ſæpe nobis benevola eſt, cũ nulla benevolentiæ externa præbet argumenta, imo aliquãdo quem exaudet turbine conterit malorum.

Fourthly, That, he ſpeaks very highly and glorioully of the providence of God, though providence act darkly towards man. We pray, God anſwers, and doth us good, yet things may go quite contrary in appearance, If I had called, and he had anſwered me, yet would I not believe that he had hearkned unto my voice; Why? He breaketh me with a tempeſt. God was breaking him, and hearing him at the ſame time. God may be doing us good, when the ſigns he gives ſpeak evil; he hears and anſwers us praying to him, when we think we hear him thundring terribly againſt us. Hence we learn,

First, That, Prayer is calling upon God.

Then the heart ſhould be very attentive upon God in prayer. How can we expect God ſhould hear us, when we do not hear our ſelves! In prayer we call upon God, therefore we ſhould call upon our ſelves to conſider how and what we pray.

Secondly note, Prayer granted, is prayer anſwered.

If I had called, he had anſwered me. The Lord from heaven ſpeaks to us in every act of his providence; his ſpeaking to us, is in doing for us. The works of God are anſwers to man. God doth not anſwer audibly or ſenſibly; there is a voice in his diſpenſations. As men, (Prov. 6.13.) So the Lord ſpeaks to us with his feet, and anſwers our prayers with his fingers, that is, his works and wayes are demonſtrations of his will in anſwer to our prayers.

Thirdly, In that Job tells us, He would not believe, &c. we are taught,

That faith is a neceſſary ingredient in prayer.

This negation of his faith in prayer, implies the need of faith in prayer. When I pray I ſhould believe, but as my caſe ſtands I cannot believe, clouds and darkneſs are upon me. Faith is the ſtrength of prayer, Whatſoever you ask in prayer believing, you ſhall receive, Matth. 21.22. Prayer without faith, is like a Gun diſcharged without a bullet, which makes a noiſe, but doth no execution. We may put out a voice in ſpeaking, but except we put out faith in ſpeaking, we do but ſpeak, we do not pray. As the Word of God coming upon us doth us no good, prevails not upon our hearts, unleſs it be mixed with faith (Heb. 4.2.) The word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it. So the word that goes out from us, the word of prayer, prevaileth not at all with God, obtaineth nothing from him, unleſs it be mixed with faith. All the promiſes are made to believers, All things are poſſible to them that believe (Mark 9.23.) Ask in faith, nothing wavering, for he that wavereth is like a wave of the Sea, driven with the wind and toſſed (Jam. 1.6.) To ask in faith, is to ask, reſting upon the power of God, whereby he is able; upon his truth, whereby he is faithful; and upon his goodneſs in Chriſt, whereby he is ready to make good his promiſes. He that asks thus doth not wave. Few are without doubting, but all ſound believers are without wavering. The Greek word ſignifies to queſtion, or diſpute a thing, a degree beyond doubting; as when a man is at no certainty with himſelf, being ſometime of one mind, ſometime of another; the judgment being ſo carried, that the man is at variance with his own breaſt, or is between two wayes, not knowing which to take. We tranſlate the word (in Rom. 4. 20.) by ſtaggering. Abraham ſtaggered not at the promiſe of God through unbelief. The ſimilitude which the Apoſtle James uſes, illuſtrates this ſence, He that wavereth is like a wave of the Sea, which by tempeſtuous winds is ſometimes carried up to heaven, and anon down to the deep. A man who is toſſed with ſuch waves of unbelief, ſtaggers like a drunken man, in his practice and profeſſion; he is now on this ſide, to morrow on that; he doth not only ſtagger or halt in his way, but he ſtaggers and halts between two wayes; and is therefore called (verſ. 8.) A double-minded man: The prayers of ſuch a man are faithleſs prayers, and therefore fruitleſs prayers; Let not that man think he ſhall receive any thing (unleſs a rebuke and a denial) of the Lord (verſ. 7.) There are no promiſes made to ſuch, and therefore no mercies conveyed to ſuch. Believing prayer is gaining prayer; yet they who believe leaſt, preſume moſt. Hence the Apoſtles check, Let not that man think; as if he had ſaid, I know ſuch will flatter themſelves into a perſwaſion of great matters, they will have high thoughts, but they ſhall receive nothing.

Fourthly obſerve, That, How ſtrongly ſoever a godly man acts faith for the anſwer of his prayers, yet he hath no faith that his prayer deſerves an anſwer.

I would not believe that he had anſwered to [my] voyce. Chriſt calleth the Spouſe to prayer (Cant. 2. 14.) Let me ſee thy countenance, let me hear thy voyce, for ſweet is thy voyce, and thy countenance comly. Chriſt loves prayer. The prayers of the Saints upon earth, are muſick in heaven. That invitation to the Spouſe, let me hear thy voyce, ſeems to be an alluſion to thoſe, who loving Muſick, call upon a friend who hath a good voyce, or exquiſite skill to play upon an Inſtrument, Come, ſing us a ſong, play us a Leſſon, let us have a fit of mirth. Thus, I ſay, Chriſt ſpeaks to the Church, Come, let me hear thy voyce, 'tis ſweet, I know thou haſt a ſweet one: But the Saints judge their own voyces harſh and unharmonical, they are apt to think their prayers jarrings and diſcords, at the beſt, but a rude noiſe, not a compoſed air in the ear of God. Faith makes our prayers melodious, becauſe it carries us out of our ſelves. A believer lives not in the ſound of his own prayers, but of Chriſts interceſſion. What are we that we ſhould expect any acceptance upon our own account? or ſay, this we have gained, this we have obtained, thus God hath heard us, or thus we have wreſtled it out with God? As when we have performed all our duties, we muſt ſay, We are unprofitable ſervants; ſo when we have obtained all our ſuits, we muſt ſay, We are unprofitable petitioners; I will not believe that God hath hearkened unto my voice. What's a mans voice, that God ſhould hear it?

Fifthly obſerve, That, A godly man ſometimes cannot believe his prayer is heard, when it is heard.

Though he calls, and God anſwers, yet (like Job) he believes not that God hath anſwered to his voice; he cannot think his prayer is heard, though one ſhould come and tell him it is heard. When the Jews returned from Babylon, the mercy was ſo great, that they could not believe they had it, when they had it; When thou didſt turn our captivity, we were as them that dream (Pſal. 126. 2.) The deliverance was incredible, they could not think they were delivered: Their return to Jeruſalem was ſuſpected for a dream of it in Babylon. The Church prayed without ceaſing for Peter, when he was in priſon (Acts 12. 15.) yet when the Lord brought him out of priſon, and he was knocking at the door of the houſe where they were aſſembled, while they were knocking at the door of heaven for his deliverance, yet they would not believe the report of the Damoſel, who ſaid he ſtood before the gate. They tell her ſhe is mad; and when ſhe affirmed it with ſobriety, as well as vehemency; then they have another help for their unbelief, It was not Peter, but his Angel. Thus it is to this day with the Saints in their great perſonal ſuits and petitions, both about ſpiritual things and temporal, they are ſo overcome, aſtoniſhed and amazed at the goodneſs of God, that though they ſee the thing done, yet they can ſcarce believe it done. As if a Prince ſhould ſend a meſſage to a poor man by ſome great Lord, and tell him he hath beſtowed honour and favour upon him; the poor man is ready to ſay, I cannot believe it; the bleſſing is too big for him to digeſt and let down in his narrow heart: No, ſaith he, ſure it is not ſo. Though the people of God ever preſerve a high reſpect and eſteem of the works of God towards them, yet their faith is often below his workings, and they cannot receive or take in mercy ſo faſt as it cometh. Faith widens the veſſels of the ſoul to receive much, but God can powr in faſter then faith can widen the ſoul to receive.

Forſan hoc dicit, quia ſæpe præ nimia lætitia non credimus verum eſſe quod maximè verum eſſe optamus. Druſ.

Sixthly obſerve, Faith hath its decayes.

Faith doth not keep up alwayes at the ſame height, in the ſame plight and degree: There is a faith which believes that God doth anſwer before he anſwers; and there is a faith that cannot believe that God will anſwer, when he hath anſwered. Faith in ſtrength prevents the anſwer of God. As God in anſwering, ſometimes prevents our askings (Iſa. 65. 24.) Before they call, I will anſwer; and while they are yet ſpeaking, I will hear: ſo faith ſaith, Before the Lord giveth, I know I have it; before the Lord doth this thing, I ſee it is done. Faith in its ſtrength, realizes the mercies of God before they have a being, and is an evidence to us of what we ſee not, When mercies are but in their principles, in their conception and birth, or at moſt, when they are but in their cradle and ſwadling-clouts, faith ſpeaks as glorioully of them, as if they were fully acted and grown up before the eye. Strong faith in God (like God himſelf) quickens the dead, and calleth thoſe things which be not, as though they were. Weak faith deadens the quick, and calleth thoſe things which are, as if they were not. The Iſraelites were no ſooner over the red Sea, but they believed themſelves in the Land of Canaan (Exod. 15. 13, 14, 15.) And in their Song tell the ſtory of the ſubmiſſion and fears of the uncircumciſed Nations round about, which yet their after-unbelief kept off forty years.

There is a further underſtanding of the words, which I ſhall clear in connexion with that which followeth.

I would not believe that he had hearkened to my voyce; for he breaketh me with a tempeſt:] As if the reaſon why he doubted his [voyce] was not heard, lay in this, becauſe of thoſe continual breakings which were upon him; I would not believe that he had hearkened to my voyce; for he breaketh me with a tempeſt, and multiplieth my wounds without a cauſe: As if Job had ſaid, the dealings of God are ſuch towards me, that I know not how to make it out that I am heard; for though the Lord in ſome things carries it ſo graciouſly towards me, that I have great aſſurance I am heard, yet many things appear, reporting that I am not heard. Afflictions continued are no evidence that prayer is not heard, yet uſually it is very inevident to an afflicted perſon, that his prayer is heard.

Etiamſi Deus me precãtem exaudierit, minimè credo cum malorũ nimbo me obruat.

I ſhall now examine verſ. 16, 17. as holding a reaſon why Job's faith was thus weakened.

Verſe 17. For he breaketh me with a tempeſt, and multiplieth my wounds without cauſe.

Job's ſorrows put him to his Rhetorick ſtill, He breaketh me with a tempeſt. An expreſſion raiſing his afflictions to the height, yet not beyond the reality of them; He breaketh me with a tempeſt.

שער Turbo.

The word we tranſlate [break] ſignifies an utter contuſion, or the total ruining of a thing or perſon, the daſhing of either to pieces. The word is uſed reciprocally of Chriſt and the Devil, in that great promiſe of Chriſt, The ſeed of the woman (Gen. 3. 16.) It ſhall bruiſe thy head, and thou ſhalt bruiſe his heel. Chriſt having infinite power, utterly deſtroyed the Serpents power; he ſpoiled and ruined him for ever: The Apoſtle phraſes it ſo (Col. 2. 15.) He ſpoiled principalities and powers; he took away the prey or booty of ſouls which they had got, and led them diſarm'd like priſoners of war: And the Devil did what he could to ruine and ſpoil Chriſt, to break Chriſt to pieces. Thus Chriſt and Satan ſtrove and contended one with another. And the word (Shuph) hath an elegant nearneſs in ſound to our Engliſh. We call that noiſe which is made by the ruder motion of the feet, ſhuffling; and when men contend much, we hear the ſhuffling of their feet. Job was ſtriving and ſhuffling with God in prayer, and God was ſtriving and ſhuffling with Job in ſtorms and tempeſts.

שוף Contudit, contrivit, obminuit.

He breaketh me with a tempeſt.

Chaldæus legit, uſq; ad filum lineū, vel ad fila pilorū ſubtiliter diſputat mecū. שערה Filum ſignificat.

The word ſignifies not only ſtorms and tempeſts; but likewiſe, a little hair or twined thread. So the Chaldee Paraphraſt tranſlates it here, He diſputes or contends with me to a hair, or to a thread; making the ſence out thus, I will not believe that God hath anſwered me; why? He ſtandeth with me upon the ſmalleſt matters; he diſputes with me to a hair, and debates every thing to a thread. As Abraham ſaid to the King of Sodom (Gen. 14. 23.) I will not take any thing that is thine, from a thread, even to a ſhoe-latchet; that is, I will not make the ſmalleſt gain by thee: So, to diſpute to a hair, or to a thread, notes contending upon or about the ſmalleſt differences.

But generally the word is rendred a Tempeſt; and thus God is often deſcribed contending with man (Nahum 1. 3.) His way is in the whirlwind, and in the ſtorm, and the clouds are the duſt of his feet, that is, he ſends ſtorms and whirlwinds, by theſe he afflicts the children of men; and as an army of horſemen raiſes clouds of duſt from the earth with their feet, ſo the Lord raiſes the duſt of clouds with his; Behold, a whirlwind or a tempeſt of the Lord is gone forth in fury, even a grievous whirlwind; it ſhall fall grievouſly upon the head of the wicked, Jer. 23. 19.

To break with a tempeſt or with a whirlwind, implies two things.

Firſt, A ſudden and an unexpected affliction. Tempeſts are never welcome, and but ſeldom looked for. When the ſea is ſo calm and ſmooth that you may throw a Die upon it, a ſtorm ariſeth in a moment, and the veſſel is in danger of a wreck.

Secondly, It noteth the fierceneſs and violence of an affliction. Tempeſts are the moſt violent motions, they come with power. A Tempeſt is irreſiſtible, who can ſtand before it? Who can contend with ſtorms and winds? When the Lord made total conqueſts of his enemies, he contended (in the letter) by ſtorms and tempeſts. As in Joſhua 10. and in (1 Sam. 7. 10.) When the Philiſtims drew near to battell againſt Iſrael, the Lord thundred with a great thunder that day upon the Philiſtims, and diſcomfited them. The Story is famous of a Legion of Chriſtian ſouldiers, called the thundering Legion, becauſe by prayer they obtained a refreſhing rain for the Army in which they were commanded, and a terrible ſtorm of Thunder and Lightning, &c. upon the enemy. The word is uſed figuratively in war, when beſiegers coming to a Town or Fort, are reſolved to carry it preſently whatever it coſt them, they are ſaid to ſtorm the place, or get it by ſtorm. The Prophet alludes to this (Iſa. 25. 4.) When the blaſt of the terrible ones is as a ſtorm againſt the wall; that is, when their rage ſhall be at the higheſt, moſt violent and impetuous, then the Lord will be a refuge from the ſtorm. The ſame God who ſaves many from the ſtorms of man, did himſelf ſtorm Job,

He breaketh me with a tempeſt.

Job was ſtormed, yet ſuppoſes his prayer was anſwered. Hence obſerve,

Prayers may be heard and anſwered when greateſt afflictions are upon us.

Quædam nō negantur, ſed ut congruo tempore dentur, differuntur. Aug. Exaudit ſæpe ad profectum, licet non ad votū. Aquin. in loc. Sævitur in vulnus, ut homo ſanetur. Aug.

Do not think your prayers are loſt, becauſe your afflictions are not removed, or that God hath not heard you, becauſe he doth not preſently relieve you: God forbears, when he doth not deny. He anſwers to our profit, when he anſwereth not to our feeling. He anſwereth to our ſpiritual intereſt, when not to our corporal. The ſick man calleth to the Phyſitian to take away the bitter, loathſome potion; and the wounded man calleth to the Chirurgeon, to take away thoſe corroding plaiſters, and to forbear thoſe torturing operations; but the one gives him his potion, and the other lances his ſores, and layes corroſives to his fleſh; both theſe, while they vex the Patient, anſwer him; for what's the reaſon why the Patient would have his bitter potion taken away? Is it not becauſe he would be better? And why would he have thoſe painful operations forborn? is it not becauſe he would have eaſe? Now for both thoſe very reaſons, the Maſters of thoſe Profeſſions keep him to both; neither could they give him his deſire, but by doing contrary to his will. Thus alſo the Lord is healing us, when we think he is only wounding us; and fulfilling our deſires, while we cry out he is croſſing them.

Secondly obſerve, Even while we are praying, the Lord may be thundering; he may be breaking us when we are beſeeching him.

We muſt learn to keep to our duty, whatſoever the dealings of God be; whether it be foul weather or fair, pray ſtill; whether it be ſtorm or calm, go on in prayer ſtill. Pray ſtill, though God break ſtill. It is our duty to pray, and it is Gods priviledge to break.

Thirdly, Obſerve from the loftineſs of the language,

That, The Lord layes very ſore afflictions upon thoſe that are very dear to him.

Job expreſſeth his afflictions by breaking with a tempeſt. Stroaks from the clouds are moſt terrible. The ſame afflictions and ſcourges which he layes upon his enemies, he layes (in the matter, yea, and often in degree) upon his beſt friends? What can the Lord do to his greateſt enemies, but break them with a tempeſt? He doth not only chaſten with a rod, but ſometimes ſcatter with a ſtorm: He hath not only a ſword, but a thunderbolt for his ſervants: He hath terrible ſtroaks and blows for them who lie in his arms, and live in his embraces. Therefore we cannot diſtinguiſh men by the matter, no, nor by the meaſure of their afflictions; that which is a judgment to one, is but a chaſtening to another; with the ſame weapon he wounds a friend, and deſtroyes an enemy.

Fourthly obſerve, That, Afflictions continued, cauſe us to ſuſpect that our prayers are not anſwered.

Why doth Job think that God hearkened not to him? I would not believe (ſaith he) that God hath hearkened unto my voyce; why? becauſe ſtill he continues to break me. Faith is put hard to it at ſuch a time; and this is the thing which ſtumbled Job, he could not tell how to make it out, that God had heard his prayer for him, becauſe he heard ſo great a noiſe of tempeſts and ſtorms againſt him. It is very difficult for faith to ſee mercy through clouds of trouble. It is a hard thing for faith to look upon the pleaſed face of God through a lowring tempeſt, or to believe the calmneſs of Gods heart to us in troubleſome diſpenſations. Therefore he ſpeaks here as if his faith were even maſtered. The providences of God are often too hard for man. And with this temptation Satan helps on unbelief. If he come to a ſoul in affliction, which keeps cloſe to his intereſts in Chriſt: Yea (ſaith he) you may do ſo though afflictions were upon you, but yours are more then afflictions, yours are tempeſts and ſtorms: God dealeth with you as with an enemy, yours are no ordinary matters, yours are like the portion he gives to thoſe he hates; I would not weaken your faith becauſe of a chaſtening-rod, but you are beaten with Scorpions, and will you ſtill believe? Can God love you, and deal thus with you? Thus the Serpent whiſpers in thoſe louder tempeſts of affliction.

Licet Deus verè exaudiat, tamen homo in miſeriis conſtitutus ſe exaudiri non credit. Aqu.

Fifthly obſerve, That, Afflictions continued, cauſe us to ſuſpect that our prayers ſhall not be anſwered.

And ſo I find ſome rendring the former verſe in connexion with this; If I have called, and he hath anſwered me, yet will I not believe that he will hearken to my voyce: As if he had ſaid, I know God hath heard me heretofore, but I fear he will hear me no more, becauſe I find his hand ſo heavy upon me. Surely then, he hath forgottten to be gracious, and hath ſhut up his tender mercies. Former experiences can hardly keep Faith whole, while we are under preſent breakings.

Laſtly, If we take the words, as importing a calling to God for anſwer in a way of provocation (as was ſhewed before) then the ſence is, If I had an ambition to contend with God, and he had anſwered me by condeſcending to that courſe, yet I could not believe he had hearkened to my voyce; that is, I could not believe that he had yielded the cauſe to me: Why? Becauſe he goes on ſtill to break me with tempeſts; he follows me with trouble ſtill; he ſhews he hath done me no wrong in my former afflictions, by his going on to afflict me ſtill; he is ſo far from acknowledging the leaſt injuſtice in what is paſt of my ſufferings, that I ſuffer more; He breaks me with a tempeſt, and,

Multiplies my wounds without cauſe.

חנם Gratis.

But is not this injuſtice, to multiply wounds without cauſe? Is not this a charge of blaſphemy upon God? May we not think that now Satan had his wiſh, and that Job curſed God indeed?

Vulnera ſine cauſa ſunt mala & flagella, quæ non ob aliquod mittuntur peccatum.

The Hebrew word which we tranſlate, Without cauſe, hath been opened, Chap. 1. 9. & 2. 3. and it hath occurred elſewhere. Here, He multiplies my wounds without cauſe, is not a charge of injuſtice upon God, Job's heart was far from the leaſt thought of that, as you may ſee in all the diſpute: But it is an acknowledgment of the ſoveraignty and power of God, Though he hath wounded me already, yet he may wound me ſtill, without giving me a reaſon; or, though I have given him no cauſe. What? Do you think God would yield to me, if I ſhould contend with him? He multiplieth, or, He hath multiplied my wounds without cauſe, that is, without giving me any account hitherto; and do you think that now I ſhall have liberty to call him to an account, or that he will give me one? He wounds without cauſe, is, * without cauſe manifeſted. God hath not told me the reaſon of his chaſtenings; and I do not perceive the reaſon; I know not why he contendeth with me. And ſo he expounds what he ſpake at verſ. 12. Lo, he paſſeth by me, and I ſee him not. There are myſteries in providence. Mans eye is not clear enough to ſee all that God doth before his eyes. Job is his own expoſitor. This latter expreſſion gives us a comment upon the former. And it is obſervable, that both in this book, and in the whole body of the Scripture, eaſier Texts may be found to interpret the harder, and clear ones to enlighten thoſe which are darker and more obſcure. The word of God is not only a light and a rule to us, but to it ſelf.

* Sine cauſa manifeſta, & ab homine afflicto perceptibili. Aquin. His verbis evidenter ex[illegible]it, quæ ſu[illegible] occultè [illegible]ixerat, ſi venerit ad me, non video. Hoc enim ubiq; ferè in dictis Jobi obſervandū, quod obſcurè dicta per aliqua conſequentia exponuntur. Aquin.

Hæc à Job dicta ſunt, quod intelligat ſe non tā flagellari quā probari.

Or, He multiplieth my wounds without cauſe.] Is, as if Job had ſaid, I know the Lord deals not with me as with a guilty perſon, nor doth he judge me as a malefactor; mine is a probation, not a puniſhment: God doth only try me, to ſee what is in my heart, and how I can ſtand in an evil day. He multiplieth my wounds without cauſe; that is, without the cauſe which you have ſo often objected againſt me, namely, that I am an hypocrite and wicked. I know God looks upon me as a child, or a friend, not as an enemy. Therefore I have no cauſe to multiply words with God, though God go on to multiply my wounds without cauſe.

Animus in Deum præclarè affectus, ſed tamen affectus doloribus. Sanct.

To multiply wounds] Notes, numerous and manifold afflictions; many in number, and many in kind. Job's were deep, deadly wounds, and he had many of them, he was all over wounds, body and ſoul were wounds, he was ſmitten within and without; as to multiply to pardon, is to pardon abundantly (Iſa. 55. 7.) So to multiply wounds, or to multiply to wound, is to wound abundantly.

Here a queſtion would be reſolved, How the juſtice of God may be acquitted, in laying on and multiplying afflictions without cauſe?

I ſhall refer the Reader for further light about this point to Chap. 2. verſ. 3. where thoſe words are opened; Thou movedſt me againſt him, to deſtroy him without cauſe; yet take here three conſiderations more, by way of anſwer to the doubt.

Firſt, Whatſoever the Lord wounds and takes from any man, he wounds and takes his own. He is Lord over all. Our health and ſtrength are his, our riches are his; The world is his and the fulneſs of it (Pſal. 50.) If he be hungry, he needs not tell us; he can go to his own ſtore. It is no wrong to diſpoſe what is our own, whereſoever we find it. That rule is as true in revocations, as diſtributions: Friend, I do thee no wrong (Matth. 20. 15.) Is it not lawful for me to do what I will with mine own? Though there were no ſin in man, yet there were no injuſtice in God, becauſe he takes nothing from us, but what he gave us, and hath full power to recal, and take away.

Secondly, Suppoſe man could ſay, that, what he had were his own; that, his riches were his own, that, health and ſtrength of body were his own, yet God may take them away, and do no wrong. It is ſo among men, Kings and States call out their Subjects to war, and in that war their wounds are multiplied without any cauſe given by them: They gave no occaſion why they ſhould be appointed to ſuch hazards of life and limb, to ſuch hardſhips of hunger and cold; yet there is no injuſtice in this. When God caſts man into trouble, he calls him out to his ſervice, he hath a war, ſome noble enterprize and deſign to ſend him upon. To you it is given to ſuffer for his ſake (ſaith the Apoſtle, Phil. 1. 29.) he puts it among the ſpecial priviledges, which ſome Saints are graced with, not only above the world, but above many of the Saints, To whom it is given (and that's a royal gift) only to believe. Now, if in proſecuting this ſuffering task, whether for Chriſt, or from Chriſt, a believer layes out his eſtate, credit, liberty or life, he is ſo far from being wronged, that he is honoured. Thouſands are ſlain in publick imployments, who have given no cauſe to be ſo ſlain. If according to the line of men, this be no injuſtice, much leſs is it injuſtice in God, who is without line, himſelf being the only line and rule to himſelf, and to all beſides himſelf.

Thirdly, I may anſwer it thus, Though the Lord multiply wounds without cauſe; yet he doth it without wrong to the wounded, becauſe he wounds with an intention to heal, and takes away with a purpoſe to give more; as in the preſent caſe, God made Job an amends for all the wounds, whether of his body or goods, good name or ſpirit. Now, though it be a truth in reſpect of man, that we may not break anothers head, and ſay we will give him a plaiſter; or take away from man his poſſeſſion, and ſay we will give it him again, yet God may. Man muſt not be ſo bold with man, becauſe he hath no right to take away and wound, nor is he ſure that he can reſtore and heal; but it is no boldneſs, but a due right in God to do thus, for he as Lord hath power to take away, and ability to reſtore. And he reſtores ſometimes in temporals, as to Job, but alwayes to his people in ſpirituals and eternals. Hence the Apoſtle argueth (2 Cor. 4. 7.) Our light afflictions which are but for a moment, work for us an eternal weight of glory. Afflictions work glory for us, not in a way of meriting glory, but in a tendency to the receiving of glory, and in preparations for it. There is no wrong in thoſe loſſes by which we are made gainers: Thoſe loſſes being ſent that we may gain, and the ſender of the loſs being able effectually to make us gainers.

He multiplieth my wounds without cauſe.] Hence obſerve,

Firſt, Afflictions are no argument that God doth not love us.

As the Lord hath a multitude of mercies in his heart, ſo a multitude of afflictions in his hand; and a multitude of afflictions may conſiſt with a multitude of mercies. At the ſame time when we are viſibly encompaſt about, and beſieged with an army of ſorrows and oppoſers, an army of inviſible comforts and protectors may be encamping round about us: As Eliſha aſſured his ſervant, 2 King. 6. 17.

Secondly, (Which I ſhall but only name, becauſe I have met it heretofore.)

The Lord is not accountable to any creature for his actions.

He multiplieth my wounds without cauſe, or, He multiplieth my wounds without ſhewing cauſe. God is the only Judge, who may give ſentence without hearing parties, or ſhewing cauſe. It is unrighteous in an earthly Judge to do ſo: he muſt not judge a man to any ſuffering, and not ſhew reaſon of his judgment. But the firſt cauſe needs not ſhew ſecond cauſes. God hath the reaſon of all things in himſelf, and therefore we cannot call him to give his reaſon. Where the will of the Agent may lawfully be all the reaſon of his actions, there is no reaſon he ſhould give any account of his actions, but what himſelf wills.

The next verſe is of the ſame tenor in ſence with the former, the difference is only in expreſſion.

Verſ. 18. He will not ſuffer me to take my breath, but filleth me with bitterneſs.

He not only breaks me with a tempeſt, and multiplies my wounds, but He will not ſuffer me to take my breath. This implies the unintermittedneſs of afflictions; as if he had ſaid, I have not only many afflictions, and great afflictions, but continual afflictions. The Hebrew is, He will not give me to draw back my breath, or, ſuffer my breath to return: The words are of the ſame importance with thoſe of Chap. 7. verſ.

verſ. 19. How long wilt thou not depart from me? Nor let me alone till I ſwallow down my ſpittle? That is, wilt thou not give me ſo much reſpite as to ſwallow down my ſpittle? Here (which is more) he affirms, He will not give me ſo much as a breathing time.

Quidam ad morbum referunt, qu ſi Job Aſtmate laboraſſet. Beda.

Some interpret this of a bodily diſtemper or diſeaſe: that God had brought a ſickneſs upon him, which did even ſtop his breath, as if Job had been troubled with hardneſs of breathing, with the Tiſſick (as Phyſitians call it) or a ſtopping in the lungs. But we may rather take it figuratively, my ſorrows put me out of breath; the Lord doth not only afflict me without giving me any account, but I have unceſſant afflictions which cannot be accounted. No man can tell how often he doth or ſuffers that which he alwayes doth or ſuffers. I am ſo far from ſeeing a period of my troubles, that I have not ſo much as any pauſe or ſtop. He ſpeaks in that high ſtrain of Rhetorick, called hyperbole; for in ſtrictneſs of the letter, not to ſuffer a man to take his breath, is to kill and quite deſtroy him; but when he ſaith, God will not ſuffer me to breathe, it noteth the continuation of his ſorrows, not the expiration of his dayes.

Fortaſſe proverbiū erat, ad ſignificandū facere aliquid indeſinenter & abſq; ulla vel minima morula aut intermiſſione Una ſaliva. Hieron. in ep. ἀπνευστὶ, i. e. uno ſpiritu aliquid facere, eſt diligenter facere. Theoph. in Charact. Clivum iſtū uno ſi potes ſpiritu exupera. Sen. * Va preſto, & non fietare, q. d. uno halitu egreſſum & regreſſum perfice.

Again, Not to ſuffer a man to take his breath, before he hath done ſuch a thing, is a Proverb for ſpeedy doing. Like that uſed by ſome of the Ancients, to do a thing with one ſpit, that is, in as little time as a man may ſpit. When the * Italians would expreſs acting without delay, they ſay, Go about this buſineſs, and do not fetch a breath till you are here again, go and come with a breath. That direction given by Eliſha to his ſervant Gehezi, when he ſent him to reſtore the Shunamites ſon (2 King. 4. 29.) Take my ſtaff in thine hand, and go thy way; if thou meet any man, ſalute him not; and if any ſalute thee, anſwer him not again, &c. And that of Chriſt to his Diſciples, when he gave them their Commiſſion to preach the Goſpel (Luke 10. 4.) Salute no man by the way, are of the ſame intendment. Chriſt did not mean that his Diſciples ſhould be uncivil (nor Eliſha his) he did not forbid them to uſe common courteſies to men, when they went to call men to ſpecial grace. No, but his meaning is, Go ſpeedily about the work, do not ſtand complementing and talking, with How do you, and how do you? by the way: do not entertain the time, or trifle it away with Ceremonies, having an imployment of ſuch infinite concernment put into your hands. So he ſeems to allude to, and reprove that ill cuſtom of idle ſervants, who when they are ſent forth upon buſineſs, will yet ſtand and talk with every one they meet. Now, as not to ſuffer a man to talk a word while he is upon a ſervice, imports ſudden diſpatch: ſo when Job ſaith, He will not ſuffer me to take my breath in theſe my ſufferings, his meaning is, mine are no lazy, dull ſufferings, I am forced to be active at them, I cannot ſtand breathing and cooling my ſelf, I have no leiſure, no vacation at all from this paſſive ſervice: He will not ſuffer me to take my breath.

But (or, for) he filleth me with bitterneſs, or with bitterneſſes.

Sicut dulcedo omnia jucunda & amica naturæ ſignificat ſic nomine amaritudinis, graviſſimæ quæq; afflictiones intelliguntur. Bold. Victimæ non dulcuerunt, Hoſ. 9. 4.

I have opened this word before, Chap. 3. 10. As in Scripture, ſweetneſs implies all comfort: ſo bitterneſs all trouble and ſorrow. When God complains about the ſervices of his people (Jer. 6. 20. Hoſ. 9.) he ſaith, Your ſacrifices are not ſweet to me: So the Original; that is, your Sacrifices are not acceptable to me, or pleaſing to me. Sweet things are pleaſing things, bitter things are unpleaſing. Afflictions are unpleaſant to fleſh and blood, (Heb. 12. 11.) No affliction for the preſent is joyous, but grievous.

Bitterneſs] is put for the extreameſt affliction, and in the plural (as here) for all afflictions; Surely the bitterneſs of death is paſt, ſaith Agag (1 Sam. 15. 32.) that is, I have eſcaped bitter death at this time; the Souldier ſpared me in the heat of the battel, ſurely then a Prophet will not ſlay me in cold blood: To be filled with bitterneſs notes abundance of afflictions. As to be filled with the Spirit, to be filled with the fulneſs of Chriſt, &c. note the plentiful receiving of the Spirit, and of the grace of Chriſt. To taſte of a bitter cup, to ſip a little of it is unpleaſant, but to drink large draughts, to be fill'd with bitterneſs, who can abide it? When Chriſt was come to Golgotha, They gave him vinegar to drink mingled with gall; but (though he drank up that cup of his fathers wrath to the very bottom, though he drank up all the gall and wormwood of ſin, for the ſalvation of men, yet) when he had taſted thereof, He would not drink (Matth. 27. 34.) If it be grievous to taſte but a little of a bitter cup, then judge how grievous Job's ſufferings were, who was filled with bitterneſs; he had his belly full of trouble, his belly full of gall and wormwood, his ſtomach could hold no more, bitterneſs was both his meat and drink. Note, Firſt, Afflictions may come unceſſantly.

Not ſo much as a breathing time between. Then while thou art aſſaulted prepare for freſh aſſaults. Obſerve, Secondly, The Lord ſometimes mixes a very bitter cup for his own people.

Yea, They have not only a bitter cup, but bitterneſs is their cup; and they have not only a taſte of it, but are filled with it. The Pſalmiſt ſhews us a bitter cup, which is the proper portion of wicked men; There is a cup in the hand of the Lord, and it is full of mixture, the wine is red, and the dregs thereof all the wicked of the earth ſhall wring them out, and drink them (Pſal. 75. 8.) The Lord hath a cup of red wine, that is, a cup filled with wrath, fury and indignation. Wicked men (how much ſoever their ſtomachs loath it, and turn againſt it) ſhall drink it up to the bottom, or, he will pour it down their throats, whether they will or no. They ſhall be filled with bitterneſs after all their ſweet morſels and pleaſant draughts. The Saints are filled with bitterneſs from God, but not with the wrath of God; many ſorrows may be mingled in their cup, but everlaſting love is ever mingled in it. Saints never drink pure wrath, as wicked men never taſte pure love.

To conclude, we may obſerve here a Climax, or gradation of four ſteps.

Firſt, (Verſ. 14.) Job acknowledged that he was unable to anſwer the Lord.

And ſecondly, He profeſſed that if he could, he would not, no, he would humble himſelf (Verſ. 15.)

Thirdly, If in mercy God ſhould anſwer his petition, yet he would not be confident at all (in regard of himſelf) that God had heard him, or hearkned unto his voice.

Laſtly, He acknowledged that God might go on to afflict him ſtill; for ſome read this Text in the future tenſe, He will multiply my wounds, and afflict me without cauſe; He will fill me with bitterneſs. A godly man reckons up his afflictions as well as his comforts to the praiſe and honour of God. And the more God afflicts him, the more he abaſes himſelf, though he doth not think the worſe of himſelf, becauſe God doth afflict him.

VERS. 19, 20, 21.

If I ſpeak of ſtrength, lo, he is ſtrong; and if of judgement, Who ſhall ſet me a time to plead?
If I juſtifie my ſelf, mine own mouth ſhall condemn me;
If I ſay, I am perfect, it ſhall alſo prove me perverſe.
Though I were perfect, yet would I not know my own ſoul,
I would deſpiſe my life.

JOB goeth on to lay himſelf yet lower before God: and having in the three former verſes proved that weak man is not able to contend with the Almighty; he giveth an additional proof in Verſ. 19. from the conſideration of a twofold adjunct in God. Firſt, His ſtrength. And ſecondly, His juſtice. From both he concludeth according to the former argument given upon the whole matter in Verſ. 10. ſeeing God is ſo ſtrong and juſt, Surely, if I juſtifie my ſelf, my own mouth ſhall condemn me; and if I ſay, I am perfect, it ſhall alſo prove me perverſe.

If I ſpeak of ſtrength, lo, he is ſtrong.

There are two wayes whereby a man makes his part good againſt another man.

Firſt, By the ſtrength of his arm, and dint of his Sword.

Secondly, By the equity of his cauſe, and the goodneſs of his conſcience. Job declareth his inability to deal with God in either, If I ſpeak of ſtrength, lo, he is ſtrong, &c.

Mr. Broughton tranſlates thus, As for force, he is valiant; if I think to carry it by force with God, He is a God of valour, or, as Moſes in his Song (Exod. 15.3.) deſcribeth him, The Lord is a man of war, I cannot deal with him upon that point.

In originali indifferens eſt, nam tantū habetur, ſi ad potentiam: ut ſuppleri poſſit, venero, aut reſpexero, vel aliquid ſimile.

The original ſpeaks only thus much, If of ſtrength, he ſtrong; we ſupply the word, ſpeak. If men talk of ſtrength, or boaſt of ſtrength, or ſhew forth their ſtrength (we may ſupply it with any of thoſe words) Lo, he is ſtrong. As it is uſual with us when we would ſet a man up, in the perfections of any quality, we ſay, What do ye ſpeak of knowledge, why, There's a learned man! What do ye ſpeak of riches, why, There's a rich man! &c. Such an emphaſis is carried in this expreſſion, If I ſpeak of ſtrength, why, here's one that is ſtrong indeed!

There are five words in the Hebrew which ſignifie ſtrength. The firſt, notes ſtrength in general: The ſecond, ſtrength to endure labour: The third, efficacy: The fourth, vigour: The fifth, which is that of the Text, ſuperiority of ſtrength, or prevailing ſtrength. It is one thing to be ſtrong, and another thing to prevail. The Lord is not only ſtrong, but ſtrongeſt: he hath a ſtrength above all ſtrength, he is ſtrong overcomingly, ſtrong prevailingly. Chriſt in the Goſpel ſpeaks of a ſtrong man (he means the Devil) that kept the houſe; but he was not ſtrong prevailingly, for there came a ſtronger then he, that ſpoil'd him, and took away all his armor from him, wherein he truſted (Luke 11.22.) but when the Holy Ghoſt ſaith, That the Lord is ſtrong, the meaning is, that he is ſtronger then all: and ſo generally the poſitive is expounded by the ſuperlative, If we ſpeak of ſtrength, lo, he is ſtrong, that is, he is moſt ſtrong. Thus we find the word uſed, 2 Sam. 22.18. He delivered me from my ſtrong enemy, and from them that hated me, for they were too ſtrong for me: they were prevailingly ſtrong for me, and therefore unleſs I had found a ſupply of help, unleſs ſome Auxiliaries had come from Heaven to take my part, they had been too hard for me, I had been overmatcht, they were prevailingly ſtrong, or too ſtrong for me. We have the word in the ſame ſence (Gen. 25.23.) in that reſolution which the unerring oracle of Heaven gave Rebekah enquiring about the children ſtriving in her womb, the Lord anſwereth thus, Two Nations are in thy womb, and two manner of people; and then addeth, The one people ſhall be ſtronger then the other people; it is this word, the one people ſhall be prevailingly ſtrong, and ſhall overcome the other; both people ſhall be ſtrong, mighty and potent, but there is one of them ſhall have the rule, and ſhall conquer and ſubdue the other. If I ſpeak of ſtrength, he is ſtrong. The ſum is, If the Queſtion be about ſtrength and power, then the Lord carries the day and the honour, he is moſt powerful, he is ſtrong above all. Hence obſerve, Regnum regno prevalebit, ſci. populus præ populo robuſtior.

That, God is of infinite and inſuperable ſtrength.

He hath ſtrength: Many have malice and wickedneſs, boldneſs and preſumption enough to oppoſe, but none have power enough to overcome him. He hath force which none can ſubdue; and he hath authority which none ought to reſiſt. Theſe two muſt concur whereſoever there is full determining-power. A man may have authority or right to do a thing, and yet have no ſtrength to execute and effect it. And many have ſtrength to do thoſe things (as to oppreſs a man, to take his goods or his life from him) for which they have no authority: both meet in the Lord, therefore he is the Soveraign Lord; he hath authority to do as much as he can, and he hath ſtrength to do as much as he will. Some men would make ſtrange work in the world, if they had ſtrength ſutable to their authority: and others wou'd make a good world by their works, if they had authority ſutable to their ſtrength: both theſe meet in God, who can contend with him? If we ſpeak of ſtrength, lo, he is ſtrong.

There are three things wherein this inſuperableneſs of the ſtrength of God appears.

Firſt, He hath ſtrength to do whatſoever he will, There is nothing not fecible, or too hard for him.

Secondly, He hath ſtrength to do what he willeth not, the Lord is able to do more then ever he will do; he could preſently take vengeance upon all the wicked, but he will not; he is patient and good toward them, who look not at all towards repentance, to which his goodneſs and patience leads them, Rom. 2. 5.

Thirdly, He is ſo ſtrong that he can do whatſoever imports ſtrength, becauſe he only doth what he will do. To do that which is not our will to do, is a note of diſability. It argues a want of power to be forced to do a thing, as well as not be able to do it. He that doth what he would not, is not able to do what he would. God is therefore able to do whatſoever he wills, becauſe he never did, nor can be drawn to do any thing againſt his will. It follows then, That the Lord is ſo ſtrong that he can do whatſoever names him ſtrong, and only cannot do thoſe things, which if he did, he muſt be weak, as was further ſhewed at verſ. 4. of this Chapter. Hence it appears,

Secondly, That, No creature is able to grapple with God.

He is ſtrongeſt. The Apoſtle gives that admonition, (1 Corinth. 10. 22.) Do we provoke the Lord to jealouſie? Are we ſtronger then he? Surely, except man thought he were able to match God, he would not be ſo fool-hardy, ſo vain, to throw down the Gauntlet, or enter the liſts with God: The weakneſs of God is ſtronger then men (1 Cor. 1.25.) not that there is any weakneſs in God: but take that which men conceive to be weakneſs, or weakeſt in him, that's ſtronger then man. Or, The weakneſs of God, that is, the weakeſt inſtruments which God uſeth, are ſtronger, ſcil. in their effects, then the ſtrongeſt which men uſe. God can do more with ten men, then man can do with an hundred. The moſt ſtammering tongue and flatteſt language ſhall perſwade more, if God ſpeak with it, then the moſt fluent tongue and ſparkling Oratory ſpoken meerly by man, If I ſpeak of ſtrength, lo, he is ſtrong.

And if of judgment, Who ſhall ſet me a time to plead?

If I cannot by force and power, may I not by ſubtilty and wit, by reaſon and argument, by Eloquence and Rhetorick prevail againſt him? No, If of judgment, who ſhall ſet me a time to plead? As I cannot deal with God at the ſword, or in the field; ſo neither can I deal with him at the bar, or at the judgment ſeat.

משפט Iudicium, jus, ratio.

There are two words in the Hebrew which are uſed for judging, The firſt is, Dan, the name of one of the twelve Patriarchs, and from him of a Tribe in Iſrael: Dan ſhall judge his people (Gen. 49.16.) And that word (in ſtrictneſs) ſignifies to give doom or ſentence in a cauſe. The other word is that in the Text, Shaphat, which ſignifies more eſpecially the doing of right, or the righting of a man in any controverſie. The Greek word takes in both. Now, while Job ſaith, If of judgment, or if we ſpeak of judgment, the Queſtion is, What judgment doth he mean?

κρίνω.

Judgment is taken three wayes.

Firſt, For the rule of judging, or for the Law whereby we judge. It is ſaid (1 Sam. 10. 25.) that Samuel (after he had annointed Saul for King) told the people the manner of the Kingdom, and wrote it in a book. This manner of the Kingdom was not the common practice and cuſtom of the Kingdom, but (it is the word of the Text) the judgments of the Kingdom, that is, thoſe rules and laws by which the Kingdom ought to be governed and judged.

Secondly, Judgment is put for an ability or fitneſs to judge, to diſcern and weigh things, to ſcan a cauſe, and try out the uttermoſt truth of every circumſtance: judgment is the ability of the perſon judging. And Thirdly, Judgment is taken for the ſentence given upon the perſon judged, after the evidence of his cauſe is heard and taken. Judgment in this third ſence is the reſult of the former two. For when by judgment, as it is the rule of judging, and an ability to judge, the Judge hath wrought and tried out what the merit of a mans cauſe, and the truth of a buſineſs in controverſie is, then the iſſue of both is, Judgment in this third ſence; that is, an act which is paſſed, or a ſentence pronounced upon the perſon that ſtandeth in, or the cauſe which is brought to judgment.

So, If of judgment, is, If I bring forth my cauſe to be tried by the abilities of the Judge, and by the rule of the Law, this will be no relief to me, I ſhall be in as ill a caſe, as if I were to deal with God by plain ſtrength.

There is an opinion that takes in a fourth ſence about this word Judgment, as if judgment were not a forenſical, or a judicial term in this Text, but ſignified only afflictions or puniſhments upon a people or perſon. Theſe are called the judgments of God, Rom. 11. 33. How unſearchable are his judgments, and his wayes paſt finding out? That is, the ſeveral acts which he paſſes upon men, his providences and outward diſpenſations (for he ſpeaks of caſting off of the Jews, and laying them aſide for ſo long a time, which is one of the greateſt, if not the greateſt judgment which God ever burdened his own Covenant-people with) Theſe (ſaith he) are paſt finding out. And then, If I come to ſpeak of judgment, is, If I ſpeak with God about his judgments ſhewed in thoſe terrible providential acts upon others, or upon my ſelf, and cite him to anſwer for what he hath done towards me or them, Who is able to plead? Who will undertake this cauſe againſt the Lord?

Who ſhall ſet me a time to plead?

יעד

In ſuo Kal condicere, convenire & tempus conſtituere, propriè ſignificat. In Hiphil (ſicut hic) convenire facere.

Conventus ſtatis horis & locis aggregari ſolitus, cœtus, collegium, eccleſia, congregatio.

It is but one word which we tranſlate [To ſet a time to plead] but the ſence is very large and various; it ſignifies to appoint, conſtitute or preſcribe either time, place or perſons, any or all the circumſtantials of action. It is here tranſlated by divers in reference to the time, and by ſome in reference to the place. And becauſe the people of God are to meet at appointed times and places for ſolemn and publick worſhip, therefore this word ſignifies the Church or the congregation, which is alwayes to meet by publick appointment at ſuch a time, or in ſuch a place, leſt there ſhould be ſcatterings and confuſions amongſt thoſe who ſhould be moſt unanimous and harmonious. It is taken alſo for any meeting, Pſal. 48. 4. Lo, the Kings were aſſembled or gathered together. And, Amos 3. 3. Can two walk together except they be agreed? That is, except they be friends. They who have not one heart, ſeldom have one way. Or, except they be agreed, that is, upon time and place; two men cannot converſe or have any buſineſs one with another, unleſs they conſent and appoint where and when; if one be for this time and place, and the other for that, they can never walk together. It is put for a ſet time, 2 Sam. 24. 15. The Lord having ſent the peſtilence upon Jeruſalem for the ſin of David in numbring the people, it is ſaid, the peſtilence deſtroyed from the morning, even to the time appointed; the Lord had ſet the peſtilence a time, it wrought to that time and no longer.

Obel. Magned. Tabernaculum teſtimonii, i.e. publicæ fidei in Deum & homines conteſtatæ, &c. Pined.

Further, The word is applied to any covenant, pact, or mutual agreement: Hence the Tabernacle is indifferently called The Tabernacle of the Teſtimony, or, The Tabernacle of the Congregation; becauſe there God confirmed and ſetled his Covenant, and made an agreement with his people, and his people reſorted to the Tabernacle, to have the Articles of that Covenant made good to them by his own appointment. Hence (I ſay) it was called The Tabernacle of witneſs, The Tabernacle of the Teſtament, or, The Tabernacle of the Covenant. Upon this ground alſo all the ſolemn feaſts of the Jews were expreſt by this general word, they being all obſerved at ſet times and places. And for this reaſon the word is uſed for the Grave. So in Job 30. 23. Which we tranſlate thus, The houſe appointed for all living; there is a time when, and a place appointed where all that live ſhall be laid down when they die, or where their bodies ſhall be houſed after they are diſſolved, therefore it is called The houſe of appointment; the houſe which the Lord hath ſetled both for time and place where it ſhall be made, and when we ſhall be carried to it. No man goes to his grave by accident; the Lord hath appointed man his place, and bounded his habitation, when he is dead, as well as while he lived.

Beth Mogned.

Again, For a clearer underſtanding of this, it may have an alluſion to that courſe which is obſerved in Courts of Juſtice, where, when either Plaintiff or Defendant wants Council to plead for him, the Court aſſignes Council; and it is obſerved by the Learned, that among the Romans, the Pretor would ſay, What, is there none to plead for him? I will appoint one to take his cauſe into conſideration, and to plead for him. It is ordinary with our Judges to appoint Council, as alſo time and place, when and where to hear cauſes. The words may have an alluſion to this courſe of Judges; If I come to judgment, who will aſſign me council? where ſhall I get any one to plead this cauſe, and to ſtand up for me againſt the Lord?

Prætor dicere ſolebat, Si advocatū non habet, ego dabo.

There is yet another underſtanding of the word; as having reference to the teſtimony or witneſs which is brought in. So the Vulgar reads it, No man will be ſo bold as to give in evidence for me, or to be a witneſs on my behalf.

Nemo audet pro me teſtimonium dicere. Vulg.

Take all theſe ſences, If I come to judgment, who? &c. I ſhall get none to give in evidence for me, none to plead for me; I ſhall get none to aſſign counſel for me, none to appoint time and place for a hearing; therefore I may as well contend with God by ſtrength, as by judgment. The ſum of all is, Job confeſſes, in caſe he had a mind to go this way, he ſhould not find any in the world to aſſiſt or help him in it.

We have had divers paſſages of like nature with this, wherein Job declared his utter inability to plead with God; therefore I ſhall but briefly note one thing from it.

There is no ſtanding before God in judgment by the help of any creature.

Who ſhall ſet me a time to plead? Or, Who ſhall be my pleader? One man cannot do it for another; all the Angels in heaven are not able to do it for any man. If man enter into judgment with God, men and Angels cannot help him. As the Apoſtle ſpeaks in another caſe, about the want of love, If I ſpeak with the tongue of men and Angels, and have not charity, it profits me nothing: So, if we ſhould ſpeak for our ſelves, or others for us, with the tongues of men, that is, with the tongues of the moſt excellent Orators or Pleaders; yea, with the tongues of Angels, with tongues that exceed all that men can ſpeak, yet in judgment with God theſe will be but ſounding braſs and tinckling Cymbals.

Job goes yet a ſtep further. If I ſhould undertake to manage my cauſe my ſelf (ſome Clients will deſire their Counſel to ſtand by, and they will argue their own cauſe) why, ſaith Job, if I ſhould do ſo, if I ſhould be my own Advocate or Attorney, and appear my ſelf in my own cauſe, it would be all one; If I juſtifie my ſelf, my own mouth ſhall condemn me; I ſhall be as bad, if not worſe then before. I can get none to plead for me, and if I plead for my ſelf, I am ſure to be caſt; I cannot mend my ſelf by ſpeaking in my own cauſe: That's the meaning of this twentieth verſe, which is but a continuation, with a further illuſtration of what he had ſpoken before, therefore I ſhall but touch upon it.

Verſe 20. If I juſtifie my ſelf.

That is, If Witneſs fail, and Counſel fail, if all help and ſuccours fail me, and then I reſolve to go to work with my own ſtrength and wit, if I go about to make or declare my ſelf juſt before God (for ſo the word is to be underſtood, as in the doctrine of Juſtification) what ſhall I gain? The profit will not countervail the charge or pay for the expence of one breath; For,

Mine own mouth ſhall condemn me.

My tongue would cut my own throat; the ſentence or words which I ſhould bring forth to plead my cauſe before God, would be found againſt me; the Lord would turn all my arguments back upon me, and wound me with mine own weapons.. I ſhould go out condemned, and my plea ſhould be turned into ſin. I ſhall certainly ſpoil my cauſe, if I handle it. As, if I ſhould put it into the hands of Angels or men, they could make nothing of it, ſo, neither can I make any thing of it if I manage it my ſelf.

Os meum; i.e meum teſtimonium, mea oratio Ex ibo ex hujuſmodi judicio condemnatus, & oratio mea fiet in peccatum.

There are three things which evince that if man undertake the matter with God, he ſhall be condemned by his own mouth.

Firſt, Man is inſufficient. How can he who is ignorant, weak and unrighteous, plead his cauſe with God, who is infinite in wiſdom, righteouſneſs and holineſs? And therefore mans own mouth will condemn him, his words will ſpeak him guilty while he pleads, Not guilty.

Secondly, He that juſtifies himſelf, muſt appear in his own commendation, he muſt bring forth all his good works, and ſhew the Lord how he hath faſted, prayed and mourned, how humble, how liberal he hath been, what alms he hath given; he muſt (as it were) paint and adorn himſelf in all his excellencies, and ſtand before the Lord in this array. Now mans own mouth muſt condemn him, if he do thus. The Heathen could ſay by the light of nature, That a mans praiſes are ſullied by paſſing through his own lips. To ſound

Ut laus, ſic teſtimonium proprio ſordeſcit in ore ſound our own praiſe, ſounds our ſhame. If a man have never ſo much worth in him, he diſhonours himſelf by being the trumpet of it.

Thirdly, A mans own teſtimony is not legal in his own cauſe. The ſame perſon muſt not be a witneſs and a party. He that juſtifies himſelf, condemns himſelf; for his very juſtification is an accuſation. If a mans own witneſs may be taken, who ſhall be condemned? Who will not acquit himſelf? The witneſs of our own hearts is much (1 John 3.21.) but not enough; If our own hearts condemn us not, then have we confidence towards God. But the reaſon of this confidence is not in the bare, ſingle witneſs of our own hearts, but in the co-witneſs of God with our hearts. Conſcience is therefore a thouſand witneſſes, becauſe God who is more then a thouſand Conſciences, joynes with Conſcience, both in accuſing and in acquitting. The Phariſees ſaid unto Chriſt, Thou beareſt record of thy ſelf, thy record is not true (John 8.13, 16.) They ſpake upon a legal ground or Maxim; Chriſt anſwereth, Though I bear record of my ſelf, yet my record is true. Chriſt doth not deny the Rule, but ſhews that he was above it; and therefore adds, It is ſaid in your Law, that the teſtimony of two men is true, I am not alone, for the Father is with me: As if he had ſaid, I alone bear not witneſs of my ſelf, I have another, even the Father that ſent me, he beareth witneſs of me; therefore mine is not a ſingle teſtimony: in that caſe indeed I were to be reproved, and my witneſs were inſufficient; My own mouth would condemn me, if there were no mouth to teſtifie for me, but only mine: If I were but as an ordinary man, I might be kept to the ordinary rule. God only is a ſufficient witneſs to himſelf.

Hominis innocentia duobus teſtibus conſtare debet. 1. Deo, 2. Conſcientia. Ergo ſi tibi vides habere bonū conſcientiæ teſtimonium, bene quidem ſed divinum adhuc de tua innocentia expectādum eſt.

Mine own mouth ſhall condemn me. But of what? Surely of folly (2 Cor. 12.21.) I am become a fool in glorying, ſaith Paul to his Corinthians; but I am not a fool of my own making; ye have compelled me, for I ought to have been commended of you. That is, ye ought to have given a teſtimony of me; if ye had been juſt to me, I had been condemned in juſtifying my ſelf. Then it is a duty to witneſs for our ſelves, when others neglect that duty.

The Original word which we tranſlate condemn, is directly oppoſite to that which we tranſlate juſtifie; and ſome render it by a new-coyn'd word in Latine, which we cannot put literally into Engliſh, but by coyning a word for it, thus; If I juſtifie my ſelf, my own mouth would ungodlifie me, or declare me to be ungodly.

Here two Queſtions ariſe; the one is, Why may not Job juſtifie himſelf? The Lord hath juſtified him, the Lord ſaid that he was a perfect man (that's the next expreſſion, If I ſay I am perfect, it ſhall prove me perverſe.) The Lord had ſaid of Job, chap. 1. That he was perfect and upright, one that feared God, and eſchewed evil; why may not Job ſay as much of himſelf as the Lord had done?

Solomon reſolves this Query (Prov. 27.2.) Let another man praiſe thee, and not thine own mouth, a ſtranger, and not thine own lips. Man muſt not ſpeak the evil he knows by others unleſs called, nor the good he knows by himſelf. To ſpeak good of our ſelves with our own mouths, is much like doing good by other mens hands. We muſt not act things praiſe-worthy by proxie, but it is beſt to be praiſed by proxie for our good acts. Now as man may not praiſe himſelf, though other men may praiſe him, ſo he muſt not praiſe himſelf, though God praiſeth him. Not he that commendeth himſelf is approved, but he whom the Lord commendeth, 2 Cor. 10.18.

Secondly, Why doth Job ſay here, I will not juſtifie my ſelf, I will not ſay I am perfect, Whereas in other places he juſtifies himſelf, and ſaith that he was perfect? If you read the twenty ninth and thirtieth Chapters of this Book, you ſhall find them to be but a continued juſtification of himſelf, or a Manifeſt of his own innocency. There he proclaims how holy he had been, and how righteous in all his wayes, that he had put on judgment as a Robe, and juſtice as a Diadem; that he had delivered the oppreſſed, and diſtributed of his fulneſs to the neceſſities of the poor. Thoſe two Chapters being a profeſſed Catalogue of his good deeds, why is he ſo ſhie and modeſt here?

Pius ſenſus pulchrè expreſſus in hac Jobi diſputatione

I anſwer, In this and the like expreſſions, while Job ſaith, he will not juſtifie himſelf, or ſay he is perfect, he declines the plea of perſonal righteouſneſs or perfection in the ſight of God, as hath frequently appeared in this Argument. But in thoſe Chapters, and in other places where he is upon his defence, he ſpeaks only in reference to the charge of his friends; as if he had ſaid, Ye accuſe me for an hypocrite, and cenſure me deeply, I can juſtifie my ſelf, and plead my innocency with you, though I have not a word to ſay for my ſelf before the Lord; I will bear any thing at his hands, let him ſay of me, and do with me what he pleaſeth, I will take ſhame to my ſelf, and give him glory; but as for you, my friends, I will juſtifie my ſelf in your ſight, I am not the man ye take me for.

nunc peccatum ſuum dimiſsè confitentis, nunc juſtitiam ſuam acerrimè defendentis. Merl.

Theſe ſpeakings are not croſs to each other, but help us to underſtand Job's ſence in this Argument. He ſtands much upon his integrity, but it is to his friends; he humbles himſelf in the ſight of his own vileneſs, but it is to God. Paul (Rom. 7.24.) bewailes his ſinfulneſs; O wretched man that I am, who ſhall deliver me from this body of ſin and of death! I find a law in my members rebelling againſt the law of my mind: Yet, when he anſwers falſe Apoſtles about his perſonal carriage, and the diſcharge of his Apoſtleſhip, then he ſaith, I know nothing by my ſelf (1 Cor. 4.4.) I am charged thus and thus, I am ſlandered ſo and ſo, but my conſcience acquits me, I know nothing by my ſelf: The ſinfulneſs of his Nature made him groan and ſigh out, O wretched man that I am! The ſincerity of his heart made him boaſt and ſing out like a happy man, as ſorrowful, but alwayes rejoycing. A man may be conſcious of his own natural corruption, and yet confident of his own practical integrity.

If I ſay I am perfect, it ſhall alſo prove me perverſe.

Theſe words in ſtrictneſs of ſence refer to the inward purpoſe of his heart or bent of his mind, as the former did to the outward way of his life; If I ſay I am perfect, that is, if I ſay there is no meditated obliquity in my heart, no intended goings aſtray or wandrings, no cloſe hypocriſie or falſeneſs there; If I ſhould ſay, I am perfect in the bent and purpoſes of my heart, yet this is not ſuch as I dare appear before God in; as if I juſtifie my ſelf by the actings and puttings forth of my life, my mouth will condemn me; ſo, if I ſay I am perfect in the thinkings and ſecret motions of my ſpirit, it will prove me perverſe.

תם Qui certo eſt propoſito עקש qui vago & diverſo, qui ſe dividit & diſtorquet in duas vias. Coe. In Hebræo ſimplex eſt, perverſicavit me.

The word which we tranſlate [perverſe,] ſignifies to wander, as a man uncertain of his way (Prov. 28.18.) Whoſo walketh uprightly (having the frame of his inward man right) he ſhall be ſaved; but he that is perverſe in his wayes (having a wandring, vagrant mind, going ſometime this way, and ſometime that, holding ſomewhat of this, and ſomewhat of that, but nothing to purpoſe or ſteadily of any thing, this man) ſhall fall at once; a man of an uncertain ſpirit ſhall have a certain downfal. But was Job thus perverſe? No, Job was perfect, and not perverſe; yet a boaſt of his perfection, had been a proof of his perverſeneſs: Nothing diſcovers an evil heart more then a profeſſion of its own goodneſs.

Perverſus evadam.

It ſhall prove me perverſe.] What ſhall prove me perverſe? Some refer it to the former clauſe, My mouth (or the ſpeaking of thoſe words, I am perfect) ſhall prove me perverſe. Others refer it to God; God will prove me perverſe, if I juſtifie my ſelf. The Seventy leave it without reſtriction to any antecedent; If I ſay I am perfect, I ſhall go away perverſe, or I ſhall appear perverſe.

Obſerve hence that famous Goſpel-doctrine, No man can be juſtified before God by the works of the Law.

Nobilis locus clariſſimè oſtendens neminem ex lege juſtificari. Coc.

It is as noble a proof of free juſtification in the Old Teſtament, as any in the New. The Saints have been acquainted with this truth from the beginning, That man is nothing in himſelf, and that free grace doth all. The doctrine of Free Grace is no new doctrine: the doctrine of Free Will is (Prov. 20.9.) Who can ſay, I have made my heart clean, I am pure from my ſin? And that he muſt ſay, who juſtifies himſelf before God. Every Legal Juſticiary takes up this language, I have made my heart clean, I am pure from my ſin. It is a task too hard for men, yea, for all the Angels in heaven to make one heart clean; only Jeſus Chriſt is able to fetch out the filth and rubbiſh that lodgeth in, and pollutes our ſpirits. To be a heart-cleanſer is the peculiar work and honour of Chriſt. A man that knows himſelf, and ſees his face in the glaſs of the Word (which flatters no man) will never ſay, I am clean: nor will he ſay, I can cleanſe my ſelf. How many ſpots and blots, how many defects and deformities will that glaſs repreſent unto him, which he is not able to heal or fetch out? Every mans face will bluſh, who ſees his heart or his life in that glaſs, unleſs he, Who beholding himſelf, goeth his way, and ſtraightway forgetteth what manner of man he was (Jam. 1. 24.)

Quot tenebræ, quot nubes, quot maculæ? quem non pudebit ſi fidem ſuam & innocentiam ad illuſtre illud legis ſpeculũ contempletur? Coc.

Secondly obſerve, Job had received teſtimony from He could produce Letters teſtimonial, ſubſcribed by the hand of heaven, that he was a juſt and a perfect man, one that feared God and eſchewed evil. Yet this Job (let God ſpeak as well as he will of him) he will not ſpeak well of himſelf to God: Let God report him perfect to men, he will not report himſelf perfect before God. Though Job had a free and a full Certificate of his innocency (not one bought, begged, or got with flattery) yet he forbears in this caſe to bring it forth and read it to his friends.

> They who have moſt real worth and holineſs in them, are leaſt in their own eyes, and loweſt in their own thoughts.

They of whom God gives the faireſt teſtimony, give the meaneſt of themſelves; he cares not much to appear to be, what God aſſures him he is. God was poſitive (without Ifs or Ands) in his opinion of him; Thou art perfect, but he puts it into a ſuppoſition, and concludes with an If, If I were perfect, &c.

In ver. 21. Job carries on the ſame buſineſs, and bewraies a more humble and ſelf-denying frame of mind then before.

Though I were perfect, yet, &c.

There is a contention among Interpreters, to which part of the Chapter this verſe 21. belongs, whether to that which went before, or to that which follows after. I ſhall open it firſt, as the ſence of it may be connected with the matter preceding.

Verſe 21. Though I were perfect, yet would I not know my own ſoul; I would deſpiſe my life.

Though I were perfect.] Obſerve the gradation. He had ſaid before, If I plead with God, and juſtifie my ſelf, I ſhall be condemned and proved perverſe. But put my caſe at the beſt, that I juſtifying my ſelf, the Lord ſhould accept my juſtification, and ſhould concur with my vote that I am perfect, yet I could take no joy in this. If the Lord ſhould condeſcend to know me under that notion, I would not adventure to know my own ſoul under the notions of my perfections. The thing is an abhorring to me.

I would not know my ſoul.

Why not? There are two ſenſes given: Firſt, thus; If I were perfect, that is, if upon debate and pleading with God, I ſhould come off perfect in my own judgment, certainly then I did not know my own ſoul. That's one ſenſe, and ſo it falls in well with the former words; If I ſhould juſtifie my ſelf, my mouth would prove me perverſe. And ſo the point that I ſhall note from it, is,

> That, Ignorance of our ſelves is the cauſe of proud and high thoughts of our ſelves.

He that knows himſelf, muſt know himſelf to be imperfect, ſeeing our greateſt perfection in this life, is, to know our own imperfections. When we ſee any ſtanding upon their own bottoms, and crying up themſelves, poor ſouls, how they are benighted? How little do they know of their own hearts and lives? How little do they know of God? They are in darkneſs, therefore they ſee not their own ſpots. If a man, whoſe face is foul or deformed, ſhould boaſt of his beauty, would you not ſay, this man knows not his own face; or, ſurely he hath not look'd in a Glaſs to day. May we not much rather ſay to him who juſtifies himſelf, and ſaith he is perfect, ſure you never ſaw your face in the glaſs, in the pure Cryſtal glaſs of the Word. He that is in Goſpel-light, ſees himſelf, and as light encreaſeth, ſo doth his ſight of himſelf: And the more he ſees himſelf, the more evil he ſees in himſelf. In a cloudy day we think the air is clear, but the ſhining of the Sun ſhews us millions of motes in the air: if a man ſees no motes in his life (ſome ſee not beams there) it is, becauſe he walks in darkneſs, and hath not the light, he doth not know his own ſoul. That's a uſeful interpretation of the words, and the firſt ſence.

Talem de me cogitationẽ non admittam, ſed omnino contemnam, & de mente mea penitus excutiam. Quamvis bene recteq; vixerim, hoc penitus deſpiciam. Bol.

Secondly, If I were perfect; If it ſhould be told me I were perfect, I would not know my own ſoul, that is, I would not take notice of my ſelf as perfect, I would be a ſtranger to my ſelf under that title, I would ſhake the thoughts of ſuch a perfection out of my mind, as much as I would ſhake the thoughts of ſinful corruption out of my mind. It is as dangerous to lodge or nouriſh thoughts of our own perfection, as to lodge thoughts of the moſt ſinful corruptions. A holy heart loves good thoughts, but it loves not thoughts of its own goodneſs.

Admirabilis & omni acceptatione digniſſima doctrina, ac ſi eſſet ex puriſſimis evangelii fontibus hauſta. E cœlo deſcendit, Noſce teipſum. Noverim me, noverim te. Auguſt.

So then, I would not know my ſoul] imports not affected ignorance, but elected knowledge. Job was no ſtranger to his own ſoul, he had ſtudied himſelf, and was well vers'd in his own boſom. Self-knowledge is a duty, and ſelf-knowledge may be a ſin. Chriſtians ſhould read themſelves more then Books, and yet they may pore too much upon themſelves. Heathens gave us this Leſſon, and they ſay it came from heaven, Know thy ſelf. Auguſtine is quick upon it, Lord, I know MEE, and I know THEE. To know God and our ſelves, is the ſum of all knowledge. God doth not know him who knows not himſelf. There is a double knowledge of our ſelves.

Talis ignorans à Deo ignoratur.

Firſt, Of ſinful ſelf, or of our ſins and failings.

Secondly, Of renewed ſelf, or of our virtues and graces. Not to know how frail we are, how ſinful we are, to what corruptions and temptations we are moſt ſubject, is a ſinful and corrupt ignorance. To know our imperfections, is a part of our perfection.

Non noſcere animam, phraſis eſt Hebræa, quæ tantum rei deſpectum præ ſe fert, ut illam etiam reſpicere aut aliquo modo noſcere quis renuat?

Secondly, Not to know our Graces and Virtues, what the work of the Spirit, and the new Nature within us is, this alſo is a ſinful ignorance. It is no honour to be what we do not know our ſelves to be; it is to be in the ſtate of a beaſt, not to reflect upon our own eſtate. The new creature is light, and carries a light for its own diſcovery. The reproveable knowledge of our own ſouls is not the knowledge of intuition, whereby we apprehend what we are, but the knowledge of oſtentation, whereby we are proud of, or truſt upon what we are. We have an ordinary ſaying amongſt us, which reaches this ſence fully, Such a woman is beautiful, and ſhe knows it; ſuch a one is a proper man, and he knows it; ſuch a one hath many good parts, a very fine wit, and he knows it; that is, ſuch perſons pride and lift themſelves up in their perfections. You ſhall have a ſoul that will know it ſelf into I know not how much pride; many ſtand reflecting upon their own perfections; either external, how proper, ſtrong and beautiful they are; or internal, how witty and eloquent they are, what excellent parts and gifts, what a mimble tongue, what ſound judgments they have, till they loſe Chriſt in this crowd of themſelves. This is a dangerous knowledge, a knowledge worſe then ignorance. Better be without knowledge, then know our knowledge thus. As to reflect upon ſin, to know our ſelves in our unbelief, vanity and paſſions, &c. humble us; and a ſoul in confeſſing of ſin before God, looks long upon his dark part, upon his wants and failings for this end, that he may be humbled; ſo to reflect upon our good deeds or graces, to know our ſelves in thoſe adornings of love, patience, humility, faith, &c. hazards us upon pride, and ſome ſtand gazing ſo long upon theſe excellencies, that they are lifted up, and become very proud.

Thus all men who are proud in ſpirituals, know their own ſouls. So Job would not know his own ſoul. Hence note,

> That, A gracious heart rejoyceth in nothing but in the righteouſneſs of Chriſt alone.

He will not know his ſoul in his own perfections. A godly man would have God know him in the worſt, but he will not know himſelf in the beſt. He would not have a ſin hid from God, but he would hide all his goodneſs from himſelf. He will know every good thing before he doth it, but when tis done, he cares not to know it any more. So the Apoſtle (Phil. 3. 8, 9.) I account all things but loſs for the excellency of the knowledge of Chriſt Jeſus my Lord, for whom I have ſuffered the loſs of all things, and do count them but dung, that I may win Chriſt, and may be found in him, not having mine own righteouſneſs, which is of the Law, &c. Paul the Apoſtle would not know Paul the Phariſee. Legal righteouſneſs was loſs to him, when he had found Chriſt. Legal righteouſneſs was dung to him, when he had a ſight of righteouſneſs by Chriſt. The Phariſee, Luk. 18.

had all upon account, and he hoped to make good gain upon his accounts: he knew how many alms he had given, how well he had paid his tithes, and how often he had faſted. He made a ſtock of thoſe things, and put them among his treaſures, which Paul made his loſs, and put among the dung. He that thus knows his own ſoul, hath no true knowledge of Jeſus Chriſt.

So much of this verſ. 21. as it is a ſuppoſition, and hath connexion with the words foregoing; as it refers to what follows.

The words are rendred in the form of a poſition, I am perfect, I know not my ſoul, I deſpiſe my life. And ſo divers interpretations are given of it.

Firſt, Thus, I am perfect, &c. that is, my heart is upright, and I have ever prized and valued mine own integrity at ſuch a rate, that in compariſon thereof, I have not at all regarded or prized my own life or ſoul, that is, the greateſt comforts and ſweeteſt enjoyment of my life. My life is but a trifle to my conſcience. And ſo the meaning is, like that (Deut. 33. 9.) where the word know is uſed in this ſence, concerning Levi, Who ſaid to his Father and Mother, I have not ſeen him, neither did he acknowledge his Brethren, nor know his own Children. Levi ſlighted all relations, when they ſtood in competition with the diſcharge of that duty which the Lord called him to, he knew neither father nor mother, nor brother nor child, one nor other, he had no regard at all to them, ſo he might do the will of God. This was the commendation of Levi, and the priviledge of the Prieſthood was aſſigned to that Tribe upon this Service. Grace will not hearken to the cry of Nature, when it hears the call of God. Job is conceived to ſpeak here at the ſame rate as Levi did, or higher; I am upright and perfect in heart toward God, and ſuch hath my perfection and uprightneſs been, that I have not known my own ſoul, I have not regarded any ſelf-intereſts which have ſtood in the way of my obedience unto God, or juſtice toward man. His friends charged him as if he had been a corrupt Judge, or an oppreſſor of the poor; I (ſaith he) am ſo far from valuing worldly goods or riches beyond my own integrity, that I do not value my life to my integrity. The Apoſtle Paul makes a like profeſſion (Acts 20. 24.) His ſpirit was never ſo free and royal, as when he was going bound in ſpirit to Jeruſalem: The Spirit witneſſing to him, that bonds and afflictions did abide him in every City. None of theſe things (ſaith he) move me, neither count I my life dear (I will not know my life, let it go which way it will) ſo I may finiſh my courſe with joy, and the miniſtry which I have received of the Lord Jeſus. Paul was none of your poor Merchants, who are afraid of their skins. Paul's life was cheap in his thoughts, when he was to make an adventure for Chriſt; he (as Job here) would not know his life for the omiſſion of a neceſſary known duty, or the commiſſion of a known ſin.

Non novi animam præ integritate mea, i.e. ea integritate ſum, ut nunquam anima aut vita mea ratione abduci potuerim ab integritate mea.

This firſt ſence yields this profitable meditation,

He whoſe heart is upright, prefers his uprightneſs before all worldly commodities, and before his own life.

Chriſt calls his Diſciples to this height of reſolution (Luk. 14. 26.) If any man come to me, and hate not his father and mother, and children, yea, and his own life, he cannot be my Diſciple, that is, the ſervice of Chriſt, and his life into the balance, life muſt be a light thing weighed with the ſervice of Chriſt.

A ſecond interpretation gives this ſence, I am perfect, yet I know not my own ſoul; that is, I am ſo preſſed and overwhelmed with theſe afflictions, that I cannot feel my ſelf, I ſcarce know whether I am alive or dead; I know not where I am, my ſoul doth not act its offices, my ſoul is (as it were) benum'd in me, or aſleep; there is not that vigor or activity in my ſpirit which I have found heretofore: I deſpiſe ſuch a life as this is; who would live a life which is a continued death? There is a truth in this. For as extream and exceſſive joyes carry a man ſo far beyond himſelf, that he ſcarce knows whether he be alive or no (ſome have had experience of ſuch raptures and extaſies of joy in communion with God) 'twas ſo with Paul in a caſe ſomewhat like (2 Cor. 12. (Whether in the body, I cannot tell; or whether out of the body, I cannot tell (ſaith he) for my part, I could not tell what to make of my ſelf, or what became of my body: As (I ſay) it is thus in the exceſſes of ſpiritual joy and conſolation, ſo ſometimes in the exceſſes of anguiſh and ſorrow, a man ſcarce knows whether he be alive or dead, what his ſtate is, whether in the body or out of the body; he regards neither hot nor cold, friend or foe, wife or children, he forgets to eat his bread.

אני תם Abſumor dolore, & ſic תם aliter ſumetur quam priore verſiculo Neſcio animam, i.e. meipſum præ dolore, ideo averſor vitam meã. Rab. Levi.

A third expounds the words as an admiration, I am perfect, and do ye think I know not my own ſoul? Do ye think I am not acquainted with my ſelf? Am I a ſtranger at home? Have I ſo deſpiſed my life (think ye) that I take no notice of it, and am either careleſs or inſenſible how things go with me? As if he had ſaid, I am perfect, and this is the work of a man, whoſe wayes are perfect before the Lord, he knows and conſiders his own ſoul, and grows aſſured how matters are with him: Ye, my friends, charge me with theſe and theſe failings, and will force them upon me whether I will or no; though I deny your charge, yet ye re-join and re-affirm it upon me, as though I knew not my own ſoul, or as if ye knew me better then my ſelf: But I am perfect in heart, and I know my own ſoul, I do not ſo deſpiſe my life, as if it were not worth the looking after, or as if I were not worth the ground I go upon.

Laſtly, Others underſtand it thus (which appears the faireſt and moſt ſutable interpretation of theſe latter ones) I am perfect, neither do I know my own ſoul; that is, I am not conſcious of any evil in my ſoul, I know of no ſecret guilt or corruption hidden there; and ſo ſcience is put for conſcience; I know not, is, I am not privy to any evil that my ſoul delights in and keeps cloſe, either againſt God or man, yet ſuch evils are upon me, that I deſpiſe my life. The ſpirit of a man (ſaith Solomon) will bear his infirmity. Then what a load or infirmity preſſes that man whoſe life is a burden to him, though no ſin burden his ſpirit? Troubles of conſcience do often make the moſt peaceable outward eſtate of this life troubleſome. And troubles in the outward eſtate may make thoſe who have great peace of conſcience weary of their lives. What it is to deſpiſe life, and that afflictions make this life burdenſome, hath been ſhewed in the third and ſixth Chapters, and will come more fully to be conſidered at the firſt verſe of the tenth Chapter, whither I refer the Reader, and forbear to inſiſt upon it here.

Integer ſum, nec ſcio animam meam, i. e. quicquam perverſi in anima mea.

I ſhall only add, that Job makes theſe words as a tranſition to the ſecond part of his anſwer to the charge of Bildad. For having before given glory to God, by acknowledging his Juſtice, Wiſdom, Power and Soveraignty in all his actings, he paſſes to an apology for himſelf, or a defence of his own integrity againſt the inſultations, ſuſpitions and accuſations of his friends: As if he had ſaid, I have deſired to ſave the honour of God from the leaſt touch of an uncomely thought, much more then do I abhor proud and rude contendings with him; but as for you, my friends, ye muſt give me leave to be plain with you, I am not the man you take me for, I have none of that baſeneſs of ſpirit with which ye charge me, I am no hypocrite, I am perfect in heart with God, and upright in my dealings with men; and yet I cannot but complain of my ſad afflictions, and renew my deſires, that the Lord would give me eaſe by death, and acquit me from the hand of theſe calamities, by cutting the thread of my life. I know ye judge theſe outward evils as the brand of a wicked man, of a man hated by God: but Ile maintain a Propoſition contradictory to that your Opinion; ye ſhall never prove me wicked, becauſe afflicted; for thus I hold, and will hold it againſt you all, as long as I am able to ſpeak, That the Lord deſtroyeth the perfect and the wicked. The Argument may be formed up thus;

Ingreditur in alteram ſuæ reſponſionis partẽ quâ juſtitiã ſuam defendit à gravi & libera integritatis ſuæ & animi bene conſcii aſſertione. Merc.

That cannot be made a clear proof of mans impiety, which falleth alike upon good and bad.

But great and deſtroying outward afflictions fall equally upon good and bad.

Therefore great and deſtroying afflictions cannot be made a clear proof of mans impiety.

The proof of the Minor Propoſition or Aſſumption is contained in the three verſes immediately following. The diſcuſſion and opening of which will give both light and ſtrength to this Argument.

VERS. 22, 23, 24.

This is one thing, therefore I ſaid it, He deſtroyeth the perfect and the wicked.

If the ſcourge ſlay ſuddenly, he will laugh at the trial of the innocent.

The earth is given into the hand of the wicked: he covereth the faces of the Judges thereof; if not, where, and who is he?

THis ſpeech of Job cauſed a Learned Interpreter to tremble, when he read it, conceiving, that it ſavoured ſtrongly of impiety and blaſphemy, as if Job had mingled the ſtate of the wicked and of the righteous in one; or, as if his mind were, that the Lord did not diſtinctively order the affairs of the world by the dictates of his wiſe providence, but left them to be huddled together by inexorable fate or blind fortune; therefore he concludes that Job rather perſonates a man void of the true knowledge and fear of God, then ſpeaks his own opinion. Thus he cenſures: but let Job be well weighed, and his diſcourſe will appear full of truth and holineſs.

Videtur hic locus impietatem includere, quaſi apud Job unum & idem ſit piorum & improborum judicium, quodq; Deus hæc inferiora non curet. Iſid. Clar.

This is one thing, therefore I ſaid it.

This is one thing.] As if he had ſaid, You have ſpoken many things to me about the power, greatneſs, juſtice and wiſdom of God, in all which I agree with you, ye, and I have no difference about thoſe points, I have alwayes thought highly of God, and I deſire to think humbly of my ſelf: but here is one thing, wherein I muſt for ever diſagree from you, here we muſt part.

So that this verſe is as the limit-ſtone between Job's opinion, and that of his friends. Here he ſpeaks out the ſpecial tenet which he holds in oppoſition to them. As if he had ſaid, I yield and ſubſcribe to your judgment in all but this one, and in this one thing I muſt be your adverſary, though I will not be your enemy. I ſay it, and ſay it again,

Hoc unum eſt meæ aſſertionis caput.

He deſtroyeth both the righteous and the wicked.

This is one thing.] This is uniform: So Mr. Broughton reads it, and in this thing I am uniform, or of the ſame mind and judgment, I am not at all moved from my hold, or ſhaken by any thing ye have ſaid.

Therefore I ſaid it.] That is, becauſe I am of this opinion and judgment, therefore I will not conceal, but bring it forth, and tell you plainly what my thoughts are. The manner of ſpeech, I ſaid it, ſignifies a vehement aſſeveration, a liberty and boldneſs of ſpeech, or a conſtant adhering and ſticking to what hath been aſſerted, I will abide by this poſition as long as I live, I cannot be beaten from it, not becauſe it is my opinion, but becauſe it is a truth.

Before I come to the aſſertion it ſelf, obſerve from the preface, This is one thing.

> That truth is ever the ſame, and we ſhould be the ſame in maintaining truth.

When a man ſpeaks a thing, of which he is very ſure, and reſolved to hold, he ſaith, in our language, That's once, that is, I have ſaid it, and I will not unſay it, or eat my words. As Pilate when he was deſired to change the inſcription which he had put upon the croſs of Chriſt, anſwered, What I have written, I have written, I will not alter a letter or a title: So a confident aſſertor anſwers, What I have ſaid, I have ſaid; This is one thing, therefore I ſaid it. Truth changes not, why then ſhould I, who have born witneſs to this truth? Truth muſt be ſtood to. We have reaſon to ſtick to truth, for truth will ſtick to us; we may ſay it, and ſay it again, for it will do us good again and again. The declarative truth of God is like Chriſt the eſſential truth, The ſame yeſterday, and to day, and for ever. Though it be very old, yet, it waxeth not old.

And becauſe this in the Text was a great truth, the very hinge upon which the whole diſpute between Job and his friends turned, therefore he is ſo reſolute in it. Whence note further,

> That great and fundamental truths are to be maintained with much boldneſs and ſtrength of reſolution.

As it is a good bargain to buy a little truth with the expence of much peace: So it is our wiſdom, as well as our duty, to maintain it with the expence of our peace. They are the worſt ſort of cowards who render up the Holds of truth upon compoſition. No terms honourable enough can be given for the giving up of that. I grant that our peace and lives are richer commodities, then ſhould be hazarded about trifling nicities, and the crochets of Schoolmen: but we ought to contend earneſtly (and we cannot contend too reſolutely) for the faith which was once delivered to the Saints. Jude v. 3. Obſerve, > Thirdly, A man that hath got one ſound principle about any point, will from that refute and repel all objections that can come againſt him.

Job bottoms himſelf upon this principle, That God deſtroyes both good and bad alike with outward deſtruction. This is his great Axiome, the very foundation upon which he buildeth all he holds contradictory to his friends; the Fort-Royal in which he defends himſelf againſt all their oppoſitions and aſſaults. One truth well mann'd and mannag'd ſcatters and foils a whole Army of errors. One Text thorowly underſtood, gives anſwer to all objections, and unites all the knots of a controverſie.

Super hoc axioma tanquā ſuper firmiſſimum fundamentū quicquid ad ſuæ innocentiæ contra eos defenſionem allaturus eſt, ſtabiliat. Bol.

But what's this one thing upon which Job makes his boaſt, and cries victoria? 'Tis this, He deſtroyeth the perfect and the wicked. A harſh doctrine, yet a good one. God is to be honoured deſtroying, as well as ſaving, killing as well as making alive.

The word which we tranſlate to deſtroy, ſignifies an utter blotting out or conſumption of a thing; noting that the outward diſpenſations of God may be ſevere and terrible to the perfect, as well as to the wicked. He doth not ſay, the Lord afflicts the one, and deſtroyes the other; chaſtens the one, and conſumes the other; but he conſumes and deſtroyes the one as well the other, He deſtroyes

The perfect.] Who is a perfect man in the language of Scripture, and wherein this perfection conſiſts, hath been opened more then once already, and therefore I ſhall not ſtay upon it here. Only in general, The perfect man is the man in the higheſt form of holineſs; a man full of knowledge, faith and good works, one of the firſt three in grace, yea, he may be the firſt of the three: yet all this is no ſecurity againſt the ſoreſt affliction, againſt affliction to deſtruction temporal, He deſtroyeth the perfect,

תם

And the wicked.] Or the unquiet and tumultuous man. Every wicked man is an unſetled and an unquiet man. He hath no where to reſt, who hath not Chriſt to reſt upon: He is alwayes out of the way, who is not in him, who is the way. Wicked men reſt only in doing evil, they are never quiet but in motions unto ſin. God ſhews us their nature in their name. Unquiet is their name, and unquietneſs is with them. Wicked men trouble and vex others as much as they can, but they trouble and vex themſelves moſt of all.

רשע Inquietum per multas hujus ſeculi curas ſolicitudineſq; vagantem.

By theſe wicked ones the Septuagint underſtand mighty and rich men. Riches are ſo often got by wickedneſs, and are occaſions to ſo many of making them wicked, that wicked and rich may ſometimes change names, or ſignifie the ſame perſon.

LXX. Impium pro potente & locuplete ſumunt.

One of the Greek Expoſitors underſtand the Text, of thoſe who are great in goodneſs, and ſtrong in faith, He deſtroyes the perfect, and he deſtroyes him that is moſt perfect, even the moſt eminent in holineſs, the talleſt Cedars in grace. As if the words implied only a gradation of good men, and not a diſtinction of good and bad.

Qui pietate inſignis & vita clarus. Polychr. Olymp.

But the letter of the Text hath no ſhew of reaſon at all for ſuch an interpretation, and therefore I ſhall paſs it by, and take the words as our tranſlation renders them, holding forth that grand dichotomy of mankind, He deſtroyeth the perfect and the wicked.

This Job affirms againſt Bildad's aſſertion (Chap. 8. 20.) who there gives his judgment thus. God will not caſt away a righteous man: which (though it may have a true ſence, yet Bildad's meaning being, that God will not caſt a godly man away in this life, or totally deſtroy him in temporals) Job denies, affirming that a godly man may not only be afflicted, but afflicted all his life, and die under that affliction, which in Bildad's ſence is to be caſt away. For though Bildad did not hold (as Eliphaz) that every man who is afflicted, is afflicted for wickedneſs (he thought a good man might be afflicted for the trial and exerciſe of his graces) yet he was very confident, that God never ſuffered a righteous man to be overwhelmed with affliction: but after ſome ſhort, though ſharp aſſaults, reſtored him again. And therefore Bildad numbered them alſo with the wicked, who were deſtroyed as well as afflicted. This Job refutes and argues againſt all along, conſtantly holding the contrary principle, that a godly man may be ſo afflicted, as to be deſtroyed;

ed, that he may be utterly and for ever ſtript of worldly comforts. Hence obſerve,

Good and bad, righteous and wicked are often involved in the ſame outward evils.

The ſpiritual eſtate of a righteous man is ſo ſtrong, and ordered in all things, that he can neither totally nor finally fall from it, or loſe it. Grace is above theſe hazards. But the temporal eſtate of a righteous man may be loſt, both totally and finally. Riches, and health and honour, are like themſelves, whoſoever is their maſter, fading and periſhing. A righteous man hath a higher tenure of things below, and holds them upon better terms then a wicked man doth; yet he holds them but for a term, they are not enduring ſubſtance to him, as not to others. A little that a righteous man hath is better then the riches of many wicked, (Pſal. 37. 16.) But the righteous may be deprived of what he hath, as ſoon as any of the wicked (Eccleſ. 1. 9.) No man knoweth either love or hatred by all that is before him; all things come alike to all, there is one event to the righteous and to the wicked; as is the good, ſo is the ſinner, and he that ſweareth as he that feareth an oath. Externals diſtinguiſh not internals. No mans ſpiritual eſtate is knowable by the view of his temporal. Say to the land of Iſrael, Thus ſaith the Lord, Behold, I am againſt thee, and I will draw forth my ſword out of his ſheath, (Ezek. 21. 3.) And what will the Lord do with it? Will he not bathe it in the blood of his enemies, and ſheath it in the bowels of wicked men? he will: but ſhall it be bathed in the blood of none elſe? The next words reſolve the doubt, And I will cut off from thee the righteous and the wicked. It is a terrible ſentence; ſword, famine, peſtilence, make no difference of men or manners; they know neither faces nor hearts. The beſt in a Nation may taſte the bloody cup, and feel the cold iron in their bowels, together with the worſt. The green tree, and the dry tree may be devoured by the ſame fire, as the Prophet ſhadows good and bad, or, as ſome think, good and better, falling into the ſame calamity. (Ezek. 20. 47.) with which that of Chriſt (Luke 23. 31.) ſeems more agreeable. The baſket of good figs goes into captivity with the baſket of evil figs, under which the good and bad among the Jews were typed, Jer. 24. 1, 2, 3.

Pœna ſatisfactoria, & medicinalis.

But though they fall under the ſame deſtruction, yet their caſe under it is as different, as the perſons are. Faith and holy Reaſon diſtinguiſh where ſenſe cannot.

Judgments upon the wicked men, are for ſatisfaction to the juſtice of God. They who are heirs of eternal death receive part of their inheritance in this life. All their puniſhments are payments, the fore-taſtes and beginnings of further ſorrows. Theſe judgments upon the Saints are only corrective or purgative. Their hopes are not deſtroyed, when their bodies or eſtates are. Their afflictions are medicinable, and heal while they kill. We muſt not wrap up the diſpenſation of God to different perſons in the ſame apprehenſions; though his act be the ſame to both, yet his meaning is not. How the afflictions of the wicked and righteous differ, the Reader ſhall find more diſtinctly opened, Chap. 5. 17.

Job goes on to confirm his opinion by a further Argument, in verſ. 23. For if any ſhould deny his minor propoſition, That the Lord deſtroyes the righteous and the wicked, he proves it thus, If the ſcourge ſlay ſuddenly, he laugheth at the trial of the innocent, that is, he carries himſelf (ſo far as the eye can judge) toward the innocent in their trials, as he doth toward the wicked under greateſt judgments: He laugheth at the one, and he laugheth at the other; which words are at once a confirmation and an aggravation of what he ſpake before.

Verſ. 23. If the ſcourge ſlay ſuddenly, he laugheth at the trial of the innocent.

Nullum eſt verbum hac ſententia & illa, elegit anima mea ſuſpendium durius atq; aſperius in hoc libro. Philip.

The former words gave offence to ſome minds, conceiving them inconſiſtent with grace and holineſs. Others are more offended with theſe. And in the letter it is ſtrange language to ſay, The Lord laughs at the trial of the innocent. This verſe, with the fifteenth of Chap. 7. So that my ſoul chooſeth ſtrangling, are concluded by a learned Writer, the ſharpeſt and moſt queſtionable paſſages in the whole book. Hence his conceit, that in Chap. 40. ver. 5. Job aims at theſe two ſpeeches, Once have I ſpoken, but I will not anſwer; that is, I will never ſpeak ſuch a word again, that, I chuſe ſtrangling; yea twice, but I will proceed no further: I ſaid alſo, That thou laugheſt at the trial of the innocent, but I will never ſay ſo any more. I am aſham'd that ever I opened my lips ſo unadviſedly; 'tis too too much that I have ſpoken twice ſo ſinfully, I will not ſpeak ſo thrice. The conceit is witty, but the charge lies too heavy. The ſence of the former hath been made out fair for Job, and I doubt not but his meaning may be ſo cleared in this latter, that he will need neither reproof nor apology for ſaying,

If the ſcourge ſlay ſuddenly, &c.] The Verb ſignifies to encompaſs or incircle a thing, to twine round about it. And ſo it alludes to the faſhion of a ſcourge, which begirts the offender, and at every blow winds about his body.

The ſcourge in Scripture is put for any affliction: Plague, Sword or Famine, are called ſcourges, Iſa. 10. 26. The Lord of hoſts ſhall ſtir up a ſcourge for him; what ſcourge? the next words expound it, a ſcourge, not of cords or wiers, but of Swords and Spears; a ſcourge, according to the ſlaughter of Midian at the rock Oreb, that is, the Lord will ſend a Sword upon him: So Gideon ſlew the Midianites, Judg. 7. commanding his Souldiers to make that terrible ſhout, when they fell on upon their Camp, The Sword of the Lord and of Gideon. That great warrior Attila King of the Hunnes, who haraſſed a great part of Chriſtendom with Fire and Sword, was called, Flagellum Dei, The ſcourge of God. The unbelieving Jews having made a Covenant with death, and an agreement with Hell, were very full of faith, ſuch as it was (Iſa. 28. 15.) When the over-flowing ſcourge ſhall paſs thorow, it ſhall not come unto us. An over-flowing ſcourge ('Tis an elegant metaphor taken from waters) is a common, ſpreading, ſweeping judgment, which like an over-flowing river encompaſſes, circles about, and fetches in all.

Flagellum inundans, i. e. omnes ſine delectu involvens et proculcans.

Slay ſuddenly.] Every ſcourge doth not ſlay, and many which ſlay do not ſlay ſuddenly. We uſually hear the claſhing of the ſcourge before we feel the ſmart of it. The Lord ſhews the ſcourge, and threatens it before he ſmites with it; he lets judgment hang like a black cloud over the heads of ſome, long before it falls upon them. But others He ſlayes ſuddenly.

Some take this ſuddenneſs of the ſcourge in ſlaying, for a mitigation of the judgment, and others for the heightning of it. In the former ſence ſuddenneſs doth not imply the ſudden coming of it, but the ſudden killing of it, a ſcourge which doth it's work quickly; ſo that a man doth not hang long as it were upon the rack of an affliction. The Church of the Jews (Lam. 4. 6.) complains of their afflictions, as if the judgment of Sodom and Gomorrah had been more eaſie and eligible then that which the Lord brought upon Jeruſalem; not that they thought God had dealt worſe with them then with Sodom and Gomorrah, but as to this particular, becauſe Sodom was overthrown in a moment, but Jeruſalem was pined away by degrees with famine. A ſudden ſcourge is a kind of mercy. Better die once then die alwayes: Or, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks concerning the afflictions of the Saints (Rom. 8. 36.) To be killed all the day long. When one under torture petitioned Tiberius the Roman Emperor, a bloody cruel Tyrant, that he might be quickly diſpatcht, he deſired not life or pardon, but a ſpeedy death: the Emperor ſent him word, That as yet he was not reconciled to him, or become his friend. His cruelty would neither ſuffer the man to live longer, nor die ſpeedily. And ſome obſerve, that as the Prophet expreſſes his trouble at the proſperity of the wicked in their lives, ſo at this kind of proſperity in their deaths, There are no bands in their death, but they are luſty and ſtrong, (Pſal. 73. 4.) that is, when they die, they die in their ſtrength, they are not pined away with long and tedious ſickneſs: They live in pleaſure, and die with eaſe. They are not bound to their beds, and tied down with the cords of chronical, lingering diſeaſes. It is ſome favour (if the ſcourge muſt ſlay) to be ſlain, in this ſence, ſuddenly.

Nondum tecum in gratiā redii

Non ſunt nodi in morte eorum.

But here the ſcourge ſlaying ſuddenly, is a judgment coming unexpectedly, They who ſleep in ſecurity ſeldom dream of ſcourges. Obſerve hence,

God can ſend death and affliction in a moment.

When they ſhall ſay, Peace and ſafety; then ſudden deſtruction ſtruction cometh upon them, as travel upon a woman with child, and they ſhall not eſcape (1 Theſ. 5. 3.) Wicked men are never ſo near deſtruction, as when they are moſt ſecure. And that (by the way) is the reaſon why we have leaſt cauſe to fear thoſe men, who fear God leaſt: Security ſprings from infidelity, and both from ſleighting, if not contemning the Word of God; no marvel then if the Lord haſten his wrath to juſtifie his truth, and ſlay them on a ſudden, who would not believe, no not at leiſure. But to the point. The Prophet deſcribes it elegantly (*Iſa.*30.13.) This iniquity ſhall be to you as a breach ready to fall; that is, this iniquity ſhall produce a judgment, which ſhall be to you as a breach ready to fall, Swelling out in an high wall, whoſe breaking cometh ſuddenly at an inſtrnt. If once a high built wall do but ſwell, down it comes. Such a ſwelling wall fell upon, and ſlew twenty and ſeven thouſand of Benhadads ſcattered army (1 King.20.30.) And ſuch a tower in Siloe fell upon eighteen, and ſlew them (Luk.13.4.) The Prophet Jeremy at once imprecates and foretels a ſpeedy ſcourge upon the gain-ſaying Jews, Let a cry be heard from their houſes, when thou ſhalt bring a troop ſuddenly upon them, Jer.18.22. This hath been the caſe of many among us, who thinking of no danger have been ſurprized by a troop, themſelves made priſoners, and their houſes ſpoil'd in one hour. Such was the condition of our Brethren in Ireland; it is almoſt incredible how ſuddenly that ſcourge ſlew them: there was ſcarce a Proteſtant that had ſo much as a ſuſpition of the danger; nay, ſome would not believe it, when a great part of the Country was on a flame, and the enemy had butchered thouſands. That ſcourge (if ever any) ſlew ſuddenly the perfect and the wicked. As mercies may come ſo ſuddenly to our ſenſes, that they overcome our faith, ſo may judgments. Some have been ſurprized with mercy, (Pſal. 126.4.) When the Lord turned our captivity as the ſtreams in the South: that is, gave us ſudden deliverance, (Rivers in the South, riſe not from a conſtant ſpring, but from accidental rains, which make violent land-flouds on a ſudden.) At the approach of this ſudden mercy, the Jews were like to them that dream. So when the Lord ſends ſudden judgments, rivers of calamity, rivers of blood, as rivers in the South; when he brings in captivity, as rivers in the South, then are we in a dream too, and are not only deſtroyed, but diſtracted and amazed. But how faſt ſoever judgments come, they come not ſuddenly upon them who are awake, much leſs on them who are watching for them when they come.

If the ſcourge ſlay ſuddenly; What then?

He will laugh at the trial of the innocent.

Mr. Broughton reads it thus, He ſcorneth at the melting away of the innocent. The reaſon of the different reading is, becauſe the Hebrew word may ſpring either from a root, ſignifying to tempt and try; or from another, To melt and diſſolve, He ſcorneth at the melting away of the innocent. Afflictions are melting, They diſſolve our comforts, yea, our very hearts; in the ſame ſence that godly ſorrow breaks our hearts. Pity ſhould be ſhewn to him that is melted, Chap.6. but ye forſake the fear of the Almighty. So Mr. Broughton tranſlates there, The Lord tempted Abraham (Gen. 22. 1.) that is, the Lord tried his faith, to find out of what ſtrength it was, and how much he could truſt him in that great buſineſs of ſacrificing his ſon.

He will laugh at the trial of the innocent.] At their melting or trying by afflictions. The difficulty is, How God laughs at this trial? The word notes deriſion or ſcorn, (Pſal. 2. 4.) He that ſitteth in Heaven will laugh, there he uſeth the ordinary word for laughter, and he will have them in deriſion, that's the word in the Text. So that properly and ſtrictly it ſignifies to ſcorn and deride, and that either by words or geſtures, as putting forth of the finger, ſhaking the head, or gnaſhing the teeth, which are Scripture expreſſions of higheſt ſcorn by geſture.

But how ſhall we fit this to the buſineſs in hand? Will the Lord thus ſcorn and deride at the trial and probation of the innocent?

The Vulgar was it ſeems ſo much ſtraitned to make out the ſence, that he reads it negatively, If the ſcourge ſlay ſuddenly, he will not laugh at the trial of the innocent. Others, though they put not in a negation formally and in terms, yet they do it equivalently, and therefore they render it by an interrogation, If the ſcourge ſlay ſuddenly, will he laugh at the trial of the innocent? No, he will not, that's their meaning: the Lord will not ſleight or neglect the trial of the innocent: though he deſtroyes them, yet he will not deride them. But we, and moſt of the learned Hebricians, keep cloſe to the affirmative; If the ſcourge ſlay ſuddenly, he will laugh at the trial of the innocent.

Suppoſitum verbi ridendi dæmon eſt, qui gaudet videns homines diuturnis malis cruciari. Cajet.

There is a diſpute, whom we are to underſtand by this He, for ſome taking this laughing and deriding in the broadeſt ſence, think it too low and diſhonourable to be aſcribed unto God, and therefore they carry it down low enough, aſcribing it to the Devil, If the ſcourge ſlay ſuddenly, then the Devil laugheth to ſee the upright tried. He makes merry with the ſorrows of the Saints: the Devil hath no great cauſe (how much mind ſoever he hath) to laugh, conſidering his condition; but the meaning is, that which gives the Devil moſt content, is to ſee righteous perſons vexed. And that's a truth. As there is joy in Heaven, when good men ſorrow for ſin; ſo there is a kind of joy in Hell, when good men are enwrapt with the ſorrows of ſuffering.

Impius juſtum ſubſannat malis implicitum.

Others make the antecedent to He, a wicked man (ſuch are within one degree of Satan, his children) If the ſcourge ſlay ſuddenly, then the ungodly, who yet thrive and proſper, rejoyce and make ſport at the trial of the innocent; See what theſe good, honeſt, innocent men have got, they thought by their prayers and faſtings, by their zeal and ſtrictneſs to exempt themſelves from theſe common afflictions, they preſumed they ſhould be ſpared, though all the world were conſumed: but ſee they are deſtroyed as well as others, they ſmart under the laſh, as well as we their neighbours, whom they looked upon as the only whipping ſtocks, when a ſcourge ſhould come. That wicked men laugh and deride the innocent under affliction, and jeer them with, Where is your God now? What's become of all your praying and faſting? Where are the hopes and confidences, the priviledges and protections ye talked of? is a truth.

But thirdly, We need not eaſe the Text thus, nor relieve it out of this difficulty, by faſtening the interpretation upon wicked men. Let us take the relative to be God himſelf, and ſee how we can make the ſence out, with a ſaving to his honour. If the ſcourge ſlay ſuddenly, He, that is, the moſt holy and gracious God, laugheth at the trial of the innocent. How ſo?

Firſt, I premiſe this, God doth not laugh or deride properly at the afflictions of his people. No, the Lord is a tender, a gracious and a merciful Father to his people at all times; and moſt tender of them, when they are in their afflictions, when they are in their ſoreneſs, and in their ſorrows: he is more tender then the moſt tender-hearted Mother (Iſa. 49. 15.) Can a mother forget her ſucking child, that ſhe ſhould not have compaſſion on the ſon of her womb? yea, they may forget, yet will I not forget thee. Will a mother laugh and deride a poor infant, when it lies ſprawling and wants her help? No, much leſs will God laugh at his people: therefore as laughing noteth hard-heartedneſs, or unnatural harſhneſs of ſpirit, the Lord doth not laugh at his afflicted Saints, it is againſt his nature, againſt his practice and all experience.

What is it then he laughs at?

Dicitur ridere, quia ſic judicant hominum vulgus.

First, Poſitively thus, Job would here expreſs that the Lord carries himſelf in outward things, with an equal hand both to the good and to the bad, as was touched before. The Lord laugheth at, and derideth the wicked (Prov. 1. 28.) I will laugh at their deſtruction, and mock when their fear cometh. The carriage of God to his own people is ſuch, as if he did mock and laugh at them alſo. He that laugheth and derideth at a mans affliction, doth not regard what he ſuffers, he gives him no help, nor delivers him out of his ſufferings. Nay, a man that laugheth at another in affliction, will lay more affliction upon him. Even thus in regard of outward diſpenſations, God deals with his own people; that is, when innocent ones are in affliction and cry unto him, he makes as if he did not hear or regard them, but let them lye crying, it may be day after day in their pains and wants; yea, ſometimes in ſtead of eaſing them, he layes more afflictions upon them; poor ſouls, ſince they ſought the Lord they found an increaſe of their ſorrows. God ſeems to deal with them, as Pharaoh did with the Iſraelites in Egypt, who crying to him for releaſe of their burdens, are anſwered only with, Ye are idle, ye are idle; let more work be laid upon theſe men, Exod. 5. Or, like Rehoboam, who threatned his people to make their yoke heavier, while they petitioned he would make it lighter; and told them of ſcorpions, while they complained of whips. David gives us this in his own experience (Pſal. 77. 2, 3.) In the day of my trouble I ſought the Lord, my ſore ran in the night, and ceaſed not (or, my hand was ſtretched out in prayer, and bedewed with tears) my ſoul refuſed to be comforted (David ſought for comfort, but his troubles encreaſing, he could not take in the comforts adminiſtred) I remembred God, and was troubled; I complained, and my ſpirit was overwhelmed. If any thing in the world can eaſe a troubled heart, thoughts of God can. Thus David once relieved himſelf; When the people talked of ſtoning him, he encouraged himſelf in the Lord his God (1 Sam. 30. 6.) Yet ſometime God ſeems to think of us leaſt, when we think of him moſt. A ſoul complaining may be overwhelmed, inſtead of being helped. Now he that layes on further afflictions, ſlights and laughs at the former. And this is the firſt way in which it may be made out, how God laughs at the trial of the innocent. When they complain he doth not preſently relieve them, nay, he layes heavier burdens of affliction upon them, and makes them more matter of complaining, before they have any matter of rejoycing.

Poſt orationes meas, ita me ſemper in miſeriis reliquit, acſi me derideret.

Secondly thus, The Lord is ſaid to laugh, in regard of the pleaſure he takes in the fruits, effects and iſſues of thoſe troubles wherewith his people are exerciſed: He laugheth, not at the affliction it ſelf, but at the effects and ſucceſs of it; he knows the iſſue will be matter of high contentment to himſelf, and benefit to the Saints. He laughs at their trial, becauſe he knows they will honour him in their trials. He laughs not becauſe they are pained, but becauſe himſelf is glorified. As a Father, who puts a child upon a very hard task, which yet he is aſſured the child is able to go through with, takes content to ſee him ſweat at it, to pant and blow at it: Or, as a Commander in war, rejoyceth when he puts a Party, of whoſe valour and skill he is confident, upon ſome dangerous ſervice; though he knows many of them muſt bleed for it, and ſome of them (perhaps) die for it, yet it pleaſes him to ſee ſuch engaged in it. Thus God laughs at the trials and moſt deſperate adventures of the innocent; for he ſees they are men who will bide a trial; nay will neither ſhrink in the wetting, nor will their ſpirits conſume in the burning.

Deus ex virorum fortium, ſc. piorum conflictu non levẽ capit voluptatem.

And thus a Believer is exhorted to laugh at his own trial; My brethren (ſaith the Apoſtle James, chap. 1. 2.) count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations or trials. The more trials, the more joyes. And thus one Believer may laugh and rejoyce at the trial of another, becauſe he knows that the trial of our faith, being much more precious then of Gold that periſheth, though it be tried with fire, ſhall be found unto praiſe, and honour and glory at the appearing of Jeſus Chriſt, 1 Pet. 1. 6, 7. Hence obſerve, Firſt, The Lord may bear himſelf toward his own people in their affliction, as if he mockt at their afflictions.

As he laughs at wicked men in earneſt, and hath them in deriſion; ſo he puts out an appearance of deriſion in what he doth to his own people.

Secondly, To ſee good men tried, is a delight unto God.

Laughter is an expreſſion of our inward content and joy. Though the word of the Text is ſcarce uſed for laughter in a good ſence, yet here it may. The Propheſie ſaith of Chriſt (Iſa. 53. 10.) It pleaſed the Lord to bruiſe him; God the Father was delighted to bruiſe his Son. Not that he delighted in afflicting or ſtriking him, he was tender and dear to him as the apple of his eye: But with reſpect to the iſſue and fruit of it, the Lord was pleaſed; His father laughed to ſee him caſt down and ſuffering, whom he foreſaw conquering and triumphing: So it is here. A man delights to ſee wreſtlers ſhew their ſtrength, as alſo to behold men ſtriving for maſteries in fencing or running a race, which are but trials of activity, and contendings for honours. Thus when the Lord bringeth his innocent ſervants into affliction, he doth but bring them to a wreſtling, to a running or a fencing, to ſee how they can make uſe of their hands and legs, how they can make uſe of their ſpiritual armour, how they can wield the ſword of the Spirit, how they can defend themſelves with the ſhield of faith, how they can bear a knock upon the helmet of ſalvation, how they can walk upon thorns and ſharp ſtones, himſelf having before ſhod their feet with the preparation of the Goſpel of peace. This is the ſpectacle which God delighteth in and laughs at, and it is a glorious ſpectacle. The Roman triumphs were but childiſh playes to theſe of the Saints, called out and clad with the armour of righteouſneſs, which makes them more then conquerors, over tribulations and diſtreſs, over perſecution, famine, nakedneſs, peril and the ſword, yea, over principalities and powers, over things preſent and to come: The Saints in their trial, conquer not only all preſent evils, but all that are poſſible. They are real victors over thoſe evils which they ſhall never feel or ſee. As in doing, ſo in ſuffering, all is reckoned to us which we are willing to engage in, though actually we do not; no marvel if God laugh at the trial of ſuch Champions and Chriſtian Heroes. It is the obſervation of Seneca, a Roman Moraliſt and Philoſopher, in his Book of Providence, ſpeaking of ſome of the ancient Worthies of Rome, I ſee not (ſaith he) what Jupiter hath on earth more contentful to him, or to which he would rather turn his eye, then to behold Cato ſtanding firm in the midſt of publick ruines, and that, though (after all his wreſtlings, as a noble Patriot, for the ſaving of his Countrey) he found both his honeſt counſels broken, and his unwearied labours loſt, yet he did not loſe his ſpirit, nor was his heart broken. Now, if an Heathen could ſay, that to ſee ſuch a man conteſt with all manner of troubles, was, he thought, a delight for Jupiter, and laughter to the Idol-gods; may not we, changing the perſons, make his ſence the comment of this Text, and a proof of this Obſervation? It is a holy delight to the holy God to ſee his faithful ones, his Abrahams in a trial, to ſee his Jobs in a trial, his Pauls in a trial, to ſee thoſe Grandees in Graces, ſhew ſuch admirable skill, ſuch courage, ſuch zeal, ſuch faith, ſuch patience, ſuch ſubmiſſion of ſpirit, to ſee Saints play the men thus in ſuch ſpiritual trials and hotteſt ſervices, is not this juſt matter of laughing and rejoycing to the Lord?

Non video quid habeat in terrus Jupiter pulchrius ſi cõvertere animum velit, quàm ut ſpectet Catonem, jam partibus non ſemel fractis ſtantem hibilominus inter ruinas publicas rectum. Sen. l. 1. Di Provid.

And if the Lord take a kind of pleaſure in the trials of his Saints, then ſurely the Saints ought not to be diſpleaſed at their trials. Hence the holy Ghoſt bids the Saints laugh as well as the Lord laugheth, Jam. 1. 2. My brethren count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations. Chriſtians, never look upon a trial with ſuch ſad and ſowr faces, the face of God is full of ſmiles to ſee you at it: Shall that make you ſad, which makes God rejoyce? Never grieve, but when you fear you have grieved God. Further note,

That, The afflictions of the Saints are trials of the Saints.

They are occaſions to ſhew forth their virtues and their graces. They give proofs both to God and the world, what manner of men they are. Tried ones are precious ones: many others are ſo, but theſe appear what they are, they have ſhewed their metal. All true faith is good, but tried Faith is beſt (1 Pet. 1. 9.) That the trial of your faith (that is, that your tried faith) being much more precious then of gold that periſheth, may be found unto praiſe, &c.

Beſides theſe two interpretations, I ſhall add for a cloſe, two more, which may further illuſtrate the meaning of this laughter aſcribed to God, at the trial of the innocent. Firſt, or,

Thirdly, He laughs at the fears and ſad forecaſts of his people, who not being able to look through ſecond cauſes, and ſee the ends of things in their beginnings, preſently judge all's loſt, the Church muſt be ruined, and the Saints undone, becauſe thus tried. Now God knowing the end of all actions, not only at their beginning, but from the beginning (yea, from eternity) he looking through the blackeſt clouds and darkeſt nights, upon the iſſues of all things, derides the ſimple conjectures of men about them. The very Heathens have given us ſuch a notion of God in laughter.

Prudens futuri temporis exitum caliginoſa nocte premit Deus, ridetque ſi mortalis ultra fas trepidat &c. Horat. l. 3. Car. Od. 29.

Secondly, or fourthly, God laughs at the laughter, and derides the joyes of wicked men, who ſee his innocent ones tried. For they ſay in their hearts, and it may be with their tongues, Happy we who have ſcaped ſuch a ſcowring, we would not have been in their coats for a world, better die then live to bring our ſelves into ſuch troubles. Or thus, Now the day is ours, we have prevailed, theſe men men are catcht and entangled, we ſhall do well enough with them now. The Lord hearing ſuch language at the trial of the innocent, laughs, to think how thoſe wretches ſhall ſee themſelves deceived, when they ſee theſe who are fallen riſing again; or, God by their fall raiſing others, and ſetting his King upon his holy hill of Sion.

Laſtly, As God laughs at the trial of the innocent; ſo let the nocent and impenitent remember and tremble at it, that God will laugh at the approach of their torments, and mock when their fear cometh, when their fear cometh as deſolation, and their deſtruction as a whirlwind.

Job having thus ſhewed how the innocent are afflicted, ſhews in the next verſe how the wicked are exalted, from both he infers that there can be no judgment made of any mans inward ſtate, whether he be innocent or wicked, upon his outward ſtate, whether he be proſperous or afflicted: The innocent are under the ſcourge, and the wicked are upon the throne, and who doth theſe things but God himſelf? that's the ſum of this twenty fourth verſe.

Verſe 24. The earth is given into the hand of the wicked, he covereth the faces of the Judges thereof; if not, where and who is he?

The earth is given into the hand of the wicked.

The earth.] Earth may be taken ſtrictly for the Element of earth, as it is oppoſed to fire, water and air. Not ſo in this place: But more largely, earth is put for all earthly things, Pſal. 115. 6. The heaven of heavens is the Lords, but the earth hath he given unto the children of men, that is, he hath divided all earthly comforts as a portion or inheritance among men; their lot falleth there.

Thirdly, Earth is put for the inhabitants or people of the earth, Pſal. 100. 1. Praiſe him all ye earth; ſo the Hebrew, which we tranſlate, Praiſe him all ye people of the earth. Iſa. 24. 4. The earth mourneth and fadeth away, that is, they who dwell on the earth.

Fourthly, By the earth we may underſtand ſpecial Countries or Nations, Tracts or Parts of the Earth.

Fifthly, The Earth is put for earthly minded men, and for the falſe Church, Rev. 14. 3. The Saints are redeemed from the earth, that is, God hath fetcht them out from amongſt falſe worſhippers and impure ones, he hath reſcued them from the world of Idolaters, and from the ſuperſtitious multitude.

In this place Earth is to be underſtood in the ſecond, third or fourth notion, namely, for all earthly comforts; or, for the Provinces and Kingdoms of the earth; or, for the Inhabitants and People of the earth. Theſe are given into the hand of the wicked.

Given.] The Lord makes (as it were) a deed of Gift of theſe things unto wicked men. So in the fifteenth of this Book, ver. 19. Unto whom alone the earth was given, and no ſtranger paſſed among them; which ſome expound of the righteous, No ſtranger paſſed among them, that is, none came in to invade them; or, as others render it, No ſtrange thing, that is, no unjuſt thing came in amongſt them, they had the earth in their own power and rightful poſſeſſion.

Nihil eſt alienum, ſc. injuſtum. Jun.

To be given, noteth two things; or there is a double act of giving.

There is a gift by providence, and a gift by promiſe. When the Lord is ſaid to give the earth into the hand of the wicked, we are to underſtand it of that common providential gift, whereby he diſpoſeth of all things to all men; no man hath any thing but by the gift of God. Thus wicked Jeroboam had the Kingdom of Iſrael given him, and ſo had hypocritical Jehu for four generations: They ſerved the providence of God, and the providence of God exalted them. (Acts 17. 26.) He hath made of one blood all Nations of men, for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation, that is, he hath (as it were) chalked out, and drawn a line where the bounds and habitations, whither the dominions and poſſeſſions of ſuch men ſhall be extended, and where they ſhall be confined. That's a gift of providence.

There is a ſpecial gift of promiſe peculiar to Believers (Rom. 8. 32.) He that ſpared not his own Son, but gave him to die for us, how ſhall he not with him alſo freely give us all things? that is, all worldly things; or we may take in whatſoever elſe concerns our ſpiritual eſtate beſides Chriſt: All the things of Chriſt, yea, and all worldly things come in to the Saints, as a gift by Chriſt, who is himſelf the greateſt gift that ever man received, or that God could beſtow. How ſhall he deny us any thing, when he hath given him who is above all things? 1 Cor. 3. 22, 23. Whether Paul or Apollos, or the world, all is yours (for ye are Chriſts. Believers enjoy earthly things by an heavenly title. Chriſt is their conveyance. In this ſence the earth is not given to the wicked; the Lord gives them nothing in Chriſt, or for Chriſt as a Saviour, in the Covenant of Grace: Chriſt, as a Lord, hath bought the wicked (2 Pet. 2. 1.) and he gives them what they have, as they are his creatures; as he hath given them a ſubſiſtence and a breathing in the world, ſo he allots them maintenance in the world.

So then, to receive by donation from God, may note any way of poſſeſſion. What wicked men inherit by ſucceſſion and deſcent from their Anceſtors, is a gift of God.

Yea, what they get and hold by violence and oppreſſion, is a gift of God. The earth which wicked men tear out of the hands of the godly, the earth which they ſtain with the bloud of lawful owners, that they may enjoy it; even this is ſaid to be given unto them by God, in that common way of providence. Nebuchadnezzar was a cruel oppreſſor, yet he had the earth given him by God, Jer. 27. 6. Now have I given all theſe Lands into the hands of Nebuchadnezzar the King of Babylon my ſervant, and the beaſts of the field have I given him alſo to ſerve him. God gave him the Land, yet Nebuchadnezzar invaded it and got it by violence; God ſent him, Iſa. 10. 6. but he went of his own errand, v. 7. He had no thought of ſerving the will and commands of God, but of ſerving his own ambition and covetouſneſs; yet of this cruel oppreſſor the Lord ſaith, I have given him all theſe Lands, &c. Thus the earth is given.

Into the hand of the wicked.

There is a queſtion, whom we are to underſtand by theſe Donees, or the receivers of this gift? Some expound the text (with a ſpecialty of the Devil) The earth is given into the hand of that wicked one, who is, as the Prince of the air, ſo, the Prince of this world, and hath great power upon the earth. But take it of wicked men, who are the ſervants and heirs of Satan; as the Saints are the heirs of Chriſt, and receive all thing from him, ſo wicked men are the heirs of Satan, his children, and what they receive as a common gift from God, they receive by a ſpecial gift from Satan. The Devil boaſted to Chriſt (Mat. 4.) All theſe things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worſhip me. Though the Devil be a very beggar, and hath not a ſhoe-latchet of his own to give, yet for ſuch ſervices and homages he gives out large poſſeſſions of the world (common providence ſo ordering it) to wicked men, his vaſſals.

Hence theſe words are interpreted as a reaſon of that confuſion before ſpoken of. No wonder if innocent men are under the ſcourge, for the earth is given into the hand of the wicked. When they have moſt power, who have leaſt honeſty, things muſt needs be turned upſide down, and all put in diſorder. What can be expected from ſuch a tyrannous Prince as Satan, from ſuch wicked inſtruments as rule under him, but continual diſturbance amongſt the children of men; eſpecially that good men ſhould go by the worſt. Godly men are like to have but little peace while theſe have the preheminence. The Devil clouds the underſtandings, and vailes the eyes of thoſe Princes and Judges, whom he (in this ſence) advances: And juſtice is equally wounded and diſtorted, when Judges cannot ſee Things, as when they ſee Perſons in judgment. The bounty of God to the wicked is an occaſion of their injury to the righteous.

Si flagellatur innocēs, quid mirum, cum mundi judices corruptiſſimè ſint? Terræ poteſtas permiſſa eſt impiiſſimo dæmoni, qui dicitur mundi rector, ille efficit ut reges, principes, judices, quaſi obvelatos haberent oculos, cæcè & ſine diſcrimine de rebus judicantes. Eugub.

But rather take the words (which was hinted before) as an argument whereby Job further proves, that there can be no ground of judgment upon any mans ſpiritual eſtate, by the appearances of his temporal; for as righteous and innocent perſons are under the ſcourge, and laid low in the world, ſo wicked men have the earth given them, and are exalted.

I find ſome reading the text as an expoſtulation; Wherefore is the earth given into the hand of the wicked? Wherefore doth he cover the faces of the Judges? As if Job did chide with God about this unequal carriage of things in the world, and called him to give a reaſon of it. But we have found Job (in other places) acquitting himſelf from the ſuſpitions of ſuch a charge, and therefore I cannot joyn with theſe in laying it upon him here.

Job doth not complain, but affirm, That the earth is given into the hand of the wicked.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, Wicked men may abound in earthly things.

They may have the earth and the fulneſs of it; The earth, and all that is earthly; their bellies are filled by God himſelf with hidden treaſure (Pſal. 17. 14.) Precious things are uſually hidden, and all that's named treaſure (though it be but earthly) hath a preciousneſs in it. Hidden treaſures of the earth fill their bellies who ſleight the treaſures of Heaven, and whoſe ſouls ſhall never have ſo much as a taſte of heavenly treaſures: riches and honour are the lot of their inheritance, who have no inheritance among thoſe whoſe lot is glory. They have the earth in their hands, who have nothing of Heaven in their hearts: they bear ſway in the world, who are ſlaves to the world: they govern and order others at their will, who are led captive by Satan at his will. Be not offended and troubled to ſee the Reins of government in their hands, who know not how to govern themſelves; or to ſee them rule the world, who are unworthy to live in the world. Remember the earth is given into the hand of the wicked. We muſt ſubmit to the judgment of God, though it leave us under the injuſtice of men. And we have little reaſon to envy them a great portion in this life, who have all their portion in this life.

The moſt wiſe God, who hath all things to diſpoſe, diſpoſes them with infinite wiſdom: He gives good things to thoſe that are evil, but he gives better things to thoſe who are good; He hath a Benjamins meſs, a rich portion for his own children, after all theſe diſburſements to the children of diſobedience. Their portion lies not in earth and duſt, or in the rubbiſh of the world: Heaven is given into the hand of the Saints: Spiritual bleſſings in heavenly things are given into the hand of the Saints: The pardon of ſin, the love and favour of God, the blood of Jeſus Chriſt, peace of conſcience, joy in the Holy Ghoſt, are gifts worth the having; Theſe are given into the hands of the Saints. As for the earth, he gives that into the hand of the wicked; and yet all that is not given into their hands. Wicked men have not all the earth, and ſome wicked men have none of the earth. The Lord often makes the portion of his own people fat and plenteous, and the portion of his enemies lean and poor. Heaven hath not all the earthly poor, nor Hell all the earthly rich. God doth not give wicked men all the earth; but all the earth which they have, is of his giving. Moſt of the earth is given to be their poſſeſſion; and all the poſſeſſion which is given them, is of earth; therefore it is ſaid, He giveth the earth into the hand of the wicked.

And ſeeing God giveth the earth into the hand of the wicked, we may obſerve alſo,

> That wicked men have a juſt title to the earthly things which they enjoy.

They are not meer uſurpers, neither ſhall they be dealt with as meer uſurpers. They have no ſpiritual title, no title by Chriſt, they claim not by promiſe, which the Saints do: They have forfeited their title by ſin, all is lapſed and eſcheated into the hand of the great Land-Lord. Their goods are forfeited, and ſo are their lives into the hand of God, and he gives both back for a while into their hands. He gives them their lives back, and reprieveth them; for which time of their reprieve, he giveth them the earth to live upon, or to maintain their lives: and ſo far as they uſe earthly things for the continuance of life, they ſhall not be accounted or reckoned with as uſurpers. They ſhall not be charged for uſing the creature, but for abuſing it; for making the earth ſerve their luſts, not for making it a ſupport of their lives. And ſeeing as the Lord hath given them back their forfeited lives, ſo alſo their forfeited lands by a deed of gift, ſealed with general providence: this is enough to ſecure them in thoſe worldly poſſeſſions (which they have neither got nor hold by injuſtice) from the brand of uſurpation, and from the violence of diſpoſſeſſion. As what God hath joyned, no man may put aſunder; So what God hath given, no man muſt take away. Neither riches nor rule are founded in grace. He hath given the earth into the hand of the wicked.

Dominum non fundatur in gratia.

He covereth the faces of the Judges thereof.

He covereth.] There is ſome Queſtion whom we are to underſtand, as the Antecedent to this Relative, He: who is he that covereth? Some make the Antecedent a wicked man. Others ſay 'tis God, The earth is given into the hand of the wicked, and he, that is, the wicked one covereth the faces of the Judges thereof. Or, He, that is, God covereth the faces of the Judges thereof. I ſhall a little open this expreſſion, it needeth ſome uncovering, for it is dark in both relations.

Tegit ne videant quod æquum & juſtum eſt. Druſ.

Firſt, Look upon that interpretation, which refers it to wicked men. He covereth, namely, That wicked man, who is preferred and exalted, covereth the faces of the Judges; that is, he ſtops the courſe of juſtice. And there are four wayes by which wicked men cover the faces of the Judges.

Firſt, By gifts and rewards. Bribes vail, yea, put out the eyes of a Judge, that he cannot ſee to give every one his due. Hence that charge (Exod. 23. 8.) Thou ſhalt take no gift: for the gift blindeth the wiſe, and perverteth the words of the righteous.

Munera cæcos reddunt judices.

Secondly, The faces of the Judges are covered by threatnings; fear of loſs blinds as well as hope of gain. Some ſend terrible meſſages to the Judge; Will not you do as we would have you? Will not you give your ſentence and opinion thus? At your peril be it. Now the Judges face is covered, his eyes are put out by a threat; the miſt and cloud of a Princes diſpleaſure, of a great mans indignation is before his eyes, His face is covered.

Thirdly, The Judges faces are covered by actual putting them to ſhame, by caſting them out of favour, and clouding them with diſgrace, by taking away their commiſſions, or ſending them a Quietus eſt, laying them by as unfit for ſervice; any of theſe is a covering of the Judges face.

There is a fourth way of covering the Judges face, to which the ſecond and third are often made a preparatory; And that is, by putting the Judge to death. So much that expreſſion implies in Job 40. verſ. 13. where the Lord with infinite wiſdom and holineſs, inſulting over Job to humble him, bids him ariſe, and do ſome great thing, ſomewhat which might ſpeak him a man of might. Deck thy ſelf now with majeſty and excellency, and array thy ſelf with glory and beauty; caſt abroad the rage of thy wrath, and behold every one that is proud and abaſe him; look on every one that is proud and bring him low, and tread down the wicked in their place; Hide them in the duſt together, and bind their faces in ſecret; that is, cover their faces as men prepared for death, as men ready to go out to execution. We may expound it by that (Eſth. 7. 8.) where as ſoon as ever the word went out of the Kings mouth, They covered Hamans face. And by that (Mar. 14. 65.) where when Chriſt was judged worthy of death, the Text ſaith, They ſpit on him, and covered his face: The covering of the face was a mark of a condemned man, held as unworthy to behold and enjoy the light of the Sun, or the light of the Princes countenance. Thus to cover the faces of the Judges is to condemn the Judges, and to take them out of the world by ſufferings, rather then ſuffer them to do right. I find that of Elihu (Job 34. 29.) interpreted to this ſence, When he giveth quietneſs, who can make trouble? That is, when the Lord doth abſolve and acquit a man, giving him a diſcharge, then he is free, no man can ſue him or trouble him, much leſs condemn him; but if he hide his face, who can behold him? So we tranſlate it, meaning thus, If the Lord hide his own face. But this expoſition ſaith, If the Lord hide the face of that man, that is, If the Lord condemn that man, or paſs ſentence of death upon him (of which covering or hiding the face was a ſymbol) then, who can behold him? That is, who then can ſee his face, or have ſociety with him, whom God hath ſeparated to death? It was a cuſtom alſo among the Romans, when ſentence was pronounced upon a malefactor, thus to command the executioner, Take him away, bind his hands, cover his face, hang him up. And uſually with us, malefactors, who are ready to ſuffer the pains of death, put a covering upon their faces. This alſo may be a good ſence of the words, He covereth the faces of the Judges, that is, a wicked Prince oppreſſeth and putteth the Judges to death. And whereas good Princes ſay, Let juſtice be done, though the world periſh: he ſaith, Let the Judges periſh, rather then juſtice ſhould be done.

Quis rei faciem poterit amplius videre, quaſi abſolutus ſit. Bold.

I Lictor, colliga manus, caput obnubito, infœlici arbori ſuſpendito. Cic. in orat. pro Rabir.

Yet further, the word Judges, in the original, notes not only ſuch as are in actual office to determine controverſies, שפטים Judices vel officio, vel aptitudine.

Nomen judicis apud Hebræos latius patet quam apud Latinos, non enim ille tantum vocatur judex qui controverſiis vacat, ſed etiã qui rempublicam armis tuetur. Bol. Vidi ſervos, i. e. ſervire dignos, & principes, i. e. dignos imperio.

ſies, whether criminal or civil; but any man that is worthy to be a Judge, or is fit to govern and mannage publick affairs, whether in peace or warr. And ſo it implies a ſuppreſſing and keeping down of thoſe that are moſt able, and beſt qualified to undertake any ſervice for States and Kingdoms (Eccleſ. 10.7.) I have ſeen ſervants upon horſes, and Princes walking as ſervants upon the earth; that is, I have ſeen men who are worthy no better imployment then that of a ſervant to rub horſe heels, or do the meaneſt offices, ſuch as theſe I have ſeen in the ſaddle, and in their trappings. And, I have ſeen Princes walking upon the earth on foot; that is, men who deſerve to bear rule and to govern Kingdoms, who both for ability and integrity, are worthy to have the reins of Authority in their hand, and to ſit at the helm, theſe I have ſeen walking upon the earth, or tugging at an oar, as common men: that's an evil which Solomon ſaw under the Sun: So here, He covereth the faces of the Judges, may have this meaning, Evil Princes keep down and hold in obſcurity men of parts and gifts, of ſpirit and courage, of honeſty and uprightneſs, and prefer only thoſe who are baſe and corrupt, who will ſerve turns, and comply with times.

> Hence note, That it is the policy of wicked Princes to corrupt and blind Judges, or to employ ſuch as are blind and corrupt.

They take away power from thoſe who would uſe power well, and give power to them who are ſlaves to their wills.

> Secondly, It is the character of a wicked man to bribe a Judge, to put out the eyes, and cover the face of a Judge with gifts.

A good cauſe fears not the eye of the Judge, and a good man had rather loſe his cauſe, then pervert the Judge.

Tegit, ne videant quod bonum & æquum eſt. Druſ.

So much of mans covering the faces of the Judges: now ſee how God covers them. He who opens the eyes and uncovers the faces of the Judges, that they may diſcern between cauſe and cauſe, doth alſo cover the faces of Judges, that they cannot diſcern between cauſe and cauſe. As the Lord hardens the heart and blinds the eye in ſpiritual things, ſo alſo in civil, not by taking away the ſight which man had, but by withdrawing or denying his own light. The Lord covers the faces of the Judges, when he doth not give them light, nor ſhew them the path of juſtice. If God ſuſpend his light, the greateſt lights are preſently in darkneſs. God doth not hood-wink or muffle up the Judges by putting any thing before their eyes, but by hiding his own eyes from them. The Pſalmiſt ſpeaks of Judges thus covered (Pſal. 62.5.) They know not, neither will they underſtand, they walk on in darkneſs, all the foundations of the earth are out of courſe. We have here the character of evil Judges, and what the conſequents of it are. They know not, neither will they underſtand, they walk on in darkneſs (theſe three expreſſions explain this Text) and what follows? Then all the foundations of the earth are out of courſe; Law and juſtice are out of courſe, no man knoweth where to have right, or by whom to be protected againſt wrong.

> Hence obſerve, Ignorant and evil Judges are ſent by God as a ſcourge.

Hinc elicimus malos judices etiã à Deo eſſe. Druſ. Judex oculatiſſimus eſſe debet. Solebant judices intra cortinas ſe continere cũ contra reum capitis ſententiam pronunciabant. Pined.

I gave them a King in mine anger, Hoſ. 13.11.

Laſtly, (for the clearing of this) The covering of the faces of the Judges notes three things.

Firſt, Ignorance and blindneſs, or an inability to judge.

Secondly, Inhumanity and cruelty, The faces of the Judges being covered, they will not look upon the caſe of a poor man. It is uſual for an oppreſſed petitioner to ſay to the Judge, Look upon me, good my Lord, caſt an eye upon me; the Judge who will not ſee, is covered with incompaſſion.

Antiqui fortunam cæcam pingebant, quod malis bona, mala bonis indiſcriminatim conferrentur.

Thirdly, Covering of the face imports the affected partiality of Judges; many do as if they could not ſee, as if their faces were covered. Affection blinds the judgment, and none are ſo blind as they that will not ſee. The reaſon why the Heathen pictured their Fortune blind, was, becauſe ſhe diſtributed things, as if ſhe affected blindneſs, giving good to thoſe that were evil, and evil to thoſe that were good. When Judges give rewards to thoſe that ſhould be puniſhed, and puniſh thoſe that ſhould be rewarded, their faces are covered, they are blind. Judges were anciently pourtray'd or pictur'd without hands and without eyes; without hands, as noting that Judges muſt not receive or take gifts: And without eyes, becauſe they muſt not ſee friend or neighbour, great or ſmall, kinſman or ſtranger; they were to diſtribute juſtice according unto every mans cauſe, and not with reſpect to any mans ſtate or relation. It is ſaid of Chriſt (Iſa. 11.3.) where his Kingdom is deſcribed, that he ſhall not judge after the ſight of his eyes; that is, by what appears to the eye, but he ſhall judge righteous judgement. In this ſence, it is the Judg's duty and honour to have his face covered. But the covering here meant, is either of ignorance and inability, or of corruptneſs and partiality: All which hinder the Judge from doing his duty, and are blemiſhes of his honour.

But ſome may object, Shall we attribute this to God? Doth he cover the faces of the Judges? God is pure from all ſin, while he leaves men in their impurity. He is juſt in giving man over to his own injuſtice. So we anſwer, and the next words challenge all to make another anſwer.

If not, where, and who is he?

אם־לא
פאו

Si non, ubi ille? Pagn. Si non, ergo Quis ille? lingua ſancta conciſa valde. Si non (ſupple, Deus qui hoc faciat) ergo quis eſt? ſupple, qui faciat.

If it is not the Lord who doth this, tell me who is it? as if he had ſaid, Some may be offended and ſcandalized at my doctrine, that I aſſert, The earth is given into the hands of the wicked, that he covereth the faces of the Judges; If any man ſhall deny or ſcruple this, let him ſhew me whence theſe things are, and who is the cauſe of them.

There is a three-fold underſtanding of theſe words: Some make the Antecedent to be the wicked; As if he had ſaid, Who but a wicked man will cover the faces of the Judges, and hinder the execution of juſtice? And ſo they acquit God, accounting it blaſphemy to attribute the act of covering unto him: The Lord is a God of juſtice, he loves judgment; he opens the mind, and clears the eye, he doth not caſt clouds and miſts before it. It's true, ſo far as the act is ſinful, God forbid we ſhould aſcribe it unto God: But (as was ſhewed before) we need not uſe this ſubterfuge, leaſt we ſhould lay any aſperſion upon his juſtice and holineſs. God can leave men to their injuſtice without any thought in, or touch of injuſtice in himſelf.

Si non, ubi eſt, ſcil. qui me falſi arguat? prodeat ſi quis me poteſt falſi arguere Merc. Ubi eſt, qui mentiri me cenſet? Pagn.

Others interpret this Queſtion as a challenge; It is thus, If it be not, where, and who is he? Who and where's the man that will argue or implead me of falſhood in what I have aſſerted? Who is it that undertakes to convince me of error in the doctrine I have delivered? This is my opinion; theſe poſitions I have laid down for truth, That the Lord deſtroyeth the perfect and the wicked, that he laugheth at the trial of the innocent, that he gives the earth into the hand of the wicked, that he covereth the faces of the Judges; If it be not thus, if any one hold otherwiſe, Let me ſee the man, Let him appear as my Antagoniſt, or Opponent. Where, and who is he that dares charge me with error? I am ready to anſwer him.

But rather take it in the ſence before given, If it be not the Lord who doth this, then ſhew me who it is, Where, and who is he? There is an elegant conciſeneſs in the Hebrew, which ſpeaks only thus, If not, where he, or, who he? The ſence is, If it be not God who doth this, ſhew me, tell me, Who is it? And ſo the words are an excluſion of any other power, ordering and diſpoſing the things of the world. When old Iſaac was diſappointed in his intention of giving the bleſſing to Eſau, he trembled exceedingly, and ſpake in the language of this Text, Who, where is he? (Gen. 27.33.) As if he had ſaid, I thought thou my ſon Eſau hadſt brought me veniſon before, and if it was not thou, I know not who it ſhould be, I was never ſo deceived in my life, if it was not thou. Such a broken ſpeech Job uſes here, If it be not God who doth theſe things, I am much deceived, for I know not any in the world to whom I might probably aſſign them, but only unto him. You muſt be wiſer then I, if you find any thus powerful beſides God. If not, where, and who is he? Whence obſerve, > Firſt, That, the greateſt confuſions in the world are ordered by God.

What greater confuſion then this, to ſee the earth given to thoſe who deſerve not to live upon the earth? that they ſhould

ſhou'd rule the world who are unworthy to breathe in the world? Yet even theſe things are diſpoſed of by the Lord, and are the iſſues of his counſels. That wherein we ſee no order, receives order from the Lord.

Secondly, Obſerve, The very confuſions that are in the world are an argument of the power of God.

For ſeeing the world continues in the midſt of ſuch confuſions, it ſhews there is a mighty power, ballancing theſe confuſions ſo exactly, that they cannot ruine the world. If there were not an over-ruling power in God, wicked men ruling would ſoon ruine all. There are myſteries of providence, as well as of faith. And many are as much puzzl'd to interpret what God doth, as what he hath ſpoken. I find Heathens often ſtumbling at this ſtone, and ungodding their Idol gods at the ſight of ſuch diſtributions among men. When evil takes away good men, this is my next thought (ſaith one of them) I am ſollicited to think there are no gods. Another obſerving how unequally men were buried, buries God in that obſervation. Licinus a cruel oppreſſor lyes interred in a ſtately monument. Cato, a ſober, grave, wiſe, and juſt Senator hath a mean and poor Sepulchre, ſcarce looking above the ground. Pompey the Great, that famous Commander and Conqueror had no Tomb at all, he was buried no man knoweth where. When we ſee (ſaith he) things go thus, who would think that there are any gods?

Cum rapiunt mala fata bonos, ignoſcite faſſo, Sollicitor nullos eſſe putare Deos. Ovid. Marmoreo Licinus tumulo jacet, & Cato parvo, Pompeius nullo, quis putet eſſe Deos?

Thus they ſtumbled at the ſuppoſed uneven diſpenſations of their Idol gods. And we find great offence taken, and an horrible blaſphemy belched out againſt the true God, upon the ſame occaſion, and almoſt in the ſame terms (Mal. 2. 17.) Ye have wearied the Lord with your words, yet ye ſay, Wherein have we wearied him? When ye ſay, Every one that doth evil is good in the ſight of the Lord, and he delighteth in them, or where is the God of judgment? Though they fell not directly into the former blaſphemy, to conclude that there was no God, becauſe wicked men proſpered; yet they fell into a blaſphemous opinion, that God delighted in, and loved wicked men, becauſe they proſpered. Wherein have we wearied the Lord? Yes, ye have: Not that the Lord is at all moved or troubled in himſelf with the contumelious ſpeeches of men: but thus, if any thing would tire, and weary him, this may, to hear himſelf arraigned and judged by the world, as a lover of evil men, becauſe he doth not preſently ſmite them with the viſible marks of his diſpleaſure; that becauſe the earth is given into the hands of the wicked, therefore the Lord muſt needs be a friend to the wicked.

Thirdly, Obſerve, That no creature is maſter of his own wayes or ends.

The Lord giveth the earth into the hand of the wicked. Man cannot get the earth into his own hand, let him be as wicked as he will: The Lord covers the faces of the Judges: If he enlighten them, no man can cloud them; if he open, no man can ſhut.

No creature can do good without the directing and enabling hand of God.

No creature doth any evil without the ſupporting and over-ruling hand of God (Iſa. 41. 23.) Shew the things that are to come hereafter, that we may know that ye are gods; yea, do good or evil, that we may be diſmayed, and behold it together. Let us ſee you do any miſchief, if ye can. Man is ſet upon miſchief, but he cannot act miſchief, unleſs God (at leaſt) permit. We were in an ill caſe, if man could do all the evil he hath a mind to.

It is matter of comfort, to conſider that the wayes and iſſues of good and evil, are in his hand, who is good, and doth no evil.

VERS. 25, 26.

Now my dayes are ſwifter then a poſt, they flee away, they ſee no good.

They are paſſed away as the ſwift ſhips, as the Eagle that haſteth to the prey.

THeſe two verſes are a confirmation of Job's former argument: As he had ſhewed in general, that the wicked are exalted, and the innocent afflicted; ſo now he ſhews the latter branch from his own experience or example.

Verſ. 25. My dayes are ſwifter then a poſt, they flee away, they ſee no good, &c.

We have here three ſimilitudes, by which Job ſets forth the uncertainty of his proſperous eſtate, and how ſoon the time wherein he enjoyed it was blown over.

1. Poſt.
2. The ſimilitude of a Ship.
3. Eagle.

As in Chap. 7. he uſed three ſimilitudes, viz.

1. A Weavers ſhuttle.
2. Of The Wind.
3. A diſſolving Cloud.

So here he bringeth in three more to clear the ſame point.

Job's thoughts travel'd thorow all parts of the world to find out illuſtrations of mans frailty. In theſe two verſes three of the four elements are enquired into. The Earth, the Air, and the Water. A Poſt upon the Earth, a Ship upon the Water, an Eagle in the Air, are called in as witneſſes to this truth.

Now my dayes are ſwifter then a Poſt, &c.

Now my dayes.] That is, my proſperous dayes, ſo Mr. Broughton gloſſes. Troubleſom times are all night and darkneſs, yet we may take it of dayes in general; They are ſwifter then a Poſt.

The word which we tranſlate Swifter, ſignifies any thing that is light, becauſe light things are quick in motion. We call a man that is ſwift of foot, light of foot. And here it is joyned with that which among men is moſt ſwift and paſſing, a Poſt, who rides or runs without any ſtop or ſtay, without the leaſt conſiderable ſtop or ſtay: So that it is grown into a Proverb, To run Poſt, or, To ride Poſt, is as much as to be in haſte: To ſay, You are in Poſt haſte, is to ſay, you are in great haſte. My dayes (ſaith Job) are ſwifter then a Poſt, they out-run thoſe curreers ſent out upon the moſt important meſſages. The Poſt, whether ſent to carry news good or bad, or intelligence for the diſpatch of buſineſs, publick or private, is engaged to ride hard; he muſt not ſpare horſe-fleſh, or (as we commonly ſpeak) ſuffer the graſs to grow under his horſe-heels. Hence Obſerve, קלל Levitas & velocitas, tā ex Græco quam Hebræo etiam Latino pro eodem accipiuntur. Levis armaturæ milites celeriter ſubveniunt. רץ Curſor, qui ex una urbe in alteram, &c. proficiſcitur cum liberis aut nunciis.

First, Time is very ſwift, 'tis gone ſuddenly.

My dayes are ſwifter then a Poſt.] We ſeldom conſider, or conſider as we ought, this common truth. We live, for the moſt part, as if we could not tell how to get rid of our time; or, as if we were weary of our time, and knew not how to ſpend it out, as if time were rather chained to a ſtanding poſt, then were like a running Poſt. The Ancients emblem'd Time with wings, as if it were not running, but flying.

The next word in the Text comes near that ſence, They flee away. My dayes (ſaith Job) flee away. The word doth not ſignifie flying, as a fowl with wings, but flying as a fugitive from hard bondage, or as a man from ſome imminent danger, which, becauſe 'tis done with ſpeed, therefore the word imports any ſpeedy motion, eſpecially that of a Poſt. A Poſt riding or running, is an excellent embleme of Time. There are many conſiderations in Poſt-riding, which ſhew how exceeding ſpeedy time muſt be, to which it is here compared.

Firſt, A Poſt rides upon fleet or ſpeedy Horſes.

Secondly, He rides his Horſes upon their ſpeed; a man may have ſpeedy Horſes, and go ſoftly; but a Poſt ſpurs on.

Thirdly, A Poſt hath change of Horſes at every ſtage, that he may keep them upon their ſpeed.

Fourthly, He hath Horſes ſtanding ready for change; they are not to fetch out of the field, or to make ready when he comes to his ſtage, it is but leaping into the ſaddle and away.

Fifthly, He that rides Poſt, makes no long meals, much leſs feaſts, he takes a bit and away.

Sixthly, He lies not long a bed, he ſcarce goes to bed till he comes to his wayes end.

Seventhly. A Poſt hath extraordinary pay for his ſervice, and that will cauſe him to make ſpeed.

Eighthly, Sometimes he rides upon pain of death, with a halter about his neck. No man will loiter, when his life lies on it.

Ninthly, If a man rides poſt, all muſt give him way, he picks and chooſeth his path, and no man muſt hinder him.

Tenthly, He ſtayes not to ſalute, much leſs, like other Travellers, to gaze and view the Countrey, the Towns, Buildings, Gardens, &c.

All theſe things laid together, evince that the Poſt makes ſpeed. Yet ſaith Job, My time outrunneth the Poſt, my time goes faſter then he; the Poſt muſt ſtay a little ſometimes, but time will not ſtay at all: The Poſt muſt ſtay for change of horſes, but the Chariot of the Sun never ſtayeth to change horſes (the Sun is the meaſure of time) and that makes no ſtop, hath no ſtages or baiting-places; Our dayes are ſwifter then a Poſt.

Further, Experiences ſpeak this moſt true of that ſpecial time, the time of proſperity. The beſt things of the world are in a moveable, in a paſſing, poſting condition. They ſcarce abide with us long enough to learn what they are. If a man ride poſt, we can hardly diſcern who he is; the good things of the world, the pleaſures and profits, the form and faſhion of it paſs away ſo faſt, that none can perfectly report what they are, excepting this, Tranſitory and Vain: As the artificial faſhions of the world, the faſhions in building and in apparel, paſs ſo ſpeedily, that few know what the faſhion is before tis gone; a new one is abroad, before the greateſt number are in the old; ſo the natural faſhions of worldly things (ſome in themſelves, all as to our enjoyment) the excellency and dignity, the luſtre and beauty of the creature are out of ſight, before we can well ſay of what colour and ſhape, or what manner of things they were. When the Painter takes the perfect feature of a mans face, or the lineaments of his body, he muſt ſit. The world ſits not ſo long with any man, as for him to take the picture of it. Creatures periſh in their uſing, while they are in our hands we know not what they are, for even then they are periſhing and declining from what they were. One ſaid, when a creature-comfort was taken from him, If I had it again, methinks I could enjoy it; we ſeldom enjoy what we have. And what we have, is alwayes in tranſitu, paſſing from us while we have it; it is in motion while in poſſeſſion. We can ſcarce be acquainted with it, becauſe it ſtayes ſo little with us. Hence Job concludes this ſimilitude;

They ſee no good.

My good dayes run ſo faſt, that I cannot ſee the good of them. Not to ſee good, is, not to have the leaſt experience of good. For the eye takes in its objects, and judges of them (ſo much Philoſophers teach) ſooner then any other ſenſe. The eye is not long about its buſineſs: It is the ſenſe of quickeſt diſpatch. So that it is, as if Job had ſaid, The good things of this life are ſo tranſient, that I am ſo far from feeling or taſting them, &c. that (which is done with the leaſt delay and expence of time) I have not time enough to ſee them. When men ride upon ſpeed, or when any thing paſſes ſwiftly before us, we have but a glimpſe, ſcarce a ſight of thoſe obiects.

Omnia mihi prærepta ſunt priuſquam ea ſenſerim. Bez.

Beſides, To ſee good, is to enjoy good, as was ſhewed. chap. 7. 7. And when he ſaith, they (ſcil. his dayes) ſaw no good, his meaning is, that he ſaw no good in his dayes. Till there is a conſiſtency or a fixedneſs of good, there cannot be a full enjoyment of good. The reaſon why in heaven we ſhall have ſo much happineſs, is, becauſe all the good in heaven is a fixed good. Time paſſes, but Eternity ſtands. Eternity is a fixed Now. The things of heaven ſhall not periſh in the uſing, nor ſhall the faſhion of them paſs away. In heaven viſion will be everlaſting, we ſhall ever ſee good, and that ever ſeeing ſhall be an ever enjoying of good. Here on earth we ſee God through a glaſs darkly, and we ſee all good in ſuch poſt-haſte, paſſingly, that we rather ſee it not, then ſee it; eſpecially while we remember that good paſſes by us in the company, yea, in a crowd of evils, our ſight of it (as when we are called to behold one man riding ſpeedily among many) muſt needs be hindered. Yea oftentimes evils ſtand ſo thick about us, while good poſts by us, that we cannot look through them to the good which is before us. In heaven, as good ſtands to our eye, ſo it ſtands alone; there's no interpoſition of evil to eclipſe the beauty, or darken the ſight of it. There we ſhall ſee, and ſee nothing but good. Here we ſee much beſides, yea, ſee either none at all, or very little good, and that but a little.

They flee away, they ſee no good.

From the Poſt, who runneth upon the Land, Job's next compariſon carries us to the motion of a Ship at ſea, and anon to that ſwifter motion of an Eagle in the air.

Verſe 26. They are paſſed away as the ſwift ſhips, as the Eagle that haſteneth to the prey.

They are paſſed.

That is, My dayes are paſſed, and with them all the contents and comforts which I had in thoſe dayes: we are to take dayes, as cloathed with with all their contentful occurrences and circumſtances.

They are paſſed away.] Or, they are glided away inſenſibly.

חלף

As the ſwift ſhips.

Not only as the ſhips, but as the ſwift ſhips. A ſhip is a fabrick for the ſea, a houſe upon the ſea, a moveable houſe; and as it moveth variably, ſo it moveth ſwiftly: The inconſtancy of the winds makes the motion of the ſhip unconſtant; and the ſtrength of the winds makes the motion of the ſhip ſwift. So that to ſay, His dayes paſſed as a ſhip, is an aggravation of their ſudden paſſage. A ſhip paſſeth without any ſtop from it ſelf: The ſhip needs not ſtay to bait, to ſleep or reſt while it is upon its journey; whatſoever they do who are within the ſhip, the ſhip moves on, if they prepare it for motion.

אני Navit, ab אנה. In Pihil, obvenire, occurrere fecit, quæ ſic dicta eſt, quod remigum aut ventorum impetu impellatur & feratur.

Job puts an Emphaſis upon this compariſon; His dayes were not only as a ſhip, but as a ſwift ſhip; there is much in that addition.

The Hebrew is, My dayes are as the ſhips of Ebeh, which is diverſly rendred.

Firſt, Some take the word Ebeh to be the name of a River in the Eaſtern part of the world, about Arabia, near the place where Job lived. A late Traveller hath obſerved a River of very ſwift motion, near Damaſcus, and not far from the Sepulcher of Job. Now a ſhip that moveth in a ſwift River, beſides that it may have the wind, hath alſo a great addition to the ſpeed of its motion, from the force and ſtrength of ſuch a current. Thus ſaith Job, My dayes move as the ſhips upon Ebeh, as ſhips upon the ſtreams of that fierce, ſwift River, which go down with ſpeed, as we ſee Boats with the Tide, and ſo proportionably greater Veſſels, where there is a River and a Current proportionably to bear and carry them.

Ebeh, flumen rapidiſſimum in Arabia. Rab Sol. Bold.

Secondly, Others conceive the word, not as a proper name, but as ſignifying deſire, from Abah, to deſire with earneſtneſs; and then the ſence is rendred thus, My dayes are paſſed away as ſhips of deſire, that is, as ſhips, which being laden with rich commodities, the Maſter and the Pilot deſire earneſtly to bring the ſhip ſpeedily to her Port, that ſo they may put off the commodities, and make ſale of the rich lading that is in her. The wind doth not ſo much fill the ſails of ſuch a ſhip, as deſire doth the minds of her Mariners. Thus Daniel was called a man of deſires, becauſe he was a man ſo precious and deſirable. A ſhip richly laden is much deſired; ſuch a ſhip is a great charge to the Owners and Merchants, they therefore ſend to ſpeed the ſhip home as faſt as they can. Thus (ſaith Job) My dayes paſs as a ſhip that hath the moſt deſired commodities.

Thirdly, The Chaldee and others give a further note upon it, deriving the word from Abab, whence Ebib, which ſignifies a ſtalk growing up early from the earth, and bringing forth the firſt ripe fruit of any kind; and ſo it is put for any early-ripe Summer-fruit, for early Plums, Apples, Cherries, &c. And then the ſence is, My dayes are like to a Ship which carrieth early fruit: So the Vulgar, Like a Ship carrying Apples.

Fructus primitivus.

Naves poma portantes.

Now a Ship that carries ſuch fruit, makes great haſte, becauſe the fruit will ſpoil and rot, if not ſpeedily put off. Ripe fruit is a commodity that will not keep, unleſs they have fructus delicatos portantibus. Targ.

have a quick paſſage, all is loſt. My dayes (ſaith Job) paſs even as a ſhip that carries ripe Summer-fruit, which are haſted away with all ſpeed, leſt they periſh before they come to the port.

Fourthly, There is another ſence given by thoſe who derive the word from a root which ſignifies, to hate and oppoſe, or to be an adverſary; and then it is thus rendred, My dayes paſs away as a Pyrates ſhip, or as a ſhip that goes to take a prey, as a Ship that goes out to take prizes upon the Sea. Now we know, when ſhips go out either upon piracy, which is robbery at Sea, or upon any lawful way of taking prizes by publick authority; theſe ſhips of all others are the ſwifteſt, they are prepared on purpoſe to make way and overtake other ſhips; their lading is not burden, but ballaſt, that they may be ſwift of ſail; ſo ſaith, Job, My dayes paſs away like a ſwift ſhip; not like ſome great Merchant-ſhip deeply laden, which can make no great way in the Sea, but as a ſhip of pyracy, that hath nothing in her but Weapons, Artillery and Ammunition, to oppoſe thoſe they meet, ſuch are as your nimble Frigats, Fly-boats and Catches, which ſail with every wind, or Gallies which paſs without wind, carried with ſtrength of arms and oars, all being Veſſels uſed to run in upon, and ſurprize a booty This alſo is a good interpretation; and ſo Mr. Broughton tranſlates it, My dayes do fleet away as the Pyrates ſhips. That's the ſecond ſimilitude, My dayes are paſſed awas as the ſwift ſhips.

And as an Eagle haſteneth to the prey.

This is the third ſimilitude. A ſhip moveth ſwiftly, eſpecially a ſhip upon a ſwift River; or a ſhip laden with deſirable commodities, or a ſhip laden with Summer-fruit, or a Pyrates ſhip, a man of war. But here is an inſtance implying greater ſpeed then that of the moſt ſpeedy ſhip; As an Eagle haſteneth to the prey.

An Eagle of all the fowls in the air, is the ſwifteſt and ſtrongeſt of wing: An Eagle is the chief of Birds. We find in Scripture, ſwiftneſs expreſſed by this ſimilitude of an Eagle (Hab. 1. 8.) The Chaldeans, who invaded the people of Iſrael, are thus deſcribed, Their horſemen ſhall come from far, they ſhall flee as the Eagle that haſteth to eat. See the like inſtances, Jer 48. Jer. 49. Ezek. 17. And in Iſa. 40 31. They ſhall renew their ſtrength, they ſhall mount up with wings as Eagles, &c. Noting the exceeding ſwiftneſs of the Saints in the wayes of God, the ſpeed they ſhall make in the wayes of holineſs; though the youths faint, and the young men utterly fall, yet they that wait upon the Lord, ſhall mount up with wings as Eagles, that is, they ſhall be ſwift and ſtrong.

But here is more expreſſed then the natural ſwiftneſs of the Eagle, here is ſomewhat occaſional, which adds wings to her wings. We had four interpretations of the ſhips ſwiftneſs. Here is one expreſſion exceeding all thoſe four; An Eagle haſtening to the prey.

Quoniam avidiſſimè appetit, ideo perniciſſimè volat. San.

An Eagle is a greedy Fowl. Hence that of Chriſt (Matth. 24.) Where the Carkaſs is, there the Eagles gather together; that is, look where ever there is any prey, there you ſhall have Eagles; if there be a carkaſs to be had, the Eagle ſhall be ſure to make towards it. My dayes (ſaith Job) are paſſed away, as the Eagle haſteneth to the prey. The Naturaliſts obſerve, that the Eagle ſoars aloft in the air, ſo high, that the eye of man cannot diſcern her; yet the Eagle is of ſuch a piercing eye (Eagle-eyed is a proverb for quick-ſighted) that ſhe can diſcern her prey upon the earth, yea, in the water; and as ſoon as the Eagle eſpies her prey, ſhe powrs or ſowces down upon it like a Thunder-bolt, like a Bullet out of a Gun, or an Arrow out of a Bow. Thus Job's dayes paſſed as an Eagle in her flight, and not in her ordinary flight, but as an Eagle that haſteneth to the prey, when hunger adds ſwiftneſs to her wings; ſuch was the paſſage of his dayes.

Tanquam fulmen ſe è ſublimi in terram jaculatur.

Numquid eſt navibus veſtigium viæ, aut aquilæ volantis? Sept.

There is ſomewhat further obſervable in this, from the Tranſlation of the Seventy, who render it thus, Is there any ſign or mark in the way of a Ship, or of an Eagle? So the meaning of Job ſhould be, that his life in reſpect of former comforts and contentments, was paſt away, and had left no mark, no ſign behind it. The ſhip in the Sea paſſeth away, and there is no rode, no tract left; and the Eagle in the air paſſeth, and you cannot ſee where the Eagle made her flight, the air cloſeth preſently, there is no way to be ſeen: Solomon uſeth thoſe Similies, Prov. 30. 19. There be three things which I know not, the way of an Eagle in the air, the way of a Serpent upon a rock, and the way of a Ship in the Sea: And it is frequent in Authors to expreſs thoſe things which paſs away, not leaving any tract or print behind them, by the motion of a Ship in the Sea, and of an Eagle in the Air. Hence note, Quæ nullum ſui curſus ſignum relinquant per avium volatum & naviũ trãſmiſſionem ſignificantur. Sanct.

That, The beſt worldly things when they are gone, are as if they had never been.

There are two motions which will certainly leave a mark behind them: Firſt, Motions in ſin. Secondly, In holineſs. Every ſtep we tread in the wayes of ſin, or of holineſs, leaves a print, a remembrance behind it; but when the riches and honours, the pleaſures and contentments of this life are paſt, nothing remains of them. It is ſaid, Dan. 8. 5. (which may ſerve for the illuſtration of this place) in the viſion of the He-goat, that he touched not the ground; that He-goat was a type of Alexander the Great, who ſet up the Grecian Empire; and he is compared to a He-goat, which did not touch the ground, becauſe of his ſpeedy conqueſts. When man or beaſt runs upon the ground with extream ſpeed, we ſay, they do not touch the ground. When the Hare leaves a deep tract, the Hunter knows ſhe runs ſlowly, and is almoſt ſpent. Alexander conquered the world ſooner then a man could well travel over it. And as Alexander came in, ſo he paſſed out, both in his perſon and poſterity; for within a ſhort time no man could tell what was become of the Grecian Monarchy; the conqueſts of Alexander could not be found, no more then the way of a Ship in the Sea, or of an Eagle in the air, or of a man running ſo faſt, that he leaves no print behind him.

Secondly, Taking both theſe ſimilitudes in the ordinary notion, as they import the ſwift paſſage of Job's proſperity, 'tis queſtioned, how Job can be excuſed for ſpeaking thus ſlightly and undervaluingly of his temporal eſtate, which was ſo raiſed, and ſo enriched, that he was an eye-ſore to the Devil. Satan envied him, becauſe of his abundance: And doth he now make nothing of it? Was it nothing to be the greateſt man in the Eaſt? Is he not very unthankful for, or very forgetful of the goodneſs and bounty of God to him? Should he not rather have ſaid, I have had my dayes of proſperity, my worldly comforts, and I enjoyed theſe a long time?

I anſwer, Job ſpeaks not this to obſcure the favours of God to him, or ungratefully to paſs by his bleſſings; but he anſwers the objections of his Friends, and maintains the argument he brought againſt them. His argument was, That the eſtate of a godly man in this life, is as tranſitory and as brittle as the eſtate of a wicked man, and that therefore there can be no diſtinction made of men by outward diſpenſations: To clear which, he ſaith, Look to my good dayes, they are paſt away ſwiftly, and there is nothing remaining of them. Hence obſerve,

That, The outward eſtate of the beſt men in the world, is as tranſitory and fading as that of the worſt in the world.

My dayes (ſaith Job) my comfortable dayes are paſſed away: Every man at his beſt eſtate is altogether vanity, Pſal. 39. 5. It is not only a wicked man, whoſe outward eſtate is vain, but every mans: David's Crown and Scepter were fading, vaniſhing flowers. Abraham and all the Patriarchs ſaid (Heb. 11.) We have here no continuing City; neither City nor Citizens have long continuance here. The Apoſtle (1 Cor. 7. 31.) ſpeaks to the Saints, and bids them take their hearts off from the world, and not to drench or ſteep their ſpirits in things here below; why? The faſhion of this world paſſeth away, the faſhion of the world in your hands; if you have the world in your hands, the faſhion of it will periſh there, as ſoon as in the hands of other men. Do not think that the world is put into an abiding ſtate, or into an unalterable faſhion for your ſakes. A godly man and a wicked man (though made of the moſt different faſhion) live in a world, and poſſeſs worldly things of the ſame faſhion.

Secondly,

Quemadmodum qui navigat, ſive ſtet, ſive ſedeat, vadit, quia impulſus navis ducitur: ita & nos, ſive vigilantes, ſive dormientes, ſive tacentes, ſive loquentes, ſive nolentes ſive volentes, per momenta temporum quotidie in finem tendimus. Greg.

Secondly, As from the firſt ſimilitude, ſo from theſe we learn how tranſitory our time is. See how Job multiplies compariſons, That if we will not learn by the firſt, we might yet be convinced by a ſecond and a third. Go to the Land, ſee Time upon the ſpur, in the ſwift riding Poſt. Go to the Sea, ſee Time upon the winds, in the ſwift-ſailing Ships. Go to the Air, ſee Time upon the wing, in the ſwift-flying Eagle. Theſe all preach the ſpeedy paſſage of Time. How ſad is it to ſee men live as if their dayes were Snail-pac'd, not Poſt-pac'd? As if Time lay alwayes at an Anchor, or were wind-bound, and could not uſe her Sails? As if it had leaden heels, and not wings, or were bound hand and foot, and could not ſtir? The Apoſtles caution is, Redeem the time; and now we have the Apoſtles argument to enforce it, The dayes are evil. If time go out of your hand, you cannot fetch it back again; there is no Rhetorick can recal it, or Price redeem it. Time is ſuch a commodity, as all the power in the world cannot recover, if loſt and let ſlip. If all the Crowns and Kingdoms of the world ſhould be laid down as a reward for the bringing back of one hour, yea of one moment of time, they could not obtain it. Therefore improve the preſent time: No time is yours but the preſent: the time that's gone, comes no more; the time that is to come, may find you gone before it comes; your time is only the preſent time, and that is paſt as ſoon as preſent.

But not to ſtay upon that which moveth ſo ſwiftly, our dayes and time; I will paſs to the other Branch, wherein Job further clears the point in the five following verſes.

VERS. 27, 28, 29, 30, 31.

If I ſay I will forget my complaint, I will leave off my heavineſs, and comfort my ſelf;
I am afraid of all my ſorrows, I know that thou wilt not hold me innocent.
If I be wicked, why then labour I in vain?
If I waſh my ſelf with Snow-water, and make my hands never ſo clean;
Yet ſhalt thou plunge me in the ditch, and mine own cloaths ſhall abhor me.

These words contain a proof of the latter part of Job's Aſſumption. He had affirmed, That an innocent and righteous perſon may quickly loſe all his outward comforts; which he illuſtrated by three ſimilitudes: now he proves that he may be entangled and lime-twigg'd with afflictions beyond hope of eſcape. This he doth in the twenty ſeventh, twenty eighth, and twenty ninth verſes. Which he amplifies with Hyperbolical ſtrains, in the thirtieth and thirty firſt verſes. The higheſt Rhetorick of his ſorrows being let out, to ſhew how remedileſs his ſorrows were. If I waſh my ſelf with Snow-water, and make my ſelf never ſo clean; Yet ſhalt thou plunge me in the ditch, and mine own cloaths ſhall abhor me: Things are ill with me, and I ſee not which way to mend my ſelf. I am ſo far from any probability of help by contending and ſtriving with God, that I have no hope of it by waſhing and cleanſing my ſelf. As carnal and earthly ſuccours fail me, ſo theſe heavenly and ſpiritual duties will not ſuccour me. I will give you the ſum and ſubſtance of theſe five Verſes in a few words together, and then open the Particulars.

The general ſence of the Context may be thus conceived; as if Job had ſaid,

I poor man in this condition, ſtudy to forget the troubles which are upon me; and laying aſide all anger, paſſion and diſcontentments with which ye charge me, I labour to refreſh and revive my ſelf with hopes of ſome dawning or near-drawing deliverance; but while I am eſſaying to do this, my ſorrows aſſault me afreſh, and even overwhelm my Infant-hopes, my beginning, budding comforts, with mighty terrors; ſo that now I even deſpair of recovery out of the hand of my affliction, and am perſwaded that I ſhall not only not be delivered that I may appear or be accounted pure and innocent, but if continued afflictions be an argument of wickedneſs (as you affirm) I ſhall have the bonds of my preſent troubles ſo faſtened upon me, and ſuch new ones, it may be, ſtronger ones, added, that I ſhall ſtill look in your eyes, and viewed in the glaſs of your opinion, like a wicked man: Wherefore then ſhould I deceive my ſelf with hopes that I ſhall be delivered? Or that God will awake for me, and make the habitation of my righteouſneſs proſperous? Whenas I believe and am very confident that how pure and righteous ſoever I am, or (by further waſhing and cleanſing, believing and repenting) ſhall appear to be, yet the Lord hath an intent to try me further, even to the uttermoſt; and will caſt me into the ditch, mire and dirt of further afflictions; ſo that they who make up their judgments by your rule, though they were as near to me as the cloaths upon my back, muſt yet abhor and loath me (as ye my Friends now do) as a wicked perſon. He ſeems to ſpeak as the Apoſtle doth, 1 Cor. 4. 9. I think that God hath ſet forth us the Apoſtles laſt, as it were men appointed unto death, for we are made a ſpectacle to the world, and to Angels, and to men.

This is the ſum and general ſence of theſe five Verſes. The words are full of difficulty, and there is much variety of judgment about them; but I hope in the cloſe to make out a ſence upon every particular, which ſhall be matching and ſuitable with this which hath been given in general.

If I ſay, I will forget my complaint.

If I ſay.] In this Job anſwereth directly to the charge of Bildad at the eighth Chapter, verſ. 2. How long wilt thou ſpeak theſe things, and ſhall thy words be like an Eaſt-wind? To which Job anſwers Bildad, If I ſhould ceaſe ſpeaking (as thou ſeemeſt to chide me into ſilence) If I ſhould ſay, I will not complain any more, I will give over theſe mournful diſcourſes, and bite in my ſtrongeſt pains, What then? Will the event prove what thou haſt promiſed? ſurely no, I am afraid of all my ſorrows, and almoſt aſſured that they will return upon me If I ſay, I will forget my complaint.

I will forget.

The word which we render [forget.] may ſignifie a threefold forgetfulneſs.

Firſt, Forgetfulneſs coming from the neglect of our natural abilities; when we are careleſs and take no heed to remember.

Secondly, Forgetfulneſs ariſing from the weakneſs of our natural abilities; when though we are careful, yet we cannot remember.

But Job means neither of theſe, he intends a third kind of forgetfulneſs, even a ſtudied and affected forgetfulneſs; when how able ſoever we are, yet we will not, or would not remember. If I ſay, I will forget my complaint; that is, If I purpoſely ſet my ſelf, or labour to forget my ſorrows, yet I cannot get off their remembrance. As the Hebrew (Zachar) ſignifies not only the natural act of memory, but diligence in remembring; ſo doth the Hebrew (Sachah) to forget. It is ſometimes as hard a work to forget, as it is at any time to remember. How do the damned in hell ſtrive to forget their pains and complaints? They would count it a happineſs, if they could put their miſery out of mind and memory one hour; but they cannot. And they can no more forget what they have felt, then not be ſenſible of what they feel: If I ſay, I will forget

My complaint.

שיח Sapit hoc verbum meditabundum quendā ſermonem, & anxium intellectus vociſq; diſcurſum. Miſeriæ memoriam omnem deponam. Druſ.

The word notes Meditation; and here, a mournful Meditation, a breathing forth in mournful expreſſions. The ſame word is uſed, chap. 7. 13. When I ſay my Bed ſhall comfort me, and my Couch ſhall eaſe my Complaint (or, my mournful meditation) then thou ſcareſt me with dreams. So then Job's meaning is, If I ſhould ſet my ſelf with greateſt intention to forget, that is, to lay aſide the thought of my troubles and ſorrows, and ſay, I will leave off my heavineſs, and complain no more, I will not pore upon my afflictions, but reſolve to be above them; yet it will not be. I find no eaſe; Forgetfulneſs is a medicine for ſome diſeaſes and pains, but I find no cure, no remedy that way for mine. Hence obſerve,

There are ſome things which man can very hardly forget, or get out of his mind.

We may ſtudy their forgetfulneſs, and yet not be able to forget them. And they are of two ſorts. Firſt, Worldly pleaſures. Secondly, Worldly ſorrows. Theſe will not fail to mind us. We need the art, or rather the grace of forgetfulneſs, to lay theſe aſide. And there are two things which we are ſlow to remember. Firſt. Our own Duties. And ſecondly, The Mercies of God. About theſe we need the art, or rather the grace of memory. And uſually they who have moſt neglected to remember duty, are moſt afflicted with the conſtrained remembrance of their own ſorrow. And they ſhall not be able at all to forget the wrath of God, who would not remember the mercies of God. If I ſay I will forget my Complaint,

I will leave off my heavineſs, and comfort my ſelf.

Notat faciem, iram etiam & triſtitiam.

Leave off my heavineſs.] The Hebrew word [for word is, I will lay aſide my face; for that which ſtrictly, and in the Letter of that Language, ſignifies the face or countenance of a man, doth alſo ſignifie, Firſt, Anger and wrath; Secondly, Sorrow and heavineſs. 'Tis put for anger, Pſal. 34. 16. The face (or anger) of the Lord is againſt ſuch as do evil. So (Lam. 4. 16. Levit. 17. 10.) I will ſet my face, that is, I will ſhew my anger, and manifeſt my diſpleaſure againſt them.

And the reaſon why that word which ſignifies the countenance or face, ſignifies alſo anger and wrath, ſorrow and heavineſs, is, becauſe both anger and ſorrow break forth in the face. If a man be very angry, you ſhall ſee his anger ſcribled in the uneven character of his countenance: If a man be very heavy and ſorrowful, you ſhall ſee the lines of ſorrow drawn in his face. Therefore it is ſaid of Hannah (1 Sam. 1. 18.) When ſhe received a refreſhing and a reviving anſwer from the Lord in prayer (the poor ſoul ſate drooping and mourning, as much as praying, but as ſoon as ſhe had a hint of audience and acceptance, it is ſaid) She went away and did eat, and her countenance was no more ſad; the ſadneſs of her heart appeared no more in her countenance, there was fair weather in her face, and Sun-ſhine in her forehead, the rain and ſhowers of her tears were blown over and dried up. As in ſome ſinners, The ſhew of their countenance doth teſtifie againſt them (Iſa. 3. 9.) that is, they are ſo groſly wicked, that you may ſee ſin in their faces; whereas others can keep ſin cloſe enough in their hearts, they can keep the diſeaſe in, and ſhut themſelves up, when they are ſick of the plague in their hearts (1 Kings 8.) Nothing but holineſs is diſcernable in the face of their converſation, when nothing but rottenneſs and corruption lies at the bottom of their ſpirits. But as the corruption of many a mans heart breaks forth in botches upon the face of his actions, and the rottenneſs of his ſpirit bliſters upon his tongue in unſavoury ſpeeches; ſo thoſe paſſions and affections of the heart, joy and ſorrow, anger and heavineſs appear in the face, and we may read the diſtempers of the heart in the diſguiſedneſs of a look. The face is the Index of the heart, that tells you how things go within. Therefore Job ſaith, If I leave off my face, meaning, as we tranſlate, If I leave off my heavineſs, which is ſo evident in my face, or which is as eaſie to be ſeen as my face: If I reſolve to appear chearful and merry, and will not let clouds darken my countenance any longer, yet, &c. The face is put generally for the appearance or outſide of any thing; as we ſay, the face of the earth, the face of the heavens, the face of the Church or Common-wealth. So that, To leave off heavineſs or the face, is to leave off all ſhew of heavineſs. As Joſeph left off his tears of joy, (Gen. 43. 30, 31.) who, having eaſed his heart of his joyful ſorrows, by weeping ſecretly in his Chamber, waſhed his face, went out and refrained himſelf. Thus Job would have waſhed his mournful tears from his face, he attempted to refrain himſelf; but he could not, his ſorrows were too ſtrong for him; and as he could not remove ſo he could not diſſemble them. For this leaving off, is to be taken as the precedent act of forgetting, for an affected, reſolved laying aſide. If I make it my buſineſs to be chearful and leave off my heavineſs, yet, &c. Hence obſerve,

Cordis index vultus, totuſque homo eſt in facie. Nomen faciei in Scriptura ſignificat exteriorem habitum, ſicut facies terræ, cœli, reipu. Bold. Latina vox facies ſignificat non ſolum os, oculos, genas, ſed formam omnem, modum & facturam totius corporis, à faciendo dictam. Aul. Gel.

Sorrow is not eaſily ſhaken off.

Sorrow ſticks cloſe. It is very hard for a man to play the hypocrite with his ſorrow, or diſſemble the ſadneſs of his heart, but is far harder to be really delivered of it. Sorrow is a companion that will not be caſt off with a word. A man may more eaſily cover his ſin then his ſorrow. Many can put a vizard of holineſs upon their faces, when nothing but wickedneſs is in their hearts; but it is not eaſie to make a ſhew of comfort, when nothing but ſorrow is in the heart. Grief will out. Heavineſs in the heart is like the Ointment in the right hand, of which Solomon ſpeaks (Prov. 27. 16.) That it bewrayeth it ſelf. One ſaid of a merry Atheiſt, He laugheth to thee and to me, that is, he ſeems to laugh, but he mourns to himſelf, the mans heart is heavy. If it be not ſo, yet it may be ſo with all wicked men, when they are merrieſt in the face, they have reaſon to have ſorrow even unto death in their hearts: It is a hard thing (I ſay) to put ſorrow out of the face, much more to get it out of the heart; when it is lodged there once, it will not ſoon be diſpoſſeſſed. The Apoſtle (Heb. 12. 1.) exhorts, To lay aſide every weight, and to caſt off the ſin that doth ſo eaſily beſet us; he means it of the ſin of nature, which we bear about us; this ſin (ſaith he) doth eaſily beſet us; but let us caſt it off, that is, let us ſtudy and ſtrive to lay aſide this heavineſs of ſin, which is the trueſt cauſe of the heavineſs of ſorrow. One would think that a man needs not much perſwaſion, when he hath a heavy burden upon his ſhoulders, to lay it aſide; yet (ſo it is) man can hardly be perſwaded to lay aſide this burden; and it is the buſineſs we have with your ſouls every day, to perſwade you to lay it aſide: It is a weight that eaſily beſets us. Now as we need much exhortation to caſt off the weight of this ſin, which is ſo pleaſing, ſo alſo of ſorrow, though it be unpleaſant. When ſorrow beſets us, it leaves us without eaſe; but ſorrow eaſily beſets us. Job found it a hard task to lay aſide his burden. Becauſe his Friends thought he fed too much upon his afflictions, therefore he tried what he could do, but it would not do. If I ſay, I will leave off my heavineſs, I will comfort my ſelf, &c. See the iſſue by and by.

I will comfort my ſelf.

Comfort is the very life of our lives, the Spring of our Year, the Light of our Day, the Sun in our Firmament, the complement of mercy; and therefore Chriſt gives his Church the ſum of all mercy, in that one promiſe of ſending the Comforter. The Hebrew word ſignifies to ſtrengthen, becauſe when a man is caſt down with ſorrows, his ſpirit is weakened: Comfort is the repair of ſtrength. If I ſay, I will comfort, that is, corroborate and ſtrengthen my ſelf (Pſal. 39. 13.) O ſpare me (ſaith David) that I may recover my ſtrength; or, that I may a little comfort my ſelf: The Septuagint renders it, That I may get my life again; that I may be enlivened, and re-inſouled, or fetch back my ſoul again. Here, if I ſay I will comfort my ſelf, take heart at graſs (as we ſay) and play the man, then my ſorrows renew upon me.

Roboravit, conſortavit, vires collegit. Sept. ἀναψύχω.

But ſome may object; How is it that Job takes upon him to comfort himſelf? Is it any wonder if Job come ſhort of comfort, when he went to himſelf for comfort?

Comfort is not a commodity to be found in the hand or power of any creature; the great God hath all in his own hand; if any man will have comfort, he muſt trade to heaven for it. It is the honour of God to be called, The God of all comfort (2 Cor. 1. 3.) that is, the God who hath all comfort at his diſpoſe. As ſome Kings have a denomination from the great ſtaple-commodities of their Kingdoms. Our King is called, The King of the Wool, becauſe Wool is the chief commodity, and more plentiful here then in any Countrey of the world. Another is called, King of the Wines; and another of the Flax. Comfort is the Staple-Commodity of Heaven; and God is called, The God of all comfort, not only becauſe the chiefeſt and beſt comforts are in his hand, but becauſe there is not the leaſt imaginable comfort to be had out of his hand. He hath the monopoly of comfort, or rather the ſole gift of comfort, We can trouble and perplex our ſelves, but God only can comfort us. And he is the God of all comfort, of all ſorts and of all degrees of comfort: the God, not only of ſpiritual, tual, but of worldly comfort; of temporal comfort, as well as of eternal. As the joyes of the Holy Ghoſt are in his hand, ſo are the joyes of civil relations; the joy of meat and drink, the joy of riches and honour are in his hand alſo; How then ſaith Job, I will lay aſide my heavineſs, I will comfort my ſelf? It is a hard thing to comfort others (Luther ſaid, It is as eaſie a work to raiſe the dead, as to comfort the conſcience) but it is harder for a man to comfort himſelf. Eliphaz gave teſtimony to Job in (Chap. 4. v. 3, 4.) that he had upholden him that was falling, and had ſtrengthened the feeble knees. But now it is come upon thee, and thou fainteſt, it toucheth thee, and thou art troubled. Thou, who haſt holpen others, canſt not help thy ſelf. Yet here Job was upon a reſolve to comfort himſelf.

I anſwer, Though it be a truth, that no man is able to comfort himſelf, no more then he can convert himſelf; and that a man is no more able to change his heart from ſorrow to joy, then he is able to change his heart from ſin to grace; yet a man may attempt or aſſay, he may uſe means to comfort himſelf. When Job ſaith, I will comfort my ſelf; the meaning is, I will do the utmoſt I can, I will not be behind in my endeavours, I will take the beſt courſe, and improve all opportunities to get out of theſe dumps, whoſoever will preſcribe me a way, or direct me to a remedy of theſe ſorrows, I will ſubmit to it; I will comfort my ſelf. From whence note,

That, What a man really endeavoureth to do, that he may be ſaid do.

I will comfort my ſelf; Why? Becauſe though he were not able to attain ſuch an end; Joy and comfort lieth beyond the line of the creature, yet he reached at it, he attempted and aſſayed all means to comfort himſelf. Thus the ſalvation of a man is aſcribed to himſelf; A man is ſaid to ſave himſelf, though ſalvation belongeth to the Lord, even temporal ſalvation, but eſpecially eternal ſalvation; yet, a man may be ſaid to ſave himſelf: As the Apoſtle exhorts Timothy (1 Epiſt. 4. 16.) to walk by a holy rule, to ſettle himſelf in his ſtudies, to read the Scriptures, and to meditate in them, to be faithful in diſpenſing of the Goſpel, aſſuring him, If thou doeſt theſe things, thou ſhalt both ſave thy ſelf, and them that hear thee; ſave thy ſelf. No man can be his own Saviour, he may be as well his own Creator; Timothy was thus encouraged, becauſe in ſo doing, he did all that a man ought, who expects ſalvation. That was the way to, though not the cauſe of ſalvation. Salvation is all Chriſts; yet he who doth his beſt to ſave himſelf, may be ſaid to ſave himſelf. Thus alſo a man comforts himſelf, converts himſelf, inſtructs himſelf, when he putteth himſelf out to the utmoſt of gifts, graces, and opportunities to do or attain duties and bleſſings. No man (ſaith the Prophet) doth ſtir himſelf up to take hold of the Lord. The word in the Prophet, ſignifies, to awake, or to watch; no man wakes or watches his opportunity to take hold of the Lord. It notes alſo that action of old birds, who flutter with their wings, and beat up their young ones, to urge and provoke them to uſe their wings, and flie abroad. Thus he complained, becauſe the lazy, dull-hearted Jews did not raiſe up and waken their hearts to do what they could, though to do it was more then they could.

Secondly, Obſerve, That a man in affliction may help on his comforts or his ſorrows.

I will comfort my ſelf, I will leave off my heavineſs. Some add to their afflictions, and are active to aggravate and increaſe them: they make their night darker, and obſcure the light of counſel that is brought unto them: they joyn with Satan their enemy, and by the black melancholy vapors of their own hearts, ſtifle the conſolations that are adminiſtred them by faithful friends. Like Rachel (Jer. 31.) they refuſe to be comforted; when reviving Cordials are offered, they ſpill them upon the ground, and will not take in a drop: they are ſo far from comforting themſelves, that they will not receive comfort from others. The Prophet ſeems to be reſolved upon the point, he would go on in ſorrows; Look away from me, I will weep bitterly, labour not to comfort me (Iſa. 22. 4.) As ſometimes a man under great affliction beſpeaks comfort from others: O, I am in a ſad caſe, come, comfort me, ſhew me how I may get eaſe from theſe ſorrows. Many beg prayers, and ſend bills of their afflictions, deſiring to have them ſpread before the Lord in the Congregation, that ſome comfort may be dropt from Heaven into their diſeaſed bodies, or wounded ſpirits. Others ſlight prayers, and care not to be comforted, as if it were an eaſe for them to mourn, and a refreſhing to be in heavineſs. There is a twofold ground, upon which comforts are thus put off.

Firſt, Some put off their comforts upon ſullenneſs of Spirit; black and dark ſpirits love to bathe themſelves in ſorrow. Sorrow is the bath of drooping ſpirits, and it is Satans bath too; Melancholly is commonly called, The Devils bath; he takes delight to waſh in the ſtreams of our unneceſſary tears. Sorrow for ſin puts the Devil to the greateſt ſorrow. Godly grief is a grief to Satan: but he delighteth in our worldly ſorrows, as the Devil may be delighted: if he have delight in any thing, this is one thing he delights in, our forbidden ſorrows. Some ſorrows are as much forbidden as any pleaſures. The Devil is as much pleaſed with our unlawful ſorrows, as he is with our unlawful pleaſures. And he labours as much to make us pleaſed with them.

Secondly, Others help on their own ſorrows, and leſſen their comforts through forgetfulneſs or ignorance; they (as the Apoſtle chides the Hebrews, Chap. 12. 5.) have forgotten the exhortation, which ſpeaks unto them as unto children. Now, as wicked men rejoyce, becauſe they forget or know not their ill condition: So godly men are, when they forget or know not how good their condition is. Yet Job ſuppoſes the review of his good eſtate, would neither check his ſorrows, nor eſtabliſh his peace; If I ſay, I will forget my complaint, I will comfort my ſelf, I am afraid of all my ſorrows.

We can make our ſelves croſſes, but we cannot make our ſelves comforts. A man may ſay, as Job did (Chap. 7 13.) to his bed, comfort me; or to his riches, comfort me; or to his wine and good chear, comfort me; or to his friends, comfort me: He may ſay to all outward acts of pleaſure, to merry company, and muſick, comfort me; Yea a Saint may ſay to his graces and holineſs, comfort me; and yet none of theſe can comfort him, or, they comfort him in vain. To ſeek comfort any where but in Chriſt, is to ſeek the living among the dead. Chriſt is comfort cloathed in our fleſh, and he is the comfort of our ſpirits. Till he gives comfort, every man muſt conclude as Job, I am afraid of all my ſorrows.

I am afraid.] The word ſignifies ſtrong trembling and ſhaking fear.

Of all my ſorrows.] The root hath a double ſignification. Firſt, To afflict with grief (Iſa. 63. 10.) They vexed his holy Spirit. Secondly, To faſhion or form a thing (Job 10. 8.) Thy hands have made me, and faſhioned me round about. The ſame word by a Metaphor ſignifies both to grieve and to faſhion, to vex and to form, becauſe a man that forms and faſhions a piece of wood or ſtone, ſeems to put it to pain by cutting and hewing. And he that forms wax, vexes and chafes it in his hands. Thus I ſay, becauſe in the faſhioning of a thing a man doth bruiſe, cut, and (as it were) put it to pain; therefore the ſame word ſignifies both to vex or grieve, and to form, or faſhion. And this word is applied unto the ill uſage of words (Pſal. 56. 5.) Every day (ſaith David, ſpeaking of his enemies) they wreſt my words; or they put my words to pain and grief, or they painfully and grievouſly wreſt my words. David's enemies took up what he ſpake, and put a new ſhape upon it, and this they did ſo vexingly, that they are ſaid to wreſt his words; a thing is vexed when it is wreſted, or wrought quite out of the form it before had. The ſame Metaphor the Apoſtle Peter uſeth in reference to Doctrine, 2 Pet. 3. 16. ſpeaking of the Epiſtles of Paul, in which are ſome things hard to be underſtood, which they that are unlearned and unſtable, wreſt, or put upon the rack; they painfully form his words, and repreſent them in a meaning which he never intended. What is ſpoken may be right, both in the matter and intendment of the ſpeaker, yet another wreſts, forms, and faſhions it in his own mould, and makes it bear a ſence which the ſpeaker never dream'd of, עצב Significat dolore afficere, & interdum figurare. Qui materiã aliquam, ut lutum vel ceram figurat manibus & digitis, is illam premendo quaſi dolore afficit. Bold. Eſt elegans metaphora; verba alicujus figurare, nam quia ea vi detorquet, aliam figuram, i.e. ſignificationem iis tribuit.

In this Text we have the Noun only, which importeth either the labour or pains, which a man taketh, or the pain and grief, which a man feeleth. Hence in the Hebrew this word ſignifies an Idol, and both acceptions fall into the reaſon of it.

Firſt, Becauſe Idols are made, faſhioned and formed up curiouſly, with a great deal of art and labour: the wax, or clay, or ſtone is put to pain; you muſt cut it and carve it to make an Idol.

Secondly, Becauſe Idols are ſerved, attended and worſhipped with much pain and grief. Falſe worſhip, or the worſhip of Idols, is alwayes more ſervile and painful then true worſhip is. Falſe worſhip is a painful ſervice, a ſervile ſervice, a toil rather then a worſhip; but the ſervice of the true and everliving God, is an holy, an ingenuous, a noble and honourable ſervice. Idols are troubleſom, both in their making, and in their worſhipping. From this two-fold interpretation of the word, I find a two-fold tranſlation given.

Verebar omnia opera mea. Vul.

Firſt, Thus, I am afraid of all my works, as if Job, having a deſign to comfort himſelf in a reflexion upon his good works, and former holy walkings, feared they would not ſerve his turn or bear up his ſpirit in the evil day, which was come upon him. As if he had ſaid; I have lived as exactly by the rule of the Word as I could; I have had reſpect to all the Commandments of God, that I might not ſin againſt him. Yet I am afraid of all my works, the anger of God will ſurely ſoak thorow them all, or find holes and breaches in them to come in upon me at.

Thus he is conceived reaſoning with himſelf. But doubtleſs it was not Job's meaning to look to the innocency or holineſs of his life paſt, as the ground of his preſent comfort; he that would do ſo, may juſtly be afraid of all his works. When we ſee the beſt of our ſelves, we have more reaſon to be afraid, then to be comforted. As we muſt work out our ſalvation with fear and trembling: ſo we have cauſe to fear and tremble at our works.

But rather as we tranſlate, I am afraid of all my ſorrows; that is, I no ſooner endeavour to comfort my ſelf, but preſently my ſorrows throng about me, they appear before my face, and make ſuch a gaſtly apparition, that I am afraid. Sorrows charge and aſſault me afreſh, when I am purpoſing to make an eſcape from the hands of ſorrow. When I think of leaving of my heavineſs, or of getting out of the ſight of it, ſorrows come upon me with greater violence then before. While a priſoner is quiet and content with his reſtraint, the Keeper layes no great reſtraint upon him; but if he perceive him meditating an eſcape, or attempting to break priſon, and ſet himſelf at liberty, preſently more irons are clapt upon him, and an advantage taken even to load him with chains. Such hard uſage this poor priſoner feared at the hand of his ſorrows, If I ſay, I will leave off my heavineſs, I will throw off my bolts and fetters, and get out of theſe troubles, I am afraid of all my ſorrows; I ſhall have all the Keepers and Jailers about me, they will lay more load upon me, and watch me more ſtrictly then before: You tell me I am in love with my ſorrows, but the truth is, fears of ſorrow incompaſs me round about, I am afraid of all my ſorrows.

Note hence this general truth,

> Firſt, That affliction is the matter of fear.

Natural fears ariſes from the apprehenſion of ſome approaching evil; and as fear grows more boiſterous and inordinate, ſo it repreſents us with ſadder (though but ſuppoſed) evils.

> Secondly obſerve, A godly man may be much oppreſt with the fear of afflictions.

When I would comfort my ſelf, I am afraid of all my ſorrows: It is terrible to me to think that they ſtill encreaſe upon me, and that whileſt I hope to eſcape, I am more enſnared. Chriſt himſelf, when he was in our nature, and clothed with our fleſh, was afraid of all his ſorrows: he was a man of ſorrows, and he was afraid of his ſorrows too, Matth. 26.38. He ſaid, My ſoul is exceeding ſorrowful even unto death; and he offered up prayers and ſupplications with ſtrong cryes and tears unto him that was able to ſave him from death, and was heard in that he feared (Heb. 5.) His were extraordinary ſorrows indeed, ſuch as no creature ever felt or taſted. The Cup of ſorrow which he drank was mixed and tempered with all our ſorrows, and with the cauſe of them, our ſins. This was it he feared, being in our nature; though as that nature was hypoſtatically united unto the divine nature, it had infinitely more power to bear all thoſe ſorrows, then we have in our nature to bear the leaſt ſorrow. Now if Chriſt himſelf in our fleſh was afraid of his ſorrows, which yet he knew he ſhould overcome, how much more may the fear of ſorrows overcome us, while we are in the fleſh?

> Laſtly obſerve, That the fear of afflictions aſſaults and oppreſſes ſome moſt, when they ſet themſelves moſt to conquer and overcome them.

I, ſaith Job, would comfort my ſelf, but I am afraid of all my ſorrows; I fear they will be doubled and trebled upon me, therefore I had rather ſit ſtill, then, by ſtriving to unlooſe, ſtraiten the cords of my affliction faſter upon me. The next clauſe ſeems to hint this as a reaſon, why his ſorrows hung ſo cloſe upon him.

I know that thou wilt not hold me innocent.

But how did Job know this? As God ſaid to Adam, (Gen. 3.11.) Who told thee that thou waſt naked! So I may ſay to Job, Who told thee that God would not hold thee innocent? Or, where hadſt thou this aſſurance of thy condemnation? The Saints may know, or be aſſured that God will pardon them; but a wicked man cannot know or be aſſured that God will not. This knowledge of Job was but a ſuſpition, or at the moſt a conjecture. And the giving out of this conjecture was but the language of his fear, his faith could ſay no ſuch thing, for God had no where ſaid it, The beſt men ſpeak ſometime from their worſer part. Their graces may be ſilent a while, and leave corruption to have all the talk. When the fleſh is under great pain, the ſpirit is hindered from acting its part, and then ſence gets the maſtery over faith. Had it not been upon ſuch a diſadvantage, Job had never offended with his tongue, by ſaying he knew what he could not know.

לא תנקי à radice נקה purus, mundus, per Metaphoram innocens, inſons.

I know that thou wilt not hold me innocent.] The word which we tranſlate innocent, cometh from a root which ſignifieth pure and clean, and in the Verb to cleanſe, and make pure: And becauſe innocency is the purity or clearneſs of a perſon, therefore the ſame word ſignifies to cleanſe, and to hold or make innocent: In which ſence it is uſed frequently, Exod. 20. Thou wilt not hold him guiltleſs (or innocent) that taketh thy Name in vain. The counſel that David gave upon his death-bed unto Solomon concerning Joab, was, Therefore hold thou him not innocent, or guiltleſs (1 King. 2. 9.) that is, let the blood which he hath ſhed be upon him, let his honour and his name continue ſtained and blemiſhed in thy thoughts and judgment, Hold him not innocent.

Here the Queſtion is, To what Antecedent we are to refer the Relative Thou, I know thou wilt not hold me innocent; Thou, who?

There are two opinions about it. Some refer it to God, and ſome to Bildad, to whom Job maketh anſwer in this place.

They that refer it unto God, make out the ſence thus, Either, firſt, taking the word properly for cleanſing and healing the ſores and wounds which were upon his body; I know thou wilt not cleanſe my body from this filthineſs, from theſe diſeaſes that now annoy me: And ſo it is an anſwer to the words of Bildad, telling Job, that in caſe he ſought unto God, and humbled himſelf before him, he would awaken for him, and remove thoſe judgments. No, ſaith Job, when I think of eaſe and deliverence, all my fears return upon me, and I know God will not yet cleanſe, eaſe or deliver me from them.

Adverſus illud quod amici ſtatuunt, probos, videlicet etiam caſtigatos nunquam ſuccidi, hoc pro certo ſtatuã ô Deus, nunquam eſſe me ab iſtis quibus totus ſcateo fœdiſſimis ulceribus ac vermibus repurgandum. Bez.

Again, Taking it tropically (as we render it) for a judicial cleanſing or purification; ſo, Thou wilt not hold me innocent, is as much as this, Lord, ſuch ſorrows and troubles are upon me, that I fear thou wilt not declare, or pronounce, or give teſtimony concerning me to the world, that I am an innocent perſon. Becauſe the ſores and troubles upon him, were as an evidence againſt him in the judgement of his friends, that he was a wicked perſon, therefore (ſaith he) Lord, I am afraid, Thou wilt not hold me, that is, Thou wilt not declare me to be innocent by taking away

Novi quod non ſit me liberum dimiſſurus. Coc.

Non mundabis, i. e. purum, juſtum, vel etiam innocentem non declarabis.

away theſe evils, that ſo this opinion of my friends concerning me may be removed or confuted. From this ſence Note, Firſt, That even a godly man in deep afflictions may have miſgiving thoughts of God.

The ſoul miſ-gives ſometimes about the pardon of ſin, and is even ſwallowed up with deſpair, concluding, I know God will not hold me innocent; he will not be reconciled unto me, or blot out my tranſgreſſion.

But eſpecially (which is rather the mind of Job) the ſoul miſgives about releaſe from puniſhment. Some being hamper'd in the bands of affliction, conclude, God will never let them looſe, or ſet them at liberty again. Such a concluſion David's unbelief made againſt himſelf, I ſhall one day periſh by the hand of Saul (1 Sam. 27. 1.) When Jonah was caſt into the deep, in the midſt of the Seas, when the floods encompaſſed him, and all the billows and waves paſſed over him, then he ſaid (Chap. 2. 4.) I am caſt out of the ſight of thine eyes. Indeed Jonah began to recover quickly, his next words being a breath of faith, Yet I will look again toward thy holy Temple.

Secondly obſerve, That until fear of guilt be removed, fear of trouble will not remove.

Job was not very clear about the pardon of his ſins, ſomewhat ſtuck upon his ſpirit, while he was under the clouds and darkneſs of this temptation; therefore, ſaith he, I am afraid of all my ſorrows. Till the ſoul is ſetled in the matter of pardon, or freedom from guilt, it can never be ſetled about freedom from puniſhment. Hence the Apoſtle (Heb. 2. 10, 15.) ſpeaking of the Saints before the coming of Chriſt, calls Chriſt, the Captain of our ſalvation, and aſſures us, he took fleſh, that through death, he might deſtroy him that had the power of death, that is, the Devil, and deliver thoſe who through fear of death, were all their life time ſubject unto bondage. The language is very near this of the Text, I am afraid of all my ſorrows. As Job was in bondage under his affliction through the fear of his returning ſorrows, So, they were all their life time ſubject unto bondage through the fear of approaching death. All the Saints before the coming of Chriſt, were under ſuch a bondage: for the Apoſtle ſpeaks as of a general ſtate, That he might deliver thoſe, who through the fear of death, were all their life time ſubject unto bondage. The reaſon hereof, was, becauſe they had not ſo manifeſt and convincing a light concerning the pardon of ſin, the freeneſs of grace, and the abundance of that mercy which was brought in afterwards, and revealed by Jeſus Chriſt, when he actually made our atonement by the blood of his croſs: For howſoever it is undeniable, that the faithful under the Old Teſtament, had knowledge of that ſatisfaction which was to be made by the Mediator for the removing of ſin, and the taking away of guilt (every ſacrifice ſpake this, ſhewing that there was an atonement to be made by ſome other blood, which the blood of the ſacrifice typified) yet notwithſtanding there was not a clearing and a quieting of their hearts, becauſe Chriſt (though in the promiſe ſlain from the beginning of the world) was not actually ſlain, nor offered up for ſinners. The Apoſtle (Heb. 10. 1, 2.) argues upon the ſame point, That the Law, with thoſe Sacrifices, could not make the comers thereunto perfect, that is, it could not aſſure the heart that ſin was taken away, for if it could, then (ſaith he) the ſacrifices ſhould not have needed to be offered up ſo often. What needed any repetition, ſeeing they who were once ſo purged ſhould have had no more conſcience of ſin, that is, ſin ſhould never have troubled and vexed their conſciences any more? But now Chriſt by one offering hath for ever perfected them that are ſanctified (verſ. 14.) that is, he hath made a perfect ſatisfaction for them; and compleated the peace of their conſciences. So then, while there remaineth any ſcruple about ſin, fears of evil will hang upon the ſpirit. And we find that the old Saints were very fearful of outward afflictions, becauſe they had as it were a reliſh or taſte of the diſfavour and diſpleaſure of God in them. And in proportion, as any of them had more or leſs of free grace appearing to them, ſo they were more or leſs enthralled with theſe fears. We may obſerve throughout the Old Teſtament, that there was not ſuch a ſpirit of rejoycing in ſufferings and afflictions, as we find breakings forth in the New: Paul never ſaith, I am afraid of all my ſorrows; No, he ſaith, As ſorrowful, yet alwayes rejoycing. You never hear him complain of his afflictions. He indeed complains of his corruptions, O miſerable man that I am, who ſhall deliver me from this body of death! But he never ſaid, O miſerable man, how am I afflicted, I am in deaths often, who ſhall deliver me from this death of the body! We find the Saints under the Goſpel clothed with a ſpirit of exultation and rejoycing, of which we hear little, if any thing at all under the Law: The want of which we are to aſcribe to their want of a clear light about the removing of guilt, and the pardon of ſin, I know thou wilt not hold me innocent.

Thirdly obſerve, That God often deals with his beſt ſervants, in regard of outward troubles, as if they were guilty.

I know thou wilt not hold me innocent; that is, thou wilt not deal with me as with an innocent perſon. As the Lord dealt with his Son, ſo he deals with his ſervants. God the Father dealt with Jeſus Chriſt as with a guilty perſon (Iſa. 53. 9, 12.) He was numbred among tranſgreſſors, and made his grave with the wicked. The Lord reckoned him as a ſinner, while he was ſatisfying his juſtice for ſin, and making an atonement for ſinners. Job is no where called a type of Chriſt, but he was like him, and their parallel might be drawn in many things, eſpecially in this, that both were numbred with the wicked, and in that both were uſed, as if they had been guilty. The diſpenſations of God to his own beloved Son once did, and to his faithful ſervants often do look like thoſe to the greateſt tranſgreſſors. His ſon was handled ſo that he might redeem ſinners; his ſervants are ſo handled, ſometimes to prevent, often to purge them from ſin; ſometimes to try their graces, alwayes to make them fitter veſſels for glory. Though we cannot make any earnings toward glory by the weightieſt afflictions, yet theſe light afflictions, which are but for a moment, work for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.

Bellarm. l. 5. de juſtif. cap. 5.

I ſhall paſs from this reference of the word, Thou, when I have briefly vindicated the Text from the corruptions of ſome Papiſts, who urge it to prove the uncertainty of our juſtification. Job (ſay they) doubted whether God would declare him juſt or no. I anſwer, Juſtified perſons may have doubts, yet that doth not argue the uncertainty of juſtification. Juſtification is a ſure act in it ſelf, and we may be ſure of it, though ſome are unſetled about it. This Scripture gives no ſhelter, much leſs ſupport to that doctrine of doubting. The Vulgar reading, groſly varying from the original, is all the ſhadow it hath in this place. For as that Tranſlator miſtakes the former clauſe, which he renders, I am afraid of all my works: So this latter, which he renders, Knowing that thou wilt not pardon or ſpare him that offendeth. He that ſeeks to be juſtified by his works, ſhall not want fears about his juſtification: And if this be a truth, which their tranſlation ſeems to hold forth, that God will not pardon him that offendeth, the beſt and holieſt men in the world have reaſon, not only to fear whether they are juſtified, but to reſolve they can never be juſtified in his ſight. If every man that ſinneth muſt doubt of the pardon of ſin, all men muſt doubt. In that common acception of the word offend, it is falſe, that God will not pardon him that offends: whom ſhould he pardon but ſuch as offend? They who are above ſin, are above pardon. Job never thought God would not pardon him, becauſe he had ſinned, it being one of the royal titles of God, The God pardoning iniquity, tranſgreſſion and ſin. But if we take ſinning or offending in a ſtricter ſence, as it imports a man obſtinate and ſtill engaged with delight to ſin (in which ſence the next title of the Lords great name, after, Forgiving iniquity, tranſgreſſion and ſin, is to be underſtood, and that will by no means clear the guilty (Exod. 34. 7.) The Hebrew is, And that clearing will not clear. We ſupply the word guilty; which the Chaldee well explains by this Periphraſis, Him that will not convert, or turn to the Lord) ſuch offenders the Lord will not pardon. But to ſay, that the Lord will not ſpare and pardon ſuch guilty perſons, ſuch delinquents as will not return unto him, but go on to add one wickedneſs to another, is no denial of the Saints aſſurance of pardon, they being already turned and converted to the Lord. So much for that clauſe, as the antecedent refers unto God, I know thou wilt not hold me innocent.

Sciens quod non parceret delinquenti. Vulg.

But rather take the Antecedent to be Bildad. I know, thou Bildad, wilt not hold me innocent; as if Job had ſaid, When I think of comforting my ſelf, my wounds bleed afreſh, and my ſorrows preſent themſelves to my thoughts again, by the ſight of which I am aſſured I ſhall not be judged innocent by thee, but rather more wicked, as my ſorrows appear to be more; for ſeeing thou art reſolved to conclude the multitude of my ſins from the multitude of my ſuffering, in vain ſhall I labour to ſhew and approve my ſelf as an innocent perſon before thee, whenas I ſhall ſtill be an afflicted perſon before thee: I know thou canſt not hold me innocent, while abiding afflictions leads thy judgment to conclude that a man is wicked. How ſhall I being in trouble, gain any credit of integrity in thy opinion, ſo long as outward troubles render me a hypocrite in thy opinion?

In vanum laborabo ut oſtendam tibi afflictum ſimul & innocentem me eſſe poſſe. Bold.

I ſhall only note this from it,

> He that judgeth of a mans innocency by his outward eſtate, may for ever condemn an innocent,

Bildad judged ſo of Job, this cauſed Job to ſay, I know thou wilt not hold me innocent, or think me good, ſeeing evils are ſtill upon me, and are like to continue upon me ſtill. Judge not according to appearance, but judge righteous judgment, is the rule of Chriſt (John 7.24.) As if they could hardly judge what is right, who judge by what appears. We muſt not judge of things till they appear; nor may we judge of perſons by their appearance. As oftentimes in holineſs, ſo ſometime in ſinfulneſs, men are not what they ſeem to be. All is not Gold that gliſters, and ſome Gold doth not gliſter: Many are not that in holineſs which they ſeem to be by their actings toward God, and ſome are not in ſinfulneſs what they ſeem to be by Gods acting toward them. It is eaſier to do do good then to be good; and uſually they who are good, ſuffer that which is evil.

Verſe 29. If I be wicked, why then labour I in vain?

Theſe words may be connected with either of the interpretations given upon the former verſe, I know, thou (O God) or thou (O Bildad) wilt not hold me innocent. Now then,

If I be wicked, &c.

The original word hath been heretofore opened. Only note, that the Hebrew is abſolute, and not by way of ſuppoſition; plainly thus, I am wicked, or, I ſhall be accounted wicked, why therefore labour I in vain? Or, now therefore I labour in vain. When Job ſaith, I am wicked, it is not as if he gave the cauſe, and aſſented to his friend; Ye have as had an ill opinion of me all this while, now I begin to have ill an opinion of my ſelf, I am wicked. No, he means it only thus, I am handled or accounted as a wicked man; I am wicked in your thoughts, and the providence of God ſeems to give you occaſion of thinking ſo; ye look upon me as if I were a wicked man, and I look like one; Why then labour I in vain?

אנכי ארשע Ego impius. Impius hoc loco non qui ſit, ſed qui ut improbus tractetur, vel qui impius videatur, & liquet Jobum ſuis amicis impium fuiſſe viſum ut qui in hoc Chriſtum præferret, qui cum impiis reputatus fuit. Fr Joh.

Why labour I in vain?

The word ſignifies hardeſt labour? why do I travel ſo painfully to vindicate my ſelf, and to ſtand fair in your eyes? It is labouring with toil, or moiling labour, anſwerable to that Greek word (κοπιάω) which ſignifies ſore and extream labour. It is too much to beſtow any labour in vain (that is, without fruit and ſucceſs) much more to beſtow hard and ſore labour.

יגע Laboravit, defatigatus fuit, Græco κοπιάω reſpondet, & notat ex labore ſummã moleſtiam.

But what was this ſore, hard and painful labour? He means all thoſe labours which he beſtowed, either to extricate himſelf from his ſufferings, or to clear himſelf from their prejudice of his ſinfulneſs, becauſe he ſuffered: As if he had ſaid in particulars,

Why do I labour in Apologues to excuſe my ſelf? Or in Arguments defend my cauſe? Why do I labour in prayer to deprecate theſe troubles, and get out of the bands of my afflictions? Pleading for our ſelves with men, is hard labour; but eſpecially pleading for our ſelves with God. Prayer is ſtrong labour, therefore it is called wreſtling. Bildad adviſed Job to pray unto God, in the eighth Chapter: here Job ſeems to anſwer, Why labour I in prayer, and in ſeeking unto God, ſeeing all's in vain and loſt labour? to what end ſhould I labour in any of theſe duties? for I am wicked (in the opinion of man) or, if I am wicked in the ſight of God, or ſeeing God hath caſt me into ſuch a condition, as appearingly and viſibly caſts me among the wicked?

הבל pro להבל μάτην. Aquil.

For the better underſtanding of this, we may conſider the words as an argument by way of Dilemma, If I be wicked, why then labour I in vain? If I waſh my ſelf with ſnow-water, &c. As if he had ſaid, Either I am wicked, or I am clean and pure; if I am wicked (as you ſay I am) I deſerve more puniſhment, then I labour in vain to be eaſed of this. If I am pure and clean, as waſhed with ſnow-water, what will the iſſue be? God will yet caſt me into the ditch of affliction; ſo that I am between two walls, hemmed in on both ſides; Wickedneſs would certainly ruine me, and my righteouſneſs will not deliver me, why therefore do ye feed me with vain hopes that I ſhould be delivered if I were righteous? So Bildad aſſured him in the former Chapter.

More particularly, If I am wicked, why then labour I in vain?

Firſt, Some interpret his words as a conteſt with God; thus, If by my ſtudy of holineſs, and care to walk circumſpectly in thy wayes, I have not yet gained the reputation of holineſs; If I cannot yet paſs in thy account for a godly man, ſurely I ſhall ſtill labour in vain about that point, as hitherto I have done.

Si vitæ præteritæ laboribus & pietatis ſtudio ſanctitatem non comparavi, neq; coram Deo juſtus habeor, certè labor meus inanis fuit. Aquin.

But ſecondly (for I lay this aſide) Others thus, If I am wicked, it is a vain thing for me to ſeek the Lord, as you adviſe me. Why will you put me upon a buſineſs which will be fruitleſs and without ſucceſs? It was the word of God in Job's time, though no Scripture, That God heareth not ſinners: Not ſuch ſinners as Job's friends challenged him to be. So Job ſeems to compare their opinion of him, and counſel given him, thus together; your opinion of me, is, that I am a wicked man; your counſel to me, is, tha tI ſhould ſeek unto God: Surely your opinion of me, and your counſel to me, can never agree: for if I am wicked (as you hold me to be) I labour in vain, while I obey your counſel.

Si autem & ſic impius ſum fruſtra laboravi, i.e. ſi impius ſum ut vos de me dicitis. Vul.

There is a ſence, wherein it is in vain for a wicked man to ſeek unto God, and a ſence wherein it is not in vain for a wicked man to ſeek unto God. We muſt diſtinguiſh of this interpretation.

If a man be wicked, it is in vain for him to ſeek unto God, while he loveth his wickedneſs, and delighteth in it, Pſal. 66.2. If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear my prayer. He that is ſo wicked as to love wickedneſs, prayes in vain, faſts and humbles his ſoul in vain. The ſacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord, that is, the Lord abominates his ſacrifice; but, The prayer of the upright is his delight. Solomon deſcribes an hypocrite in the former words; he is one that will pray and offer ſacrifice, and yet puts the ſtumbling block of his iniquity before his face (Ezek. 14.4.) So they (Jer. 7.4.) cried, The Temple of the Lord, the Temple of the Lord are theſe; The Prophet diſcovers who theſe zealous Templers were, verſ. 9. Will ye ſteal, murder, and commit adultery, and ſwear falſly, and then come and ſtand in this houſe which is called by my Name, and ſay, We are delivered to do all theſe abominations? Some mingle prayer and faſting with ſtealing and murdering; ſuch praying and faſting are as unacceptable to God, as ſtealing and murdering are: Such labouring to pleaſe the Lord, is diſpleaſing to the Lord. What haſt thou to do (ſaith God to the wicked) to take my Covenant into thy mouth (Pſal. 50.16.) Doth God ſay to the wicked, What haſt thou to do with my Covenant? For whom is the Covenant made, but for the wicked? If men were not wicked or ſinful, what needed there a Covenant of Grace? The Covenant is for the wicked. And the Covenant brings Grace enough to pardon thoſe who are moſt wicked: why then doth the Lord ſay to the wicked, What haſt thou to do to take my Covenant into thy mouth? Obſerve what follows, and his meaning is expounded; Seeing thou hateſt to be reformed: As if God had ſaid, Thou wicked man, who protecteſt thy ſin, and holdeſt it cloſe, refuſing to return, and hating to reform; what haſt thou to do to meddle with my Covenant? Lay off thy defiled hands. He that that is reſolved to hold his ſin, takes hold of the Covenant in vain; or rather he lets it go, while he ſeems to hold it. Wo unto thoſe who ſue for mercy, while they neglect duty. Thus a wicked man labours in vain.

But there is a ſenſe in which a wicked man doth no labour in vain, how wicked ſoever he is. What elſe means the Prophets invitation? (Iſa. 55. 5.) Let the wicked forſake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him, and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon. Let him forſake his wayes, and then no matter what his wayes have been; let him return to the Lord, and then his former departures ſhall not hinder acceptance. Chriſt died for the ungodly, Rom. 5. 6. And God juſtifieth the ungodly, Rom. 4. 5. It is not in vain for an ungodly man to come to God indeed, and when he doth, he ceaſes to be ungodly. They draw nigh only with their lips, whoſe hearts are not changed, and they draw nigh in vain. As God hath not ſaid to the ſeed of Jacob (real Saints) Seek ye me in vain; ſo he hath not ſaid in vain to wicked men, Seek ye my face. For with the word which bids them ſeek, he gives them power to ſeek, and the mercy they ſeek for. The Grace of God prevents us that we may ſeek him, and bleſſes us when we do ſeek him. If all who are wicked, labour in vain, then all had laboured in vain, foraſmuch as all were wicked.

Thirdly, You may take the meaning of it thus, If I am wicked, that is, if I am reputed by men, and ſtill afflicted by God, as a wicked man, then why ſhould I labour in vain, or trouble my ſelf any further to ſo little purpoſe? if this ſenſe may be admitted, 'tis a paſſionate ſpeech, proceeding from impatience and diſtemper of ſpirit; much like that of David, and very near it in words, Pſal. 73.13. Verily I have cleanſed my heart in vain, and waſhed my hands in innocency; for all the day long have I been plagued, and chaſtened every morning. David's afflictions wrought as hard concluſions in him, as ~~Job's did~~. Grace acts and ſpeaks ever like it ſelf, but a gracious man doth not. David ſhewed there was vanity and remainders of defilement in his heart, by ſaying, I have cleanſed my heart in vain. Mr. Broughton renders to this ſence, I ſhall be holden as wicked, now why do I labour in vain? Hence obſerve, Si adbuc mecum agit Deus tanquam cum impio, quorſum fruſtra laborem? Philip. Hæc ſunt verba hominis à Deo derelicti. Vatabl.

That, Where hope faileth, endeavour faileth too.

I have no hope, ſaith Job, to get out of theſe afflictions which fall upon wicked men, or to get one ſtep beyond a wicked man in your reputation, my labour is in vain, why then do I labour? When the heart ſinks, the hands hang down. Where the one gives over believing, and hoping, the other gives over acting and working. Hence the afflicted are called upon by the Apoſtle, to lift up the hands that hang down, and the feeble knees (Heb. 12. 12.) Hands and knees are the inſtruments of action and motion; and the hanging down of theſe, imports both retarded or ſtopt: Thoſe afflicted Hebrews ſaw little or no hope of deliverance, therefore they gave over endeavouring and moving after deliverance.

Taking the words (as in the original) abſolutely, without any ſuppoſition, I am wicked, why then labour I in vain? As if he had ſaid, I am wicked not only in the opinion of men, but I acknowledge my ſelf to be wicked indeed, conſidered with the moſt holy God; and then his ſence is, Lord, if thou art pleaſed to go this way to work with me, to ſet the rigor of thy juſtice awork, to find out my ſin, and to judge me according to what thou findeſt, then in vain do I ſeek to comfort my ſelf; for in thy ſight no fleſh can be juſtified: I (as well as others) am wicked. In which acknowledgment, he ſeems to meet with, and confute that ſuppoſition of Bildad, chap, 8. 6. If thou wert pure; pure, ſaith Job, alas, I can never be pure before God. When the Lord examines my purity, he will find it impurity. You tell me, if I were pure, the Lord would awaken for me; I ſhall never be pure in your ſence, I am as pure as ever I ſhall be, that is, I am impure, and ſhall be at my beſt; which ſence falleth in directly with the two verſes following: Though I waſh my ſelf with Snow-water, and make my hands never ſo clean; yet thou wilt plunge me in the ditch, and mine own cloaths ſhall abhor me. Taking up that interpretation, I ſhall connect it with theſe two Verſes, and open them in order.

In vanum laborarem, ſi coram Deo juſtificare me tentarem ut falsò me hoc velle præſupponis

Verſe 30. If I waſh my ſelf with ſnow-water, and make my hands never ſo clean.

Waſhing is an act proper to the cleanſing of the body or of bodily things; and in Scripture-Story we find travellers had water provided for them at their journeyes end, to refreſh and cool their bodies. Theſe were civil waſhings. But beſides theſe, we find many ceremonial waſhings of the body, or bodily things, which implied the removing and taking away of ſin, and ſo were a token of internal purification. Therefore the Apoſtle (Heb. 9. 10.) deſcribing the Jewiſh worſhip, and ſhewing the ſeveral parts of it, ſaith, It ſtood (we ſupply that word, but it ſuits the Text well; for the ſubſtantials, the pillars upon which their worſhip ſtood, were ſhadows, conſiſting in meats and drinks, and divers waſhings. In alluſion to which the Lord promiſes (Ezek. 36.25.) I will ſprinkle you with clean water: And the Apoſtle Peter ſpeaks of the ſprinkling of the blood of Chriſt (1 Pet. 1. 2.) And Paul, of the Laver of regeneration, Tit. 3. 5. The Saints who came out of great tribulation, are ſaid to have waſhed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb (Rev. 7. 14.) Sanctification, which is cleanſing from the filth of ſin, and juſtification, which is cleanſing from the guilt of ſin, are ſet forth by waſhing, 1 Cor. 6. 9. But ye are waſhed. Thus the Prophet counſels the polluted Jews (Iſa. 1. 16.) Waſh you, make you clean; which he expounds by a moral duty in the next words, Put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes, ceaſe to do evil, learn to do well. It was uſual among the Heathen to waſh, as a ſign of purification, eſpecially before they went to worſhip their gods, or after they had defiled themſelves with ſome grievous crime. One of the Poets gives them a reproof; O ye who are ſo credulous, or eaſie of belief, to think that the bloody ſin of murdering the bodies of other men, can be taken away by waſhing your own bodies! They had a great opinion of a cleanſing virtue in the Sea; to which ſome think the Prophet Micah alludes (Chap. 7. 19.) He will caſt all their ſins into the depths of the ſea.

In lege multæ erant purificationes, quas Deus fortè inſtituit ut populum aliarum gentium talibus ceremoniis aſſuetum facilius adduceret ad cultum verum. Pin.

The ancient Chriſtians, uſing to waſh before they prayed, ſhewed a little touch at leaſt of Judaiſm, or of their old Gentiliſm. Some have given this for one reaſon, why the Lord appointed ſo many waſhings among his people, that the Heathens might be the eaſier gained to the Religion of the Jews, when they found ſomewhat ſymbolizing with their cuſtoms among them: which, if it were ſo, yet it cannot bear out thoſe who have mixed Chriſtian Worſhip with Heatheniſh Obſervations, thereby to facilitate their converſion. But doubtleſs Job had reference to thoſe Rites either of the Jews or Gentiles, when he ſaid, Antiquiſſimum fuit uti balneo aut corporis ablutione, ad detergendas animi ſordes. Ah nimium faciles, qui triſtia crimina cædis, Fluminea tolli poſſe putatis aqua? Romani noluerunt parricidas nudos (ſed in culeum inſutos) in flumen abjicere, ne cum delati eſſent in mare, ipſum polluerent, quo cætera quæ violata ſunt, expiari putantur. Cic. in Orat. pro Reſc. Chriſtianus lotus oret. Tert. De Orat. c. 10. Clem. l. 8. Conſt. c. 88.

Though I waſh my ſelf with Snow-water.

Why with Snow-water; That is (ſay ſome) with the moſt pure water, with the cleareſt ſpringing fountain-water, or in the moſt cryſtall ſtreams, not in the water of melted ſnow, but in water like ſnow for purity and orient clearneſs.

Aliqui ex Latinis legunt aquis vivis, non aquis nivis. Pined:

Others conceive it an alluſion to that peculiar Rite in thoſe times, when they took Snow-water to waſh with, rather then Spring, or River-water, becauſe that came from the Heavens, not from the Earth here below, and was therefore (in their opinion) more excellent in its nature, becauſe it had a more excellent Original.

Thirdly, Job is thought to ſpecifie Snow-water, becauſe in thoſe Countries the Fountain, or River-water was not pure; and therefore they preſerved Snow, and took that water to waſh and cleanſe with. As the cuſtom ſtill is in thoſe places where good water is a rare commodity.

Or laſtly, He may ſay, If I waſh in Snow-water, becauſe he would expreſs the cleaneſt waſhing, ſuch as makes the body look like ſnow, white and pure. White as ſnow is proverbial (Iſa. 1. 18.) for the moſt reſplendent whiteneſs.

And we find in Scripture, a thing is ſaid to be waſhed with that, the likeneſs of which after waſhing it repreſents: Thus the Church glories in Chriſt, That his eyes were as the eyes of a Dove by the rivers of water waſhed with milk, (Cant. 5. 12.) that is, his eyes were white as milk, after waſhing. So here, Though I waſh my ſelf with ſnow water, that is, though I waſh my ſelf, till I become as white and pure as ſnow, &c. We read a like phraſe (Pſal. 51. 9.) Purge me with Hyſop, and I ſhall be clean, in alluſion to the Levitical Law, which appointed the Prieſt to ſprinkle both things and perſons with a bunch of Hyſop (Levit. 14. Numb. 19.) So the Chaldee Paraphraſe expounds the Pſalm, Cleanſe me, as the Prieſt ſprinkling with Hyſop cleanſed the people. Though I waſh my ſelf with ſnow-water,

In Scriptura talibus aliquis dicitur lotus, qualium referre videtur ſimilitudinē. Sanct.

And make my hands never ſo clean.

The Hebrew Text is very emphatical, Though I waſh my hands in purity; which ſome expreſs by that which is the inſtrument of purifying the hands, Though I waſh my hands with ſope; So Mr. Broughton, Though I waſh my hands with waſh-balls, to make my hands clean and ſweet. We tranſlate, though not to the letter of the Hebrew, yet to the ſence, Though I waſh my hands never ſo clean, yet, &c:

As the former expreſſion referreth to internal holineſs; ſo this latter to external. The hands in Scripture note our outward works. Hands are the executive part, the inſtruments of action. Your hands are full of blood, Iſa. 1. that is, your actions are cruel and bloody: there is not only blood in your hearts, but in your hands too (Pſal. 26. 6.) I will waſh my hands in innocency, ſo will I compaſs thine altar; that is, I will make all my outward converſation pure and holy. The Lord hath rewarded me according to the purity of my hands, (Pſal. 18. 20.) Again (Pſal. 73. 13.) I have, in vain, waſhed my hands in innocency, that is, I have lived innocently in vain. The Apoſtle James calls for the holineſs of the outward man in the ſame language, Cleanſe your hands, ye ſinners; and purifie your hearts, ye double-minded, Chap. 4. 8.

Beſides, it was uſual to waſh the hands, as an emblem or token of innocency, and freedom from guilt. The Law of Moſes appointed, in caſe a man were ſlain, no man knowing how, that the Elders of the neareſt City ſhould waſh their hands over the Heifer that was offered in Sacrifice, ſaying, Our hands have not ſhed this blood, neither have our eyes ſeen it, Deut. 21. 6, 7. So Pilate, when he would make it viſible unto all the world (as he thought) that he was free from the blood of Chriſt, called for a baſin of water to waſh his hands: all the water in the Ocean could not waſh Pilates conſcience from the guilt of Chriſts blood, yet he called for a baſin of water, and waſhed his hands, ſaying, I am free from the blood of this juſt perſon, ſee ye to it. So then, the meaning of Job is, Though I be clean within and clean without, though my heart be as clean, as waſhing can make my hands, though (as the Apoſtle taught long after) I lift up pure hands in prayer, without wrath and doubting, yet

Scio quod quantumvis diligentiſſime vitæ candorem & morum integritatem comparare ſtudeam, tamen non ideo dolorum & pænarum expers ſim. Pined.

Verſ. 31. Thou ſhalt plunge me in the ditch, and mine own clothes ſhall abhor me.

The word which we tranſlate Plunge, ſignifies a dipping or immerſion, rather to die or ſtain, then to cleanſe, Ezek. 23. 15.

טבל Tinxit, intinxit, ita lavit ut res non mundetur, ſed tantū attingat humorem.

There are two interpretations of theſe words, Thou ſhalt plunge me in the ditch.

They may be underſtood either, firſt thus, that God would adjudge him ſinful, notwithſtanding all his purifyings: and ſo it anſwereth the expreſſion of the latter clauſe of the former verſe; As if he ſaid, Though I make my ſelf as clean as clean can be, and thereupon judge my ſelf never ſo clean, yet thou mayeſt account me unclean; yea the more I labour to juſtifie my ſelf in my cleanneſs, the more unclean mayeſt thou judge me to be; Yet, Thou wilt plunge me in the ditch; For we are to underſtand the words, Thou wilt plunge me; not as of that which the Lord would do, but as of that which the Lord might juſtly do. As if he had ſaid, Thou mighteſt have greater cauſe to plunge me in the ditch, when I am ſo fine and clean in mine own eyes, then before. When I think I have waſhed my ſelf as white as ſnow, thou mayeſt look upon me, as drawn thorow a dirty channel, or as wallowed in the mire. After all my cleanſing and rinſing, and purifying, thy pure eyes can eaſily ſee a ſinner in me, and diſcover that I am polluted, though I am waſhed.

Futura apud Hebræos ſæpe debitum indicant.

This Phraſe of plunging in a ditch, notes the greateſt defilement, it imports a man all over defiled: The Jews ſay of a man that hath loſt his credit, and is exceedingly blemiſhed in his reputation, That he is caſt in the dirt, or thrown in the mire.

Phraſis Hebræa eſt, qua famæ nominiſq; nitor pollui dicitur. Bold.

Again, The word which we tranſlate Ditch, ſometimes ſignifies corruption only (Pſal. 16. 10.) Thou wilt not ſuffer thine holy One to ſee corruption. And ſecondly, it ſignifieth a pit digged and prepared, wherein dead and corrupting carcaſes are laid (Pſal. 94. 13.) Till the pit be digged for the wicked; that is, till they be deſtroyed and put into the pit.

שחת Corruptio interitus illas igitur ſordes intelligit, quas affert ſqualida mors, me demerges in locum putredinis. Varro l. 4. de Ling. Lat.

Beſides, We learn from Antiquity, that they had ſpecial pits or graves for offenders, who were ſlain by the Law (as ſome ſpeak) or cut off by the hand of juſtice; who being enemies to humane ſociety while they lived, were not admitted ſociety with the bodies of honeſt men, when they died. The Prophet Iſaiah (Chap. 14. 18, 19, 20.) deſcribing the ruine and ignominious down-fall of the King of Babylon, ſaith, That all the Kings of the Nations, even all of them lie in glory, every one in his own houſe (that is, in their Fathers Sepulchres) But thou art caſt out of thy grave like an abominable branch: and as the raiment of thoſe that are ſlain, thruſt through with a ſword, that go down to the ſtones of the pit: Thou ſhalt not be joyned to them in burial.

And hence, to be caſt into a ditch notes any great humbling or affliction, reproach or contumely.

We may take it here in either ſence, Thou wilt plunge me into filth and corruption, or ſhew me to be filthy and corrupt, though I cleanſe my ſelf; or thou wilt caſt me into the greateſt afflictions, notwithſtanding all my purifications. I ſhall give a note, ſuting this laſt ſence, at the cloſe of the whole verſe.

From the firſt, here Obſerve,

They who would make themſelves moſt holy, appear moſt unholy before God.

Thoughts of our own purity, render us impure. We are never ſo black before God, as when we are whiteſt in our own eyes. We find the Phariſee (Luke 18.) waſhing himſelf in ſnow-water, and making his hands very clean, he tells us that he had Faſted and Prayed, and given Alms, and paid Tithes (this is to waſh our ſelves in ſnow-water, and to make our hands very clean) but the Lord plunged this Phariſee in the ditch, he caſt him for a wicked man. The poor Publican plunged himſelf in the ditch, and judged himſelf fit to be thrown into the mire; But he went home to his houſe juſtified, rather then the other. The Lord tells his people (Jer. 2. 22.) Though thou waſh thee with nitre, and take thee much ſope, yet thine iniquity is marked before me. The ſpeech is of the ſame importance in the letter with this of Job; yet there the Holy Ghoſt rather intends an hypocritical waſhing, by excuſing or denying our ſins; or (as ſome gloſs that Text) by ſhewing images or imaginations, fancies or forgeries of holineſs. If thou ſhalt put thy ſelf in theſe dreſſes of holineſs, as if thou wert waſhed with nitre, and cleanſed with much ſope, yet thou canſt not avoid mine eyes, For thine iniquity is marked before me, I can ſee thy ſin through all the daubings and paintings, through thy deckings and coverings put upon it. Now, as God ſees iniquity through all the masks and coverings of hypocrites; ſo he can ſee ſpots through all the waſhings and cleanſings of the moſt ſincere. And if we waſh our ſelves to juſtifie our ſelves, our very waſhing is our defiling. God will not only ſee, but mark their iniquity, who think they can put all their iniquity out of his ſight. And ſuch ſhall be made ſo vile, that not only God, but their own clothes ſhall abhor them, as Job expreſſes himſelf in the next words.

Eſt ſe accuſare, culpam abnegare ſimulamenta pietatis oſtentare.

Mine own clothes will abhor me.

We have the word at Chap. 8. verſ. 14. Whoſe hope ſhall loath him, which we render, Whoſe hope ſhall be cut off. Clothes may be taken either properly or figuratively. Taken properly, the words may import, firſt, his degradation from all former dignities. I ſhall be deprived of all honour and eſtimation, and ſo the cloaths which I wore in the dayes of my proſperity, will ſo much unbecome me, that they will abhor me. Or ſecondly, Taken properly, they are conceived to be a circumlocution of death.

Thou wilt plunge me in the pit, that is, I ſhall die, and mine own cloaths will abhor me. The dead are ſtript; garments do not become a dead carcaſe. Mr. Broughton's paraphraſe upon his own tranſlation intimates this; Mine own cloathes ſhall loath me; namely, ſaith he, When I go naked to the grave, as though my cloaths did loath me.

Others underſtand it figuratively, Mine own cloaths ſhall abhor me, that is, Firſt, Thoſe that are my deareſt friends ſhall abhor me, Thou wilt make them flee from me, who are as near to me, as the cloaths on my back.

Or ſecondly, In a figure, Mine own cloaths, that is, mine own works ſhall abhor me. Hypocrites are ſaid to come in ſheeps clothing (Matth. 7.) that is, doing the works of thoſe who are ſincere, appearing like them in practice. And when we are warned to keep our garments (Rev. 16. 15.) the meaning is, that we muſt keep faith and a good conſcience in every act of our lives.

Thirdly, It may have reſpect to lepers, whoſe cloaths did abhor them, becauſe they wore ſome mark of difference upon their garments, ſhewing that they were to be ſhunned, and their company avoided.

But rather in general, Mine own cloaths ſhall abhor me, notes extreme pollution. If I juſtifie my ſelf before God, I ſhall be ſo unclean that my cloaths will be loth to touch me. We ſay of one that is very filthy, A man would not touch him with a pair of tongs. And it is uſual in Scripture (to give you that rule for the underſtanding of this, and other the like forms of ſpeaking) when a matter is ſpoken of in a way of exceſs, that things inſenſible have ſence, yea reaſon and underſtanding aſcribed to them: abhorring, is an act beyond ſence, it hath a mixture of reaſon and underſtanding; now to note his exceeding lothſomneſs to God and man, who attempts to juſtifie himſelf before God, the Text ſaith, His cloaths (which have neither life nor ſence) ſhall abhor him. When the Phariſee, envying the acclamations which the multitude of Chriſts Diſciples gave him at his entrance into Jeruſalem, deſired that he would rebuke and ſilence them: Chriſt anſwered, I tell you, if theſe ſhould hold their peace, the ſtones would immediately cry out; importing how juſt an occaſion there was, why his Name and glory ſhould be lifted up; Do ye think much that reaſonable men ſpeak? If theſe ſhould hold their peace, the ſtones that have neither life nor ſenſe would ſpeak. Thus (Gen. 4. 10.) to note the foulneſs of Cain's ſin, and his cruelty towards his brother, God ſaith, The earth hath opened her mouth to receive thy brothers blood from thy hand, as if the earth had been ſenſibly affected with the cruelty of Cain towards his brother; thou wouldſt not let his blood ſtay in his body, therefore the earth in kindneſs opened her mouth, and took in his blood from thy hand, and that cries up unto me. So here, I ſhall be ſo foul, that if my cloaths had ſenſe, life and reaſon, and could diſpoſe of their own actings, and ſet themſelves upon what body and limbs they pleaſed, ſurely they would put themſelves off from my body, and ever come on again, they would abhor me; I ſhould be as filthy before God in ſoul, as he is in body, who muſt be waſhed before he is fit to have his cloaths put on him: As to be clothed with ſhame, ſo to have our cloaths aſhamed of us, notes the greateſt diſhonour.
